F. D. PATTERSON, PRESIDENT

WILLIAM H. CARTER, TREASURER

BOARD OF TRUSTEES

WILLIAM JAY SCHIEFFELIN, CHAIRMAN
CHARLES E. MASON
WILLIAM M. SCOTT
WARREN LOGAN
ROBERT R. MOTON
CHARLES A. WICKERSHAM
C. E. THOMAS
WILLIAM H. CARTER
EDGAR B. STERN
HENRY S. BOWERS
WINTHROP W. ALDRICH
RICHARD H. HARRIS
CLAUDE A. BARNETT
WALTER G. CRUMP
ALEXANDER B. SIEGEL

TUSKEGEE NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL INSTITUTE

FOUNDED BY BOOKER T. WASHINGTON

FOR THE TRAINING OF COLORED YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, ALABAMA

July 3, 1935.

For immediate release.

THE LYNCHING RECORD FOR THE FIRST SIX MONTHS 1935.

Dear Sir:

I send you the following information concerning lynchings for the first six months of this year. I find according to the records compiled at Tuskegee Institute in the Department of Records and Research that in the first six months of 1935 there were four lynchings. This is 2 less than the number 6 for the first six months of 1934; and 4 less than the number 8 for the first six months of 1933.

All of the persons lynched were Negroes. The offenses charged were: wounding man in altercation, 1; rape, 1; murder, 2.

The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each State are as follows: Louisiana, 2, and Mississippi, 2.

Yours very truly,

F. D. Patterson

President.

Alabama

4599

Lynchings - 1935
Cases of.

See: Lynchings - Cases of - 1934 for information on the following Clipping.

STORY OF LYNCHING WILL BE PROTESTED

Birmingham Post
2-8-35

Resolution Will Be Introduced To Ask Revision Of Report

A resolution requesting Tuskegee Institute to revise a report which classifies the fatal shooting of a Negro in East Birmingham last August as "Alabama's only lynching will be introduced at the weekly City Commission meeting next Tuesday, Public Safety Commissioner W. F. Downs announced today.

"By no stretch of the imagination can the death of this Negro be called a lynching," Commissioner Downs declared. "The Negro attempted to abduct three white girls who were on their way to a religious meeting. He also threatened them with a pistol. The posse of citizens which rescued the girls shot the Negro after he shot at its members."

Police Chief Luther Hollums voiced his approval of the resolution, explaining that the Negro was shot while resisting arrest.

Lynchings - 1935
Cases Of California
4600

Californians Lynch Suspect in Slaying

YREKA, Cal., Aug. 3.—(UP)—Frontier justice brushed the law aside today and exacted the extreme penalty of C. L. Johnson, suspected slayer of a police officer.

A mob of about 75 men, traveling together in automobiles, swooped down on the Siskiyou county jail, picked Johnson out of a group of terrorized prisoners and hanged him to a pine tree outside of Yreka.

Johnson was arrested Monday after the slaying of Chief of Police F. R. Dak, of Dunsmuir, a small Siskiyou mountain town 50 miles south of here. He was brought here for safekeeping suspects Monday.

The mob drove up to the country jail here about 1:30 a.m. seized a passerby who might have spread the alarm, and converged on the jail.

Deputy Sheriff Martin Lange was threatened with pistols, bound hand and foot and carried out into the rugged country when he refused to give up his keys.

Other members of the masked mob battered down doors and found the keys to Johnson's cell.

Dunsmuir authorities said Johnson admitted he was one of two men involved in a minor robbery early Monday and was halted by Daw and Traffic Officer George Malone, but insisted Miller fired on Daw and Malone during the questioning.

CALIFORNIA MOB HANGS PRISONER

Authorities Promise Quick Investigation of Lynching in Siskiyou Mountains

YREKA Cal., Aug. 3 (AP)—The brief reign of lynch law here early today—when a mob hung the accused slayer of Dunsmuir Police Chief F. R. Daw—brought quick promises of action by authorities tonight against the lynchers.

District Attorney James Davis and sheriff's deputies planned immediate steps to identify and prosecute the mob members who seized Clyde L. Johnson, 24, from his jail cell and hanged him to a pine tree three miles outside this Siskiyou mountain town.

Undersheriff W. J. Neilon said none of the masked lynchers had been identified.

Owen Kessell, state criminal identification expert, announced in Sacramento that the bullet which killed Chief Daw came from a gun found in Johnson's possession after he was arrested last Monday, following Daw's death and the wounding of a traffic officer.

Another Man Is Sought

Johnson had protested his innocence and blamed Albert Miller, 30, for whom a widespread search was under way tonight.

It was for safekeeping that Johnson, confessed robber, was moved to the jail here from Unsmuir where he was captured after Daw was slain while questioning two robber

CITIZEN POSSES HUNT FOR POLICE SLAYER

One Man Lynched for Killing, Accomplice Sought By Officers.

YREKA, Calif., Aug. 4.—(AP)—Citizen posses scoured the timbered hills of northern California today for a second police slayer suspect after District Attorney James Davis blamed "apathy of the supreme court of the United States" and other federal tribunals for the mob hanging of Clyde L. Johnson.

The search was for Robert Miller, accused of participating with Johnson in the fatal shooting of Chief of Police F. R. Daw, of Dunsmuir, swung to Weed. A man who, officers said, answered the description of the fugitive held up a grocery store there last night.

Officers expressed fear that Miller, if captured, would meet the same fate as Johnson, who was dragged from the county jail here early yesterday by a masked gang and hanged from a pine tree.

District Attorney Davis, in a statement, declared that citizens had been roused to "uncontrollable unrest" because of delay in the legal execution of George Hall, convicted of murdering a state highway patrolman and a citizen here two years ago.

Hall, now in Folsom prison under death sentence, resisted the conviction by federal court habeas corpus proceedings which Davis declared had been "slowly manipulated" to the country's highest tribunal.

"I find on the examination of the record," Davis asserted "that the order allowing the appeal to the supreme court of the United States was made on the second day of April, 1934." He said it was still pending.

NEW YORK TIMES
AUG 4 1935

BANDIT IS LYNCHED BY CALIFORNIA MOB

Masked Men Storm Jail and Seize Robber Suspected of Killing Police Chief.

HANG HIM FROM PINE TREE

District Attorney Promises Action — Merriam Deplores 'Blot' on the State.

By The Associated Press.

YREKA, Calif., Aug. 3.—A mob of twenty-five to fifty masked men dragged C. L. Johnson, 24, from the county jail here early today and lynched him for the slaying of Chief of Police F. R. Daw of Dunsmuir.

The lone deputy sheriff on duty in the jail was kidnapped and a bystander was held prisoner until after Johnson, a white man, was hanged from a pine tree three miles south of Yreka.

Johnson was fully dressed, except for his shoes left in his cell, wher he was cut down by Sheriff's officers at 4 A. M., two hours after the mob had left the lynching scene.

The young man, a confessed robber from Reno, Nev., and Klamath Falls, Ore., was taken from his cell exactly twelve hours after the funeral of the officer he was accused of having killed Monday morning.

"I suppose they talked it over at the funeral," said Deputy Sheriff Joe Clark, "and got up the mob."

Johnson was brought here earlier in the week when lynch talk was first heard in Dunsmuir, forty-nine miles south of this town.

Mob Seizes Passer-By.

The men drove to the county jail in automobiles about 1:30 A. M. They promptly seized Fleming Martin, a restaurant employe who was passing the jail on his way home, and held him prisoner until after the lynching. He estimated that the mob numbered fifty.

Quickly approaching the jail, they rang the night bell. When Deputy Sheriff Martin Lange answered, they covered him with pistols, overpowered him, bound him hand and foot and, after failing to get the keys from him, carried him into the country, where they turned him loose barefooted.

They smashed doors and ransacked the jail before finding the keys to Johnson's first floor cell.

"There wasn't much of a fuss" when they burst into Johnson's cell and overpowered him, said three trusties, the only other prisoners on the ground floor.

The lynching brought quick promises of official action.

District Attorney James Davis and Sheriff's deputies planned prompt steps to identify and prosecute the mob members.

"I will start an immediate investigaton," Mr. Davis said, "and do everything the law requires to apprehend members of the mob."

At Sacramento Governor Frank F. Merriam characterized the crime as "a blot upon the fair name of California."

He said that new State laws empower the Attorney General to take over prosecution of those involved.

Hunt for Evidence Pledged.

Undersheriff W. J. Neilon, who said none of the masked lynchers had been identified, declared his office would attempt to obtain identifications and furnish all evidence possible to the grand jury.

He is in charge of the office during the illness of Sheriff W. G. Chandler.

A. L. Wirin, American Civil Liberties Union official in Los Angeles, demanded "immediate and aggressive action" by U. S. Webb, State Attorney General.

In San Francisco, however, Mr. Webb said that he would not enter the case unless "constituted authorities" fail in the performance of their duties.

Johnson was lynched for a slaying he insisted he did not commit. Authorities said that he admitted he was one of two suspected robbers halted early Monday morning by Chief Daw and Traffic Officer George Malone.

Officers said that he named Robert Miller, 30, as the killer and the man who wounded Malone. Miller is still a fugitive and the object of the most intensive manhunt this section of Northern California has known.

Owen Kessell, State criminal identification expert, announced in Sacramento today, however, that the bullet which killed Chief Daw came from a gun found in Johnson's possession after he was arrested.

Chief Daw and Malone had been summoned to halt a car containing two men who held up a restaurant in Castella, twenty miles south of Dunsmuir, and robbed Mike Padulla, the proprietor, of $55.

Captured by Citizens.

The officers encountered the car in Dunsmuir and in a gun fight with the occupants Daw was killed. Malone was slightly wounded.

Johnson was captured about two hours later in a hand-to-hand fight with two Dunsmuir men. He readily admitted participation in the shooting and the robbery a few hours earlier which had put Daw on his trail.

Martin was the only person on the street when the lynching party appeared. He said that one of the mob covered him with a pistol and walked him to the jail entrance.

"In a couple of minutes out came a mob of about twenty-five or thirty men dragging Johnson with them," he related. "Johnson was kicking and pulling, but never said a word. They all swore and cussed and once in a while would sock him, but they didn't do anything really bad.

"I couldn't see the men's faces because they were all masked—well, all but one or two.

"The gang then got into seven or eight automobiles, with Johnson in the front one, and started to drive toward the south.

"The fellow holding the gun against me stayed until the last and then jumped into a car as it started, and warned me to keep still about it all.

"I ran over to my house and called my brother and Sheriff Chandler. The Sheriff was sick, so he told me he'd have his deputies take care of it.

"I drove over to my brother's house and then we drove in the direction the cars went. About three miles south of town we spied Johnson, hanging from a tree.

"We took a close look and the only bruise we could see was a swelling under his eye."

Jail Guardian's Story.

What appeared to be a clever ruse was responsible for Lange being alone in the jail. Late last night the Sheriff's office received a tip that Miller had been located. Acting promptly on the tip, Deputy Sheriff Ed Mathews left the jail about 10 P. M.

"Bells had been ringing all night," Lange related. "Telephone bells and teletype bells. So I didn't think much of it when the little bell (to the outer door) rang.

"I opened the door and the first thing I saw was a gun. It was a silver gun. Yeh, a nickel-plated gun.

"They shoved the door open and poked guns all over me. They bound me with ropes and kidnapped me. Took me for a ride. I didn't have any shoes.

"They bound my wrists first,

They had a lot of quarter inch rope and they twisted and yanked and jerked me around with that. They wanted me to tell where the keys were.

"I wouldn't tell. I never told where the keys were.

"They found the keys somewhere around here, but I was out in the country then. They took me nine miles out in the country and turned me loose in my bare feet.

"I went to half a dozen houses and knocked, but none of them would get up. They were sure sore. None of them would help me.

"I had a police whistle and went back to the highway and blew that and stopped a car.

"They all wore masks. They wore white handkerchiefs that covered all the lower part of their faces.

"They was dressed in ordinary city clothes. Dressed like small-town people. Some were dressed rough, some were very well dressed. They was dressed all kinds of ways.

"And they sure had plenty of guns."

Lange said that he recognized one of the men in the mob as a Dunsmuir citizen, but did not know his name. He said he wouldn't recognize any of the others if he saw them again.

"Justice," Says Chief's Widow.

Night Marshal Richard W. Cheeseborough said when he heard the mob start to break into the county jail he retired to the city jail, four blocks away, "because I didn't want to have anything to do with giving the keys to the mob."

"I heard them but I didn't see them," he added.

Asked if authorities had been notified of the seizure, he replied:

"What's the use?"

The widow of Chief Daw said she did not approve of mob action, but "my feelings are that justice was done."

"Something must be done to aid the law in giving some protection to society," she added.

Officers in Dunsmuir disclaimed knowledge of the identity of the organizers of the mob. They admitted that lynching talk had been heard throughout the week, but said that it appeared to have quieted down.

Lynching in California is punishable by imprisonment of from one to twenty years.

The lynching is the forty-first recorded California history.

Message Is Sent to President.

The following telegram was sent yesterday to President Roosevelt:

"1935's grisly record of lynching graphically mounts. The eleventh occurred this morning at Yreka, Calif., when a white man was lynched. The sixth since the filibusters and Senator Borah postponed action on the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill. We implore you for humanity's sake to send immediately to Congress a message demanding passage of Costigan-Wagner Bill before adjournment. Only that can save lives of men and perhaps women now alive who may fall victims to lynching mobs.

"(Signed) WALTER WHITE,
"Secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 69 Fifth Avenue."

Birmingham, Ala. News
August 4, 1935

California Has Another Lynching

Again California stands disgraced in the eyes of civilized people by a lynching. A young white man was the victim of a mob at Yreka, where he had been taken for safekeeping after the slaying of the chief of police of Dunsmuir, 49 miles away. He had confessed to participation in robberies, but he had denied that he was the one who killed the officer, saying his companion, who is still being sought, committed the murder. Thus there is a possibility that the California mob lynched a man who was innocent of murder, whatever else may have been his sins. That circumstance makes the atrocity more outrageous, though had the lynchers been certain of his guilt their barbaric act would have called no less for condemnation. In no circumstances is any mob justified in taking the law into its own hands.

This lynching will revive memories throughout the country of the horrible affair in California two years ago, when a mob at San Jose lynched two kidnapers. The state has not yet outlived the shame of that brutal incident when another lynching takes place. The two cases naturally will be linked in the public mind.

There is reason enough to link the two cases. To be sure, there was no direct connection between them. Yet few will doubt that the lynchings two years ago had their influence on the mob at Yreka Saturday morning. Mob violence breeds mob violence.

Nor will many doubt that if the lynchings at San Jose had been followed by stern action on the part of the state authorities, this latest outrage would never have taken place. Instead, the governor of California at that time upheld the lynchings, and no effort was made to identify and punish the guilty persons.

In this instance Gov. Merriam is not making the mistake which his predecessor, the late Gov. Rolph, made in the San Jose case. Gov. Merriam has vigorously denounced the lynching, and has instructed the proper authorities to make every effort to bring the members of the mob to justice. For his stand he will have the commendation of the whole country, which remembers the sorry performance of Gov. Rolph in condoning the San Jose mob murders, and which will be glad to see that there has been a change in the official attitude in California toward this sort of thing, at least in the precincts of the chief magistracy of the state. The former governor learned to his sorrow that his open approval of the San Jose lynchings was bitterly resented by most of the American people. It could not have been otherwise, for surely the great majority of Americans are too civilized to defend lynching; surely it is only a small minority of lawless persons who will engage in such a practice or condone it.

If the California authorities do not do everything they can to bring these lynchers to justice, they need not be surprised if the name of their state is besmirched again and again in this way. Truly, mob violence breeds the spirit of mob violence, and the only way to check its spread is for the constituted authorities of the law to do their full part in combating its manifestations, by giving adequate protection to prisoners under their care and by making determined efforts to apprehend and prosecute the perpetrators of such crimes.

Bronx, N.Y. Home News
AUG 3 1935

California Mob Lynches Suspect in Slaying of Cop

Yreka, Cal.—Cheating the law in a return to frontier justice, a mob of about 75 men today seized C. L. Johnson, suspect in the slaying of a police officer, and hanged him to a pine tree outside of Yreka.

Johnson was taken from the Siskiyou County Jail, where he had been held since Monday when he was captured after the slaying of Chief of Police F. R. Daw of Dunsmuir, a small Siskiyou Mountain town 50 miles south of here.

Within an hour Johnson's shoeless body, clad in a white shirt and black trousers, was swinging from a tree outside the town. The mob scattered before authorities could mobilize to save the youth who had confessed that he and Robert Miller, a fugitive, shot Daw when he tried to question them about a roadhouse hold-up.

The lynchers struck so suddenly that only one man was on duty at the county jail. Johnson was brought here for safekeeping after threats had been made against him at Dunsmuir.

The mob came in automobiles from the South, apparently from Daw's home town, where yesterday hundreds of men from the mountains and the ranches joined war veterans at his military funeral.

NEW YORK SUN
AUG 3 1935

Prisoner Lynched on Coast

Man Held in Killing of Police Chief Dragged From Jail After Funeral.

YREKA, Cal., Aug. 3 (A. P.).—Deputy Sheriff Joe Clark said early today a mob of twenty-five men had lynched C. L. Johnson, implicated in a recent shooting at Dunsmuir, south of here, at a spot three miles out of Yreka.

Night Marshal Richard W. Cheeseborough said that the mob drove up to the county jail about 1:30 A. M. and broke in the front door. Ten minutes later it left with Johnson and Deputy Sheriff S. Martin Lange, who was the only guard at the jail.

The mob drove south toward Dunsmuir, forty-nine miles away, the direction whence they came.

Held in Death of Police Chief.

The body had not been returned to town early today, Clark said. He reported that Johnson was hanged from a tree at about 2 A. M.

Johnson had been held here since his arrest in the fatal shooting of Chief of Police F. R. Daw of Dunsmuir. The chief's funeral was held yesterday.

Chief Daw was shot down without warning as he attempted to question two robbery suspects on the outskirts of Dunsmuir early Monday.

The Deputy Sheriff dragged from the jail by the mob was bound hand and foot and taken seven miles out of town in the opposite direction from which the mob took Johnson.

Dan English, one of the four other prisoners held on the first floor of the county jail, said that Lange was on the second floor sweeping when the mob smashed into the building.

Prisoner's Story Told.

"They came into our cell first," Clark quoted English as saying. "They looked me over and said 'No this ain't the man.' Then they looked at the two Indians in the cell. 'He ain't here,' they said, and went into Johnson's cell. Then they said, 'this is the——.' Then they took him and went away. There wasn't much of a scuffle."

Clark wasn't sure whether Lange had come downstairs before the mob broke into the building. They overpowered the lone jailer, Clark said, took his keys, bound him and carried him from the jail while the cells were searched.

Twelve other prisoners were in jail at the time, but they were all on the second floor and were not molested.

A clever ruse was responsible for Lange being alone in the jail at the time. Late last night the Sheriff's office received a tip that Robert Miller, 30 years old, assertedly named by Johnson as the man who fired the fatal shots, had been located. Acting promptly on the tip, Deputy Sheriff Ed Mathews left the jail about 10 P. M.

Lange was released soon after the lynching.

Marshal Cheesebrough said that when he heard the mob start to break into the county jail he retired to the city jail, four blocks away, "because I didn't want to have anything to do with giving the keys to the mob. I heard them but I didn't see them."

Lynchings-1935
cases of

California

4601

Californians Lynch Suspect in Slaying

YREKA, Cal., Aug. 3.—(UP)—Frontier justice brushed the law aside today and exacted the supreme penalty of C. D. Johnson, suspected slayer of a police officer.

A mob of about 50 men, traveling together in automobiles, swooped down on the Siskiyou County jail, picked Johnson out of a group of terrorized prisoners and hanged him to a pine tree outside of Yreka.

Johnson was arrested Monday after the slaying of Chief of Police F. R. Daw of Dunsmuir, a small Siskiyou mountain town 50 miles south of here. He was brought here for safekeeping.

California Mob Lynches Slayer

Killer Removed From Jail In Town Where He Was Taken For Safekeeping

YREKA, CALIF., Aug. 3. — (AP) — The brief reign of lynch law here early today —when a mob hanged the accused slayer of Dunsmuir Police Chief F. R. Daw— brought quick promises of action by authorities tonight against the lynchers.

District Attorney James Davis said sheriff's deputies planned immediate steps to identify and prosecute the mob members, who seized Clyde L. Johnson, 24, from his jail cell and hanged him to a pine tree three miles outside this Siskoyou Mountain town.

"I will start an immediate investigation," Davis said, "and do everything the law requires to apprehend members of the mob."

Undersheriff W. J. Nelson, who said none of the masked lynchers had been identified, declared his office would attempt this task and furnish all evidence possible to the Grand Jury.

Authorities turned attention to Dunsmuir, 49 miles south of here, in their search for the lynchers as A. L. Wirin, American Civil Liberties Union official in Los Angeles, demanded "immediate and aggressive action" from State Atty.-Gen. U. S. Webb.

In San Francisco, however, Webb said he would not enter the case unless "constituted authorities" fail in performance of their duties.

Owen Kessell, State criminal identification expert, announced in Sacramento that the bullet which killed Chief Daw came from a gun found in Johnson's possession after he was arrested last Monday, following Daw's death and the wounding of a traffic officer.

Johnson had protested his innocence and blamed Albert Miller, 30, for whom a widespread search was underway tonight.

At Sacramento, Gov. Frank F. Merriam characterized the crime as "a blot upon the fair name of California."

It was for safekeeping that Johnson, confessed robber, was moved to the jail here from Dunsmuir, where he was captured after Daw was slain while questioning two robber suspects Monday.

The mob drove up to the county jail here about 1:30 a.m., seized a passerby who might have spread the alarm, and converged on the jail.

Deputy Sheriff Martin Lange was threatened with pistols, bound hand and foot, and carried out into the rugged country when he refused to give up his keys.

Other members of the masked mob battered down doors and found the keys to Johnson's cell.

Dunsmuir authorities said Johnson admitted he was one of two men involved in a minor robbery early Monday and was halted by Daw and Traffic Officer George Malone, but insisted Miller fired on Daw and Malone during the questioning.

The lynching, 41st in recorded California history, apparently was the result of a well-conceived plan. The mob members face one to 20 years' imprisonment if convicted under a recently-enacted State law.

The widow of Chief Daw said she did not approve of mob action but "my feelings are that justice was done."

Lynchings-1935

Florida

4961

cases of

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.
JOURNAL
JUL 20 1935 Fla

MOB MEMBERS SOUGHT AFTER NEGRO IS SLAIN

Sholtz Orders Investigation Into Lynching of Attacker

BULLETIN

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., July 20—(AP)—A special Broward grand jury session was called today to investigate the lynching near here of Rubin Stacey, 37, negro, identified as the assailant of a white woman in a knife attack. Circuit Judge George W. Tedder summoned the jurors for next Tuesday.

FORT LAUDERDALE, July 20—(AP)—Pierced by 16 bullet holes, the body of Rubin Stacey, 37, lay in a funeral home today while an investigation ordered by Governor Dave Sholtz was started in an effort to learn the identity of the masked men who hanged the negro.

He was snatched from deputies carrying him to Miami for safekeeping yesterday afternoon and lynched within sight of the home of Mrs. Marion Jones, who had identified him as the man who attacked her Tuesday with a penknife.

J. P. Newell, Sholtz' secretary, quoted the governor as saying he was "ordering an immediate and searching investigation of the lynching in hopes of bringing the guilty ones to justice."

In Columbus, O., to attend the national Elks convention, Governor Sholtz learned of the lynching last night during a long-distance telephone conversation with Newell.

SHOLTZ GETS PROTEST

At Jacksonville, Mrs. William P. Cornell, chairman of the Florida Council, Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, had telegraphed the governor urging him to "show your determination to stamp out lynching in Florida by demanding an honest investigation of this lynching and by the prosecution and conviction if possible of guilty parties."

Mrs. Cornell told the governor the lynching "again brings Florida into the nation's limelight as a state where passion and mob violence take precedence over personal control and respect for law and order."

Arrested yesterday morning after a widespread hunt, Stacey was being taken to Miami by six deputies. One of them, Virgil Wright, told of the affair:

"There were about 100 of them and they ran our car off the road. After overpowering us, the masked men took the negro up the road and hanged him.

BULLETS IN BODY

"He's filled full of bullets, too. I guess they shot him both before and after they hanged him.

"As far as we can figure out, they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Meanwhile the husband of Mrs. Jones, 30-year-old mother of three small children, attempted to keep news of the negro's fate from his wife.

Mrs. Jones admitted the assailant to her home when he asked for a drink of water. He seized her by the throat and flourished a small knife, ordering her to keep quiet.

The man followed her as she ran from a rear door, Mrs. Jones said, and threw her to the ground.

"It seemed to me from the look in his eyes he was intent on cutting my throat," she added. The assailant finally was frightened away by her cries.

SHERIFF'S STATEMENT

Following an overnight investigation, Sheriff Walter Clark issued this statement:

"I regret exceedingly that this thing ever occurred. The removal of Stacey from the Broward to Dade county jail was decided upon after I had advised with Circuit Judge George W. Tedder and State Attorney Louis F. Maire, also with prominent citizens of Fort Lauderdale.

"It had been agreed it was the best thing to do, not only for Stacey's safety, but to prevent any bitter feeling between white and blacks in Fort Lauderdale."

While the Broward jail is considered by officers to be one of the safest against attack in southeastern Florida, Sheriff Clark said the fact that many persons were coming to the jail to inquire about the negro convinced him there would be violence if he remained in a cell here.

Deputy Wright, driver of the deputies' automobile, said he took the infrequently used old road to avoid traffic and elude persons who might be watching the new federal highway to Miami.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
JUL 20 1935

PRISONER IS LYNCHED BY FLORIDA MOB

Masked Men Hang Suspect Woman Identified As Assailant

VICTIM IS TAKEN FROM 5 DEPUTIES

Captive Was Being Hurried To Dade County For Safekeeping

[HERALD BUREAU.]

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., July 19. Seized from Broward county officers as he was being taken to the Dade county jail, Reuben Stacey, 37, negro, accused in a knife assault on Mrs. Marion Jones, 30, was lynched and his body riddled with bullets by a mob of masked citizens late today.

Sheriff Walter R. Clark, fearing mob violence, attempted to take the negro to Dade county for safety, but failed to escape the vigilance of the mob leaders. Stacey was placed in an automobile in custody of five deputies and spirited from the jail.

On the west Dixie highway, near the Dade county line, Virgil Wright, deputy sheriff, at the wheel of the sheriff's motor car, said that he observed another automobile rapidly approaching from the rear. Wright increased his speed to the limit, he continued, but the pursuing motor car, followed by a string of other machines, overtook the officers' automobile and forced it from the roadway.

Immediately angry hands reached into the car and snatched the negro. In a moment he was thrust into one of the pursuing automobiles and carried back to the scene of the crime, where he was hanged to a tree and his body riddled with bullets.

The convoy of deputies included Mr. Wright, Bob Clark, Constable W. B. McDougal, I. J. Schuman and Ben Turner. None of the deputies was able to identify any of the mob.

Sheriff Clark tonight explained that when his deputies' car was forced off the road, the lynchers swarmed out of their automobiles and pointed guns at the officers. They immediately grabbed the negro and drove on, with the deputies unable to follow because their car was stuck in a sandy ditch, he said.

The sheriff said that he and Louis F. Maire, state attorney, were conducting a thorough investigation. An inquest was called for 10 a. m. tomorrow by Hugh Lester, justice of the peace.

Stacey was captured early today near Deerfield by Constable McDougal, Leo Jones and Leonard Justice following a report that a negro answering the description broadcast by Sheriff Clark had been observed acting furtively along a roadway south of Deerfield. Brought to Fort Lauderdale by the officers, the negro was identified by Mrs. Jones and her three small children, as her assailant, Sheriff Clark said.

J. L. Jones tonight said his wife was going about her household duties as usual, seemingly the only person who had not learned of the lynching.

"I'm going to try to keep it from her as long as I can," said Jones. "I've cautioned everyone around here, and they're meeting people who come to the house."

Many of those who talked of the lynching expressed the belief that the long-dragged out proceedings in the Robert M. Darsey killing three years ago played an important part in determining the action of the mob.

Darsey, aged Pompano fish dealer, was killed by robbers. Four negroes were convicted in Circuit court here and sentenced to die in the electric chair. They gained a hearing from the Supreme court on their plea that Broward county officers had mistreated them. The case still is before the courts.

Deputy Wright said the license plates of the lynchers' automobiles were covered with paper or cloth, or had been removed. He declares there were about 100 men in the mob.

The body was cut to the ground at 7:15 p. m., two hours and a half after the lynching, by Deputy Bob Clark, and taken to a Fort Lauderdale funeral home. Sixteen bullet wounds could be counted. There was no sign of mutilation.

"As far as we can figure out," said Wright, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Admitted to her home last Tuesday on the pretext that he wanted a glass of water, Mrs. Jones' assailant suddenly seized her by the throat and flourished a small knife.

"He kept saying, 'don't holler, don't holler,' but didn't do anything else," she told deputies when they reached the house.

"I fought him as hard as I could cutting my hands on his knife as I struck at it. I ran through the back door and he followed me, succeeding in throwing me to the ground while I continued to fight him.

"It seemed to me from the look in his eyes he was intent on cutting my throat."

Her frantic cries for help finally frightened her assailant away.

Stacey was sought when Sheriff Walter Clark learned he disappeared from his house, a mile and a half from the Jones' home, on the day of the attack.

Relayed through R. M. Burnett, a Miami salesman, the word a passing truck driver had spied the negro lurking in roadside bushes near Deerfield, five miles north of here, brought Constable McDougal and the two civilians.

Running at the approach of the constable and his hastily impressed possemen, Sheriff Clark related, the negro was stopped by shots.

As high as 100 men, many carrying shotguns or rifles, deployed through the woods and heavy underbrush about the Jones home on the day of the attack. Bloodhounds were brought from Miami and Coral Gables, but rain washed out the fugitive's scent.

The arrest brought immediate paying of the $100 reward Sheriff Clark had posted, $50 going to Constable McDougal and $25 each for Jones and Justice.

WOMEN ASK SHOLTZ FOR "HONEST INQUIRY"

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., July 19. (AP)—Mrs. William P. Cornell, chairman of the Florida Council of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, tonight called upon Gov. Dave Sholtz for an "honest investigation" into the lynching of a negro near Fort Lauderdale today.

In a telegram addressed to the governor at Columbus, Ohio, where he is attending the national Elks convention, Mrs. Cornell said:

"We urge you, in the name of God and our commonwealth, to show your determination to stamp out lynching in Florida by demanding an honest investigation of this lynching and by the prosecution and conviction, if possible, of guilty parties.

"Law abiding citizens have a right to look to you to invoke the laws of the state to apprehend and bring to trial all who are guilty of crimes.

"We are depending on you."

Fort Lauderdale this afternoon again brings Florida into the nation's limelight as a state where passion and mob violence take precedence over personal control and respect for law and order.

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
JUL 20 1935

Negro Attack Suspect Hanged to Roadside Tree By Ft. Lauderdale Mob

Victim Prays As Gang Snatches Him From Sheriff

MAN IDENTIFIED

Bullet Riddled Body Swings Near Home Of Woman

By Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE—Snatching the praying negro from six deputies, masked white men Friday hanged Rubin Stacey, 37, to a roadside tree within sight of the home of the woman who identified him as the man who attacked her Tuesday with a penknife.

Arrested this morning amid a shower of bullets, Stacey was being taken by the Broward county deputies to the Dade (Miami) county jail, 25 miles away, for safekeeping until he could be brought to trial.

CAR STOPPED

"There was about a 100 of them," said Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, "and they ran our car off the road. After overpowering us, the masked men took the negro and hanged him.

"He's filled full of bullets, too. I guess they shot him both before and after they hanged him."

When brought before her this morning by the officers for identification, Mrs. Marion Jones, 30, mother of three small children, involuntarily cried out:

"That is the man, without a doubt."

Her two daughters, and a son, running into the yard of their isolated home with the approach of the automobile, grew hysterical when they saw the negro step from the machine and walk toward the house.

The husband of Mrs. Jones Friday night said she was going about her household duties as usual, seemingly the only person who had not learned of the lynching.

HUSBAND WON'T COMMENT

"I'm going to try to keep it from her as long as I can," said Jones. "I've cautioned everyone around here, and they're meeting people who come to the house."

He would not comment further.

Many of those who talked of the lynching expressed the belief that the long-dragged out proceedings in the Robert M. Darsey slaying three years ago played an important part in determining the action of the mob.

Darsey, aged Pompano fish dealer, was slain by robbers. Four negroes were convicted in circuit court here and sentenced to die in the electric chair. They gained a hearing from the supreme court on their plea Broward officers had mistreated them. The case is still before the courts.

Deputy Wright said the officers were unable to identify any of the masked men. The license plates of their automobiles were covered with paper or cloth, or had been removed.

NEGRO IDENTIFIED

An hour after the lynching, the body of the negro still swung from a limb. Deputy Wright said it remained there until Peace Justice Hugh Lester could reach the scene and give his official consent to its removal.

The body was dropped to the ground at 7:15 p. m., two hours and a half after the lynching, and taken to a Ft. Lauderdale funeral home. Sixteen bullet wounds could be counted. There was no sign of mutilation.

"As far as we can figure out," said Wright, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Admitted to her home last Tuesday on the pretext he wanted a glass of water, Mrs. Jones' assailant suddenly seized her by the throat and flourished a small knife.

"He kept saying, 'Don't holler, don't holler,' but didn't do anything else," she told deputies when they reached the house.

"I fought him as hard as I could, cutting my hands on his knife as I struck at him. I ran thru the back door and he followed me, succeeding in throwing me to the ground while I continued to fight him.

"It seemed to me from the look in his eyes he was intent on cutting my throat."

MAN SEEN

Her frantic cries for help finally frightened her assailant away.

Stacey was sought when Sheriff Walter Clark learned he disappeared from his house, a mile and a half from the Jones' home, on the day of the attack.

Relayed through a Miami salesman, the word a passing truck driver had spied the negro lurking in roadside bushes near Deerfield, five miles north of here, brought Constable W. D. McDonald and two civilians.

Running at the approach of the Constable and his hastily impressed possemen, Sheriff Clark related, the negro was stopped by shots.

Deputies watched the movement of traffic past the jail perhaps more closely than usual, but no unusual precautions were taken, and Sheriff Clark said no trouble was expected.

As high as 100 men, many carrying shotguns or rifles, deployed thru the woods and heavy underbrush about the Jones home on the day of the attack. Bloodhounds were brought from Miami and Coral Gables, but rain washed out the fugitive's scent.

The arrest brought immediate paying of the $100 reward Sheriff Clark had posted, $50 going to Constable McDougald and $25 each for Leo Jones and Leonard L. Justice, the citizens.

State Atty. Louis A. Maire questioned Mrs. Jones, her three children, and others, rounding out the case.

GOV SHOLTZ ASKED TO INVESTIGATE

JACKSONVILLE (AP) Mrs. William P. Cornell, chairman of the Florida council of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, last night called upon Gov. Dave Sholtz for an "honest investigation" into the lynching of a negro near Fort Lauderdale Friday.

In a telegram addressed to the governor at Columbus, O., where he is attending the National Elks convention, Mrs. Cornell said:

"Fort Lauderdale lynching this afternoon again brings Florida into the nation's limelight as a state where passion and mob violence take precedence over personal control and respect for law and order.

"We urge you in the name of God and our commonwealth to show your determination to stamp out lynching in Florida by demanding an honest investigation of this lynching and by the prosecution and conviction if possible of guilty parties.

"Law abiding citizens have a right to look to you to invoke the laws of the state to apprehend and bring to trial all who are guilty of crimes.

"We are depending on you."

Lynchings – 1935
Cases of Florida

27

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS
JUL 20 1935

(Associated Press Wirephoto)

Lynched! Rubin Stacey pays the price Southern States demand when a colored man attacks a white woman. Wirephoto arrives on the scene at the heels of this curious and unabashed crowd of children, women and men. The picture, made late yesterday afternoon in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., shows Stacey's body suspended from pine tree.

FLORIDA ADDS NAME TO LIST OF STATES HOLDING LYNCHINGS IN 1935; NAACP TELLS SENATORS MISS. CANNOT STOP LYNCHINGS

7-22-35

Rubin Stacy Hanged For Alleged Knife Attack Of White Housewife

MOB TAKES VICTIM

...ng Sent Names Of

Whipping Mob Leaders; NAACP Asks Justice

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Actions of a masked mob in lynching Rubin Stacy last Friday inscribed the State of Florida on the "dishonor roll" of states holding lynchings in 1935. The other two states on the list to date are Mississippi, with six "necktie parties," and Louisiana, with two.

Stacy, accused of attacking a white woman with a knife, was taken from six deputies as they were removing him to Dade County jail, in Miami, for safekeeping.

The hanged man was accused of having been admitted to the home of Mrs. Marion Jones, 30, under pretext of wanting a glass of water. Once inside, Mrs. Jones said, he seized her by the throat and threatened her with a small knife.

"I fought him as hard as I could," she said, "cutting my hands on his knife as I struck at it. I ran through the back door and he followed me, succeeding in throwing me to the ground while I continued to fight him. It seemed to me from the look in his eyes that he was intent on cutting my throat."

Frantic cries finally drove Stacy away, Mrs. Jones continued, and the accused man was sought by Sheriff Walter Clark when he learned that Stacy had disappeared from his house, a mile and a half from the scene of the alleged attack.

Six deputies, detailed with removing Stacy to the Miami jail, 25 miles from here, for safe keeping until the trial, told a story of being overpowered by a mob of masked men.

"There were about 100 of them," said Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, "and they ran our car off the road. After overpowering us, the masked men took the Negro up the road and hanged him. He was filled full of bullets, too. I guess they shot him both before and after they hanged him."

Can't Identify Lynchers

They deputy sheriff further stated that the officers had been unable to identify any of the lynchers. The license plates of the automobiles, he further said, were either covered with paper or cloth, or had been removed.

When Justice of the Peace Hugh Lester reached the scene of the slaying an hour later, the body was still hanging from the limb ,awaiting the consent of the J. P. for the removal.

"As far as we can figure out," Wright said, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything." The deputy was obviously referring to the method used in a double murder in Columbus, Miss., last week, when mobsters placed Bert Moore and Dooley Morton atop automobiles with ropes tied around their necks, and then drove the cars out from under them, leaving the bodies suspended from an oak tree.

4707

Senators Challenged

In challenging Senators Pat Harrison and Theodore G. Bilbo of Mississippi to announce what had been done by that state to apprehend lynchers, the Moore-Morton atrocity was cited by the N.A.A.C.P.

"You have contended that the states are amply able to prevent lynchings and to punish lynchers," the letter of challenge declares. "If you have not acted, you have given the world proof that your protestations that the states are able to end lynching are not only insincere but, so far as Mississippi is concerned, utterly untrue."

The same organization also wrote Senator William E. Borah of Idaho saying "you should be proud of your handiwork in stimulating lynching." Borah is known for his speech of May first which blocked consideration of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

Senator Huey P. Long, who at various times has declared that there is no need for a federal anti-lynching law because "we in Louisiana know how to take care of these matters and will prevent our own lynchings." was sent the names of seven leaders of a whipping mob Friday by the N. A. A. C. P. and asked to see that action was taken against them.

Beating in Louisiana

The case in question was the beating of Adam Avie on July 2 by a mob at Villa Platte, La. Avie, who was employed for more than twelve years by a Mrs. P. M. Reed of Villa Platte, got into an argument with a white wood dealer from whom he was making a purchase for his mistress at her direction. The argument over the price of the wood so angered the white dealer that he charged Avie with insulting his wife, and Avie was jailed.

It is reported that several white people in the town who knew of Avie's excellent reputation attempted to put up bond for his release but were prevented from doing so. Instead, a mob broke into the jail took Avie into the woods, and whipped him with a brass-studded leather strap, leaving him for dead

Scene Like This Witnessed Again

When Florida Lynch Mob Took Life of Ruben Stacy, This Scen Was Re-enacted.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
JUL 25 1935

GRAND JURY UNABLE TO NAME LYNCHERS

Evidence Insufficient To Identify Masked Fort Lauderdale Mob

[HERALD BUREAU.]

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., July 24. The Broward county grand jury today admitted its inability to identify the 100 masked men who lynched Reuben Stacey, negro, west of this city last Friday.

Baffled by the mass silence protecting the lynchers the jury reported to Circuit Judge George W. Tedder that "after consideration of the evidence obtained and submitted by witnesses subpoenaed, and after a thorough and searching investigation of the evidence submitted, this grand jury finds it impossible to return a true bill against any person or persons responsible for the crime being investigated."

The jury further stated, "this grand jury wishes to express its willingness to be reconvened at any time further evidence can be obtained and submitted for its consideration in this investigation."

Judge Tedder, in dismissing the jurors, informed them that they will be recalled should any new evidence develop to disclose the lynchers.

The jurors, called into special session, had questioned 29 witnesses in two days.

Stacey, identified by Mrs. Marion Hill Jones, 30, mother of three small children, as the negro who attacked her with a penknife in her home a week ago today, was hanged and shot by a mob which took him from deputies who were conducting him to the Dade county jail for safekeeping.

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
JUL 25 1935

LYNCHING QUIZ PROVES FAILURE

Sheriff and Deputies Take Stand

For United Press

FT. LAUDERDALE—The Broward county grand jury Wednesday reported itself unable to return a true bill against anyone connected with the lynching of Rueben Stacey, negro, at conclusion of testimony in an investigation into the case.

The investigating body expressed willingness to meet again upon advent of new testimony in connection with last Friday's lynching of the alleged knife attacker of Mrs. James Jones, 30-year-old mother of three children.

Those who entered the jury room during the second day of the inquiry included Sheriff Walter R. Clark and his deputies and George Washington, a negro living near the Jones residence.

The jury spent Wednesday and Tuesday piecing together descriptions of the mob of more than 100 armed and masked men who siezed Stacy from an escort of sheriff's deputies as he was being taken to Miami for safekeeping.

Mrs. Jones had identified Stacy as the negro who choked her and slashed her wrists with a pocket knife.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
Lynching.
JUL 20 1935

DISGRACE for south Florida. Masked mob lynched Rubin Stacey, 37, alleged negro assailant of a white woman, while he was being removed from Fort Lauderdale jail to Miami. Quite needless, it would seem. Calling for investigation, removal of officers involved. Negro was presumably safe in Broward jail. Deputies took him out. The lynchers must have known about it in advance, had the affair nicely arranged. Halted the deputies on the highway, snatched their victim, shot and hanged him. Lynching the good name of south Florida, along with the black man. The law failed. Inexcusably.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
JUL 22 1935

LYNCHERS' IDENTITIES MANTLED BY SILENCE

Investigators Seek Evidence For Special Grand Jury Tuesday

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., July 21. Investigators, racing against time to bring evidence before a special grand jury Tuesday, today ran into mass silence, concealing identities of the band of 100 masked men that lynched a negro attacker here Friday.

Working through Sunday, Louis F. Maire, state attorney, and Sheriff Walter R. Clark did not reveal what progress they had made in the "thorough and searching" investigation ordered by Gov. Dave Sholtz into the hanging of Reuben Stacey, 37.

Stacey, identified "without a doubt" as the knife assailant of Mrs. J. L. Jones, 30, mother of three small children, was snatched from deputy sheriffs taking him to Miami for safekeeping.

The negro was found hanging to a tree within a quarter mile of the Jones home, with 18 bullet holes in his body. The coroner's jury, blaming "persons unknown" for the lynching, could not establish whether Stacey died from strangulation or the bullets.

The jury also found Sheriff Clark and his deputies exercised "proper prudence and diligence" in taking the negro from the Broward county jail and starting the interrupted automobile trip to Miami's skyscraper jail.

Governor Sholtz directed Maire and Clark to act after receiving a request for an "honest investigation" from Mrs. W. P. Cornell of Jacksonville, chairman of the Florida Council of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching.

Lynchings-1935
cases of Florida

XXX BOOK 27

4708

NEGRO IS HANGED BY MASKED GANG

Macon Telegraph
Macon, Ga.

Man Charged With Knife Attack on White Woman Is Lynched in Florida

7-20-35

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., July 19 (AP)—More than 100 masked white men took a Negro identified as Rubin Stacey held in a knife attack on a white woman, from deputies sheriffs late today and hanged him to a roadside tree.

The Negro was being transferred to Miami for safe keeping when the deputies' automobile was forced off the highway by other machines, their license plates masked, and the suspect rushed into the woods.

The lynching occurred about a mile from the home of the woman he was alleged to have attacked. Mrs. J. L. Jones, 30, mother of three children. Mrs. Jones suffered minor knife wounds in fighting off the Negro.

At the sheriff's office, a deputy reached by telephone confirmed reports of the lynching, but refused to give his name.

He said he was one of the deputies from whom custody the Negro had been taken. He said he could not recognize any of the masked men.

cort, told of the lynching.

"There were about 100 of them, and they ran our car off the road," Wright said. "After overpowering us the masked men took the Negro up the road and hanged him. As far as we can figure out, they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Mrs. Jones, 30, mother of three children, admitted the Negro to her home when he asked for a drink of water. He seized her by the throat, Mrs. Jones said, threw her to the ground, and knifed her. The assailant finally was frightened away by her cries.

LAKE WORTH, FLA.
LEADER
JUL 20 1935

MOB TAKES MAN FROM DEPUTY, RIDDLED HIS BODY

Attacker of Ft. Lauderdale White Woman Had Been Identified By Would-Be Victim

Governor Orders Full Investigation Affair

Sheriff Clark Begins Tracking Down Members of Masked Mob That Lynched Negro

Governor Dave Sholtz today ordered Sheriff Walter Clark of Broward county to give him a detailed report of the lynching yesterday at Ft. Lauderdale of Rubin Stacey, negro, accused of making an attack on a white woman of that community.

Sheriff Clark stated he will use every effort to apprehend the guilty parties, who took the cringing negro from Deputy Virgil Wright, who was taking him to the Dade county jail for safe keeping, and strung him to a pine tree and riddled his body with bullets.

The mob that over-powered him, Wright stated, was "about 100 strong; and ran his car off the road, taking the negro away."

Stacey's body was found an hour later hanging from a pine tree and riddled with sixteen slugs.

Deputy Wright said it remained there until Peace Justice Hugh Lester could reach the scene and give his official consent to its removal.

The body was dropped to the ground at 7:15 p. m., two hours and a half after the lynching and taken to a Fort Lauderdale funeral home. Sixteen bullet wounds could be counted. There was no sign of mutilation.

"As far as we can figure out," said Wright, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Stacey was sought when Sheriff Walter Clark learned he disappeared from his house, a mile and a half from the Jones home, on the day of the attack.

Relayed through a Miami salesman, the word a passing truck driver had spied the negro lurking in roadside bushes near Deerfield, brought Constable W. D. McDonald and two civilians.

Running at the approach of the constable and his hastily impressed possemen, Sheriff Clark related, the negro was stopped by shots.

Deputies watched the movement of traffic past the jail perhaps more closely than usual, but no unusual precautions were taken, and Sheriff Clark said no trouble was expected.

When brought before her Friday morning by the officers for identification, Mrs. Marion Jones, 30, mother of three small children, involuntarily cried out:

"That is the man, without a doubt."

Her two daughters, and a son, running into the yard of their isolated home with the approach of the automobile, grew hysterical when they saw the negro step from the machine and walk toward the house.

LAKE WORTH, FLA.
LEADER
JUL 22 1935

Probers Of Negro Lynching Find Out Little To Report

FORT LAUDERDALE.—Investigators, racing against time, to bring evidence before a special grand jury Tuesday, today ran into mass silence, concealing identities of the band of 100 masked men that lynched a negro attacker here Friday.

Working through Sunday, Louis F. Maire, state attorney, and Sheriff Walter R. Clark did not reveal what progress they had made in the "thorough and searching" investigation ordered by Gov. Dave Sholtz into the hanging of Reuben Stacey, 37.

Stacey, identified "without a doubt" as the knife assailant of Mrs. J. L. Jones, 30, mother of three small children, was snatched from deputy sheriffs taking him to Miami for safekeeping.

The negro was found hanging to a tree within a quarter mile of the Jones home, with 18 bullet holes in his body. The coroner's jury, blaming "persons unknown" for the lynching, could not establish whether Stacey died from strangulation or the bullets.

The jury also found Sheriff Clark and his deputies exercised "proper prudence and diligence" in taking the negro from the Broward county jail and starting the interrupted automobile trip to Miami's skyscraper jail.

Governor Sholtz directed Maire and Clark to act after receiving a request for an "honest investigation" from Mrs. W. P. Cornell of Jacksonville, chairman of the Florida Council of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 20 1935

GUARDS CLEARED IN LYNCHING OF BROWARD NEGRO

Coroner's Jury Gives Verdict; Sholtz Orders Thorough Inquiry

DAILY NEWS BUREAU
Fort Lauderdale, July 20.

A Broward county coroner's jury today exonerated Sheriff Walter A. Clark and his deputies of blame in connection with the lynching late yesterday of Rubin Stacy, Fort Lauderdale negro, finding the negro came to his death at the hands of persons unknown. The negro was identified as the man who attacked a white woman with a knife.

The jury reported it was unable to determine whether the lynching victim came to his death through strangulation or bullet wounds.

The verdict also said Sheriff Clark and his deputies were found to have used diligent care and precaution for the safety of the negro when he was a prisoner in their custody.

The jury required about an hour to consider the verdict, returning it at 1 p. m.

Investigation of the lynching was ordered today by Gov. Dave Sholtz in a wire received by Louis F. Maire, Broward state attorney.

A similar wire received by Sheriff Clark requested him to render full co-operation to Maire.

A coroner's jury heard testimony by deputy sheriffs and special deputy sheriffs from whose custody the negro was taken by a mob of more than 100 men. All testified they were unable to recognize "a single, solitary person in that crowd."

Each of the officers also testified that members of the mob all wore masks covering the lower part of their faces.

Mrs. James L. Jones, victim of

Birmingham, Ala. News
July 20, 1935

NEGRO LYNCHING PROBE STARTED

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla.—(AP)—A Negro accused of slashing a white woman with a penknife was lynched within sight of her home by a masked mob Friday and an investigation was set in motion Saturday by Gov. Sholtz to bring the guilty ones to justice.

The victim, Rubin Stacey, 37, was snatched from six officers hurrying him to Miami for safekeeping within a few hours after Mrs. Marion Jones identified him as her knife assailant, hanged, and his body riddled by 16 bullets.

J. P. Newell, secretary to the governor, quoted him as saying he was "ordering an immediate and searching investigation of the lynching." In Columbus, Ohio, to attend the national Elks' convention, Gov. Sholtz learned of the lynching by telephone.

Stacey was arrested Friday after a widespread hunt. Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, a member of his es-

the negro's knife attack Tuesday and from whom all information about the lynching was kept until today, was the first witness. In response to questioning by Hugh Lester, coroner, she said there was no doubt but that the negro brought to her for identification yesterday morning was the same who attacked her Tuesday.

Virgil Wright, the deputy sheriff who was driving the car containing the negro, said rumors brought to the sheriff of mob violence caused the decision to remove the negro to Dade county jail.

Wright said the way of the official car was blocked in several places by parked cars, a fact he did not mention in earlier interviews with the press.

The testimony of Deputy Sheriffs W. D. McDougald, Ben Turner and I. G. Shuman corroborated the testimony of other officers. All claimed Wright skidded his car about 75 feet before it ran into the ditch, that they did all they could to protect the prisoner, but were outnumbered by armed men, about 20 or 25 men seizing them and threatening them as soon as their car came to a stop.

Members of the jury were William J. Reed, ex-mayor Fort Lauderdale; C. R. Arnold, Pompano auto salesman; B. O. Geddings, ex-fire department chief, Pompano; W. J. Hood, Fort Lauderdale insurance dealer; W. O. Whiteside, Fort Lauderdale dry cleaner, and Joseph Oliver, member of a construction gang.

Maire today sent a wire assuring Governor Sholtz he would convene a grand jury Tuesday for the purpose of investigating the lynching.

More than 500 cars filled with the curious went to the scene of the lynching late yesterday, even after the body had been taken down and turned over to Benton's Funeral home, negro undertaking establishment.

The body was cut down at 7:15 p. m. by Deputy Sheriff Robert Clark. It had been hanging on the small pine tree by a twisted wire clothes line since about 4:45 p. m. There were 16 bullet wounds in the body, three of which took effect in the head or neck. Because of the nature of the wounds, it was surmised that the negro was shot before being hanged.

Deputy Sheriff Wright, driver of the car, said today he took an unfrequented and direct route to the W. Dixie highway to avoid traffic and because he believed any persons intending violence would be thrown off guard.

"I was watching the road behind me in the rear vision mirror to see that I wasn't followed," he said. "I looked through the mirror just before I reached the Seminole Indian reservation and I could see no cars on the road. However there were three men in the back seat and I may not have been able to see the road clearly. A quarter of a mile south of the camp, I looked again and I saw a car coming at a high rate of speed, and I thought that might mean trouble, so I stepped on the gas. I was then going about 50 miles an hour.

I was going about 60 miles an hour when this car pulled along side on my left. I kept my eyes on the road, as I was going at too high a rate of speed to take chances. I saw the car swerve at me, and I took to the shoulder. When I did so, the car along side swerved back to the left, and when it did, I stepped on the gas, hoping to outspeed him. When I did this, the car swerved at me again and I thought it was going to run into me. I then took to the woods, running into the ditch and narrowly missing a boulder weighing about two tons.

"In the meantime, in the rear vision mirror, I saw a string of cars that looked like a funeral procession. When our car came to a stop, narrowly missing turning over, men leaped out from everywhere. There were more than 100 and about 50 cars.

"About five persons grabbed me and most seemed to be armed. All were wearing masks, some black, some white, many of them bandana handkerchiefs hiding the faces from the eyes down. I did not recognize any one.

"They got the negro, almost knocking him unconscious, doing so, and then went on down the road. They returned in about 10 minutes, headed north toward Fort Lauderdale, but we could not get the car extricated to follow. We suspected they would go near the Jones home to hang the negro, and found him a few minutes after we had got our car pulled out of the ditch by a passing motorist."

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
JUL 21 1935

TWO WAY PROBE INTO LYNCHING OF NEGRO OPEN

Gov. Sholtz Asks Full Investigation In Slaying

GRAND JURY SET

Knife Cut Woman Identifies Black As Attacker

By Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE—A two-way investigation to unmask the 100 men — a coroner's jury declared them "unknown"—who lynched a negro attacker, was launched here Saturday in response to Gov. Sholtz' command.

Reuben Stacey, 37, negro laborer, died "by strangulation or bullet wounds," the jury found, and Sheriff W. R. Clark and his deputies "used diligent care and precaution for the safety of the deceased."

Directed to make "an immediate and searching" investigation of the negro's hanging late Friday, State Atty. Louis F. Maire and Sheriff Clark prepared for a special session of the Broward grand jury, called for Tuesday.

NEGRO IDENTIFIED

Exhibiting knife scarred hands, Mrs. Marion Hill Jones, 30, mother of three small children and member of a pioneer family, told the jury of the attack upon her last Tuesday.

"Do you positively identify Reuben Stacey as the man?" she was asked.

"There is no doubt in my mind that he is the man who attacked me," replied the housewife, unaware until this morning of the hanging of the negro to a roadside tree a quarter mile from her home.

From Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, driver of the automobile bringing the negro to Miami, 25 miles to the south, for safekeeping, came the revelation he escaped blockading on the federal highway and swerzed into the infrequently used old Dixie road.

Stacey, stopped in flight by shots, was arrested Friday on the highway near Deerfield. He was immediately identified by Mrs. Jones as the man who, flourishing a penknife, seemed "intent on cutting my

1,000 NEW PROMOTIONS MADE IN ARMY BY IL DUCE

ROME (AP) War-time promotions for almost 1,000 regular army officers Saturday constituted Italy's latest step in her preparation for the campaign in East Africa.

A decree published in an official gazette created posts for eight new colonels, 90 lieutenant colonels, 355 captains and 371 subalterns.

The terse decree was published shortly after a government spokesman denied last night that Italy had been summoned to the League of Nations council of July 27. It was almost coincidental with a statement in Premier Mussolini's own newspaper Il Popolo D'Italia, of Milan which said that Ethiopia will be opened to civilization by Italian

TAMPA, FLA
TRIBUNE

JUL 20 1935

FLORIDA MOB LYNCHES NEGRO IDENTIFIED AS ATTACKER

Masked Men Hang Suspected Assailant of White Woman

FORT LAUDERDALE, July 19.—(Associated Press)—Snatching the praying negro from six deputies, masked white men today hanged Rubin Stacey, 37, to a roadside tree within sight of the home of the white woman who identified him as the man who attacked her Tuesday with a penknife.

Arrested this morning amid a shower of bullets, Stacey was being taken to the Dade county jail, 25 miles away, for safe keeping until he could be brought to trial.

"There was about 100 of them," said Deputy Virgil Wright, "and they ran our car off the road. After overpowering us, the masked men took the negro up the road and hanged him.

"He's filled full of bullets. I guess they shot him both before and after they hanged him."

Identified by Woman

When taken before her this morning by the officers for identification, Mrs. Marion Jones, 30, mother of three small children, involuntarily cried out:

"That's the man, without a doubt!"

Her two daughters and a son, running into the yard of their isolated home with the approach of the automobile, grew hysterical when they saw the negro step from the car and walk toward the house.

Deputy Wright said the officers were unable to identify any of the masked men. The license plates of their automobiles were covered with paper or cloth, or had been removed.

An hour after the lynching, the body of the negro still swung from a limb. Deputy Wright said it remained there until Peace Justice Hugh Lester could reach the scene and give his official consent to its removal.

"As far as we can figure out," said Wright, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Attacked With Knife

Admitted to her home last Tuesday on the pretext he wanted a glass of water, Mrs. Jones' assailant seized her by the throat and flourished a small knife.

"He kept saying don't holler, don't holler, but didn't do anything else," she said.

"I fought him as hard as I could, cutting my hands on his knife as I struck at it. I ran through the back door and he followed me. He threw me to the ground while I continued to fight him. It seemed to me from the look in his eyes he was intent on cutting my throat."

Lynchings - 1935

Florida

27

4703

Cases of

Florida Mob Lynches Negro For Knifing A White Woman

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA., July 19.—(AP)—A negro accused of a knife attack on a white woman was snatched from six deputies near here late today and lynched by a mob of masked white men.

The suspect, booked as Rubin Stacy, was hanged to a roadside tree within sight of the home of Mrs. Marion Jones, 30-year-old mother of three children who had identified him as her assailant.

Arrested this morning amid gunfire, Stacey was being taken by Broward County officers to the Dade (Miami) jail, 25 miles from here, for safe-keeping until he could be brought to trial.

"There was about 100 of them," said Deputy Sheriff Virgin Wright, "and they ran our car off the road. After overpowering us, the masked men took the negro up the road and hanged him.

"He's filled full of bullets, too. I guess they shot him both before and after they hanged him."

When brought before her this morning by the officers for identification, Mrs. Jones involuntarily cried out:

"That is the man, without a doubt."

Deputy Wright said the officers were unable to identify any of the masked men. The license plates of their automobiles were covered with paper or cloth, or had been removed.

An hour after the lynching, the body of the negro still swung from a limb. Deputy Wright said it remained there until Peace Justice Hugh Lester could reach the scene and give his official consent to its removal.

"As far as we can figure out," said Wright, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Admitted to her home last Tuesday on the pretext he wanted a glass of water, Mrs. Jones's assailant suddenly seized her by the throat and flourished a small knife.

"He kept saying don't holler, don't holler, but didn't do anything else," she told deputies when they reached the house.

"I fought him as hard as I could, cutting my hands on his knife as I struck at it. I ran through the back door and he followed me, succeeding in throwing me to the ground while I continued to fight him.

"It seemed to me from the look in his eyes he was intent on cutting my throat."

Her frantic cries for help finally frightened her assailant away.

Stacey was sought when Sheriff Walter Clark learned he disappeare from his house, a mile and a half from the Jones home, on the day of the attack.

Lynching Is Kept From Knife Attack Victim

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA., July 19.—(AP)—Although a mob of 100 masked white men late today hanged a negro within a mile of her home to avenge a knife attack on her, Mrs. Marion Jones tonight did not know of the lynching.

After the arrest of the negro, Rubin Stacy, this morning Mrs. Jones viewed the prisoner and identified him as the man who last Tuesday invaded her farm home near here and slashed her with a penknife.

Tonight, however, even as the body of the negro was being cut down from the gallows-tree, she went about her household tasks unaware of the killing.

"I'm going to keep it from her as long as I can," said her husband. "I've cautioned every one around here and they are meeting the people who come to the house."

Lynching Inquiry Without Results

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., July 21 (AP)—Investigators, racing against time to bring evidence before a special grand jury Tuesday, today ran into mass silence, concealing identities of the band of 100 masked men that lynched a Negro attacker here Friday.

Working through Sunday, State Attorney Louis F. Maire and Sheriff Walter R. Clark did not reveal what progress they had made in the "thorough and searching" investigation ordered by Governor Sholtz into the hanging of Reuben Stacey, 37.

Stacey, identified "without a doubt" as the knife assailant of Mrs. J. J. Jones, 30, mother of three small children, was snatched from deputy sheriffs taking him to Miami for safekeeping.

Ft. Myers Fla. Press
July 20, 1935

Mob Snatches Praying Black From Officers

Strung Up by 100 Masked Men in Sight of Home Where He Attacked Mother of Three

Bulletin

TALLAHASSEE, July 19—(AP)—Gov. Dave Sholtz tonight ordered "an immediate and searching investigation of the lynching of a negro near Fort Lauderdale today for an alleged attack on a white woman.

J. P. Newell, the governor's secretary who informed him of the lynching by telephone quoted Gov. Sholtz as saying "I am ordering an immediate and searching investigation of the lynching in hopes of bringing the guilty ones to justice."

The governor is in Columbus, Ohio, where he is attending the Elks national convention.

FORT LAUDERDALE, July 19—(AP)—Snatching the praying negro from six deputies, masked white men today hanged Rubin Stacey, 37, to a roadside tree within sight of the home of the woman who identified him as the man who attacked her Tuesday with a penknife.

Arrested this morning amid a shower of bullets, Stacey was being taken by the Broward county deputies to the Dade (Miami) county jail, 25 miles away, for safekeeping until he could be brought to trial.

"There was about a hundred of them," said Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, "and they ran our car off the road. After overpowering us, the masked men took the negro and hanged him. He's filled full of bullets, too. I guess they shot him both before and after they hanged him."

Identifies Negro

When brought before her this morning by the officers for identification, Mrs. Marion Jones, 30, mother of three small children, involuntarily cried out: "That is the man, without a doubt."

Her two daughters, and a son, running into the yard of their isolated home with the approach of the automobile, grew hysterical when they saw the negro step from the machine and walk toward the house.

The husband of Mrs. Jones tonight said she was going about her household duties as usual, seemingly the only person who had not learned of the lynching.

"I'm going to try to keep it from her as long as I can," said Jones. "I've cautioned everyone around here, and they're meeting people who come to the house."

Feared Legal Delay

Many of those who talked of the lynching expressed the belief that the long-dragged out proceedings in the Robert M. Darsey slaying three years ago played an important part in determining the action of the mob. Darsey, aged Pompano fish dealer, was slain by robbers. Four negroes were convicted in circuit court here and sentenced to die in the electric chair. They gained a hearing from the supreme court on their plea Broward officers had mistreated them. The case is still before the courts.

Deputy Wright said the officers were unable to identify any of the masked men. The license plates of their automobiles were covered with paper or cloth, or had been removed.

An hour after the lynching, the body of the negro still swung from a limb. Deputy Wright said it remained there until Peace Justice Hugh Lester could reach the scene and give his official consent to its removal.

The body was dropped to the ground at 7:15 p. m., two hours and a half after the lynching, and taken to a Fort Lauderdale funeral home. Sixteen bullet wounds could be counted. There was no sign of mutilation.

"As far as we can figure out," said Wright, "they just picked him up with the rope from the ground — didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Admitted to her home last Tuesday on the pretext he wanted a glass of water, Mrs. Jones' assailant suddenly seized her by the throat and flourished a small knife.

"He kept saying 'don't holler, don't holler,' but didn't do anything else," she told deputies when they reached the house. "I fought him as hard as I could, cutting my hands on his knife as I struck at him. I ran through the back door and he followed me, succeeding in throwing me to the ground while I continued to fight him. It seemed to me from the look in his eyes he was intent on cutting my throat."

Negro Frightened Away

Her frantic cries for help finally frightened her assailant away.

Stacey was sought when Sheriff Walter Clark learned he disappeared from his house, a mile and a half from the Jones home, on the day of the attack.

Relayed through a Miami salesman, the word a passing truck driver had spied the negro lurking in roadside bushes near Deerfield, five miles north of here, brought Constable W. D. McDougald and two civilians. Running at the approach of the constable and his hastily impressed possemen, Sheriff Clark related, the negro was stopped by shots.

Deputies watched the movement of traffic past the jail perhaps more closely than usual, but no unusual precautions were taken, and Sheriff Clark said no trouble was expected.

As high as 100 men, many carrying shotguns or rifles, deployed through the woods and heavy underbrush about the Jones home on the day of the attack. Bloodhounds were brought from Miami and Coral Gables, but rain washed out the fugitive's scent.

The arrest brought immediate paying of the $100 reward Sheriff Clark had posted, $50 going to Constable McDougald, and $25 each for Leo Jones and Leonard L. Justice, the citizens.

State Attorney Louis A. Maire questioned Mrs. Jones, her three children, and others, rounding out the case.

PROTEST TO SHOLTZ

JACKSONVILLE, July 19—(AP)—Mrs. William P. Cornell, chairman of the Florida council of the association of southern women for the prevention of lynching, tonight called upon Gov. Dave Sholtz for an "honest investigation" into the lynching of a negro near Fort Lauderdale today.

In a telegram addressed to the governor at Columbus, O., where he is attending the national Elks convention, Mrs. Cornell said: "Fort Lauderdale lynching this afternoon again brings Florida into the nation's limelight as a state where passion and mob violence take precedence over personal control and respect for law and order.

"We urge you in the name of God and our commonwealth to show your determination to stamp out lynching in Florida by demanding an honest investigation of this lynching and by the prosecution and conviction if possible of guilty parties. Law abiding citizens have a right to look to you to invoke the laws of the state to apprehend and bring to trial all who are guilty of crimes.

"We are depending on you."

New York Evening Post
JUL 20 1935

FLORIDA LYNCHERS FACE STATE PROBE

Governor Orders Guilty Brought to Justice in Hanging of Negro

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., July 20 (AP).—An investigation was set in motion today by Governor Dave Sholtz to bring "the guilty ones to justice" for the lynching of a Negro.

Rubin Stacey, thirty-seven, accused of slashing a white woman with a penknife, was hanged within sight of her home.

Stacey was snatched from six officers hurrying him to Miami for safekeeping within a few hours after Mrs. Marion Jones identified him yesterday.

Inquiry to Be Searching

J. P. Newell, secretary to the Governor, qouted him as saying he was ordering an immediate and searching investigation.

In Columbus, Ohio, to attend the national Elks convention, the Governor learned of the lynching by telephone.

Stacey was arrested after a widespread hunt. Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, a member of his escort, told of the lynching.

"There were about 100 of them and they ran our car off the road," Wright said.

Hanged From the Ground

"After overpowering us, the masked men took the Negro up the road and hanged him. As far as we can figure out, they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—didn't bother to push him from an automobile or anything."

Mrs. Jones, thirty, mother of three, admitted the Negro to her home when he asked for a drink of water. He seized her by the throat, threw her to the ground and knifed her. He finally was frightened away by her cries.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
JUL 20 1935

JURY IN FLORIDA PROBES LYNCHING

Colored Youth Taken from Five Officers and Hanged by Mob of 100 Men.

Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., July 20.—A coroner's jury was summoned today to investigate, with little hope of result, the lynching by 100 masked men of Reuben Stacy, colored youth accused of attacking a married white woman.

The mob took Stacy from five officers at Gun Point yesterday, hanged him with a wire rope to a small pine tree, and riddled his body with bullets from a score of guns. The body dangled three hours in a hot sun before deputy sheriffs cut it down.

Stacy was the seventh victim of lynch mobs in the United States since Jan. 1.

It was expected the jury would hear only the officers' version of the lynching. Members of the mob hid their identities with masks and by covering their automobile license plates. No arrests were made.

Stacy was captured yesterday morning near Deerfield and lodged in Broward County jail. A mob, aroused over the attack on Mrs. James Jones, 30, wife of a pioneer citrus grower, threatened violence.

To safeguard the prisoner, five deputy sheriffs started with the prisoner for Miami. A short distance out of Ft. Lauderdale pursuing automobiles forced the officers' car into the ditch.

Stacy was hanged less than a mile from the Jones home a few minutes later.

Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright said Stacy did not admit the attack. He was being held under a charge of assault with intent to commit murder.

"He kept mum," Wright said, "but Mrs. Jones positively identified him."

Miami, Fla. Herald
July 20, 1935

DISGRACE for south Florida. Masked mob lynched Rubin Stacey, 37, alleged negro assailant of a white woman, while he was being removed from Fort Lauderdale jail to Miami. Quite needless, it would seem. Calling for investigation, removal of officers involved. Negro was presumably safe in Broward jail. Deputies took him out. The lynchers must have known about it in advance, had the affair nicely arranged. Halted the deputies on the highway, snatched their victim, shot and hanged him. Lynching the good name of south Florida, along with the black man. The law failed. Inexcusably.

FLORIDA WHITES LYNCH 'ALLEGED' KNIFE WIELDER

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Va.

Rubin Stacy Accused of Attack Upon White Woman

7-27-35

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla.—Rubin Stacy, accused of a knife attack upon a white woman near here Tuesday of last week, was lynched near here late Friday evening after the woman is alleged to have positively identified him as the man who attacked her after gaining admittance to her home on the pretext of wanting a glass of water.

The victim of America's lust for human blood, captured after a chase during which several shots were fired, was being taken by Boward County officers to the Miami jail for safekeeping, when it is alleged more than 100 masked men overpowered the officers and took Stacy from them, hanged him to a tree and riddled his body with bullets.

Deputy Sheriff Virgil Wright, who was in charge of the prisoner, said the officers were unable to identify any of the members of the mob as all were masked and had taken the precaution of removing license plates from their cars or else covering them with paper or cloth.

The body dangled from the tree fully an hour after the lynching until Peace Justice Huge Lester could reach the scene and give his official consent for it to be cut down.

Alleging that after Stacy had entered her home and suddenly seized her by the throat, flourishing a knife, the woman, Mrs. Marion Jones, stated that she fought him off and ran through the back door with Stacy in pursuit and after he had overtaken her and succeeded in throwing her to the ground her cries for help frightened him away.

The accused man was sought after it was discovered that he had disappeared from his home, a short distance away from the Jones home, on the day of the attack, according to the Sheriff.

A passing truck driver reported that he had spied Stacy lurking in the bushes five miles north of here. A hastily impressed posse gave chase and captured him after firing several shots in his direction. Carried before his accuser, Stacy was immediately identified as the guilty person by the woman who exclaimed, "That is the man without a doubt."

In describing the lynching, the sheriff said, "as far as we can figure out, they just picked him up with the rope from the ground—did not bother to push him from an automobile or anything." The fat teachers are a poor bet because they are relatively short-lived and are a poor risk for the

Lynchings-1935-
Cases of Florida.

27

4704

Tampa Seeking Flogging Mob; Police Quizzed

TAMPA, FLA., Dec. 4.—(AP)—Authorities investigating the flogging, tarring and feathering of three men here questioned at least eight members of the Tampa Police Department today following a statement by one of the victims that policemen took part in the affair.

State Atty. J. Rex Farrior and County Solicitor J. C. Hardee conducted the investigation, which was speeded by demands for action against the floggers from Norman Thomas, one-time Socialist candidate for president, and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Farrior and Hardee made no announcement of their findings.

The eight policemen known to have appeared before the investigators were Lieut. J. L. Eddings, Officer F. L. Wyman, Assistant Detective Chief M. C. Beasley, Officer D. H. Chiles, Officer F. W. Switzer, Officer Arthur Berry of the vice squad, Detective J. F. Gray and Sergt. C. A. Brown.

Joseph A. Shoemaker was the most seriously injured of the floggers' victims. His doctor said the man was "horribly mutilated" and added "I wouldn't beat a hog the way that man was whipped."

W. F. Poulnot, second member of the trio, also was in a serious condition. Sam Rogers, the third man, was said to be recovering.

They said they were arrested Saturday night for questioning about "alleged communistic activities" but were released only to be seized by members of the mob just outside the police station.

All three men have been active in organizing unemployed persons in this area.

Arthur Garfield Hays, of New York general counsel, signed the American Civil Liberties Union telegram of protest and in the name of the organization offered $1,000 reward for arrest and conviction of guilty persons.

Thomas in his telegram said "Saturday night events in Tampa would disgrace Hitler's tyranny."

Tampa To Hold Public Services Against Flogging

TAMPA, FLA., Dec. 14.—(AP)—A public service of penitence and indignation Sunday afternoon will crystallize Tampa's sentiment against the flogging death of Joseph Shoemaker, for which no one has been arrested.

The Tampa Ministerial Association will conduct the service in advance of a grand jury investigation of the killing which starts Monday. The Rev. Walter Metcalf, president of the association, said:

"The meeting is for the purpose of creating a deep moral tone of indignation and penitence and a consciousness deep in our civic sense of the general condition in Tampa." He did not define the "general condition."

Public officials said they were continuing to track down clues in the flogging of Shoemaker, E. F. Poulnot and S. D. Rogers, and they promised arrests when their evidence is complete. Whether the evidence would be ready for the grand jury Monday remained in doubt.

The men were seized by a band of men outside Tampa police headquarters Nov. 30 as they were released after being questioned about alleged communistic activities.

Lynching Is Fun To Florida Klan Boss

12-21-35

NEW YORK, N.Y.—The reaction of the Ku Klux Klan Kleagle and chairman of the Americanization Committee of the American Legion on the recent fatal tarring and feathering of Frank Norman, white, in Orlando, Fla., is recounted in a current issue of the New Masses, by Bruce Minton, white.

"Y'see," he is quoted as stating, "the Pope, he's plannin' to move to Washington in case a Catholiic is elected President. That's the danger. You fellers up No'th don't know these things, any mor'n you know that all a n—r wants is t'sleep with a white woman. And they know what that means if they're caught.

"Out for Reds

"We're out for the Reds," the kleagle is reported to have continued. "They threaten the whole South. Y'know, this might seem hard to believe, but they wanted ten dollars a week relief. Ten dollars, yes suh, and Uncle Sam was to foot the bill.."

Regarding other activities, the kleagle said:

"The sheriff knows any time he needs men, all he has to do is ring me up and inside of an hour he has 500 men. 'Course, sometimes it's necessary to take the law in our hands. We string up a n—r now and then—f'r an example like. Not officially, but it comes to the same thing.

"Over in Lakeland, a fellow named No'man—Frank No'man—he got foolin' round with n—s and unions and he got the works. I don't think he's dead. But this No'man was a Red. I can honestly say that. Sometimes we gotta show people what we think of those stinkin' trouble-makers."

The kleagle talked further stating that he was planning to run for sheriff of Orange County. He'd clean up Orlando, "The City Beautiful, where every other hot-dog stand owner insists that waitresses go in for prostitution on the side and let the management in on a cut of the proceeds."

"What about President Roosevelt?" the kleagle was asked.

"He's okay," the klansman answered. "I can honestly say that it's the goddamned comoonistic brain trusters, y'know. Mrs. Dilling was about right. Tugwell, Ickes, that guy Wallace, they're all Comoonists. And Farley, he's a Catholic. Things're in a helluva mess.

"Look at Gov'nor Scholtz. If you get to Talahassee, you give that Jew bastard a message. Say it's from the kleagle of Orlando. He knows me." The kleagle continued:

"Every now and then the members of the klan put on their sheets and parade the streets. The big kick is to invade the Negro quarter on the outskirts of town. The Negroes are apt to be scared. They remember past experiences; some of the boys might get mischievous and burn the quarter down. Of course, it's all in fun.

"Maybe some of the more lively klansmen will whip a few Negroes, or if their spirts run real high, lynch an innocent man. That's just to remind the Negroes that white men are superior beings with souls and that Negroes have no soul.

"When the Negroes show signs of growing tired of the unremitting oppression, then the powers call in a man like me and tell me that one or the other of the klan's prejudices has been flaunted and then I muster the terrorist artillery."

Lynchings- 1935
Cases of:

Georgia.

4602

NEGRO IS LYNCHED

Prisoner Taken From Dooly Sheriff, Hanged by Mob.

VIENNA, Ga., Sept. 28.—(AP)—Lewis Harris, 50-year-old negro, was lynched near here last night by a mob which overpowered Sheriff Bos Vinson, of Dooly county, as the officer was carrying the negro to Fitzgerald for safekeeping. 9-29-35

Harris had been arrested on a charge of drunkenness.

Feeling had been running high since the arrest of the negro last Sunday night and he was being carried to Fitzgerald by Sheriff Vinson as a precautionary measure when Vinson was halted by four carloads of men who took charge of the prisoner.

Harris was hanged to a tree on Sandy Mount road four miles from here. His body bore several bullet marks but it was not determined whether Harris had been shot before he was swung from the tree.

There the body was found early today and removed.

Sheriff Vinson started toward Fitzgerald with Harris last night after notifying Judge A. J. McDonald at Fitzgerald of the situation and was authorized by the judge to carry the negro there for safekeeping.

Judge McDonald said tonight he had not heard anything further from the sheriff and that he knew nothing of the lynching.

Dooly county community to arrest a young Negro man for being drunk on the church ground. It was stated that the Negro's father came upon the scene and that the prisoner said, "Daddy make him turn me loose."

The older Negro took his pistol and put it in the sheriff's ribs and demanded that he release his son. Having no way to defend himself, Sheriff Vinson yielded to the request. The Negro with the pistol then commanded another Negro to take him away in an automobile. This request was also granted.

The Negro was taken from the church and the man piloting the automobile came back to where Sheriff Vinson was and told him where he probably could find Lewis Harris. The officer put bloodhounds on the trail and the Lewis Negro was traced about 20 miles and captured. He was placed in Dooly county jail.

Threats Are Made

Yesterday afternoon, it was stated, Sheriff Vinson heard there were threats of taking the Negro out of jail and lynching him. In order to avert a lynching the officer started with Harris in his automobile for the Ben Hill county jail in Fitzgerald for safekeeping.

When Sheriff Vinson arrived at the Greer place, four automobiles blocked the highway. About eight white men, it was stated, took the Negro and sped away towards Cordele. Nothing was further learned of the incident until this morning.

Sheriff Vinson was unable to identify any of the men who took the Negro. It was stated that he said the white men cut the wires to his automobile lights making it impossible for him to identify the mob that was off in a minute.

A coroner's jury was empaneled in Vienna and after investigating the death of the Negro rendered a verdict that the Harris Negro came to his death at the hands of unknown parties. It was reliably reported in Cordele today that the Harris Negro stated while confined in the Vienna jail that he "would get even with Sheriff Vinson yet."

NEGRO IS MOBBED IN DOOLY COUNTY

Posse Takes Lewis Harris From Sheriff Vinson While En Rout to Jeff Davis Jail

CORDELE, Ga., Sept. 28—A Negro man named Lewis Harris who had been confined in the Dooly county jail in Vienna nine miles north of Cordele since last Sunday night was taken from Sheriff Bos Vinson of Dooly county below Charlie Greer's place just outside the city limits of Cordele on the Seville road, last night by a crowd of men in four automobiles and carried back to Dooly county and lynched on Sandy Mount road, about four miles from Vienna.

Last Sunday, Sheriff Vinson went to a Negro meeting in progress in a

NEGRO IS LYNCHED

Prisoner Taken From Dooly Sheriff, Hanged by Mob.

VIENNA, Ga., Sept. 28.—(AP)—Lewis Harris, 50-year-old negro, was lynched near here last night by a mob which overpowered Sheriff Bos Vinson, of Dooly county, as the officer was carrying the negro to Fitzgerald for safekeeping. 9—29—35

Harris had been arrested on a charge of drunkenness.

Feeling had been running high since the arrest of the negro last Sunday night and he was being carried to Fitzgerald by Sheriff Vinson as a precautionary measure when Vinson was halted by four carloads of men who took charge of the prisoner.

Harris was hanged to a tree on Sandy Mount road four miles from here. His body bore several bullet marks but it was not determined whether Harris had been shot before he was swung from the tree.

There the body was found early today and removed.

Sheriff Vinson started toward Fitzgerald with Harris last night after notifying Judge A. J. McDonald at Fitzgerald of the situation and was authorized by the judge to carry the negro there for safekeeping.

Judge McDonald said tonight he had not heard anything further from the sheriff and that he knew nothing of the lynching.

NEW YORK TIMES

SEP 29 1935

NEGRO LYNCHED IN GEORGIA

Mob Hangs Man Accused of Drawing Gun on Sheriff.

VIENNA, Ga., Sept. 28 (AP).—Lewis Harris, a Negro, 50 years old, was lynched near here last night by a mob which overpowered Sheriff Bos Vinson of Dooly County as the officer was taking him to Fitzgerald, Ga., for safe-keeping. Harris had been arrested on a charge of drunkenness.

Feeling had been running high since the arrest of the Negro last Sunday night. He was being removed to Fitzgerald by Sheriff Vinson as a precautionary measure when Vinson was halted by men in four automobiles, who took charge of the prisoner.

Harris was hanged to a tree on Sandy Mount Road four miles from here. His body bore several bullet marks.

Speaking in the absence of her husband tonight, Mrs. Vinson said that the Sheriff went to a Negro meeting Sunday upon receiving a report of a disturbance there.

"When Mr. Vinson attempted to arrest the Negro," she went on, "he gave a container of liquor to his son and the Sheriff caught the boy.

"Then Harris put a gun against the Sheriff's back and demanded that he release the boy, at the same time calling Mr. Vinson the worst thing he could think of."

She said the Sheriff later returned with bloodhounds and trailed the Negro to a place near by, where he was arrested. She said Harris denied that he had drawn a gun on Vinson or that he had cursed him.

Georgia Mobbers String Up Year's Sixteenth Victim

Lynchers Take Man, 50, Arrested for Drunkenness Away from Sheriff

BLOODHOUNDS USED TO TRAIL PRISONER

Had Stuck Pistol in Jailer's Paunch.

VIENNA, Ga. — Georgia mobbers boosted the year's number of victims of the Nordic American's lynching sport to sixteen Saturday, when they strung up Lewis Harris, 50, after taking him from Sheriff Bob Vinson.

With the exception of one, all of the victims have been colored.

Lewis was being held on a charge of drunkenness after sticking a revolver in the sheriff's paunch and forcing him to release his son. The officer had gone to a meeting upon the report of a disturbance.

Trailed by Hounds

When he attempted to arrest Harris, the latter gave a container of liquor to his boy. When the boy ran, he was caught by the law officer. The father is then reported to have whipped out a revolver, secured his son's release and escaped himself.

Sheriff Vinson later returned with bloodhounds, who trailed Harris to a nearby place. As news of the incident spread, talk of lynching increased.

The officer was supposedly taking Harris to Fitzgerald, Ga., for "safekeeping" when four automobile loads of men appeared and took charge of the prisoner.

Lynch Man Accused Of Drunkenness

VIENNA, Ga., Oct. 4.—Overpowering Sheriff Bos Vinson of Dooly county last Saturday night as the officer was taking Lewis Harris, arrested for drinking, to Fitzgerald, Ga., for safekeeping, a blood thirsty mob of head hunters snatched the victim from the sheriff's keep and lynched him in true hangman's style.

Harris was being removed to Fitzgerald by Sheriff Vinson as a precautionary measure, after threats had been made against the victim's life, when Vinson was halted by four carloads of men who took the prisoner.

According to the sheriff's wife, Harris was captured after being trailed by blood hounds from a gathering where the sheriff had attempted to make an arrest.

Jailed For Drunkenness

Mrs. Vinson also stated that the sheriff went to a meeting of Race people upon receiving a report of a disturbance there. When Vinson attempted to arrest Harris, the alleged drunken disturber, Harris gave a container of liquor to his son who fled the scene.

Sheriff Vinson pursued the youth and placed him under arrest, then, the report goes, Harris objected to the arrest of his son and under the influence of liquor placed a gun against the sheriff's back and demanded that he release the boy.

Feeling ran high in this section after it became known that a Race man had threatened a white sheriff with a gun. And so in keeping with true southern policy, a band of whites went upon their sinister mission, defying law and order. Their mob spirits and inhuman fury only subsided when the body of the black man hung high from a branch of one of the country's loftiest trees.

The conquest over, the mobsters returned and gave not a thought to the statement made by the Sheriff's wife hat their victim had persistently denied placing his gun against the back of the sheriff.

LYNCHING IS CHARGED TO 'UNKNOWN PARTIES'

VIENNA, Ga., Sept. 30.—(AP)—The lynching of Lewis Harris, 50-year-old negro, was recorded officially today as a "death at the hands of parties unknown."

The verdict was returned yesterday by a coroner's jury after investigation into the slaying of the negro near here by a mob last Friday night. His bullet-riddled body was found hanging to a tree beside the Vienna-Fitzgerald highway. Harris had been arrested for drunkenness and escaped by threatening Sheriff Bob Vinson with a pistol. He was trailed by bloodhounds and re-

Sheriff Vinson said there was some talk of violence when he returned the prisoner to jail here after obtaining a writ of removal of the negro's body bore between 25 and 30 bullet wounds.

The verdict was returned yesterday by a coroner's jury after investigation into the slaying of the negro near here by a mob last Friday night. His bullet-riddled body was found hanging to a tree beside the Vienna-Fitzgerald highway. Harris had been arrested for drunkenness and escaped by threatening Sheriff Bob Vinson with a pistol. He was trailed by bloodhounds and recaptured. While on the trip to Fitzgerald, who conducted the inquest, said the sheriff's car was overpowered by four carloads of men and the negro taken from him. Vinson said he could not identify any of the group.

Justice of the Peace W. V. Harv-

Cordele, Ga. Dispatch
September 29, 1935

NEGRO IS TAKEN FROM SHERIFF OUTSIDE CORDELE

Verdict Rendered Negro Came to Death at Hands Unknown Parties

A negro man, named Lewis Harris, who had been confined in the Dooly county jail in Vienna since last Sunday night, was taken from Sheriff Cos Vinson, of Dooly, below Charlie Greer's place, just outside the city limits of Cordele, on the Seville road last night by a crowd of men in four automobiles and carried back to Dooly county and lynched on the Sandy Mount road, about four miles from Vienna. The body of the negro was found dangling from a tree this morning.

Last Sunday Sheriff Vinson went to a negro meeting in progress in a Dooly county community to arrest a young negro man for being drunk on the church ground. It was stated that the negro's father came upon the scene and that the prisoner said, "Daddy make him turn me loose." The older negro took his 44 pistol and put in the sheriff's ribs and demanded that he release his son. Having no way to defend himself, Sheriff Vinson yielded to the request. The negro with the pistol then commanded another negro to take him away in an automobile; this request also was granted.

The negro was taken away from the church and the negro piloting the automobile came back to where Sheriff Vinson was and told him where he probably could find Lewis Harris. Sheriff Vinson put blood hounds on the trail and the Lewis negro was traced about twenty miles and captured. He was placed in Dooly county jail.

Yesterday afternoon, it was stated, Sheriff Vinson heard there were threats of taking the negro out of the jail and lynching him. In order to avert a lynching, the sheriff took Harris in his automobile and started for Fitzgerald where he was to place the negro in the Ben Hill county jail for safekeeping. When Sheriff Vinson arrived at the Greer place four automobiles blocked the highway. About eight white men, it was stated took Harris and sped away towards Cordele. Nothing further was learned about the incident until this morning.

Sheriff Vinson was unable to identify any of the men who took the negro. It was stated that he said the white men cut the wire to his car lights, making it impossible for him to identify the mob that was off in a minute.

A coroner's jury was empanelled this morning in Vienna and after investigating the death of the negro rendered a verdict that Harris came to his death at the hands of unknown parties.

It was reliably reported in Cordele that the Harris negro stated while confined in the Vienna jail that he "would get even with Sheriff Vinson yet."

ATLANTA, GA.
CONSTITUTION

SEP 29 1935

NEGRO IS LYNCHED

Prisoner Taken From Dooly Sheriff, Hanged by Mob.

VIENNA, Ga., Sept. 28.—(AP)—Lewis Harris, 50-year-old negro, was lynched near here last night by a mob which overpowered Sheriff Bos Vinson, of Dooly county, as the officer was carrying the negro to Fitzgerald for safekeeping.

Harris had been arrested on a charge of drunkenness.

Feeling had been running high since the arrest of the negro last Sunday night and he was being carried to Fitzgerald by Sheriff Vinson as a precautionary measure when Vinson was halted by four carloads of men who took charge of the prisoner.

Harris was hanged to a tree on Sandy Mount road four miles from here. His body bore several bullet marks but it was not determined whether Harris had been shot before he was swung from the tree.

There the body was found early today and removed.

Sheriff Vinson started toward Fitzgerald with Harris last night after notifying Judge A. J. McDonald at Fitzgerald of the situation and was authorized by the judge to carry the negro there for safekeeping.

Judge McDonald said tonight he had not heard anything further from the sheriff and that he knew nothing of the lynching.

SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS

SEP 29 1935

NEGRO HANGED BY MOB NEAR VIENNA

Lewis Harris Taken From Dooly County Sheriff

JUST OUT OF CORDELE

Had Been Arrested On Charge of Drunkenness

VIENNA, Ga., Sept. 28 (AP).—Lewis Harris, 50-year-old negro, was lynched near here last night by a mob which overpowered Sheriff Bos Vinson of Dooly county as the officer was carrying the negro to Fitzgerald, Ga., for safekeeping. Harris had been arrested on a charge of drunkenness.

Feeling had been running high since the arrest of the negro last Sunday night and he was being carried to Fitzgerald by Sheriff Vinson as a precautionary measure when Vinson was halted by four carloads of men, who took charge of the prisoner.

Harris was hanged to a tree on Sandy Mount road four miles from here. His body bore several bullet marks but it was not determined whether Harris had been shot before he was swung from the tree.

There the body was found early today and removed.

Sheriff Vinson started toward Fitzgerald with Harris last night after notifying Judge A. J. McDonald at Fitzgerald of the situation and was authorized by the judge to carry the negro there for safekeeping.

Judge McDonald said tonight he had not heard anything further from the sheriff and that he knew nothing of the lynching.

Speaking in the absence of her husband who was away from home tonight, Mrs. Vinson said the prisoner was taken from the sheriff just outside the Cordele, Ga., city limits and carried to the scene of the lynching.

MACON, GA.
NEWS

SEP 29 1935

NEGRO IS MOBBED IN DOOLY COUNTY

Posse Takes Lewis Harris From Sheriff Vinson While En Rout to Jeff Davis Jail

CORDELE, Ga., Sept. 28—A Negro man named Lewis Harris who had been confined in the Dooly county jail in Vienna nine miles north of Cordele since last Sunday night was taken from Sheriff Bos Vinson of Dooly county below Charlie Greer's place just outside the city limits of Cordele on the Seville road, last night by a crowd of men in four automobiles and carried back to Dooly county and lynched on Sandy Mount road, about four miles from Vienna.

Last Sunday, Sheriff Vinson went to a Negro meeting in progress in a Dooly county community to arrest a young Negro man for being drunk on the church ground. It was stated that the Negro's father came upon the scene and that the prisoner said, "Daddy make him turn me loose."

The older Negro took his pistol and put it in the sheriff's ribs and demanded that he release his son. Having no way to defend himself, Sheriff Vinson yielded to the request. The Negro with the pistol then commanded another Negro to take him away in an automobile. This request was also granted.

The Negro was taken from the church and the man piloting the automobile came back to where Sheriff Vinson was and told him where he probably could find Lewis Harris. The officer put bloodhounds on the trail and the Lewis Negro was traced about 20 miles and captured. He was placed in Dooly county jail.

Threats Are Made

Yesterday afternoon, it was stated, Sheriff Vinson heard there were threats of taking the Negro out of jail and lynching him. In order to avert a lynching the officer started with Harris in his automobile for the Ben Hill county jail in Fitzgerald for safekeeping.

When Sheriff Vinson arrived at the Greer place, four automobiles blocked the highway. About eight white men, it was stated, took the Negro and sped away towards Cordele. Nothing was further learned of the incident until this morning.

Sheriff Vinson was unable to identify any of the men who took the Negro. It was stated that he said the white men cut the wire to his automobile lights making it impossible for him to identify the mob that was off in a minute.

A coroner's jury was empaneled in Vienna and after investigating the death of the Negro rendered a verdict that the Harris Negro came to his death at the hands of unknown parties. It was reliably reported in Cordele today that the Harris Negro stated while confined in the Vienna jail that he "would get even with Sheriff Vinson yet."

AMERICUS, GA.
TIMES RECORDER

SEP 30 1935

MOB LYNCHES VIENNA NEGRO

Coroner's Jury Ends Probe of Slaying

VIENNA, Ga., Sept. 30. — A coroner's jury which investigated the lynch slaying of Lewis Harris, 50-year-old negro, found Sunday that he "came to his death at the hands of parties unknown."

Harris' bullet-riddled body was found hanging to a tree beside the Vienna-Fitzgerald highway about three miles from here, Buddie Peavy told the jury. Another witness told of having heard shots at night near his home.

Justice of the Peace W. V. Harvard, who conducted the inquest, said Harris' body had contained between 25 and 30 bullets.

Sheriff Bos Vinson was taking Harris from Vienna to Fitzgerald, Ga., for safekeeping, when he was stopped by a group of men in four cars and delieved of his prisoner.

Harvard said Harris had been in custody for being drunk and for drawing a pistol on the sheriff while he was trying to make ana rrest. Harris got away but was later trailed and located by dogs.

Harris was arrested several days ago. After he was placed in jail here, Harvard said there was talk of violence, and the sheriff obtained an order from Judge A. J. McDonald for removal of the prisoner. Vinson was making the trip at night when overpowered.

Harvard said he was told none of the group spoke during the taking of the prisoner, and that Cheriff Vinson could not identify any of the group.

Harris' body was buried today by county authorities.

Lynchings-1935
Cases of.

Georgia

4603

ROME, GA.
NEWS TRIBUNE
SEP 29 1935

NEGRO IS TAKEN FROM GA. SHERIFF, LYNCHED BY MOB

Charged With Pointing Pistol At Officer, Negro Executed By Mobsmen

CORDELE, Ga., Sept. 28.—(USINS)—The lifeless body of a negro, identified as Lewis Harris, was found hanging from a tree on Sandy Mountain road near Vienna today. He had been taken from Sheriff Cos Vinson of Dooly county by a crowd of white men Friday night.

The negro had allegedly rescued his son from the sheriff last Sunday during an argument at a negro meeting. The negro was arrested for allegedly pointing a pistol at the sheriff when he aided his son to escape.

Until his seizure by the men Friday night the negro was confined in Dooly county jail. Hearing that threats had ben made to storm the jail and seize the negro, Sheriff Vinson put him in an automobile and headed for Fitzgerald where he intended to place the negro for safekeeping.

Near the city limits of Cordele, the men, riding in four automobiles, stopped the sheriff, seized the negro and took him back to Dooly county where he was put to death.

Sheriff Vinson said he could not identify any of the men. A coroner's jury late today returned a verdict that the negro came to his death at the hands of unidentified persons.

Vienna, Ga., News
October 3, 1935

NEGRO TAKEN FROM SHERIFF AND LYNCHED

WAS IN TRANSIT TO JAIL IN FITZGERALD. "KILLED BY UNKNOWN PARTIES" IS VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY

Lewis Harris, a Negro, was lynched Friday night about 8 o'clock about three hundred yards from the home of D. L. Arflin who resides about three and a half miles from Vienna on the Sandy Mount road.

Events which led up to the lynching, it is said, centered around an attempt by Sheriff Vinson to arrest Lewis and his son at Piney Grove church on Sunday before last when the officer drove up to the church and found Lewis in possession of a bottle of liquor, which Lewis passed on to his son and told him to run. The boy started to run and Sheriff Vinson turned his back on the elder Lewis and caught the boy, whereupon Lewis, Sr., drew a pistol, stuck its muzzle into the sheriff's back and ordered him to turn the boy loose, cursing him vilely.

Sheriff Vinson states that he turned the Lewis boy loose and that the elder Lewis then backed into the crowd, which was gathered at the church, and fled without a shot having been fired by either of them, the sheriff being afraid to shoot at the Negro because of possibility of injuring innocent bystanders. Lewis is said to have ordered another Negro to take him away from the scene of the trouble, and the driver of the escape car later came to Sheriff Vinson and Deputy Peavy and advised them where he thought Lewis could be found. A posse composed of Sheriff Vinson, County Warden L. A. Woodruff, Deputy Sheriff Adrian Peavy, Joe Bush and George Peavy went to the vicinity where Lewis was reported to be in hiding and set track dogs on his trail and succeeding in capturing him on the Lon Walton place, after a chase of several hours, no shots being fired at the Negro in the course of the hunt. Lewis was lodged in the Dooly county jail, where he remained until Friday night.

Talked To Judge

Sheriff Vinson states that he had been warned several times that a raid was being planned to take the Negro from the jail Friday night and he and Deputy Peavy called Judge A. J. McDonald in Fitzgerald and told him of the impending trouble over the episode, requesting the jurist to have a removal order ready for them when they reached Fitzgerald with the Negro and also to ask the Ben Hill county sheriff to arrange to keep the prisoner. This conversation is said to have taken place about 6:30 Friday afternoon from A. D. Peavy & Sons warehouse.

Sheriff Vinson states that he and Mr. Peavy started on the trip to Fitzgerald and reached a point near the Charlie Greer place about a mile below Cordele when they found the road blocked by four cars, that three masked men approached the officers' car, turned off their lights, attempted to cut the light and ignition wires and took the Negro from their custody at pistol point, placed him in another car and sped away toward Dooly county. It is said that the three men who were on the ground were masked and were not recognized by the officers.

Both officers are unable to state how the information as to the Negro's removal from the Dooly county jail leaked out, saying that they had told no one of the plan.

Negro's Body Found

According to testimony of D. L. Arflin, who resides near the scene of the lynching, he heard about 35 shots fired about 8 o'clock Friday night, and W. L. Perry, testified that he passed the scene about 9 o'clock that night and saw the body hanging to the limb of a tree beside the road.

A coroner's jury composed of Milton Grace, foreman: Howell Porter, Johnny Christmas, Joe Bush, Jesse Brown and Hardy Gregory, was impanelled by Judge W. V. Harvard Saturday morning to investigate the Negro's death and returned a verdict that "We, the jury, find that Lewis Harris came to his death by parties unknown."

TIFTON, GA.
GAZETTE
SEP 30 1935

NEGRO LYNCHED NEAR VIENNA

Cordele, Ga., Sept. 29.—An unidentified group of men took Lewis Harris a negro, from the hands of Sheriff Cos Vinson, near here Friday night, and lynched him on the Sandy Mount road four miles from Vienna, during the night.

Sheriff Vinson said he was taking the negro to Fitzgerald for safe keeping after he had been arrested earlier in the week during a disturbance at a church meting.

A coroner's jury, empaneled in Vienna Saturday, rendered a verdict that the man came to his death at the hands of parties unknown.

2 Lynched In Texas; Block Georgia Mob

MOULTRIE, Ga, Nov. 22—A second Georgia mob has been repelled this week in an attempt to wrest a Race man from officers of the law in order to give vent to their bloodthirsty moods.

An incensed mob gathered in front of the courthouse here Thursday and tried, without success, to take John Henry Sloan from National Guardsmen after the prisoner had been convicted of the murder of Otis Gay, young white man.

The irate crowd milled about the bayonet flashing guardsmen, trying to strike at their prey, but were driven back by pistol butts and rifle barrels and finally dispersed with tear gas bombs. During the confusion one shot was fired, but it went wild.

Sloan was later taken to an unannounced jail out of the town. He had been given a quick trial and sentenced to die in the electric chair next month.

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 22—While Race citizens in this backward little town and nearby communities stood by cowardly, two youths of high school age were lynched by a mob of 500 whites, among whom were many women.

Meanwhile, five black men in Georgia rose above their environment and their neighbors, to stand off a mob of infuriated whites intent on lynching 18-year-old Frank Horn whose alleged crime against society was that he was too "sassy."

Police and other officials of Cordele, Ga., where the whites were held at bay by five deadly shotguns in the hands of as many rebellious blacks, while the intended victim made good his escape, began a widespread search for the courageous quintet.

It was felt that if they succeeded in eluding capture and subsequent punishment, that their daring would inspire other members of the Race to follow their unprecedented example.

Will of the People

In Atair, Tex., where the white savages were able to accomplish their barbaric purposes, police were not entirely indifferent to the outrage. Officials justified the lynching as the "will of the people."

This was understood to mean that because of the inability of the courts to mete out death to the youths because of their ages, the citizens took matters into their own hands. The pair were charged with having attacked and murdered a young white woman.

The hanging, which took place in a grove about a mile from the home of the girl, came after the two boys were allegedly "snatched" from Sheriff Frank Hoegmeyer, who was enroute to Houston where the two were to face trial.

The limit of punishment they could have received, even in a Southern court, would have been imprisonment in a juvenile detention home until they were 21 years of age. Both were under 17 years of age.

Defended Himself

As dramatic as a scene from a play was the deliverance of Frank Horn from the infuriated Cordele mob. Horn, according to reliable reports, was of a nature not different from that of the men who risked their lives and even today are living under a sword of Damocles to save his.

When a white man who judged him to be too "sassy" for a "nigger," attempted to "put him in his place," Horn defended himself and in so doing cut the white.

His pride injured, the white organized a mob which only proved too willing to avenge the injury suffered by their fellow. Meanwhile Horn, who was no stranger to the ways of the South, sought refuge from the reprisal which he knew to be inevitable.

Horn's age and his dauntlessness impressed and inspired older men who had for years seen members of their own race maltreated and slaughtered like lambs to the point where they were ready to give their lives to save his.

Five Hold Off Mob

Five, arming themselves and hiding their identity behind masks or handkerchiefs, met the mob which meanwhile had collected and was marching on the jim crow section of town where they knew they would find Horn.

Not a word was spoken by the black defenders of Horn. The menacing rifles spoke in terms more convincing than any they could utter.

The leader of the mob, however, did command that the Race men drop their arms. His words were unheeded. Except for the five men gripping their arms more firmly there was no reaction at all on their part to his demands.

Is Spirited Away

He then sought to reason with them, but he might as well have addressed himself to the Sphinx. Meanwhile, allies of Horn had placed him in a car and were rushing him toward Atlanta.

Finally realizing they could not advance without taking their lives into their own hands, the mob retreated, issuing threats and intent on reaching their quarry by another road.

By that time, however, Horn, accompanied by an armed group, was at a safe distance from the town

Lynchings-1935
Cases of.

Louisiana

4609

Louisiana Mob Lynches Negro

Men Kidnap Slayer From Jail, Kill Him, And Toss Body On Country Road

FRANKLINTON, La., Jan. 11.—(AP)—While this small southeastern Louisiana town slept, a fast-working well organized mob rammed its way into the Washington Parish Jail here early today, shot and beat a convicted negro slayer to death, dumped his body alongside a lonely road three miles from town, and quietly dispersed.

The lynching was executed with such precision and speed that few knew what had happened until the body of the victim, Jerome Wilson, 30, was found on the road two hours later.

The mob purportedly numbered only six or seven men.

In the dead silence of the early morning hours, the lynchers stole to the parish jail and forced their way into Sheriff J. C. Brock's office. The mob began a hurried search for Wilson, convicted last August of slaying Deputy Sheriff Delos C. Wood during a gun battle on the Wilson place near Franklinton.

A half-dozen cells were searched before the mob came to the one occupied by the sleeping negro. Aroused from his cot, the terror-stricken negro pleaded fervently for mercy. His pleas were followed by screams for help and it was then that the mobsmen pumped a bullet into the back of his head as he stood cringing in a cell corner.

Officers expressed belief the negro was shot because the mob feared his cries would arouse parish authorities, who twice had thwarted attempts to lynch the negro.

From the cell, Wilson's limp body was dragged to a waiting car and carried to a secluded spot three miles north of Franklinton. There it was dumped along the side of the road.

The mob dispersed as quickly as it had formed.

Wilson was lynched five days after he had been granted a new trial by the Louisiana Supreme Court.

The high court remanded the case on grounds that the defendant had not received a fair and impartial trial. The decision cited the fact that the negro was tried, convicted, and sentenced within 10 days of his arrest.

Wilson's brother, Luther, jointly charged with the slaying, but who has not yet been tried, witnessed the lynching from an adjoining cell. He told Sheriff Brock there were "six or eight men and they wore handkerchiefs on their faces and shined flashlights in my eyes. I couldn't tell who they was."

The sheriff gave the following version:

"There wasn't any lynching. Some men got into the cell somehow, about 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning. They got a key somehow. They shot Jerome Wilson because he kept crying for help. Then they sawed through the lock of Jerome's cell. Someone beat Jerome over the head with a great big hammer and left the hammer in the cell.

"They took his body out and threw it on the road. He was dead before they took him out of the cell. There wasn't any lynching. There wasn't any mob either, or they would have taken Luther out too. There were just about six or eight men who were going about their business."

Sheriff Brock said the only clue to the identity of the mobsmen was the hammer, and asserted that this clue would be followed up.

Wood was shot to death July 22 in a gun battle precipitated when officers attempted to arrest Wilson for refusing to permit a range rider to inspect his cattle for ticks.

The officer was fatally wounded but bullets from his gun laid low two of Wilson's brothers, one of whom died in jail. Sheriff Brock and several deputies rushed to the scene and arrested all members of the negro family.

As the negroes were placed in jail, a crowd gathered outside the jail and threatened violence, but were prsuaded by the sheriff to disperse. Jerome Wilson was the only member of the Wilson family indicted in connection with Wood's death.

Later, during Wilson's trial, a crowd attempted to snatch the prisoner from officers as he was being led from the courtroom, but were turned back in a hand-to-hand fight with sheriff's deputies and the negro was placed safely in jail.

Judge Ellis Ott, who presided at Wilson's trial, refused his motion for a new trial and an appeal was carried to the State Supreme Court which granted the motion last Monday.

Granted New Trial, Negro Is Lynched

FRANKLINTON, La., Jan. 11.—(AP)—Jerome Wilson, 30-year-old negro, convicted of the slaying of Delos C. Wood, chief deputy criminal sheriff of Washington parish, was seized by a mob of citizens early today, shot to death in his cell and his body was taken from the jail and dumped on the road three miles north of the town.

The slaying of Officer Wood occurred in a general shooting last July 22, between negroes and officers at the home of Wilson where the officers had gone to investigate a livestock inspection.

Jerome was indicted, tried for murder, convicted and sentenced to hang for the crime within 10 days' time and last Monday the Louisiana supreme court granted him a new trial.

MOB KILLS NEGRO IN HIS JAIL CELL

Body of Convicted Slayer Is Dumped Beside Road Three Miles From Louisiana Town

FRANKLINTON, La., Jan. 11 (AP)—While this small southeastern Louisiana town slept, a small group of men rammed their way into the Washington parish jail here early today, shot and beat a convicted Negro slayer to death, dumped his body alongside a lonely road three miles from town and quietly dispersed.

The lynching was executed with such precision and speed that few knew what had happened until the body of the victim, Jerome Wilson, 30, was found on the road two hours later.

The group purportedly numbered only six or seven men.

In the dead silence of the early morning hours the lynchers stole to the parish jail and forced their way into Sheriff J. C. Brock's office. The men began a hurried search for Wilson, convicted last August of slaying Deputy Sheriff Delos C. Wood during a gun battle on the Wilson place near Franklinton.

New Trial Pending

A half-dozen cells were searched before they came to the one occupied by the sleeping Negro. Aroused from his cot, the terror-stricken Negro pleaded feverently for mercy. His pleas were followed by screams for help and it was then that the men pumped a bullet into the back of his head as he stood cringing in a cell corner.

Officers expressed belief the Negro was shot because the men feared his cries would arouse parish authorities, who twice had thwarted attempts to lynch the Negro.

Wilson was lynched five days after he had been granted a new trial by the Louisiana supreme court.

The high court remanded the case on grounds that the defendant had not received a fair and impartial trial.

NEW YORK JOURNAL
JAN 11 1935

MOB LYNCHES MAN IN CELL

FRANKLINTON, La., Jan. 11 (By International News Service)—A mob superseded the Supreme Court of Louisiana here today, entering the Washington parish jail and shooting to death a Negro sentenced to hang for the slaying of a deputy sheriff.

The mob broke open the door to Sheriff Brown's office and secured keys to the cell of Jerome Wilson, 30.

Wilson, convicted of the murder of Deputy Sheriff Delos C. Wood last July, was shot down as he crouched in a corner of the cell, begging for mercy. His body was dragged to an automobile and taken to the outskirts of the city, where it was dumped out.

Wilson's appeal for a new trial was granted last Monday by the Supreme Court.

New York Times
JAN 12 1935

NEGRO IS LYNCHED IN LOUISIANA JAIL

Mob Victim Had Received New Trial in Slaying of a Deputy Sheriff.

FRANKLINTON, La., Jan. 11 (AP).—A small group of men forced their way into the Washington Parish jail here early today, shot and beat a convicted Negro slayer to death, dumped his body alongside a lonely road three miles from town and dispersed.

The body of the victim, Jerome Wilson, 30, was found on the road two hours later. Wilson was convicted in August of slaying Deputy Sheriff Delos C. Wood in a gun fight on the Wilson place near here.

Aroused from his cot, the terror-stricken Negro pleaded for mercy. His pleas were followed by screams for help. Then a bullet was fired into the back of his head.

Officers expressed the belief that the man was shot because his cries would arouse parish authorities, who twice had thwarted attempts to lynch him.

The body was dragged to a waiting car.

Five days ago a new trial was granted to Wilson by the Louisiana Supreme Court on the grounds that the defendant had not received a fair trial. The decision cited that he was tried, convicted and sentenced within ten days of his arrest.

ALEXANDRIA, LA.
TOWN TALK
JAN 11 1935

Negro Convicted Of Slaying Lynched

FRANKLINTON, La., Jan. 11.—(By A. P.)—Jerome Wilson, 30-year-old negro, convicted of the slaying of Delos C. Wood, chief deputy criminal sheriff of Washington parish, was seized by a mob of citizens early today, shot to death in his cell and his body was taken from the jail and dumped on the road three miles north of the town.

The slaying of Officer Wood occurred in a general shooting last July 22 between negroes and officers at the home of Wilson where the officers had gone to investigate a livestock inspection.

Jerome was indicted, tried for murder, convicted and sentenced to hang for the crime within ten days time and last Monday the Louisiana supreme court granted him a new trial.

Officers reported that a mob of undetermined number stole into the sheriff's office around 3 a. m. today, obtained the keys to the cells and located Jerome in one of the cells.

As they seized the prisoner, it was reported, Jerome began screaming at the top of his voice and he was riddled with bullets in his cell.

The mob then dragged his body to an automobile and carried it north of town where it was dumped out on the road.

The lynching was carried out in the still of the night and was being investigated by officers. No arrests had been made at last reports and Franklinton was quiet.

Sheriff J. C. Brock, of Washington parish, reported that the mob was composed of "some 6 or 7 men" and that the slaying of Wilson was carried out in a "quiet way." He said he had not been able to identify the perpetrators of the slaying.

On a previous occasion Sheriff Brock and his deputies had saved Wilson's life. While his trial was in progress a crowd of men attempted to rush the prisoner in the court room as he was being led from the room.

For a time the officers engaged in a hand-to-hand scuffle with the crowd and finally pushed the aroused men back and hurried the negro into the jail.

The case had gone to the jury and Sheriff Brock then calmed a crowd in front of the jail and persuaded them to let the jury have its chance with the fate of Wilson.

Wood was a widely-known official of his section. On July 22 he went to the Wilson house where Jerome lived with his parents, two brothers, three sisters and an uncle, and attempted to arrest a member of the negro family for refusing to permit a range rider to inspect some livestock at the Wilson barn.

Parish officials reported that some members of the Wilson family attacked the officer and the shooting started. Wood shot two of the negroes, one fatally, before he was brought down by gunfire from the house.

Sheriff Brock and several deputies rushed to the scene and arrested a group of nine persons from the house. Moise Wilson, one of those arrested, died in his cell from wounds inflicted by Wood while the sheriff was exhorting a crowd of angry citizens from committing violence.

The day after the slaying of Wood, the grand jury was called into special session by Judge C. Ellis Ott and Jerome Wilson was the only person indicted.

He was tried and convicted and on Aug. 7 Judge Ott refused him a new trial and sentenced him to hang. The condemned negro's attorney then appealed to the state supreme court which granted him a new trial.

Victim Is Beaten, Shot

Second of Family Is Slain In Cell

By J. Winston Harrington

FRANKLINTON, La., Jan. 18.—It wasn't a lynching. It was just a murder of a man as he lay in jail waiting a second hearing ordered by the Supreme Court of Louisiana. It was just a case of ten or twenty men breaking into the jail, shooting the man thru the bars, beating his brains out with a hammer, dragging him from the jail and dumping his mutilated, lifeless body on the highway several miles from town. But it wasn't a lynching.

At least that's what Sheriff J. L. Brock had to say about the mob murder of Jerome Wilson Friday morning. Wilson had been convicted for slaying Deputy Sheriff Delos C. Woods, who invaded his home last summer. But trial, which required less than 11 days, was such a farce that the Louisiana supreme court reversed the sentence of death, and ordered a new trial for Wilson. This decision was handed down last Monday. Friday morning the mob broke into the jail and murdered Wilson in the manner described above, but, says Sheriff Brock, "he wasn't lynched."

Protects His Home

The trouble for which Wilson was tried, started when Woods went to the farm occupied by Wilson, his mother, father, two brothers, three sisters and an uncle, to arrest the father for refusing to allow a range rider to inspect his cattle. The deputy, who stalked into the place waving his gun and threatening the entire Wilson family, was shot by a stray bullet after the shooting had become general about the farm. Later, the entire family, including the sisters, was herded into the jail, but Jerome Wilson was actually indicted and tried for the murder. His brother, Luther, who is still in the jail, has not yet been tried. Wilson's father, Moise Wilson, who was thrown in the cell last summer, was murdered in his cell by Sheriff Brock, but that, also was "not a lynching."

At the trial, Jerome Wilson was convicted as a mob awited outside the courtroom. The sheriff managed to hold off the mob members by promising to see that "justice" takes its course, meaning that he would guarantee the conviction of the accused man. The day after the white jury returned its verdict, Judge Ott refused the motion of Wilson's lawyer for a new trial, and sentenced the youth to hang. It was the granting of a new trial by the state high court that brought the mob back together and resulted in the lynching (the sheriff said it wasn't a lynching) of Jerome Wilson.

"Persons Unknown"

The coroner's jury, after hearing the "evidence" in the case, handed down its customary verdict that Wilson "came to his death at the hands of persons unknown." This is Sheriff rock's statement:

"There was any lynching. Some men got into the cell somehowe about three or four o'clock in the morning. They shot Jerome Wilson, apparently bacause he kept shouting for help. Then they sawed through the lock of Jerome's cell. Someone beat Jerome over the head with a big hammer and left the hammer in the cell.

"They took his body out and threw it on the road. He was dead apparently before they took him out of the cell. There wasn't any lynching. There wasn't any mob either, or they would have taken Luther out too. There were just about six or eight men who were going about their business."

Sheriff Brock didn't say where he was while this "six or eight men" were going about their business of shooting a man in jail, sawing through the bars, beating him over the head with a hammer and then taking his body out on the road. That must have taken some time and made some noise, but Sheriff Brock was nowhere around to see what was happening, yet he speaks authoritatively about there not being a lynching. There is a rumor hereabouts that the sheriff himself, was one of the "six or eight persons" of whom he speaks.

Mob Lynches Negro Youth In Louisiana

MARINQUIN, La., March 12.—For daring to protect himself against the assault of a white man, Anderson Ward, Negro youth, was hung from an oak tree here and his body riddled with bullets.

Ward and a white man, Dennis Brudroe, had an argument and Brudroe drew his gun in an attempt to shoot Ward. The gun failed to explode. Meanwhile Ward struck out to protect himself, but actually dealt no blow because another Negro youth drew him away.

As soon as news of the affair spread, a lynch-gang of about 25 started a man-hunt for Ward. Although he was lodged in the local jail, no effort was made to protect him and the mob easily broke in and seized him. To prevent his making any outcry, the lynchers gagged him with a bandage.

A swift and efficient whitewash, with the usual verdict of killing "by parties unknown," has been made by the town officials.

Louisiana Mob Runs Amuck:

Authorities Look On As Man Is Lynched

MARINGOUIN, La., March 15.—Because he dared to protect himself from the assault of a white man, Anderson Ward, became the second known victim of lynching this year.

Town officials allowed the body to hang from the bough of an oak tree for several hours before they cut it down, in the hope, no doubt, that the sight would terrorize the Race population of the neighborhood.

Ward and a white man, Dennis Brudroe, had an argument on the afternoon of February 24. Brudroe drew his gun in an attempt to shoot Ward but the gun failed to explode. Meanwhile Ward struck out to protect himself, but actually dealt no blows because another Race youth drew him away.

As soon as news of the affair spread, a lynch-gang of about 2[illegible] started a man-hunt for Ward. Although he was locked in the local jail no real effort was made to protect him and the mob easily broke in and seized him.

When Ward's body was found swinging from a branch it was discovered to be full of gunshot wounds. To prevent his making any cry for help the lynchers had gagged him with a bandage.

A swift and efficient whitewash with the usual verdict of kiling "by partes unknown" has been made by the town officals.

Lynchings-1935
Cases of.

Louisiana

4610

SAVAGELY LYNCHED FOR DEFENDING HIMSELF
Second Lynching In Louisiana In 1935

MARINGOUIN, La. (CNA) - Anderson Ward charged with attacking Dennis Brudroe (white) was seized from his cell by a lynch gang on the night of February 24. He was sadistically tortured, riddled with bullets and hanged from a tree.

The town authorities "investigated" the lynching and declared that Ward was killed by "parties unknown".

Marshall Fails To Protect Ward

Reports state that Brudroe and Ward were engaged in an argument when the former drew a gun to shoot Ward. In self-defence, Ward drew a knife. In the fight that ensued Brudroe was injured. Brudroe would have been seriously injured had not a Negro worker, Alphonse Hughes, intervened and halted the battle.

Ward was arrested and jailed by the town marshal.

The news of the fight spread. A lynch mob of twenty-five persons quickly formed. Armed with shot guns and rifles, the lynchers marched on the jail. Here they met with no resistance from the marshal. Ward was seized and tortured with fiendishness and ferocity comparable to the lynching of Claude Neale in Marianna, Florida.

His body was then riddled with bullets and hanged from a tree. The lynchers permitted Ward's relatives to secure his body only after it had hung in public view for several hours.

Authorities Whitewash Lynching

The local authorities went through the motions of an "investigation". They announced that Ward was killed by "parties unknown". There will be no further investigation.

This is the second lynching that has occurred in Louisiana this year. Early in January, 30-year-old Jerome Wilson, charged with slaying an officer, was murdered in his cell in Shreveport by a lynch gang. Last year four Negroes were murdered in Louisiana.

Louisiana Has a Second Lynching

3-9-35

MARINGUOIN, La. (ANP) — ...after he had whipped a white mar... had drawn a gun on him. An... Ward, well-known and re... spected young man of this town, was seized in jail here last Sunday by a mob of whites, riddled with bullets and hanged to an oak tree where his body dangled for several hours before relatives were allowed to cut it down for burial.

Sunday afternoon Ward and the white man, Dennis Brudroe, engaged in an altercation. The white man drew a pistol and attempted to shoot Ward, but the gun did not explode. Ward thereupon seized a knife and stabbed Brudroe. The lynching marks the second for Louisiana this year, the first occurring January 11 at Franklinton. Jerome Wilson was shot and his body carried three miles out of town, where they dumped it on the ground.

TWO NEGROES SLAIN AT LOUISIANA JAIL

Accused Attackers Killed After Wounding Deputies In Prison Riot

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 1.—(AP)—Two negroes, both charged with criminally assaulting young white girls, were shot to death in their cell in the Jefferson Parish jail across the Mississippi River from New Orleans today after they had wounded Sheriff Frank Clancy and a deputy in a roaring gun battle.

Using a .38 caliber revolver smuggled to them last night, the negroes, Sheriff Clancy said, opened fire on him when he went to their cell to disarm them after receiving a tip from a third negro prisoner. 11-2-35

A half dozen deputies and jailers rushed to the sheriff's side and mowed the negroes down under a fusillade of bullets.

The younger of the negroes, Henry "Buddy" Freeman, 22, was killed instantly, and his companion, Dave Hart, 24, was mortally wounded a few minutes later after he had attacked Coroner M. N. Odom, who had gone to the cell to examine the bodies.

Coroner Odom said he was called by Sheriff Clancy after the first exchange of shots.

"I rushed to the jail," the coroner said, "and went immediately to the cell on the second floor. There I found both bodies sprawled on the floor apparently dead. Between them lay a .38 caliber revolver. I picked it up and removed five discharged cartridges and one unexploded bullet, placing the empty weapon on a cell bench.

"As I turned around Hart leaped to his feet, grabbed the gun and ran toward me. Jailer Maggiore beat him off with his jail keys and he dashed down the corridor into an open cell, where he was killed."

Deputy Sheriff John Stewart, who rushed to the scene upon hearing the first shots, said he fired five times into the cell where the two negroes were lodged. He was wounded in the right arm by a bullet from the negroes' revolver as it ricocheted off the cell wall.

"When Hart ran down the corridor I followed him and shot my last bullet at him but missed," the deputy said. "I then called to the jailer and he cut the negro down, shooting through the cell door."

The wounds of Sheriff Clancy and Deputy Stewart were superficial and both remained on duty.

A huge crowd gathered about the jail shortly after the shooting, but only newspapermen and parish officials were admitted to the building.

Gretna, scene of one of a series of criminal assaults charged against the negroes, has been boiling with intense feeling against the pair for days. There have been repeated reports of plans to lynch Hart and Freeman, and Sheriff Clancy has maintained a heavy guard about the jail since the negroes were taken there from New Orleans, where they were arrested.

The sheriff said a third negro, lodged in the same cell with Hart and Freeman on a similar charge, tipped a deputy early this morning that a negro woman had slipped them a gun. The shooting occurred after the sheriff had taken the third negro to his office for questioning. He later was removed to the Orleans Parish prison across the river.

4

Lynchings-1935
Cases of.

Mexico.

4614

Lynch Socialist Teacher In Agua Caliente, Mex.

AGUA CALIENTE, Mexico—David Moreno, 19-year old rural teacher, was tortured and lynched here on Sunday by a mob opposed to his teachings of the Socialist education policies of the government.

He was asleep in a country cottage when the mob fired numerous shots through a window. Although wounded Moreno attempted escape, but was captured and beaten with gun butts before being hanged to a tree. The house was burned down by the raiders. Authorities have made two arrests so far.

Mississippi.

Lynchings-1935
Cases of.

4604

Two Reporters Risk Life to Cover Miss. Lynching

MEMPHIS—Risking injury and perhaps death, two young white newspaper men of a local daily, Clark Porteous, reporter, and Mervin Rosenbush, braved the mob's anger and covered the lynching of Ab Young at Slayden, Miss., on March 12.

Notified that there would be a lynching, the two men covered the distance, forty miles, in fifty minutes. When they arrived, the mob members are said to have been arguing among themselves what to do with Young—hang him, burn him, or turn him over to the officers at Holly Springs.

In a story of their experiences, the youths say the mobbers looked suspiciously at them. Noticing about fifty men detach themselves, the young newsmen trailed one of their machines to a secluded section where Young was held prisoner.

They related that they saw a rope placed around Young's neck as he was led beneath a white oak tree. They saw the doomed man placed on the back of a car which was driven from under him.

Obtain Ten Pictures

So intent was the mob on its business that the reporters were able to get ten pictures before they were noticed, it is said. Several of the lynchers gave the newsmen their names and addresses, according to reports, so that they might be sent copies of the pictures.

The temper of the mob is said to have suddenly changed at this point, and its members whipped out revolvers, taking shots at the body swaying grotesquely.

Mississippi Has 4th Lynching of Year

SLAYDEN, Mis.—While singing hymns and saying prayers, Ab Young, youth accused of fatally shooting a white state highway worker, was hanged to an oak tree in a schoolyard three miles east of here, Tuesday afternoon, by a mob of about fifty white hoodlums.

Young's murder marks the fourth lynching of the year.

Members of the mob placed a rope around the youth's neck while he stood in a truck. The vehicle was then driven from under him. Young had been captured by the mob at Rossville, Tenn., a short distance from the state line.

Sheriff's officers at Holly Springs are said to have been notified that the lynching was in the offing. A squad of deputies rushed to the scene, but it is reported that their efforts were unavailing in preventing the crime.

Negro Lynched, Another Whipped In 24 Hours Of Mississippi Mob Rule

WIGGINS, MISS., June 22.—(AP)—One negro was lynched and another was spirited into the woods and whipped during 24 hours of mob rule by citizens which ended today in Wiggins.

R. D. McGee, 25-year-old negro, was lynched and riddled with bullets about 9 a.m., today for an attack yesterday upon the 11-year-old daughter of a white dairy farmer and another unidentified negro was whipped and released by a crowd of white men because of an insult to white woman.

Stone County was in a state of high excitement until the lynch mob of about 300 men dispersed and then Stone County settled down into normalcy and Sheriff J. A. Simpson and the coroner had the body of the negro cut down and started an investigation.

Physicians said the write girl was not criminally attacked, but that she was choked into unconsciousness by the negro as he seized her at a pasture gate near her home and struck her over the head with a shovel handle.

The girl's father said that after his daughter had been knocked unconscious her attacker dragged her into a field and left here there for dead.

When she was found, physicians said, her eyes were bloodshot, small blood vessels were ruptured in her throat and her face was bruised. The child was still confined to bed today under medical treatment.

Immediately after the attack a citizens posse formed and started a search for the negro. Last night about 11 o'clock McGee was taken from his bed by members of the posse and was secreted in the woods away from officers until today when he carried before the girl and identified by his clothing.

The mob then carried the negro across town into a side road leading to the graveyard and there witnesses said he admitted attacking the girl and said that his only reason was "I must have been crazy."

McGee was hung by a rope to tree beside the narrow road and his body was riddled with bullets. Then mob members cut down his body and hung it to another tree beside the main highway where the coroner and peace officers met and held their formal inquest. The verdict was that the negro "came to his death at hands of unknown parties."

No arrests have been announced.

Lynch Case Closed

COLUMBUS, Miss., July 16.—(AP) A coroner's jury today returned a verdict that Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, young Lowndes county farm negroes who were hanged yesterday from the limb of an oak tree by a band of white men, met death "at the hands of parties unknown." The verdict was regarded as closing the case.

ONE NEGRO SLAIN, ANOTHER WHIPPED

R. D. McGee Riddled With Bullets by Mob After Attack on 11-Year-Old Girl

WIGGINS, Miss., June 22 (AP)—One Negro was lynched and another was spirited into the woods and whipped during 24 hours of mob rule by citizens which ended today in Wiggins.

R. D. McGee, 25-year-old Negro, was lynched and riddled with bullets about 9 a.m. today for an attack yesterday upon the 11-year-old daughter of a white dairy farmer and another unidentified Negro was whipped and released by a crowd of white men because of an insult to a white woman.

Physicians said the white girl was not criminally attacked, but that she was choked into unconsciousness by the Negro as he seized her at a pasture gate near her home and struck her on the head with a shovel handle.

The girl's father said that after his daughter had been knocked unconscious her attacker dragged her into a field and left here there for dead.

Immediately after the attack a citizen's posse formed and started a search for the Negro. Last night about 11 o'clock McGee was taken from his bed by members of the posse and was secreted in the woods away from officers until today when he was carried before the girl and identified by his clothing.

The mob then carried the Negro across town into a side road leading to the grave yard and there witnesses said he admitted attacking the girl and said that his only reason was, "I must have been crazy."

No arrests have been announced.

Official Whitewash Given After Mob Lynches Negro

WIGGINS, Miss., June 23.—Using the time-worn excuse of "attack on a white girl" a mob led by local "citizens" kidnaped two Negroes here Friday night, lynching the first, R. D. McGee, and taking the other into the woods nearby where he was whipped for "insulting a white woman."

The body of McGee was riddled full of bullets and left to hang on a tree until 11 a.m. yesterday morning when it was cut down by police who had been conveniently absent during the lynching.

The usual report that the man had been "identified by his clothing" and that he confessed were circulated through the town. A formal inquest was held which whitewashed the whole affair by declaring that McGee "came to his death at the hands of unknown parties."

The fight for the freedom of Angelo Herndon is part of the fight against lynchings such as that of McGee," Anna Damon, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, declared yesterday. "These lynchings are part of the repressions organized by the southern ruling class against Negro and white sharecroppers whenever they attempt to organize."

The International Labor Defense has launched a campaign for the circulation of petitions calling for the release of Herndon and protesting against the repressions against the Negroes throughout the United States. The goal of the campaign is to gather two million names on the petitions which will be presented to Governor Eugene Talmadge of Georgia.

New York World Telegram
Lynching
JUN 22 1935

MISSISSIPPI MOB LYNCHES NEGRO

Body of Victim, Accused of Attacking White Girl, Riddled with Bullets.

By the Associated Press.

WIGGINS, Miss., June 22.—A Negro identified as R. D. McGee, 25, accused of attempting to attack the 11-year-old daughter of a white farmer, was lynched today by a mob of some two hundred white men.

A posse seized the Negro from his bed last night and carried him into the woods, where he was hanged to a tree and his body riddled with bullets.

McGee was hidden away from officers during the night, and it was declared that he was identified by the white girl and by a Negro girl who said she had seen him "hanging around."

One eyewitness quoted the Negro as admitting that he had beaten the white girl and saying, "I must have been crazy."

The girl was attacked yesterday while picking blackberries near her home. She bore bruises on her face and neck.

The scene of the lynching was in a remote rural section of southern Mississippi. No arrests have been made.

New York Herald-Tribune
JUN 23 1935

Negro Lynched As Attacker of Mississippi Girl

Accused of Beating Child, 11, in Blackberry Field, Man Is Hanged and Shot

Another of Race Beaten

Insult to White Woman Reason Given by Mob

By The Associated Press

WIGGINS, Miss., June 22. — One Negro was lynched and another was spirited into woods and whipped in the course of twenty-four hours of mob rule by citizens in Wiggins today.

R. D. McGee, twenty-five-year-old Negro, was hanged to a tree and his body pierced with bullets about 9 a. m., for an attack yesterday on the eleven-year-old daughter of a white dairy farmer. Another unidentified Negro was whipped and released by a crowd of white men because of an insult to a white woman.

Stone County was in a state of excitement until the mob of about 300 dispersed and Sheriff J. A. Simpson and the coroner had the body cut down from the tree beside a narrow road. Later the coroner and peace officers met and held a formal inquest, returning a verdict that the Negro "came to his death at hands of unknown parties."

Physicians said that the girl was not criminally attacked, but that she was choked into unconsciousness by the Negro as he seized her at a pasture gate near her home and struck her on the head with a shovel handle.

The girl's father said that after his daughter had been knocked unconscious her attacker dragged her into a field and left her there for dead. The girl was still confined to bed today under medical treatment.

Citizens formed a posse and last night about 11 o'clock McGee was taken from his bed and secreted in the woods away from officers until today when he was carried before the girl and identified by his clothing.

The mob then carried the Negro across town into a side road leading to the grave yard and there witnesses said he admitted attacking the girl and said that his only reason was "I must have been crazy."

Dadeville, Ala., Record
July 18, 1935

TWO NEGROES LYNCHED NEAR COLUMBUS, MISS.

Two negroes, named Bert Moore, and Dooley Morton, were lynched Monday, eight miles from Columbus, Miss., by a mob of infuriated white citizens.

The victims of the lynching were accused of two attempted attacks on white women in this section during the past two weeks.

They were taken from the sheriff while he was seeking to spirit them away from Columbus to Aberdeen and were hanged to a tree behind a church on a country road.

Two Mississippi Negroes Hanged

COLUMBUS, MISS., July 15—(AP)—Two negro farmers were lynched today by a mob in the Mississippi Delta and another was pursued by a posse of officers and white citizens across the Mississippi River into Arkansas in connection with attacks or attempted attacks on white women.

Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, each about 26 years old, were snatched from Deputy Sheriff Parker Harris by a motorcade mob of about 35 on the main highway, four miles north of Columbus and were whisked to the negro Zion Church, eight miles south of the city, and hanged to a big oak tree.

Another negro, said by Sheriff J. H. Dogan, of Tallahatchie County, to be Rayfield Sutton, 28, charged with attacking a white farm girl Friday night four miles from Charleston, was pursued to the Arkansas State line by more than 100 citizens and officers with bloodhounds but the fugitive crossed the Mississippi River and escaped.

The two lynched negroes were captured by officers Sunday in a remote wooded section South of Columbus and were jailed.

They were accused of forcing themselves into the white woman's home two weeks ago, disrobing and attempting to attack her, but were frightened away by an approaching automobile.

NEGROES LYNCHED IN ATTACK CASE

Another Man Wanted on Assault Charge by Mississippi Officers, Leaves State

COLUMBUS, Miss., July 15 (AP).—Two Negro farmers were lynched today by a mob in the Mississippi delta and another was pursued by a posse of officers and white citizens across the Mississippi river into Arkansas in connection with attacks or attempted attacks on white women.

Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, each about 23 years old, were snatched from Deputy Sheriff Parker Harris by a motorcade mob on the main highway four miles north of Columbus and were whisked to the Negro Zion church eight miles south of the city and hanged to a big oak tree.

Another Negro, said by Sheriff J. H. Dogan of Tallahatchie county to be Rayfield Sutton, 28, charged with attacking a white farm girl Friday night four miles from Charleston, was pursued to the Arkansas state line by more than 100 citizens and officers with bloodhounds, but the fugitive crossed the Mississippi river and escaped.

The motorcade of six automobiles bearing some 35 white citizens blocked the highway north of Columbus and cut off the route of Deputy Harris as he was driving his two prisoners to Aberdeen where they were to be incarcerated on charges of attempting to attack the wife of an Arkansas lumberman who lives about a mile from the Zion church.

Each was made to stand on top of an automobile with his hands tied behind him and a noose fastened around his neck.

The ropes were knotted to the tree limbs and at a given signal the cars were driven out and the bodies swung downward.

TWO NEGROES HANGED BY MISSISSIPPI MOB

Pair Taken From Sheriff Near Columbus

ACCUSED OF ASSAULT

Third Negro, Also Hunted for Attack on Girl, Eludes Posse, Crosses River, and Flees Into Arkansas

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Miss., July 15.—Two negro farmers were lynched today by a mob near here and another was pursued by a posse of officers and citizens across the Mississippi River into Arkansas in connection with attacks or attempted attacks on women.

Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, each about 26 years old, were taken from Deputy Sheriff Parker Harris by a motorcade mob on the main highway four miles north of Columbus and were whisked to the negro Zion Church, eight miles south of the city, and hanged to a big oak tree.

Seek Third Negro

Another negro, said by Sheriff J. H. Dogan of Tallahatchie County to be Rayfield Sutton, 28, charged with attacking a farm girl Friday night four miles from Charleston, was pursued to the Arkansas state line by more than 100 citizens and officers with blood hounds, but the fugitive crossed the Mississippi and escaped. Arkansas officers were asked to search for him.

Columbus and Lowndes County were in a high state of excitement during the double lynching, but after the negroes had been hanged and the mob had dispersed Columbus quieted down and normalcy was restored.

The motorcade of six automobiles bearing some 35 citizens blocked the highway north of Columbus and cut off the route of Deputy Harris as he was driving his two prisoners to Aberdeen, where they were to be incarcerated on charges of attempting to attack the wife of an Arkansas lumberman who lives about a mile from the Zion Church.

The officers reported later that his automobile was surrounded by mob members and he was unable to resist them. They seized the two negroes, but did not molest the officer and he returned empty-handed to Columbus.

After capturing their prey the mob drove the negroes back through Columbus to the church grounds and hanged them.

Each was made to stand on top of an automobile with his hands tied behind him and a noose fastened around his neck.

The ropes were knotted to the tree limbs and at a given signal the cars were driven out and the bodies swung downward.

Birmingham, Ala. News
August 6, 1935

FEW LYNCHING DETAILS

Sheriff Has Little Information On Mob Hanging Negro

PITTSBORO, Miss.— (AP) —Sheriff Jack W. Powell said Tuesday he had but meager information about the lynching Sunday night of Bodie Bates, Negro, who was seized from his cell in the jail here by a mob which overpowered the turnkey. He was hanged from a bridge outside of town.

The identity of the lynchers was not known, he said, and no arrests had been made in the case.

The Negro was charged with an attempted attack on a young white woman. Officers said he attempted to force his way into her house after she had gone to bed.

Lynching-1935
Cases of.

MISSISSIPPI

4605

MISS. LYNCHING CALLED "DEATH BY UNKNOWNS"

Man Identified By Clothing Another Badly Beaten

WIGGINS, Miss.—"Death at the hands of unknown parties" was the verdict returned by the coroner after an inquest into the lynching of R. D. McGee and the severe beating of another man, by a posse, while Stone County was ruled by the frenzied passion of the mob. Nearly 300 citizens took the 25-year-old McGee from his bed, spirited him into the woods and there on the strength of an identification of wearing apparel strung him up in the nearby graveyard and riddled his body with bullets last Saturday, June 22.

McGee was alleged to have attacked an 11-year-old white girl, the daughter of a farmer. According to the report of physicians, the girl was not criminally attacked but was only choked into unconsciousness. She had been struck over the head with a shovel handle. According to the girl's father, her attacker had dragged her into the field nearby and left her to die. Then it is alleged that her attacker went home to his slumber from which he was snatched and lynched.

When carried before the girl he was identified by his clothing and according to the report brought back from the scene of the primeval festivities, by some of the participants, McGee admitted the attack. The mob members also quoted McGee as saying "I must have been crazy." That, they said, was his only reason.

After the mob had broken up, the sheriff and the coroner appeared, had the body cut down from the tree, "formally" made an inquest, announced that the man came to "death at the hands of unknown parties" and closed the case.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

JUN 25 1935

Leisurely Lynching.

Mississippi accounts for the third lynching this year, making two out of three for that sovereign state. Friday night a Negro who had attacked a white girl (but not criminally) was seized by a mob at eleven o'clock, taken before his victim and identified, hidden in the woods from officers until nine o'clock the following morning, when he was returned to town, strung up and bullets fired into his body.

In this space of time and with all these movements, however, not a single member of the mob was identified. A body of white men with a captive Negro went from the black's lodgings to the scene of the crime, thence to the woods and back to town in the morning without ever encountering an officer of the law to whom some of the mobsters might be known. It is remarkable, and the coroner's jury concedes it by determining immediately that the victim came to his death at the hands of parties unknown.

Thus a crime, horrible enough in itself, is avenged by the commission of another crime under the noses of the officers of the law.

TWO MORE FOR MISSISSIPPI

Nashville Globe, Nashville, Tenn. 6-26-35

They say there are two sides to every question, but you only hear one side when you read in your newspaper that one or more Negroes were lynched. You hear a report from alleged officers of the law that the Negroes were guilty of rape or attempted rape. The officers, in the opinion of the representatives of our newspapers and our news-gathering agencies, are the very last word in accuracy and integrity when a reporter is seeking the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth with regard to the cause of a lynching. Occasionally some of our great newspapers, impressed by the importance of a crime that has the inter-racial angle, will dispatch one of their headquarters men to the scene of the crime. Oftener than otherwise they find that the newspaper has been imposed upon and caused to give to the world an inaccurate report of the affair.

It would be interesting to see some enterprising newspaper go and get the real facts with regard to the lynching of two Negroes near Columbia, Miss., on Monday afternoon of last week.

The Chicago Tribune of Tuesday of last week tells how the two farmers were lynched and attempts to tell also "why they were lynched. That part of their news story is as follows:

"A mob of about 35 men intercepted Deputy Sheriff Parker Harris and seized his prisoners, Bert Moore and Morton Dooley, both 26 as he was seeking to spirit them away to Aberdeen for safekeeping. They hanged the farmers to an oak tree in the yard of the Zion church about eight miles south of here.

Attacked White Girl

The other colored man was identified as Rayfield Sutton, 28. He was charged with having attacked a white farm girl Friday night four miles from Charleston. He was pursued to the Arkansas state line by more than 100 citizens and officers with bloodhounds

The double hanging was done in a revised western style. The victims were made to stand on top of an automobile with their hands tied behind them, nooses around their necks. The ropes were knotted to the tree limbs and at a given signal the cars were driven from under the tree.

Deputy Harris said he was unable to resist the occupants of a motorcade of six automobiles which swept down on him as he was driving the colored men to the Aberdeen jail. The mob did not molest the officer. The victims were driven back through Columbus to the church grounds.

Threats Made to Women

Officers, said that two colored men appeared at the home of the wife of a lumber man near here and told her they were going to rape her. They were frightened away and a guard was posted at the woman's home.

Last Wednesday, it was said, one of the colored men returned and scuffled with the guard, seizing his gun and firing one ineffectual shot. The intruder fled when the woman threw a lighted kerosene lamp at him and it exploded."

Nashville Globe

Please note that this news story deals with the two men who are alleged to have been guilty of appearing at the home of the wife of a lumber man and "told her they were going to rape her." But they were frightened away and a guard was posted at the woman's home. But even with the guard on duty, and certainly armed to the teeth and instructed to shoot to kill these culprits, "it was said, one of the colored men returned and scuffled with the guard, seizing his gun and firing one ineffectual shot. The intruder fled when the woman threw a lighted kerosene lamp at him and it exploded."

You are called upon to believe these Mississippi farmers after drawing the public's attention to their vile and reckless deed sufficient to make it necessary to place guards at the home, still remained in the vicinity, continued their harming and one of the men dared to go back to the home, disarm the guard and make the second attempt to attack the Mississippi white lady. The tale, even though told to the newspapers by law officers, makes one wonder how it would stand up under a careful examination in a court of law.

It is our opinion that the usual fiction so prevalent in most of the lynchings that occur completely envelops the latest

Elwood Higgenbotham—Hero of Sharecroppers—Victim o

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

JUL 21 1935

IN MISSISSIPPI

Lynched, near Zion Church eight miles south of Columbus, Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, 23-year-old negroes, by a band of 35 citizens in six automobiles, who took the negroes from a deputy sheriff, charged them with attempting twice to attack a Lowndes County woman. Tying the negroes to the limb of a tree, the mob dispersed quietly; identities not determined by a coroner's jury.

Lynch Mob

On Wednesday, Sept. 18, Ellwood Higgenbotham, a 28-year-old Negro sharecropper, was lynched by a mob at Oxford, Mississippi, while a Circuit Court all-white jury was "deliberating" at his trial for the "murder" of Glen Roberts, a white landlord. Daily Worker

The local press reported that "a restless crowd, estimated to number 100 to 150 men, stormed the jail, dragged the prisoner out of his cell and whisked him out into the country where his screaming pleas for mercy were refused and he was hanged to a tree beside a lonely, wooded road." 9-24-35

Official whitewash of the lynchers followed promptly. Circuit Court Judge McElroy, in whose court the "trial" took place, stated that Sheriff S. T. Lyles had told him that none of the mob was recognized either by the sheriff, his deputies or the jailer from whom they had obtained the keys to the prison "by force." New York

Was Leader of Union

"Sheriff Lyles told me the men were masked and could not be identified, so I don's suppose there is anything that can be done right now," Judge McElroy said. He "indicated" that the matter "might be referred" to the County Grand Jury "when it meets several months hence."

Higgenbotham was one of the leaders of the Share Croppers Union in Oxford and had long been singled out by the landlords. The "excuse" for the mob assault and lynching of this heroic worker goes back to another unsuccessful effort to murder him some months ago.

Higgenbotham had a field cultivated through which landlords tried to cut a short road. Higgenbotham fenced off the field to save it from destruction. This move immediately put him into the class of "uppity niggers," in the language of the arrogant landlord class.

Soon after this short cut was blocked off, Roberts, a white landlord, organized a lynch mob against Higgenbotham. [illegible] white worker, and Communist Party leader in Oxford, wrote at that time of the events of the succeeding two murderous days and nights, and of the final capture and jailing of Higgenbotham. New York

Tells of Lynch Attempt

The letter states: "Tuesday night a mob of at least 25 white farmers armed with pistols went to Higgenbotham's home. Higgenbotham, his wife and three children had gone to bed and were awakened by Tom Likkings demanding of him that he open the door and come out. Now, Glen Roberts with pistol in hand forced his way into the house. Higgenbotham who didn't have time to dress ran and when Roberts started after him Higgenbotham shot him down with a Winchester.

"When the mob of white lynchers on the outside heard the shot, they became so frightened they left the lynch leader to his own fate and sent to town to get the law to come. Now started one of the typical man-hunts with bloodhounds and the mob, armed to the teeth rushing through the woods, hills and swamps. Infuriated over the failure to capture Higgenbotham, Oxford 'finest' with the officers of the law leading them on, started to hunt up his family.

Sister Is Beaten

"A brother-in-law was dragged out of bed and lodged in jail without any charges against him, and released only a week after on bond and told to get out of town at once. Higgenbotham's sister was beaten so mercilessly by the mob while officers looked on until her clothes in tatters was mangled in with her flesh and blood. Daily Worker 9-24-35 The mob also hunted his brothers with the intention of burning them in the father's front yard should they fail to find and lynch Higgenbotham. Wherever kinfolk of Higgenbotham's could be found the armed mob fell over them like maddened hyenas bent on murder. New York N. Y.,

"The boys in the C.C.C. camps nearby were recruited for the murderous man-hunt.

Hunted in Swamp

"The second day after spending most of the day in the swamp in water, sometimes to his very neck, tired and hungry, not having a bite to eat and no clothes, having had to jump out of bed and run for his life, wounded and torn by briars, Higgenbotham was found by officers in an adjoining county unable to get out of the water. The fact that he was caught in another county is the only explanation for Higgenbotham being here yet. He was rushed to Jackson, Miss., for safekeeping. . . ."

This wanton murder of an innocent Negro sharecropper has aroused a tremendous anger among many Southern workers. At the same time the heroic struggle that Higgenbotham put up to save his life stands as another milestone in the blood-covered road to final emancipation. Daily Worker

The Mississippi white worker concludes his letter with the deep pledge of intensified working class loyalty, and of Higgenbotham he writes: 9-24-35

"There runs through the horrible two day man-hunt a thread of glorious and heroic self-defense of one single Negro with no clothes on and nothing to eat for two days and nights defending himself with a rifle against a maddened horde, running into the hundreds of the most lawless characters, armed with the finest high powered rifles to be had. The Negro workers of the South have reason to look with confidence to the coming struggle for power, while the white landlords have just as much reason to think about the same struggle with fear and despair. And we white workers should feel proud of our Negro brothers."

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
September 22, 1935

Lynched During Trial.

AFTER HIS TRIAL in court on a murder charge had gone to the jury and while the jury still was deliberating, Ellwood Higginbotham, negro, was lynched late Tuesday night by a mob estimated by officers at 150 to 200 men, which stormed the jail at Oxford, Miss.

The negro was charged with having slain Glen Roberts, a white planter, in "cold blood," last May.

The mob broke down the jail doors and seized the negro, took him to a lonely side road a few miles from town and almost within sight of the State university, and hanged him.

When Judge Taylor McElroy was officially informed of the lynching, he called the jury into court and dismissed it.

Spartanburg, S. C., Herald
September 19, 1935

Another Lynching

Mississippi records another lynching. This time it followed the disagreement of a jury and the defendant was taken from jail and hanged after the jury was dismissed by the presiding judge.

The state of Mississippi will come in for justifiable criticism for not making an effort to protect this prisoner. No matter how heinous the crime of which he was charged may have been the defendant was in the hands of the authorities and it seems they made no effort to protect him.

The case is more to be criticized because the negro defendant had been tried by a jury of white men and in the face of infuriated public opinion. Failure to reach a verdict under such circumstances would indicate that there was no excuse for a body fo 150 men to raid the jail, and execute the man whom a jury refused to convict. Incidents like this are the cause of agitation for a federal anti-lynching law.

I.L.D. Charges Negro Lynched In Miss. Was Share Cropper Leader

That Ellwood Higginbotham, 28-year old Negro lynched on September 17 at Oxford, Mississippi, was the subject of persecution by the white landlords because of his activities as a member of the Share Croppers Union; that Glen Roberts, the landlord for whose death Higginbotham was on trial at the time of the lynching, was killed by Higginbotham in self defense while Roberts was leading an infuriated lynch-gang against the Negro; and that a previous attempt had been made against Higgonbotham because he refused to allow a field he had cultivated be destroyed by a landlord's road, were the facts brought to light last week after an investigation on the ground by a young white farmer of Oxford, acting for the International Labor Defenes. The I. L. D. knows the investigator and vouches for his accuracy, but withthholds his name for fear he will become the object of reprisals. 10-5-35

The investigator reports that Higginbotham, as one of the leaders of the croppers' union in Mississippi, had long been singled out by the landlords. Further, he had cultivated a field through which landlords tried to cut a short road. Higginbotham fenced off the field to save it from destruction.

Glen Roberts, a white landlord, organized a lynch mob against Higginbotham. A gang of at least 25 white farmers armed with pistols went to the Negro's home. Roberts, pistol in hand, forced his way into the house Higginbotham ran out, and when Roberts started after him Higgonbotham shot him down in self defense.

Higginbotham was captured after a two day man hunt, charged with the murder of Roberts and lynched while the jury was deliberating.

Lynchings—1935
Cases of

Mississippi

4606

SENTINEL
Summit, Miss.
JUN 11 1935

LYNCHING IN MISSISSIPPI

Last week Northern newspapers rolled another juicy morsel from page to page: In Wiggins a mob had taken a negro to the woods, strung him to a tree and filled him with buckshot, bringing the year's total of lynchings to five, one less than at this time last year.

It evidently gives Northerners great pleasure to comment on the lynchings in our State. Nevertheless, statistics on the case prove nothing. The fact that we have one less to our credit than we had at this time last year, proves nothing except that we had one less offender. No sane citizen upholds the mob law. We fight conscientiously to preserve law and order and in most cases wnere lynchings occur, it is the result of a lack of confidence in the keepers of the law.

In other, and rarer, cases it is the result of a crime so brutal, so vicious, that even sane citizens feel an urge to take part in what they deem a lesson to other offenders. We take no pride in either case. The day is surely coming when we will demand so much of the keepers of the law that they will see that justice is done and mob violence will become less and less frequent.

Dogan of Tallahatchie County to be Rayfield Sutton, twenty-eight, charged with attacking a white farm girl Friday night four miles from Charleston, was pursued to the Arkansas State line by more than 100 citizens and officers with bloodhounds. He escaped.

Lynchers Block Sheriff

Columbus and Lowndes County were in a high state of excitement during the double lynching, but after the Negroes had been hanged and the mob had dispersed Columbus quieted down.

The motorcade of six automobiles bearing thirty-five white citizens blocked the highway north of Columbus and cut off the route of Deputy Harris as he was driving his two prisoners to the Aberdeen jail on charges of attempting to attack the wife of an Arkansas lumberman.

The officer reported later he was unable to resist the mob. He was not molested.

The mob drove the Negroes back through Columbus to the church grounds and hanged them. Each was made to stand on top of an automobile with his hands tied behind him and a noose fastened around his neck.

The ropes were knotted to the tree limbs, and at a given signal the cars were driven out and the bodies swung downward.

Negro Saved From Ohio Mob

CINCINNATI, July 15 (UP).—Two police squads saved Harry Logan, thirty-four, Negro, from a mob today after he purportedly attempted to criminally attack Esther Minton, seventeen-year-old white girl.

Logan allegedly seized the girl and dragged her to a parking lot.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Sunday morning after two alleged attempts to attack a white woman, the wife of an Arkansas lumber man, who resided about a mile from Zion Church, the site of the double lynching.

The mob, reported to have numbered about 35 men, traveling in six automobiles, seized the victims about four mile north of Columbus as Deputy Harris was seeking to spirit them away to Aberdeen for safekeeping.

Cincinnati, O., July 15 (U.P.).—Two police squads saved Harry Logan, 34, colored, from a mob, today, after he reputedly attempted to criminally attack Esther Minton, 17-year-old white girl.

Bronx, N.Y. Home News
JUL 16 1935

Two Men Lynched in South

A mob of white men, numbering fewer than 50, lynched two colored men who purportedly confessed two attempts to attack a white farm woman near Columbus, Miss., yesterday. The colored men, Bert Moore, 23, and Dooley Morton, 17, were taken from three deputies as they were being hurried to Aberdeen, Miss., for safekeeping. The mob, in seven or eight automobiles, quietly took the colored men back through Columbus toward Alabama before carrying them out a side road a short distance to hang them from a tree. Morton confessed, officers said, to breaking into the woman's home with intentions of attacking her. He was quoted as saying he and Moore some time ago tried to break into the same residence but were frightened away.

New York Herald-Tribune
JUL 16 1935

Two Negroes Hanged by Mob In Mississippi

3d Suspect in Attacks on White Women Escapes by Crossing State Line

Churchyard Death Scene

Victims Are Taken From Officer, Die on Same Tree

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Miss., July 15.—Two Negro farmers were lynched today by a mob in the Mississippi Delta, and another was pursued by a posse across the Mississippi River into Arkansas, in connection with attacks or attempted attacks on white women.

Bert Moore and Morton Dooley, each about twenty-six years old, were snatched from Deputy Sheriff Parker Harris on the main highway four miles north of Columbus and were taken to the Negro Zion Church, eight miles south of the city, and hanged to a tree.

Another Negro, said by Sheriff J. H.

MOB LYNCHES COLORED PAIR IN MISSISSIPPI

Columbus, Miss., July 15 (AP).—Two young colored farmers, Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, each about 26, were lynched today eight miles south of Columbus. A mob of white citizens wrested the prisoners from Deputy Sheriff Parker Harris of Lowndes County and hanged them to an oak tree.

The colored men were arrested

NEGRO IS SLAIN IN ATTACK CASE

Mississippi Mob Takes Bodie Bates From Calhoun Jail, Hangs Him Near River

8-6-35

PITTSBORO, Miss., Aug. 5 (AP)—Suspected of attempting to attack a white girl, a young Negro known as Bodie Bates was snatched by a mob from the Calhoun county jail during the night and early today his body was found swinging from a rope under a Yalbobusha river bridge.

Twelve hours after the body was cut down, officers said they had no information regarding the identity of the lynchers. The assault on the jail was not revealed until after the dead Negro was found.

Sheriff Jack W. Powell said he had been informed the mob overpowered the officer on duty at the jail and seized his keys.

Sheriff Powell said no arrests had been made and stated he had only meager information regarding the affair.

The alleged attack for which Bates was arrested was assertedly directed at a 22-year-old waitress of a Pittsboro cafe.

Sheriff Powell said the girl told him that a Negro appeared at a bedroom window of her home Saturday night shortly after she had retired. She said he demanded that he be admitted and that her screams, which were answered by neighbors, caused the Negro to flee.

Officers and citizens quickly formed a posse and trailed the Negro with bloodhounds. The search led to Bates' arrest near the home of another Negro who told officers that Bates had been at his home shortly after the alleged attempted attack.

The Negro was placed in the county jail and, according to Sheriff Powell, admitted he had visited the young woman's home.

Commercial Dispatch
COLUMBUS, MISS.

JUL 16 1935

LYNCH EPISODE IS CLOSED HERE

Negroes Met Death at "Hands of Unknown Parties" Is The Verdict

The lynching early yesterday of two Lowndes County negro farmers, Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, apparently was a closed incident today.

The verdict of the inquest was that the pair met death at the "hands of unknown parties."

The bodies were cut down at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, after hanging to the limb of a tree near Zion negro church, eight miles south of Columbus, for more than 12 hours.

Near the scene of the hanging the bodies were buried in coffins furnished by the county. The lynching and burial took place about a half mile from the home of the white woman whom the negroes were charged with having attempted criminal assault.

Hundreds visited the spot of the execution yesterday up to the time the negroes were cut down.

Commercial Dispatch
COLUMBUS, MISS.

JUL 15 1935

TWO NEGROES PAY FOR ACT ON TREE LIMB

Lynching Marks Attempted Assault on White Lady

Two negro farmers, Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, about 23 years of age, were reported lynched last night eight miles south of Columbus by a band of citizens who earlier had wrested the prisoners from Deputy Sheriff Parker Harris.

The bodies were found this morning suspended from the limb of oak tree near the Zion negro church about 8 miles from Columbus just off the Pickensville Road.

The negroes were arrested Sunday morning after two alleged attempted attacks upon a white woman, who resides about a mile from the site of the double lynching.

The band of men, reported to have numbered about 35, traveled in six automobiles. Those in the party seized the two victims from the officer four miles north of Columbus as they were being taken to Aberdeen for safe keeping.

The negroes were driven back through Columbus to the church where they were hung. Their bodies were left hanging to the tree and the band quickly dispersed.

The hands of the victims were tied behind their backs, ropes placed around their necks and then they were dropped from an automobile to their doom.

No shots were fired and the bodies of the victims bore no marks. When found they were completely attired although one of them wore no shoes.

Beneath the swinging bodies were heavy marks of automobile tires which indicated how the hanging was carried out.

A spirited search had been under way since the alleged attempted attacks. Officers reported that two weeks ago two negroes appeared at the home of the white woman and told her they were going to attack her, but that they were frightened away by the arrival of an automobile.

Thereafter a guard was posted at the woman's home to protect her and last Wednesday one of the negroes returned and scuffled with the guard, seizing his gun and firing one ineffectual shot.

The woman entered the battle and threw a lighted kerosene lamp at the negro and the fight ended and the negro fled after the explosion of the lamp which threw the scene into darkness.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle

AUG 5 1935

NEGRO LYNCHED BY MOB

Pittsboro, Miss., Aug. 5 (AP)—Bodie Bates, a Negro accused of attempting to attack a 22-year-old white woman of Pittsboro Saturday night, was lynched by a mob which stormed the Calhoun County jail last night, it was reported here today.

MOB LYNCHES MAN ACCUSED BY WAITRESS

Raid Not Revealed Until Body Is Found Hanging From Nearby Bridge

MISS. TOTAL NOW 7

22 Year Old White Girl Says Negro Attempted To Enter Her Room

PITTSBORO, Miss.—Seized by a mob which stormed the Calhoun County jail here, Bodie Bates was brutally lynched Monday night. The body was found swinging from a rope under a Yalobusha River bridge later. Bates had been placed under arrest in the county jail for an alleged assault on a 22 year-old white woman here Saturday night.

Twelve hours after the body had been cut down, officers declared that they had no information regarding the identity of members of the mob. The assault on the jail itself, it was disclosed, was not revealed until after the body had been discovered, when Sheriff Jack W. Powell asserted that he had been informed that the mob had overpowered the officer on duty, seized his keys and removed Bates to a secluded section of the county where he was lynched in the usual manner.

Bates was taken into custody by a posse of officers and citizens who trailed him with bloodhounds after a white waitress in a cafe here reported to Sheriff Powell that Bates had made improper advances to her.

According to her story, Bates had appeared at her window Saturday night shortly after she had retired and demanded that she let him in. Her screams, she said, which were answered by the neighbors, caused the man to flee.

Sheriff Powell alleged that Bates admitted visiting the woman's home, when he was arrested near the home of another Negro.

The lynching of Bates is the seventh "field day" for Mississippians since the beginnig of the year.

MOB LYNCHES NEGRO TOILER IN PITTSBORO

Daily Worker

Body Found Hanging from Bridge—Dual Lynching Is Feared

PITTSBORO, Miss., Aug. 5. — A lynch mob whose leaders had keys to the County jail took two Negro workers from the jail in two separate trips last night and early today lynched one of them, and possibly the other, it was learned today.

Bodie Bates, whose body was found hanging from a bridge a mile south of Calhoun City, was taken out by the lynchers, said to number less than fifty, about 11 o'clock last night. The lynch gang later returned to the jail about 2 a. m. today and leisurely took out another Negro, whose identity has not been learned. He is believed to have been lynched, too, but his body has not been found.

The lynch gang had keys not only to the door of the jail, but to the cells of the two men. In both cases, they met with not the slightest opposition on the part of the warden or the law officers of the county. Marshall J. L. Lee, whose forces offered no resistance and have made no attempt to run down the lynchers, today came forward with the usual "rape" story by which the white ruling class attempts to justify its crimes against the Negro people. The two Negroes, he told press representatives, had been accused of attempting to assault a white woman here last Saturday.

The fact that the mob had keys to the jail and the cells of its victims has given rise to the belief here that the double lynching is another outrage in which officers of the law participated.

Marshall Lee gave out the following peculiar story of the alleged "attempted attack." The Negroes had appeared at the window of the woman's home while she was alone, he said. They allegedly asked her whether she wanted them to come in the window or go to the door. The woman, Marshall Lee said, told them to go to the back door, and when they did, she ran out the front door and called neighbors.

Marshall Lee added that he "understood" that the Negroes had "confessed." Though to what, he did not say.

PITTSBORO, Miss., Aug. 5 (UP).—Sheriff Z. W. Powell, of Calhoun County, said this afternoon he believed a mob lynched only one of two Negroes taken from the County Jail late last night after being accused of attempted assault upon a young white woman.

NEGRO LYNCHED BY MISSISSIPPI MOB

Charged With Attempted Assault, He Admitted Having Been At Woman's Home

PITTSBORO, MISS., Aug. 5.—(AP)—Twelve hours after they had cut down the body of Bodie Bates, negro charged with an attempted attack on a young white woman, from the end of a rope below the Yalobusha River bridge, peace officers were without information regarding the identity of his lynchers.

The negro was snatched from the Calhoun County jail here last night by a mob. News of the lynching did not spread until today, when the officers found the body swinging from the bridge.

The mob men, according to Sheriff Jack W. Powell, ascended on the jail late last night and overpowered the turnkey. Quietly but speedily, they removed the negro from his cell and rushed him to a secluded section of the county where the hanging was executed.

Sheriff Powell said no arrests had been made, and stated he had only meager information regarding the affair.

The alleged attack for which Bates was arrested was assertedly directed at a 22-year-old waitress of a Pittsboro cafe.

Sheriff Powell said the girl told him that a negro appeared at a bedroom window of her home Saturday night shortly after she had retired. She said he demanded that he be admitted, and that her screams, which were answered by neighbors, caused the negro to flee.

Officers and citizens quickly formed a posse and trailed the negro with bloodhounds. The search led to Bates's arrest near the home of another negro, who told officers that Bates had been at his home shortly after the alleged attempted attack.

The negro was placed in the county jail and, according to Sheriff Powell, admitted he had visited the young woman's home.

Lynchings—1935
Cases of.

Mississippi.

4607

NEGRO IS HANGED BY LYNCHING MOB

Telegraph

Man Charged With Slaying of Highway Worker Is Executed in Schoolyard

3-13-35

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 12 (AP)—Alternately singing and praying even as the rope was tightened about his throat, Ab Young, Negro tenant farmer suspected of slaying a highway employe, was lynched today in a school yard three miles east of here.

A mob of approximately 50 men hanged the Negro from a tall oak tree a couple of hours after he was seized at Rossville, Tenn., just across the Mississippi line. Young was wanted in the killing of Hardy Mackie, 45-year-old highway worker.

"You'd better sing a hymn," one of the group told the Negro as a rope was placed about his neck. The Negro endeavored to sing.

"You'd better pray, Negro," he was told. The Negro prayed.

The rope was fastened about his neck. The other end tied to the tree. The Negro was pushed atop a small coach automobile. One of his captors drove off in the car, leaving the Negro's body dangling in the air.

Hardie Killed Saturday

The hanging occurred about 4:10 p. m. as the members of the mob passed through Mount Pleasant with their captive an hour or so before they told people sitting around a garage that the Negro would be "lynched at sundown." The mob was traveling in about five automobiles at the time.

Mackie, a native of Marshall county, had returned from Holly Springs, Miss., Saturday night when he stopped his automobile in front of a store at Slayden.

The officers said Young had been drinking and was shooting across the road.

"Stop that shooting, or you will kill somebody," they said Mackie warned the Negro. The officers reported the Negro turned and fired in the direction of the highway employe, and Mackie fell, mortally wounded. The Negro fled under the fire of a group of men, escaping.

Investigation Promised

He had not been apprehended by officers when located at Rossville today.

Prosecuting Attorney E. C. Wright of Marshall county, said that he and Deputy Sheriff M. J. Coffey went to Slayden and pleaded with the mob to let "justice take its course." He said the Negro was "hidden away" at the time and that they did not see him.

Wright said he would launch a vigorous investigation into the lynching, but that he was not in possession of information as to the identities of those participating.

'SUICIDE' HINTED IN NEGRO'S LYNCHING

Post 3-14-35

No Action Is Taken After Slayer Is Hanged

Birmingham Ala.

By United Press.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., March 13.—Declaring authorities were not sure whether Ab Young, Negro, was hanged or committed suicide, Pros. Atty. E. C. Wright, of Marshall County, announced today the Grand Jury would not be called into special session to investigate the Negro's lynch death near Slayden late yesterday.

Wright said, as an inquest was held over the Negro's body, that the next regular session of the Grand Jury would be in August.

"So far as the proof is concerned, we don't know whether it was suicide or a hanging," he commented.

Open Verdict Reached In Lynching of Negro

Constitution

3-13-35

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 13.—(AP) Ab Young, 29-year-old negro, lynched late yesterday near here, came to his death "by hanging, at the hands of parties unknown," a coroner's jury decided today.

Plans were made to continue the investigation to learn the identity of those responsible.

In New York the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wired President Roosevelt and Attorney-General Cummings a demand for federal action in the lynching.

The association said the lynching should be investigated under the federal "Lindbergh kidnaping law," because the negro was taken across the state line from Tennessee.

Open Verdict Reached In Lynching of Negro

Constitution

3-13-35

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 13.—(AP) Ab Young, 29-year-old negro, lynched late yesterday near here, came to his death "by hanging, at the hands of parties unknown," a coroner's jury decided today.

Plans were made to continue the investigation to learn the identity of those responsible.

In New York the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People wired President Roosevelt and Attorney-General Cummings a demand for federal action in the lynching.

The association said the lynching should be investigated under the federal "Lindbergh kidnaping law," because the negro was taken across the state line from Tennessee.

NEW YORK TIMES

MAR 13 1935

NEGRO IS LYNCHED BY MISSISSIPPI MOB

Accused of Murder, He Sings Hymn as Rope Is Placed Around His Neck

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 12 (AP).—Ab Young, a Negro, was hanged to an oak tree in a school yard three miles east of here this afternoon by a mob of about fifty white men.

The Negro, who had been sought in connection with the shooting to death Saturday night of Hardy Mackie, 45 years old, a State highway worker, went to his death with a hymn on his lips.

He was placed on a small automobile with a rope around his neck. The other end of the rope was suspended to a tree. One of his captors drove off in the car, throwing him from the top.

Mackie, a native of Marshall County, had returned from Holly Springs, Miss., Saturday night when he stopped his automobile in front of a store at Slayden. The officers said Young had been drinking and was shooting across the road.

"Stop that shooting or you will kill somebody," they said Mackie warned the Negro.

The officers reported that the Negro turned and shot in the direction of the highway employe. Mackie fell, mortally wounded. The Negro escaped under the fire of a group of men.

He had not been apprehended by officers when found by the mob at Rossville today.

Young, known throughout this district as a man who worked his farm, attended his business, but who was not afraid of white hoodlums, had been the envy of his white neighbors for some time, and it was known that plans had been laid to "get" him. He went to his death with a song on his lips and a defiant shout to the mob that "a man can die but once."

NEW YORK JOURNAL

MAR 13 1935

NEGRO HANGED BY MOB

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., March 13.—The body of a Negro was found hanging to a tree in the woods near here today by a sheriff's posse which had sought him in connection with the slaying of Hardy Mackie.

Authorities believed a mob from Mississippi and Tennessee located the Negro and, not waiting for legal procedure, immediately lynched him.

The Negro's name was Alfred Young. E. C. Wright, County Prosecuting Attorney, said his office would attempt to get the names of the leaders of the mob if possible.

Negro Suspect Hanged By Mississippi Mob

Constitution

3-13-35

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 12.—(AP) Ab Young, a negro, was hanged to an oak tree in a schoolyard three miles east of here this afternoon by a mob of white men.

The negro, who had been sought in connection with the shooting to death Saturday night of Hardy Mackie, 45, a state highway worker, went to his death with a hymn on his lips.

He was placed atop a small coach automobile, with a rope around his neck. The other end of the rope was suspended to a tree, one of his captors drove off in the car, throwing him from the top, and leaving his body dangling at the end of the rope.

Mississippi Mob Lynches Negro

Advertiser

3-13-35

Noose Silences Hymn On Lips Of Slayer, Caught Across Tennessee Line

Montgomery Ala.

SLAYDEN, MISS., March 12.—(AP)—The tightening of a lynch rope about his throat stilled the hymns and prayers of Ab Young, negro tenant farmer and slaying suspect, this afternoon as he was hanged from a tall oak tree in a school yard three miles east of here.

A mob of about 50 men participated in the lynching a couple of hours after the negro was seized at Rossville, Tenn., just across the Mississippi line.

"You'd better sing a hymn," one of the group told the negro as a rope was placed about his neck. The negro endeavored to sing.

"You'd better pray, negro," he was told. He prayed.

The rope was fastened about his neck. The other end tied to the tree. The negro was pushed atop a small automobile. One of his captors drove off in the car, leaving the negro's body dangling in the air.

The negro had been sought in connection with the fatal shooting Saturday night of Hardy Mackie, 45, State highway worker.

Mackie, a native of Marshall County, had returned from Holly Springs, Miss., Saturday night when he stopped his automobile in front of a store at Slayden.

The officers said Young had been drinking and was shooting across the road.

"Stop that shooting, or you will kill somebody," they said Mackie warned the negro. The officers reported the negro turned and fired in the direction of the highway employe, and Mackie fell, mortally wounded. The negro fled under the fire of a group of men, escaping.

He had not been apprehended by officers when located at Rossville today.

Jury Finds Negro Died By Hanging

Advertiser

3-14-35

SLAYDEN, MISS., March 13.—(AP)—A preliminary inquiry into the lynching of Ab Young, 29-year-old negro tenant farmer and slaying suspect, resulted in a coroner's inquest verdict today that he came to his death yesterday "by hanging, at the hands of parties unknown."

The inquest, held at Holly Springs, was presided over by Justice of the Peace W. C. Earney as coroner. Four witnesses were heard. An officer testified to finding the negro's body swinging from a tall oak tree two miles east of here. Other witnesses identified the negro and testified he was the man who shot to death Hardy Mackie, 45-year-old State highway employe last Saturday.

County Prosecuting Atty. E. C. Wright said he would pursue his investigation in an effort to determine those responsible for the lynching, but he added he was [illegible] since those responsible [illegible] "naturally [illegible] and the [illegible] "However," he said [illegible] good officers working on the case and we will present the entire matter to the Grand Jury in August."

The negro, sought since Saturday night's shooting, was seized at Rossville, Tenn., yesterday and taken to a schoolyard two miles east of Slayden, where he died at the end of a lynch rope.

"A Man Can Die But Once!" Shouts Dixie Lynch Victim

Farmer Dies Defying Mississippi Mob

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 15.—As southern members of Congress continue to obstruct the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynch bill by declaring that there is no need for one, the good white folks of Mississippi continue to pile up its impressive lynch league score.

The latest lynch victim was Ab Young, tenant farmer, who was captured by a mob Tuesday across the state line in Tennessee and brought here for the murder. Young was accused of having slain Hardy Mackie, a relief worker who invaded his home Saturday night. Although there were no witnesses to the killing of Mackie, Young was charged with the crime, and a man hunt ensued that resulted in the capture of the farmer Tuesday.

The mob, composed of more than 100 white men, women and children, dragged Young to a schoolyard three miles east of this town and hanged him to a tree where all the little children might see just how a first class lynching is staged.

Hardy Mackie, 45, State Highway worker, of Holly Springs, Miss., was shot to death Saturday night. Officers had been seeking a young Negro in connection with the case.

The Press Scimitar quoted people "around Mount Pleasant, Miss.," as saying the Negro would be "lynched at sundown" at Slayden, Miss.

Officers from the sheriff's office at Holly Springs were reported en route to the scene.

when Mackie, returning from Holly Springs, reproached him.

'Stop that shooting across the street or you'll kill someone," the highway worker was quoted as saying. The negro, witnesses said, then turned the gun on Mackie and shot him through the heart.

AFTER MISSISSIPPI'S BARBARISM The body of Abe Young as it dangled from a tree at Slayden. A mob of fifty whites murdered the youth. They placed a rope around his neck while he was in a truck and drove the vehicle from under him. This is the second lynching to take place in Mississippi this year.

NEW YORK AMERICAN

MAR 13 1935

LYNCHING

Negro Hanged in Mississippi School Yard

50 IN MOB

SLADE, Miss., March 12 (AP).—Ab Young, a Negro, was hanged to an oak tree in a schoolyard three miles east of here this afternoon by a mob of about 50 white men.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., March 12 (AP).—A Negro sought in connection with a slaying was reported seized by citizens this afternoon at Rossville, Tenn., and rushed to Slayden, Miss., near the scene of the slaying.

MOB LYNCHES NEGRO FOR FATAL SHOOTING

Killed Mississippi Highway Worker While Drunk

SLAYDEN, Miss., March 12.—(UP)—A mob of about 50 men lo today lynched a negro, Ab Youn near here for the fatal shooting o Hardy Mackie, 45, state highway worker, here last Saturday night.

The negro, singing religious song and praying, went to his death when members of the mob placed a rope around his neck in a truck tied the rope to the limb of an oak tree in a schoolyard, and drove the truck out from under him at 4:10 p.m.

The country school was three miles east of Slayden and near the Tennessee line.

Young had been captured by the mob at Rossville, Tenn., a short distance fro mthe Mississippi line, earlier in the afternoon.

Sheriff's offices at Holly Springs were notified that a lynching was in the offing and a squad of deputies started searching for the mob, but the negro was already dead when they reached the scene and the mob had dispersed.

Witnesses said the negro was drunk and shooting his pistol promiscuously across the street here

Dadeville, Ala., Record
March 14, 1935

NEGRO WHO SHOT WHITE MAN IS LYNCHED IN MISS

A mob of about fifty white men went over into Tennessee from Slayden, Miss., Tuesday afternoon and brought Ab Young back and hung him to a tree in the school yard of Slayden.

The negro was averred to have shot a white highway employe who had asked the negro to stop shooting across the public road or he would kill somebody. The negro is said to have turned the gun in the direction of Mackie, the white man, and fired. Mackie fell dead.

The negro is said to have been drinking.

Negro Farm Leader Killed

SLADEN, Miss., March 24. — Charges of intentional distortion and conscious suppression of facts, in the lynching of Abraham Young, Negro share cropper, here last week, were leveled at the Associated Press by indignant share croppers.

The Associated Press carried stories to the effect that Young was murdered by a lynch gang after he had shot Hardy Mackie, white, in the heat of an argument.

Eyewitnesses to the shooting declare that, contrary to the Associated Press reports, it was Mackie who first whipped out a pistol to kill Young. In self-defense, Young drew his gun and shot Mackie.

Share croppers declare that Young was lynched by the landowners after Mackie, a hireling of the landowners, had failed in his attempt to kill him.

Young was hated and feared by the landowners because he organized share croppers into a union to fight against their brutal exploitation. When the landowners, with the aid of the government, grabbed the cash compensations for the cotton crops and number of hogs that the share croppers were forced to curtail, Young helped organize a mass campaign of protest. The landowners then decided to get rid of Young.

Lynchings-1935
Cases of

Mississippi

4608

4608

Leavenworth, Kans
TIMES
JUL 15 1935

MOB LYNCHES TWO NEGROES.

Columbus, Miss., July 15—(AP)—Two negroes, identified as Bert Moore and Dooley Morton, were lynched today eight miles from Columbus by a mob of infuriated white citizens.

The negroes were accused of two attempted attacks on white women in this section during the past two weeks.

NEGRO LYNCHED

Telegraph

Mob Takes Accused Man While Jury Is Deliberating

9-19-35

OXFORD, Miss., Sept. 18 (AP)—Ellwood Higginbotham, Negro defendant in a murder trial here, was taken from the Lafayette county jail last night by a mob and lynched.

Higginbotham was seized and hanged while the jury was deliberating his case. He was on trial for the slaying of Lyn Roberts, a white man last May.

Lynching of Negro Protested in Wire By Defense Group

Daily Worker

An indignant protest on the lynching in Oxford, Miss., Tuesday night of Ellwood Higginbotham, Negro tenant farmer, was wired to Governor Mike S. Corner of Mississippi by the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners yesterday. 9-20-35

Higginbotham was taken from the Lafayette County jail, Oxford, Miss., and hanged while an all-white jury was "deliberating" his case. He was on trial for the slaying of Glen Roberts, white plantation owner, last May.

New York

Sheriff S. T. Lyles and three deputies on guard at the jail offered no resistance to the lynch gang, which is said to have numbered about 50 men. The deputies revealed the lynching Wednesday morning. Their story is that the lynch mob "broke" into the jail and "overpowered" them. As usual, their memories suffered a sudden impairment. They could not identify any of the mob members, although none of them wore masks.

Higginbotham was taken three miles from the city and hanged.

NEGRO IN MISSISSIPPI IS LYNCHED BY MOB

Commercial Appeal

OXFORD, Miss., Sept 18.—(AP)—While a jury weighed evidance in his trial on a charge of killing a white farmer, Ellwood Higginbotham, 28-year-old negro, was lynched near here last night. 9-18-35

The screaming, terrified negro accused of shooting Glen Roberts, Lafayette county planter, was seized in the county jail by a mob of between 100 and 150 persons and hanged to a tree two and a half miles from town.

The jury, which had been deliberating a verdict since late yesterday, was dismissed by Presiding Judge Taylor McElroy. It was not learned how it stood when dismissed.

Belief was expressed that failure of the jury to return a quick verdict prompted the lynching.

NEGRO HANGED BY MOB AS JURY DELIBERATES

Commercial Appeal

Frenzied Crowd Drags Man on Trial from Oxford Jail

9-19-35

DEPUTIES OVERPOWERED

Witness Tells Court of Slaying of Farmer and Citizens Take Law Into Own Hands—Near University

Memphis

By The Associated Press

OXFORD, Miss., Sept. 18.—While a Lafayette County jury was deliberating his fate last night, Ellwood Higginbotham, 28, a negro alleged slayer of a white man, was taken from his county jail cell and lynched.

Today Judge Taylor McElroy, presiding over the negro's trial, called the jury into the court room and dismissed the panel.

The lynching was blamed by Sheriff S. T. Lyles, of Lafayette County, on a mob of between 100 and 150 citizens who stormed the jail and overpowered the jailer and his deputies but none of the members of the mob had been identified today.

Farmer Murdered

Higginbotham was on trial for the murder of Glen D. Roberts, a prominent Oxford farmer, who, witnesses at the trial yesterday said, was shot down in cold blood when Roberts went to the negro's home to "talk with him."

The slaying occurred last May 21 and Higginbotham fled from the scene. He was trailed by a posse of officers and citizens with blood hounds for more than 24 hours. Volleys of shots were fired on him every time he was sighted until the officers finally overtook him submerged in a ditch of water six miles from Pontotoc and captured him uninjured.

The mob spirit reared its head then and the sheriff and his deputies quickly spirited Higginbotham away to the strong Hinds County jail at Jackson and kept him there until yesterday when he was returned here to stand trial.

At the time of the arrest of Higginbotham, Sheriff D. B. Anderson, of Pontotoc County, and ex-Sheriff Roberts, a brother of the slain man, told the Tupelo News that Higginbotham had admitted killing the Oxford farmer.

Furious Attack

Last night's lunching was carried out with a furious attack. Leaders of the mob invaded the jail, seized the keys from the jailer's office and started breaking down doors after the jailer had refused to identify the key to Higginbotham's cell.

Finally the right key was found and the prisoner was seized by members of the mob and he scream for mercy.

The negro was dragged from the jail, placed in an automobile and whisked outside of the town limits where he was hanged to a big tree in the woods, about two miles from Oxford.

Sheriff Lyles and his deputies went to the scene after the lynching, took down the body and turned it over to an undertaking establishment for burial.

The mob gathered and seized the negro within sight of the state university.

Mississippi Mob Lynches Negro

Advertiser

Jury Deliberating Fate Of Farmer's Alleged Slayer Dismissed After Hanging

9-19-35

Montgomery, Ala.

OXFORD, MISS., Sept. 18.—(AP)—The nob and lynch law today abruptly ended the murder trial of Ellwood Higginbotham, 28-year-old Lafayette County negro, and the Circuit Court jury deliberating his fate was dismissed before arriving at a verdict.

Higginbotham was placed on trial yesterday on a murder charge in connection with the slaying of Glen D. Roberts, a well known Oxford farmer last May.

Witnesses testified at the trial that the white man was "shot down in cold blood" when he went to Higginbotham's door to "have a talk" with him and that the negro fled into Pontotoc County after the slaying.

The case was rested with the jury last night about 6 o'clock. After its members had deliberated for several hours without returning a verdict, a restless crowd of white citizens, estimated by Sheriff S. T. Lyles, of Lafayette County, to number from 100 to 150 men, stormed the jail, dragged the prisoner out of his cell and whisked him out into the country where his screaming pleas for mercy were refused and he was hanged by the neck to a tree beside a lonely, wooded road.

The sheriff and three deputies went to the section, about two miles from Oxford, took the body down and turned it over to an undertaker for burial. Judge Taylor McElroy, presiding over the trial, then called in the jury and dismissed them.

The mob attack on Higginbotham was the second demonstration against the prisoner since his arrest on May 23 in Pontotoc County by a firing posse of officers and citizens with the use of bloodhounds.

After a cross county chase in which a number of shots were fired at him without effect, Higginbotham was taken from a ditch where he had submerged his body under water in an effort to escape the posse.

After his arrest at Pontotoc a mob formed with violent intent but officers outwitted the mob and carried Higginbotham to Jackson where he remained in safety until he was returned here yesterday for trial.

Last night the mob overpowered the jailer and his assistants, seized the keys, smashed jail doors and finally opened the cell with a key and seized their quarry, thereby adding another lynching to the name of Mississippi.

Today's lynching was the sixth in Mississippi in 1935, the equal of the five-year record recorded in 1934. There were three Mississippi negroes lynched in 1933, none in 1932, three in 1931 and four in 1930.

New York Herald-Tribune

SEP 19 1935

Negro Lynched While Jurors Debate Verdict

Mississippi Mob Seizes Man Tried for Murder of White Planter and Hangs Him

Sheriff Is Overpowered

Jury Dismissed Without Revealing How Ballots Stood

By The Associated Press

OXFORD, Miss., Sept. 18.—While a jury considered evidence in his trial on a charge of killing a white farmer, Ellwood Higginbotham, twenty-eight-year-old Negro, was lynched near here last night.

The screaming, terrified Negro, accused of having shot Glen Roberts, a planter, was seized in the county jail by a mob of between 100 and 150 persons and hanged to a tree two and a half miles from town.

The jury, which had been deliberating a verdict since late yesterday, was dismissed by Judge Taylor McElroy. It was not learned how it stood. Belief was expressed that failure of the jury to return a quick verdict prompted the lynching.

Members of the mob stormed the jail, overpowered Sheriff S. T. Lyles and three deputies and started smashing doors with the officers trying vainly to prevent seizure of the prisoner.

Sheriff's deputies said mob leaders demanded the jail keys, and when this was denied took charge of the office, finding the keys in a desk drawer. After trying several of the keys, the one to Higginbotham's cell was found and the prisoner was taken to an automobile.

A large crowd joined the procession to the scene of the lynching, almost within sight of the State University campus. The body was left swinging from the tree. It was cut down later by the Sheriff and his aids.

Officers announced that an investigation would be made, but said none of the mob had been identified.

Roberts was shot on May 21 when tense and the prisoner was transferred he went to Higginbotham's home to to the jail at Jackson, where he re- talk with him. The state presented mained until his return yesterday for testimony the planter was killed "in trial. cold blood" upon attempting to enter Sheriff D. B. Anderson and former the place after the Negro had called Sheriff Roberts, brother of the slain out, "if you want to see me, come into man, said Higginbotham had con- the house." fessed the killing.

With the aid of bloodhounds a posse trailed the fugitive twenty-four hours, finally capturing him after firing several ineffective shots. Feeling was

New York American

SEP 19 1935

NEGRO SLAYER LYNCHED

MOB TAKES HIM FROM CELL

DELAYED JURY VERDICT

OXFORD, Miss., Sept. 18 (AP).—While a jury weighed evidence in his trial on a charge of killing a white farmer, Elwood Higginbotham, 28-year-old Negro, was lynched near here last night.

The screaming, terrified Negro accused of shooting Glen Roberts, planter, was seized in the county jail by a mob of between 100 and 150 persons and hanged to a tree two and a half miles from town.

SMASHED DOORS

The jury which hed been deliberating a verdict since late yesterday was dismissed by Judge Taylor McElroy. It was not learned how it stood. Belief was expressed that failure of the jury to return a quick verdict prompted the lynching.

Members of the mob stormed the jail, overpowered Sheriff S. T. Lyles and three deputies and started smashing doors with the officers trying vainly to prevent seizure of the prisoner.

IN SIGHT OF CAMPUS

Sheriff's deputies said mob leaders demanded the jail keys and when this was denied took charge of the office, finding the keys in a desk drawer.

After trying several of the keys the one to Higginbotham's cell was found and the prisoner was taken to an automobile. A large crowd joined the procession to the scene of the lynching, almost within sight of the State University campus.

The body was left swinging from the tree.

Brookhaven, Miss. Leader
September 21, 1935

Lafayette Mob Lynches Negro As Jury Ponders

Murder Suspect Dragged From Jail and Hanged at Oxford.

Oxford, Miss., Sept. 18. — While a Lafayette county jury was deliberating his fate last night, Ellwood Higginbotham, 28, a negro alleged slayer of a white man, was taken from his county jail cell and lynched.

Today Judge Taylor McElroy, presiding over the negro's trial, called the jury into the court room and dismissed the panel.

The lynching was blamed by Sheriff S. T. Lyles, of Lafayette county, on a mob of between 100 and 150 citizens who stormed the jail and overpowered the jailer and his deputies but none of the members of the mob had been identified today.

Higginbotham was on trial for the murder of Glen D. Roberts, a prominent Oxford farmer, who, witnesses at the trial yesterday said, was shot down in cold blood when Roberts went to the negro's home to "talk with him."

The slaying occurred last May 21 and Higginbotham fled from the scene. He was trailed by a posse of officers and citizens with bloodhounds for more than 24 hours. Volleys of shots were fired at him every time he was sighted until the officers finally overtook him submerged in a ditch of water six miles from Pontotoc and captured him uninjured.

The mob spirit reared its head then and the sheriff and his deputies quickly spirited Higginbotham away to the strong Hinds county jail at Jackson and kept him there until yesterday when he was returned here to stand trial.

At the time of the arrest of Higginbotham, Sheriff D. B. Anderson, of Pontotoc county, and ex-Sheriff Roberts, a brother of the slain man, told the Tupelo News that Higginbotham had admitted killing the Oxford farmer.

Last night's lynching was carried out with a furious attack. Leaders of the mob invaded the jail, seized the keys from the jailer's office and started breaking down doors after the jailer had refused to identify the key to Higginbotham's cell.

Finally the right key was found and the prisoner was seized by members of the mob and he began to scream for mercy.

The negro was dragged from the jail, placed in an automobile and whisked outside of the town limits where he was hanged to a big tree in the woods, about two miles from Oxford.

Sheriff Lyles and his deputies went to the scene after the lynching, took down the body and turned it over to an undertaking establishment for burial.

The mob gathered and seized the negro within sight of the state university.

Lynchings—1935
Cases of

North Carolina

4611

SLAYER LYNCHED BY TARHEEL MOB

Axe Murder of White Farmer Is Avenged in Spite of Guard Mobilization

LOUISBURG, N. C., July 30 (AP)—An angry mob of Negroes and white men today lynched Gowan Ward, 25-year-old mentally deficient Negro, known by the nickname "Sweat," for the axe slaying of a white farmer.

Within four hours after Ward had chopped off C. G. Stokes' head with an axe as the climax of what Sheriff J. T. Moore said apparently was a mad frenzy, the bullet-riddled body of the saffron-colored Negro was left swinging from an oak tree half a mile from where Stokes was slain.

Moore said there were about 25 men, some white and some Negroes, in the armed group which halted his automobile and took the Negro from him and a deputy, T. J. Bean, as they were taking him to Rocky Mount for safe-keeping.

The mob carried Ward back to Hayesville township, about half-way between Louisburg and Henderson, and lynched him while national guardsmen and state highway patrolmen, ordered out by Gov. J. C. B. Ehringhaus, sped futilely in an effort to halt the mob violence.

"At Hands of Parties Unknown"

While several hundred curious milled about in the grove where Ward was hanged and his body filled with pistol and shotgun slugs, Coroner R. A. Bobbitt took the body down and held an inquest. The verdict was death at the hands of parties unknown.

Ward lived with a sister, Rowena Kearney, about 10 miles from here and this morning suddenly attacked her, beating her unconscious with a rock. Sturgeon Ayscue, a white farmer, went to her assistance and Ward knocked him down with a "pop" bottle.

Stokes was working in a field across the road from the Kearney woman's house and intervened. As he was trying to reason with the Negro, Ward struck him with a rock, knocked him down, and then cut off his head with an axe.

Negro field hands at work in the section overpowered Ward and held him until officers arrived.

LYNCHING PROBE CLOSED

LOUISBURG, Aug. 1 (AP)—With no evidence to link "any one to hold anyone" having been brought out at a three-hour judicial inquiry into the lynching Tuesday of Roosevelt Gowan Ward, Negro who earlier that day had chopped off the head of a white farmer, Judge W. C. Harris recessed the hearing indefinitely this afternoon.

Negro Lynched By White Mob

No Attempt Was Made By Sheriff to Save Life of Victim

HENDERSON, N. C., July 30.—A mob of white farmers lynched "Sweet" Ward, Negro farm laborer, near here today.

Ward was reported to have killed Charlie Stokes, a white farmer, in a fight. The fight is believed to have been over wages due the Negro laborer and withheld by the white farmer as is the general custom hereabouts.

No effort was made to prevent the lynching by the local sheriff. The coroner's jury is expected to return the usual verdict of "death at the hands of persons unknown."

Link Sheriff To Lynching Of Negro

LOUISBURG, N. C., July 31.—Gowan ("Sweat") Ward, Negro farmer, who was lynched near here yesterday by a mob of white farmers, was handed over to the lynchers by Sheriff J. T. Moore and Deputy T. J. Bean. The delivery was made ten miles out of this city by the officers who were taking Ward in an automobile to Rocky Mount "for safe keeping."

As predicted in yesterday's dispatch to the Daily Worker, the coroner's jury has returned the usual verdict of "death at the hands of persons unknown," although the lynchers are undoubtedly well known to the sheriff and his deputy.

Ward was tied to a tree and shot through the head, chest and stomach while swinging from the ground. The mob then tried to set fire to the body.

Ward, a tenant farm hand, had had a quarrel earlier in the day with Charlie Stokes, a white farmer. In the fight that ensued, Stokes was killed. The sheriff and the local correspondents of the Associated Press and the United Press, all connected with the local press, have concocted an elaborate story to "show" that Ward was a "madman." The U. P. story has him attacking Stokes "without cause" while the latter was "priming" tobacco. The A. P. story places Stokes in the role of a chivalrous defender of a Negro woman, Ward's sister, who, it claims, was attacked by her brother. An earlier A. P. dispatch from this lynch-ridden community even included Negro farm hands in the mob which lynched Ward. Investigation shows that there is absolutely no basis for this statement. This version was omitted from later A. P. dispatches.

National Guardsmen and State Police ordered to the scene of the lynching by Governor Ehringhaus have been "unable" to locate the lynch leaders.

Crowd Lynches Negro Ax-Killer

Four Hours After Slaying, Murderer Is Hanged By White And Negro Mob

LOUISBURG, N. C., July 30 (AP)—An angry mob of negroes and white men today lynched Gowan Ward, 25-year-old mentally deficient Negro known by the nickname "Sweat" for the axe slaying of a white farmer.

Within four hours after Ward had chopped off C. G. Stokes's head with an axe as the climax of what Sheriff J. T. Moore said apparently was a mad frenzy, the bullet-riddled body of the saffron-colored negro was left swinging from a limb of an oak tree half a mile from where Stokes was slain.

The sheriff, who, fearing violence, was taking the negro from the county, was forced to surrender him to the mob 10 miles from here.

Moore said there were about 25 men, some white and some negroes, in the armed group which halted his automobile and took the negro from him and a deputy, T. J. Bean, as they were taking him to Rocky Mount for safe keeping.

The mob carried Ward back to Hayesville township, about half-way between Louisburg and Henderson, and lynched him while national guardsmen and State highway patrolmen, ordered out by Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus, sped futilely in an effort to halt the mob violence.

While a crowd of several hundred curious milled about in the grove where Ward was hanged and his body filled with a pistol and shotgun slugs, Coroner R. A. Bobbitt took the body down and held an inquest. The verdict, rendered in five minutes, was death at the hands of parties unknown.

Solicitor William Y. Bickett, of Raleigh, prosecuting officer for this judicial district, and County Attorney Charles Green both said their offices would bend all efforts to prosecution of the mob's members if they could be identified.

Constables C. O. Wren, W. E. Neal, and Ashley Fuller, who arrested Ward, said they were told by witnesses that the negro apparently had been crazed when he killed Stokes.

Ward lived with a sister, Rowena Kearney, about 10 miles from here and this morning suddenly attacked her beating her unconscious with a rock Sturgeon Ayscue, a white farmer, went to her assistance and Ward knocked him down with a soft-drink bottle.

Stokes was working in a field across the road from the Kearney woman's house and intervened. As he was trying to reason with the negro, Ward struck him with a rock, knocked him down, and then cut off his head with an ax.

Negro field hands at work in the section overpowered Ward and held him until officers arrived.

CASE

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD

LENGTHY LIST OF WITNESSES IS EXAMINED

AUG 1 1935

Many Details of Lynching of Negro Ward Are Given At Investigation

INVOLVE NONE DIRECTLY

Doctor Is of Opinion Negro Was Under Influence of Drug When He Ran Amuck

LOUISBURG, Aug. 1.—(AP)—No evidence to link any one with the lynching Tuesday of Roosevelt Ward, negro axe slayer of a Franklin county farmer, was adduced at the forenoon session of a judicial inquiry opened here today.

From officers who arrested Ward Superior Court Judge W. C. Harris received details of the rampage the negro went on when he chopped off C. G. Stokes' head, but none of the witnesses connected any one with the lynching.

Solicitor William Y. Bickett, of Raleigh, did most of the questioning of witnesses, assisted by Attorney General A. A. F. Seawell.

Dr. H. G. Perry, of Louisburg, who saw the negro an hour or so before he was taken from Sheriff J. H. Moore and two deputies by 25 armed men and hanged to an oak tree, testified he believed Ward was under the influence of a narcotic when he ran amuck.

Some 30 witnesses were summoned for the hearing which opened with the court room of Franklin county's 82-year-old courthouse, intended to seat 250, jammed with upwards of 400 spectators who crowded in despite the stifling heat.

C. O. Wrenn, deputy sheriff of Hayesville township, was the first witness called.

He described how he and Deputies A. A. Fuller and Elmer Neal went to the home of Otho Kearnby to arrest Ward for assault on Ayscue and learned there of the murder of Stokes and an assault on Rowena Kearney, Ward's sister, by the negro.

Wrenn said he last saw Ward alive when Sheriff John H. Moore and two deputies were putting him into a car to take him from the county because of the high feeling in the Hayesville section.

Wrenn said he drove from Louisburg to Kearney's home then and found about 75 people there, including J. H. Goodson, Coroner R. A. Bobbitt and Ira Weldon. It was there, he said, that he first heard the mob had seized Ward.

He went on home to lunch, he continued, and when he returned was told Ward had been hanged.

From Vance.

Asked by Bickett from which direction most of the cars came which visited Stokes' home, Wrenn replied they came from the Vance county direction, towards Epsom.

A. A. Fuller, resident of Hayesville township who was deputized to assist in the arrest of Ward, drew a laugh from the crowd when he said he was churning when Wrenn came to get him.

Fuller also related the arrest of Ward and said the negro was sitting in a chair at Otho Kearney's home with Stokes' head in a cloth at his feet when the officers found him. Stokes was killed 75 yards away.

"I've killed one man. Turn me loose and I'll clean the world," Fuller quoted the negro as saying as they were bringing him to Louisburg.

Fuller said he did not remember any one he saw at Stokes' home or the lynching scene except Clyde Evans, Ceby Weldon and one or two others.

Not Recognized.

Neal followed Fuller to the stand and testified he came to town to bring Ward and went back to the filling station he operates. He said some one in a car told him Ward had been lynched and under questioning by Bickett said it was some one "I never saw on that road before." He added he did not recollect what kind of car his informant was in.

He said a group from Henderson was at his filling station when he returned, but that he did not recall the names of any except Roger Duke, a mail carrier.

L. O. Frazier, justice of the peace of Hayesville township, told of Ayscue swearing out the warrant charging Ward with assault and related that after he heard Stokes had been killed he got his gun and went to Kearney's house where he saw J. H. Goodson and Hugh Burnett.

Whole Community.

"I might call every man's name in the community," Frazier replied to a question as to whom he recognized at Stokes' home around 11 a. m. Tuesday, an hour or more before the lynching.

He then named D. T. Dickey, George Ayscue, Warner Ayscue, Henry Jones, Horace Stokes and "some of the Weldons."

Cars were coming and going all the time, he said, and he saw many people leave the home, but did not see Horace Stokes leave.

Attorney General Seawell took over the questioning when Spurgeon Ayscue, who had been sent for, took the stand. Ayscue related the attack upon him by Ward and said he heard of the killing of Stokes, a cousin of his father, about 10 a. m. while at Weldon's mill. Others at the mill, he said, were Andrew Faulkner, another man named Faulkner, Tom Collins and Ira Weldon. He went to Stokes' home, he continued, but left there about noon and went to Henderson to have the wound in his head treated and first heard of the lynching in Henderson.

The governor reiterated his assurance of full backing for the inquiry, and posted a reward of $400 for the conviction of "unknown person or persons" who took part in the lynching.

Franklin county officers, who served subpoenas upon prospective witnesses, declined to disclose who had been directed to appear.

None Recognized.

After the lynching, Sheriff J. T. Moore and the two deputies who were trying to take Ward from the Franklin jail to a safer prison as a precaution, declared they recognized none of the mob members.

A coroner's jury Tuesday afternoon reported a finding that the negro "came to his death at the hands of parties unknown."

Ward had been arrested for the killing of Charles G. Stokes, 67-year-old farmer, apparently in a frenzy of madness. The negro struck Stokes down and severed his head with an axe. A short time earlier he had beaten his own sister and attacked another white man of the community.

Sheriff Moore reported that about 25 men, whites and negroes, forced him to give up his prisoner. A short while afterward Ward's body, bullet perforated, was found swinging to a limb of a scrub oak about half a mile from where the farmer was slain.

As soon as he heard of the threat of mob violence, Governor Ehringhaus ordered out national guardsmen and state highway patrolmen but they arrived too late to prevent the lynching.

The governor issued a statement making caustic reference to the failure of local officers to notify him of the situation and to ask protection for their prisoner.

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS
AUG 1 1935

A TARHEEL LYNCHING

North Carolina, a state which has had relatively few lynchings in recent years, is now to be added to the 1935 list of states in which mob violence has been substituted for the orderly processes of the courts.

A mob of indignant citizens in Franklin county seized from the custody of officers a negro who killed a farmer with an axe and administered summary justice by hanging him.

One reason why North Carolina has had so few lynchings may be found in the sincere and vigorous efforts which have been made by its government on such occasions to bring the guilty parties to justice. And the present occasion, it is gratifying to note, proves no exception. Governor Ehringhaus has taken the initiative to give the local authorities fullest cooperation and assistance in apprehending the mob members. "Two horrible crimes have been committed today in Franklin county," says his statement. "The first by an apparently crazed and degenerate individual, the second by a mob of supposedly responsible citizens."

It is clear that the North Carolina state government is not going to let the affair go by default—as some other southern states appear to have usually done under similar circumstances. One would not venture to make prediction that the members of this mob will be apprehended, tried and punished. It was a peculiarly outrageous crime and there seems no question as to the identity of the criminal. There will be a tendency in some quarters to feel that he got just about what he deserved. But the governor is very evidently determined to do what he can to avenge this insult to the majesty of the courts and this trampling under foot of all the principles of justice in civilized society. And one feels safe in predicting that at least these mob members will be made to feel very uncomfortable before it is all over. And even that will be a help in maintaining North Carolina's reputation as a state which looks with unequivocable disapproval upon such crimes.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
NEWS
JUL 30 1935

Negro Is Hanged Before Troopers Arrive At Scene

Governor Calls Upon All Resources In Effort To Prevent Lynching

VICTIM IS TAKEN AWAY FROM SHERIFF

Lynching Takes Place Near Where Negro Earlier Beheaded Farmer

LOUISBURG, July 30. — (AP) — Govan (Sweat) Ward, 25-year-old negro, axe-slayer of C. G. Stokes, Franklin county farmer, was lynched today by a mob which took him from officers and hanged him to an oak tree half a mile from the scene of the killing.

While state highway patrolmen, a national guard company and county officers sought the mob in an effort to prevent the lynching, its members hanged the negro, described by Sheriff J. T. Moore as crazy, to a huge oak half a mile down the road from where he chopped off Stokes' head with an axe this morning.

His body was filled with pistol and shotgun wounds, but whether he was shot and then hanged or the slugs fired into his body after it was hoisted by the rope could not be determined.

Ward, a medium-sized gingercake negro, was taken from the sheriff and Deputy T. P. Bean 3 miles from here shortly before noon as they were hurrying from the county with him as a precaution against violence.

(Continued on Page 7, Column 5)

25 In Mob

The sheriff said there were about 25 men, some negroes and some white, in the group which stopped his car and took Ward.

Immediately after the mob went off with the negro, the sheriff advised his office.

When word of it reached Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus, he ordered all available members of the state highway patrol here and also had Company C, 120th Infantry, North Carolina national guard (Henderson) called out.

The negro was hanged, however, before the patrolmen or the guardsmen could reach the scene.

Farmer Decapitated

Ward killed Stokes and decapitated him with an axe this morning when the farmer sought to calm the negro, who had attacked a negro woman and another farmer, Stu.geon Ayscue, in what apparently was a mad frenzy.

Officers who brought the negro to Louisburg after the killing said witnesses told them Ward suddenly went amuck about 9 a. m. at the home of his sister and struck her down with a rock. Ayscue, who was passing by, intervened and was knocked down with a bottle.

Stokes was working in a field across the road from the woman's home and started to the assistance of Ayscue. As he tried to reason with the crazed negro, he was knocked unconscious with a rock. Ward then seized an axe and severed the farmer's head.

Other negroes working nearby overpowered Ward and held him until officers arrived at the scene.

After being brought here, Ward was taken to the office of Dr. H. G. Perry for an examination, but tried to escape and was overpowered only after he had broken up furniture in the physician's office.

He was then taken to the jail and it was shortly afterwards Sheriff Moore decided to take him to Rocky Mount, fearing a mob attack on the jail here.

Several hours after the lynching, the body was still hanging from the tree while Coroner R. A. Bobbitt was summoning a jury. Scores of the curious streamed to the section and in mid-afternoon between three and four hundred people thronged the grove where the negro was hanged.

Solicitor William Y. Bickett, of Raleigh, district prosecuting officer, and County Attorney Charles Green arrived before the body was taken down and conferred with the coroner and officers.

The handcuffs put on Ward by Sheriff Moore when the officer left Louisburg with him were still on the body.

Forty automobiles of state highway patrolmen arrived after the lynching and the officers found occupation in directing the traffic as cars filled the roads leading to the grove.

Lynchings-1935
Cases of.

North Carolina

4612

RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS OBSERVER
AUG 1 1935

State Attorney General To Aid in Mob Inquiry

Seawell to Assist Solicitor Bickett at Louisburg Today In Effort to Reveal Members of Lynch Mob; Harris to Sit as Committing Magistrate; 50 Witnesses Subpoenaed

The State of North Carolina today will exert its full legal force to pierce the shroud of silence surrounding the perpetrators of the Franklin County lynching.

Governor Ehringhaus yesterday assigned Judge W. C. Harris of Raleigh to preside over the judicial inquiry which will begin in the Franklin County courthouse at Louisburg at 10 o'clock this morning, and authorized Attorney General A. A. F. Seawell to assist Solicitor William Y. Bickett in the case.

Expect 50 Witnesses.

Solicitor Bickett, son of the wartime Governor who personally faced and was credited with dispersing a mob in Raleigh during his administration, said last night that subpoenas had been issued for upward of 50 persons and that every effort would be made to identify and bring to justice members of the mob which lynched Govan "Sweat" Ward, 25-year-old Negro, Tuesday after the Negro had decapitated Charles G. Stokes, white farmer of the Epsom section.

Governor Ehringhaus, who expressed determination to bring the responsible parties to trial, conferred at length with Solicitor Bickett during the day; and the solicitor asked for the assistance of the Attorney General's office.

Later, it was learned that the Attorney General planned to participate in the inquiry himself. The attorney general talked over the matter with the governor late yesterday. The Chief Executive said that other than talking with Solicitor Bickett, he had not received any report of the occurrence from officials of the county.

Judge Harris was designated yesterday to sit as committing magistrate. He was on vacation, but agreed to return and conduct the hearing.

Offers Reward.

The governor also offered a reward of $400 for the arrest, delivery and conviction of the "unknown person or persons" who participated in the lynching.

A national guard company of 60 men from Henderson and a squad of highway patrolmen from Raleigh were dispatched to Franklin County in an effort to prevent the lynching when the chief executive was informed by the Associated Press of the slaying and threatened mob violence.

The lynching had taken place already when the troops and patrolmen arrived.

Stokes Funeral Held.

Funeral services for Mr. Stokes were conducted this afternoon at New Bethel Baptist Church, near the tobacco field where the 67-year-old farmer was killed. The Epsom Masonic lodge was in charge of the service. Mr. Stokes is survived by his widow, who was his second wife, and by seven children, most of whom are grown.

Charles Green, Franklin County attorney, who assisted Bickett in the preliminary investigation shortly after the slaying and lynching, was aiding yesterday in efforts to round up witnesses for questioning tomorrow. Sheriff J. P. Moore and his deputies were making investigations also.

LOUISBURG IS QUIET; NO ARRESTS REPORTED

Louisburg, July 31.—No arrests had been reported here tonight as county officers worked to bring to justice members of the mob which lynched Govan "Sweat" Ward near here yesterday.

The town was quiet today after yesterday's excitement, although the lynching and the murder and violence that preceded it constituted the topic of conversation.

Some enterprising persons were hawking pictures of the victim, but the business was not brisk. There was a feeling expressed in several quarters that outside appraisals of the occurrence were too harsh, and that Franklin County officials did all they could to preserve order.

"Happened Like a Flash."

The explanation as to why the Governor was not asked for assistance was that " it all happened like a flash, there just wasn't time."

During the day it was learned that Coroner R. A. Bobbitt, acting as Sheriff until Sheriff-elect John P. Moore qualified, was at the scene of the lynching shortly after it occurred and interceded with a group which proposed to burn the body. The Coroner, however, said he knew none of the members of the mob.

Sheriff Moore was elected by the County Commissioners Monday to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Sheriff T. N. Spivey in an automobile accident last week. It was from Sheriff Moore and two deputies that the victim was taken by an unmasked mob in broad daylight, while the officers were attempting to take him to Raleigh for safe-keeping.

Solicitor Bickett was here this morning in conference with County Attorney Charles Green on summoning witnesses, but had to return to Raleigh this afternoon for a habeas corpus hearing.

No Arrests.

About 50 witnesses were being subpoenaed, but no arrests had been reported tonight.

Visitors here today reported that a filling station man between Raleigh and Louisburg was very accomodating about giving directions, answering inquiries with the statement that "the lynching frolic" took place just the other side of Louisburg.

Charles G. Stokes, the farmer who was decapitated by Ward, was buried with Masonic honors at Epsom today. Ward's sister and Spurgeon Ayscue, white, who were injured by the crazed Negro, were recovering today.

Miss Lucy Timberlake, Dr. Herbert Perry's office assistance, who was struck by the manacled Negro was today little the worse for her experience.

Conversation about the town indicated that few persons expected the identity of the mob members to be revealed.

"Who ever heard of such a thing?" observed one citizen.

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C.
TELEGRAM
JUL 31 1935

Franklin Has Lynching; Some Sidelights Taken At Scene

Whether Or Not He Was Crazy "Sweat" Ward Paid For His Crime With His Life

By W. CARLTON MASON
Telegram Staff Writer

Louisburg, July 31.— Whether he was crazy or just insanely mad, seeking to spill the blood of human beings, "Sweat" Ward paid for a furious morning's doings which included the slaying and decapitation of C. G. Stokes, 68 year old prominent Franklin County farmer, with his own life, being snuffed out violently as he hung beside a slender oak about one mile from the scene of his most tragic crime.

After having waged a one man war here and there throughout the vicinity of Epsom, about 15 miles from Louisburg Tuesday morning, this negro man, medium of stature, known as "Sweat" Ward, Joe Van Ward and also called "Govan" Ward, was wrenched from the custody of Sheriff J. P. Moore and deputies by a mob of approximately 35 men and carried to his life's ending place, "strung up' and then shot through the body several times before Governor Ehringhaus, sheriffs, deputies and constables, a squad of approximately 40 state highway patrolmen and a company of North Carolina National Guard from Henderson were able to intervene.

Ward started out Tuesday morning upon his path of cruelty by slaying Mr. Stokes and then cutting his head off even with his chin, taking the dead man's head under his arm and starting up the country road. When he arrived home he wanted to know of his sister if her throat didn't hurt and insisted that he rub it. When she refused he deliberately cracked down upon her head two times with a piece of iron. Then along came Spurgeon Ayscue in an automobile. When he stoped Ward assailed him with a bottle and raised a terrible knot on the side of his head. Ayscue immediately went to the home of O. P. Frazier, a justice of the peace, to swear out a warrant against him for assault upon himself.

Arrested For Assault

It was for this offence that Constable Clarence Wrenn, and two deputies, A. A. Fuller and Red Neal arrested the negro after considerable trouble in their attempt to do so. Mr. Fuller stated that the first blow he cracked at Ward was with his black jack and that blow on the enraged negro's head failed to stun him. The three officers, with the assistance of several negro men, did succeed in hand cuffing him and getting him the back seat of an automobile. Fuller was in the back seat with him.

It was Fuller who said that he did not act like an insane person. He said that the thing that made him think he was not insane was the manner in which he picked his chances to attempt to break away from the custody of the officers. He said he lent. To the contrary everybody seemed pleased.

The company was under the command of Commander C. B. Sturger.

It was about 9:30 when Mr. Stokes was killed. It was about 10:30 when Ward was arrested. It was about 11:[illegible] when the sheriff started away with him and it was about 12:30 when he was hanged. He was lowered to the ground at 25 minutes of three.

Mob Was Forming

Sheriff Moore and other deputies found that a mob was rapidly organizing and thronging into the city from all of the city were virtually blocked and Ward was dragged out of the highway leading town sheriff's automobile and thrown into the vicinity of the ax slaying. Fearing that he would not be safe in the local jail they slipped him out and started out of the city toward Nashville either to turn to Rocky Mount to Raleigh to seek a safe place for him. Up town a large crowd had or- ing the road ahead of him. When the sheriff was forced to stop a large enraged negro the three officers had a large number of the mob entered pursuit and passed the sheriff, block- him lodged in the city jail where he stayed only a very few minutes. or to Raleigh and all the highways leading ville e[illegible]

Mr. Stokes and cut off his head with an ax. Not being able to controll the was compelled to keep him knocked unconscious just as fast as he would come to from the stunning blow from a pistol butt. He also said that he thought he was going to have to "plug" him on several intervals during the ride to Louisburg.

When at Louisburg the three officers took him to the office of Dr. Herbert G. Perry where they had hoped to have his badly battered head dressed before lodging him in jail.

All this time the three officers knew nothing of the major crime the negro had committed.

While in the doctor's office one of the officers remained with the doctor and his nurse, Miss Lucy Timberlake, while the other two made haste to contact Sheriff Moore. Suddenly the enraged and head-mellowed negro came to his senses again from the last stunning blow dealt him by Mr. Fuller and started on a rampage in the doctor's office. He wrecked approxi-mately $500 worth of office equipment, broke out windows, did Dr. Perry quite severely and with his hand cuffed hands dealt Miss Timberlake a fierce blow about the face, injuring and frightening her severely.

It was while here at the doctor's office that a negro man, Percie Mitchell, reported to the three officers that one of the mobsmen's cars. They cut through a dirt road that led off this highway back to the Louisburg-Henderson highway, and when they were back within about one mile of the place he killed Mr. Stokes, they dragged him into the woods, tied a rope around his neck, pulled him up to a hanging position and then fired several bullets into his body. They abandoned the Negro then and it was about one hour later that Sheriff Moore found him hanging. Soon curious started gathering and by 2:30 in the afternoon approximately 1,000 men, women and children had already viewed the hanging body who just a few hours before had been beast like in his fierce war path of action. There was a scarcety of negroes around the gallows tree however. Not a negro was in sight.

Sheriff's First Day

This was Sheriff J. P. Moore's first day as Sheriff of Franklin county. He was appointed the day before and although he had not been bonded and qualified completely did find plenty of action to start off the job. County Coroner R. A. Babbitt had been sheriff of the county since the accidental death of the high sheriff of the county about two weeks previously.

Ward died hanging on the slender oak beneath a grove of giant oaks still wearing the handcuffs belonging to J. E. Hight, a county constable.

There was an attempted lynching in the same vicinity of the county about one year ago but never materialized because a mob could not definitely ascertain who the guilty negro was among four suspects held for an attempted criminal assault upon a white girl.

Louisburg people were not excited about the lynching, just interested. Many citizens of the quaint old town merely curiously milled here and there occasionally asking a question or passing a remark to a friend. Many ladies and children sat on their lawns enjoying a shady afternoon breeze.

The state highway's silver fleet of patrol cars on their first cruise, the first time they have left headquarters created as much interest as did the major event of the day with Louisburg people. They were the last group to reach the scene of the lynching. Upon arriving at Louisburg the leading car took the road out toward Nashville instead of the road toward Henderson and had to turn back to Louisburg before ever finding the scene. The negro had been lowered from his hanging position, loaded in a truck and was ready to be sent back to Louisburg when they arrived. They were nice to look at but there wasn't anything they could do that would help then.

Company C. of the 120 regiment of North Carolina National Guard left Henderson as soon after they received the call at 20 minutes to one and were on hand at 15 minutes past two. There wasn't anything they could do then because the crowd wasn't vio-

RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS OBSERVER
JUL 31 1935

Sheriff and Deputies Say They Recognized None of Unmasked Members Who Took Prisoner From Them on Highway

SOLICITOR SUBPOENAS WITNESSES FOR COURT INQUIRY ON THURSDAY

Coroner's Jury Returns Verdict of Death at Hands of 'Persons Unknown'; Hundreds View Body of Negro Swinging From Scrub Oak; C. G. Stokes, White Farmer, Decapitated by Crazed Negro Who Assaulted Two Others With Deadly Weapons; Prisoner Was Being Taken From Louisburg for Safe-Keeping When Seized by Mob

By CHARLES J. PARKER.
Staff Correspondent

Louisburg, July 30.—A band of unmasked men, in broad daylight on a well-traveled country highway five miles from here, at noon today, took a Negro prisoner from Sheriff John P. Moore and two deputies, carried him five miles further to within half a mile of where he had slain a respected white farmer three hours before, and lynched him.

For more than two hours the battered body of Govan "Sweat" Ward, 25, swung by a cotton ploughline from a scrub oak. Hundreds of men, women and children inspected it and most of them expressed approval of the action of the mob in taking into its hands the law and murdering the murderer of Charles G. Stokes, 67-year-old farmer living in Epsom in the northwestern part of the county 11 miles from Louisburg, whose decapitated body was attracting another throng to a Louisburg undertaking establishment.

Troops Too Late.

Troops from Henderson and Oxford, responded to a call from Governor Ehringhaus, arrived too late to prevent the lynching, as did the State Highway Patrol, which sped from Raleigh in 26 new patrol cars, but took the wrong road out of Louisburg and did not arrive at the scene of the lynching until after the body had been cut down.

Court Inquiry Thursday.

Moving into action immediately upon learning of the mob disorder, Solicitor William Y. Bickett, of the seventh judicial district, sped from his home in Raleigh to the scene of the lynching, and tonight announced that a formal inquiry would be conducted in the Franklin County Courthouse here beginning at 10 o'clock Thursday, and Governor Ehringhaus, who tomorrow will offer the maximum State reward of $400 for apprehension of mob members, will assign a Superior Court judge to conduct the investigation. The Solicitor said that subpoenas had been issued for 30 persons and that probably as many more would be issued before the beginning of the court's inquiry.

Coroner's Verdict.

Before the court will be the verdict of the jury impanelled at the scene of the lynching by Coroner R. A. Bobbitt, which retired behind a tree and in five minutes returned an open verdict setting forth that the Negro met his death at the hands of "persons unknown to us."

The coroner's jury was composed of G. H. Phelps, E. R. Allen, W. M. Fuller, Jr., E. M. Bartholomew, Walter G. Kearney and W. P. Wilson, all of the section in which the murder of Mr. Stokes and the lynching occurred within four hours of one another this morning.

"I was new at the job. I was confused. I saw I was helpless . . ." related Sheriff Moore, as he told of losing his prisoner. "If there is any way to find out who did this, we are going to find out, and I had rather not divulge informatoin now that may hinder us in our investigation."

But prompted by County Attorney Charles G. Green, he declared that the mob that took his prisoner was armed. He declined to answer questions as to whether he or his deputies, P. E. Dean, who was driving the Chevrolet car carrying the prisoner, or J. E. Height, offered resistance to the demands of the mob.

Didn't Take License.

Declaring that the men who took the prisoner were in "either a Buick or a Plymouth" car, Sheriff Moore admitted he did not take the license number.

"I wish we had," he added.

None of the 20 or more men in the three or four cars that blocked the road were known to him or his deputies, although they were unmasked, the Sheriff said. He explained this by saying that he thought the mob came from the upper end of the county or over the line in Vance, and that neither he nor his deputies were well acquainted in that section.

The sheriff, who has served two terms as constable of Louisburg Township, lives near the town, and Deputy Dean lives in Cedar Fork, seven miles east of Louisburg, while Deputy Height lives in Franklinton Township, 10 miles west.

Whether the Negro was dead be-

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
JUL 31 1935

NORTH CAROLINA LYNCHING.

There are many things typical about the lynching of the negro, Covan Ward, axe-slayer of a prominent Franklin county, North Carolina, farmer, yesterday.

The negro was already under arrest and the orderly processes of the law were available to deal with his case. The community had nothing more to fear from him. The lynchers had no real difficulty in getting possession of the prisoner. Twenty-five men met the sheriff and his deputy with their handcuffed prisoner and took the negro away from them without serious opposition apparently. There was no shooting or the mob might have been turned back; lynchers generally do not care to risk their own necks. The highway patrolmen and the militia sent to the rescue arrived too late to prevent the lynching. All of which is as more or less usual in lynchings.

And like all other lynchings it was useless, accomplishing nothing but the death of the victim. Ward was obviously mentally deranged and the lynchers did not therefore have even the excuse that their senseless brutality might deter some other person from crime. Lynchings cannot prevent insanity.

The coroner's verdict was the usual verdict, arrived at after only a perfunctory inquiry if any at all. The negro came to his death at the hands of "persons unknown."

But it was also an unusual lynching in that both whites and negroes participated jointly in it, a circumstance understandable after a fashion perhaps when it is remembered that Ward's victim, a white farmer, had been killed when he came to the rescue of a negro woman, Ward's sister, who had been the crazed man's first victim. But after all it is hardly susceptible of reasonable explanation—negroes participating in a lynching, giving aid and comfort to the mob law theory when even they must have known that the negro more than anyone else stand to lose by law and order's negation and the nullification of courts and juries. Not always do mobs get the right man. This time the lynchers did, but it is even so a sorry distinction. Insanity got him first.

Lynchings - 1935
Cases of.

North Carolina

4613

NEW ORLEANS, LA
TRIBUNE
AUG 2 1935

Another Lynching

NORTH CAROLINA does its bit to raise the South's lynching score. The victim is a crazed Negro, captured after he had cut off the head of a white farmer and attacked two other persons. The provocation was extreme, but so was the unreason that fired the mob. When a Negro is arrested for alleged assault upon a white woman, the traditional "justification" for mob action, and doubt of his ultimate conviction may exist, or the mob may be able to pretend that it exists. But a Negro who has run amuck and killed is as sure of execution at the hands of the law as at the hands of the mob, for the body of his victim is incontrovertible evidence. That being so, the mob that takes him from the law can't claim to be making justice doubly sure; they can only admit that the blood of vengeance is exceedingly sweet in their nostrils. But of course this is pointing a distinction which is rarely a difference. Vengeance, not justice, is the usual mob purpose.

Lexington, N. C. Dispatch
August 1, 1935

HE SAVED THE ROPE

THE sheriff of Franklin county saved the rope with which a mob hanged a crazy negro that about a score of men took from that official and two deputies. The governor of North Carolina has declared he will try to save the honor of the state. May it not be hoped he has as good luck in salvaging as did the sheriff.

It is the usual story. Strangers did the lynching, hence the sheriff and deputies did not know any of them though they were unmasked. Being a new sheriff, he was naturally too excited to think about taking the license number of the car in which the mob placed the prisoner. He thought it was either a Buick or a Plymouth. Afterwards he was sorry, he said, he didn't get more data on the car, or any other cars that might have been involved. It did not appear that either the sheriff or his deputies made any resistance to protect their prisoner. Presumably they are hospitable folks and wouldn't hurt a stranger for anything.

Likewise it is noted that the coroner's jury had little curiosity about strangers. They held a five-minute session behind a tree and "found" that deceased became such by the act of "unknown persons." We are glad they got behind a tree. They saved that much of their county's honor. And the sheriff saved the plowline. So nobody can say we don't do something about lynchings in North Carolina.

New Bern, N. C. Sun Journal
August 5, 1935

North Carolina's Lynching

A group of North Carolinians, stepping aside the other day from their usual role of good, law-abiding citizens within a proud commonwealth, gave themselves over to the passion which supplanted law and reason and which left a handcuffed negro hanging dead from the limb of an oak tree a scarce half mile from the spot at which he had committed a murder.

There was some doubt as to the sanity of the negro. Members of his own race, working nearby, captured and held him for the officers who arrived later and took him in custody. He had gone on a rampage, as negroes and white men sometimes do, and had killed and decapitated a farmer of the community with an axe.

The mob, it is said, consisted of both negroes and whites. It took the prioner away from the sheriff and his deputy who were, they said, hurrying the negro from the county in fear of violence. The governor, informed of the loss of the prisoner, made every effort to prevent the lynching; but, as is usually the case, his efforts were too late.

Members of the mob, it may be assumed, were just such citizens as one meets every day on the street and in the homes throughout North Carolina. A lynching is possible in any community when citizens forget law and order. There is little chance, when officers of the law have made a mistake and have surrendered a prisoner, for higher authorities to intervene.

Prevention lies with proper protection, and in the teaching of citizenship and respect for law and order to such a degree that no community need bear the shame of mob violence and suspicion need not rest upon all of its citizens.

Bristol, Va., Herald-Courier
August 1, 1935

Lynching In North Carolina.

Goven Ward, twenty-five-year-old Negro who is said to have been mentally deficient, killed a white farmer with an axe near Louisburg, North Carolina. Sheriff Moore arrested the murderer and was taking him to a place of safekeeping when he was forced to deliver him over to an armed mob which is said to have included some Negroes. The mob hanged the Negro to a tree and riddled his body with bullets.

Governor Ehringhaus of North Carolina has pledged the full support of his office to Solicitor Bickett in an effort to apprehend the lynchers and has criticised local officers for failing to ask for assistance when they saw the possibility of violence. The Governor, who would have sent assistance promptly, said the first information he had of the affair came through the Associated Press and not from any officer.

Remembering that North Carolina has a better record than most of the States for dealing with mob lawlessness, the public will await with interest further developments in this case. It is possible that some of the lynchers will be found and that responsible local officers will be called upon to explain their conduct.

But Verdict Is Mobbists Not Identified

An Investigation Is Ordered By County Authorities

VICTIM KILLED MAN

Went Beserk Before And After Cutting Off Man's Head

By CHARLES FRAZIER
A Journal and Guide Correspondent

LOUISBURG, N. C. — Govan Ward, a youth about 22 years old, was swung to the limb of a small oak tree with a plow line, about two and a half miles east of Epson in Hayesville township of Franklin County, by an infuriated mob estimated by officers to be about 75 in number, for the slaying of NEGROES IN MOB?

LOUISBURG, N. C.—Sheriff J. P. Moore was quoted here Tuesday as declaring that colored as well as white men were in the mob which lynched Govan "Sweat" Ward, a native of this section who until lately lived in Norfolk, Va.

Of the twenty five men in the crowd which kidnaped the prisoner from officers, half were colored men—the sheriff was quoted as saying. Verification of this assertion so far is lacking. Ward beat up some Negroes, including his sister, when he went suddenly insane. He murdered a white man.

C. G. Stokes, prominent white farmer of Hayesville township, in his tobacco field about 8 o'clock Tuesday morning, July 30.

It was reported to authorities that Surgeon Ayscue picked up Ward during the morning of the crime and carried him to the home of Otha Kearney, husband of Ward's sister, Rowena; that there he refused to get out of the car and struck Mr. Ayscue over the head with a bottle, after which Mr. Ayscue kicked him out of the car. Ward was said to have become mentally abnormal.

Police Notified

On being notified of the man's fury Constable Wrenn and A. A. Fuller came to Kearney's home to arrest Ward. They went for more help, leaving a man in charge of Ward.

In their absence, according to a statement made to officers by a man whose name was not learned, Ward made three trips into the tobacco field across the road from the Kearney home.

Cuts Off Man's Head

There, in the tobacco field, he dragged Mr. Stokes body across five rows of tobacco and, with an axe, severed his head from his body.

Ward, it was stated, hit his sister, Rowena, over the head with a blunt instrument.

When officers arrived, they found Ward in Kearney's home, sitting in a chair with Mr. Stokes head near his feet.

Carried To Jail

Officers immediately took Ward and started for Louisburg jail. It was reported that he fought them on the way and was slugged by one of the officers.

He was taken to the office of Dr. H. G. Perry, in Louisburg to have his wounds dressed. There, after an apparent relaxation, he knocked down a nurse, smashed a window and badly damaged the office furniture.

He was then carried to the Louisburg jail.

Taken By Mob

Mob violence was feared in Louisburg and officers started out of this city with Ward to the Nashville jail for safekeeping. They were overtaken by a mob which, at the point of a gun, took the prisoner and carried him to about a mile and a half of the scene of the crime and swung him up, using a looped rope.

He was shot in the left breast and had a large hole in his left temple.

Troops Too Late

Governor Ehringhaus sent extra officers and troops to the scene.

A order was sent to Company C Militia, infantry unit at Henderson, to mobilize and proceed to the danger area immediately, but the lynching had occurred when they arrived.

Investigation Started

Franklin County Attorney C. P. Green and Franklin officers, assisted by Solicitor W. Y. Bickett, went to the scene of the lynching and immediately began an investigation Tuesday.

A coroner's jury examined the body and cut it down at 2:25 p. m., on the day of the crime. The coroner's verdict was "That the Negro came to his death by causes and persons unknown to the jury."

Many Go To Scene

Scores of people from Raleigh, Franklinton, and elsewhere, flocked to the scene, as news of the lynching spread.

And as the night came on a steady and unusual stream of automobiles contiuned toward Epson, near which the slaying and lynching occurred.

Special to Journal and Guide

LOUISBURG, N. C.—Many coroner's juries return verdicts of "death at hands of parties unknown" where lynchings take place at night—and there is conceivably some excuse then—but few so promptly rendered such a verdict where a band of unmasked men, in broad daylight on a well-traveled county highway, took the law into their own hands.

But that is exactly what the coroner's jury called here did after Govan "Sweat" Ward was lynched Tuesday. Officers had ample time to scrutinize the mobbists who took the prisoner from them, but none in the crowd was identified.

The body was Ward swung from a scrub oak tree for over two hours and was viewed by hundreds of men, women and children—most of whom expressed approval of the mob's act. The man, Charles G. Stokes, whom Ward slew was a respected white farmer of 67 years.

The lynching took place eleven miles from here. The decapitated body of Stokes attracted another crowd to an undertaking establishment here.

In addition to the troops ordered out by the governor, 26 cars of state Highway Patrol police rushed here from Raleigh. They were late, having taken the wrong road out of Louisburg. The body had been cut down when they arrived.

A court inquiry was set for this Thursday, August 1, by Solicitor W. Y. Bickett of the seventh judicial district, who rushed here from his home in Raleigh. It will be held in Franklin County court house at 10 a. m. Thursday, the announcement said.

Governor Ehringhaus offered the maximum state reward of $100 for apprehension of the mob members Wednesday. He assigned Judge W. C. Harris of Raleigh, resident Superior Court judge seventh district, to sit as committing magistrate.

Summons have been issued for 30 persons. Many more may be issued before the hearing starts.

The coroner's jury retired behind a tree and returned its open verdict in five minutes.

It was composed of G. H. Phelps, E. R. Allen, W. M. Fuller, Jr., E. M. Bartholomew, Walter G Kearney, and W. P. Wilson, all of the section in which a lynching followed by four hours the murder of Stokes.

"I was new on the job. I was confused. I saw I was helpless." This was the excuse of Sheriff John P. Moore. He said he would exert every effort to find out who lynched Ward. He declined to say whether he or his deputies, P. E. Dean or J. E. Height, offered resistance to the mob, which he said was armed.

He said the mob's car was a Buick or Plymouth, but he did not take the license number, he said. Three or four cars blocked the road. The mob at this point was estimated at 20 or more men.

He said the mob probably came from the upper end of the county or over the line in Vance County, and he was not acquainted with these sections.

The ride that ended with the work of the mob began about 11:40 Tuesday morning.

Ward had been living in Norfolk, although a native of this section, and had only recently returned here. He apparently went suddenly insane.

Spurgeon Ayscue, who gave him a ride early on the fateful day, is a white man. He got hit with a bottle. He got out a warrant for assault with a deadly wapon.

Then Ward attacked his sister, Mrs. Rowena Kearney, with an iron bar. While officers were shackling Ward and permitting him to change his trousers, Percy Mitchell brought news to the officers of Stokes's murder.

Enroute to jail, Ward was violent.

An accident kept Ward from being dead before the mob got him. During the struggle from the scene of the murder to the doctor's office and ultimately jail here—Deputy Fuller's gun became unbreached and his bullets fell on the floor of the car. At the office of Dr. H. G. Perry, where Ward's wounds from the beating from officers were treated, Fuller placed his gun to Ward's head and fruitlessly snapped the trigger. Ward had become violent again.

"I wanted to kill him then, but they would not let me," Fuller declared. He meant by "them"—Acting Sheriff Bobbitt (the coroner was acting as sheriff until Sheriff-elect Moore formally takes office) and other officers.

Ward atacked a nurse and did damage to the doctor's office.

Officers got wind of the mob when, about five miles from Louisburg, they noticed cars following them. They turned off onto a dirt road and planned to circle around to get to Raleigh. They were overtaken.

The sheriff returned to Louisburg for reenforcements and set out in search of the mob.

He did not explain why aid was not asked from Raleigh, where the governor had to learn of the mob's gathering from the press and himself called out troops and extra officers without advice from Franklin County officers.

An old woman, examining the lynched man's body, said: "They done exactly right." Young girls, knitting and so forth, stood around the scene and discussed what had happened.

After Ward was hanged, someone put a cigarette in his mouth and one white person cut off his little to for a souvenir.

The body hung from the tree until nearly three o'clock.

No motive was advanced for the murder of Mr. Stokes.

In addition to the Highway Patrol getting on the wrong road and arriving at the scene late, the National Guard unit from Henderson arrived an hour and five minutes after being called out. This unit of 60 men was commanded by Capt. Conrad Sturgess.

Lynchings – 1935
Cases of 6

Tennessee.

4615

MOBBISTS IN TENNESSEE USE PISTOL

Officer's Revolver Used As Death Weapon

SHOT THROUGH CHEST

Five In Mob That Overcame Two Policemen

WHITE BLUFF, Tenn.— The slapping of a white woman in a drunken fit has been added to the long list of reasons by which southern white men justify the form of murder termed lynching by the informed populace and "death at the hands of unknown persons" by most southern courts.

The long list of varied and incredulous circumstances in which the actual seizure of the unfortunate takes place also has its addition in the relating of the latest evidence of unscrupulous mob murder.

The details of the crime occuring in this section on Monday, November 4, are: the "mob" consisted of only five men; the seizure of the prisoner, who was in the hands of a city marshal and a deputy sheriff was made in the heart of the downtown section of this town; the street on which the seizure occurred was described in an authentic news release, as being busy; the prisoner, Baxter Bell, was taken four miles from the city and shot through the chest and his body was thrown in a nearby thicket, an action that required 25 minutes; the lynchers "borrowed" the city marshal's gun, used it and returned it after the murder, which they said they committed with the gun; five men gave themselves up after the murder; the men laughed and joked about the crime; neither the marshal or the deputy took any steps to retrieve their stolen prisoner or stolen gun during the 25 minutes in which the crime was taking place just out of the town.

Deputy Sheriff Robert H. Williams, of Cheatham County, said Bell slapped Mrs. Luther Dotson as she alighted from a bus on the night before the lynching near Kingston Springs. She swore out a warrant.

City Marshal Louis Donnelly and Deputy Sheriff Clyde Petty started with Bell for the Ashland City jail on Monday morning. A small armed band halted the party at the point of guns and drove off with the man.

"We'll be back in a few minutes and bring your gun," Donnelly quoted one of the men as saying. He said that "about 25 minutes later they came back and gave up."

Deputy Sheriff Williams moved the five men to Cheatham County jail late that day. He said he had sworn out a warrant charging them with murder.

Williams said they were listed on the warrant as Luther Dotson, Jimmie Dotson, Clyde Dotson, Jesse Dotson and Allie Brown.

NEGRO IS LYNCHED BY TENNESSEE BAND

WHITE BLUFF, Tenn., Nov. 4.—(AP)—A small band of armed white men arrested a negro accused of slapping a white woman from officers on a busy downtown street here today and lynched him.

Shortly after the incident five men surrendered at the jail to Deputy Sheriff Ed Hutton and no charge was placed against them. He added that they would be taken to Ashland City, seat of Cheatham county, in which the actual lynching occurred.

The negro, Baxter Bell, was charged with assault and battery.

Tennessee White Kill Man for "Insulting" Woman

WHITE BLUFF, Tenn. — A colored man listed as Baxter Bell, 35, was killed early this week by a group of white men who riddled his body with bullets for an alleged insult to a white woman as she alighted from a bus.

The killing occurred on a road to Kingston Springs, some distance from White Bluff. The man's body was thrown from the roadside into a thicket.

A short time later Deputy Sheriff Clyde Petty said five white men appeared at the jail here and surrender. They told the officer the white woman they claimed had been insulted was the wife of one of their number.

Negro Slain For Slapping Woman

WHITE BLUFF, TENN., Nov. 4.—(AP)—On a daring daylight raid into the center of town, five white men captured a negro from two officers today, took him for a ride into the country and lynched him for reportedly slapping a white woman.

The negro, Baxter Bell, about 45, was shot once through the chest. The killing occurred about four miles from here over the Cheatham County line. Bell's body was found lying in a thicket where the killers had thrown it.

City Marshal Louis Donnelly said the five men held up Deputy Sheriff Clyde Petty and him about 9 a.m. today. Petty had arrested Bell here in Dickson County last night on charges brought in Cheatham County by Mrs. Luther Dotson.

Donnelly said Mrs. Dotson told him that the negro approached her as she got off the bus and offered "to give me $5 for a date to walk down the road."

The marshal quoted Mrs. Dotson as saying that she "cursed the negro" and that then he slapped her.

After the negro was slain, five men surrendered to officers here. They gave Donnelly back the pistol which had been taken from him, he said.

"They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he reported. "They told me they shot the negro with my gun. I don't know. It had an empty shell in it when they gave it back to me."

Late this afternoon Deputy Sheriff Williams moved the five men to the Cheatham County Jail. He said he had sworn out a warrant charging them with murder.

Negro Lynched In Tennessee

WHITE BLUFF, Tenn., Nov. 4.—Baxter Bell, 45-year old Negro worker, was taken from officers hanged and his body riddled with bullets today by the husband and three brothers-in-law of Mrs. Luther Dodson, white woman whom the Negro allegedly "struck and insulted," according to Sheriff W. E. Hutton of Dickson county.

The four lynchers, who met no resistance from the officers of the law, later surrendered, confident they would not be prosecuted.

Bell was arrested last night and charged with "assault" on Mrs. Dodson in adjoining Cheatham county. He was being returned there when he was seized by Dodson, husband of the complainant, his three brothers, Clyde, Jesse and Tom Dodson, and a cousin named Brown.

Bell was taken about a mile out of town and strung up, the lynchers firing a fusillade of shots into his body. The brothers and cousin then leisurely returned to town and surrendered.

Mrs. Dodson claimed that as she was walking to her home, Bell accosted her, insulted her and struck her in the face. Bell denied that he had even seen the woman.

FIVE SURRENDER AFTER LYNCHING

Negro Is Shot to Death After Arrest on Charge of Slapping White Woman

WHITE BLUFF, Tenn., Nov. 4. (AP)—On a daring daylight raid into the center of town, five white men captured a Negro from two officers today, took him for a ride into the country and lynched him for reportedly slapping a white woman.

The Negro, Baxter Bell, about 45, was shot once through the chest. The killing occurred about four miles from here. Bell's body was found lying in a thicket where the killers had thrown it.

City Marshal Louis Donnelly said the five men held up Deputy Sheriff Clyde Petty and him about 9 o'clock this morning. Petty had arrested Bell here in Dickson county last night on charges brought in Cheatham county by Mrs. Luther Dotson.

Today the two officers had started to deliver the Negro to authorities at Ashland City, Cheatham county seat.

A "crowd," Donnelly said, gathered and watched the seizure of the Negro, unable to do anything against the five armed with two shotguns and three pistols.

After the Negro was slain, five men surrendered to officers here. They gave Donnelly back the pistol which had been taken from him, he said.

"They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he reported. "They told me they shot the Negro with my gun. I don't know. It had an empty shell in it when they gave it back to me."

Deputy Sheriff Robert H. Williams of Cheatham county said a Negro slapped Mrs. Dotson as she got off a bus near Kingston Springs early last night.

"I don't know what I done," Marshal Donnelly quoted the Negro as saying shortly before he was lynched. "I was just drunk."

Late today Deputy Sheriff Williams moved the five men to Cheatham county jail. He said he had sworn out a warrant charging them with murder.

Preliminary hearing for the group was set for 10 o'clock at Ashland City Tuesday morning.

MOB ACCUSES MAN; SAYS HE HIT WOMAN

Officers Give Up Victim To Murderers; No Charges Made

WHITE BLUFFS, Tenn.— Citizens throughout the state who believe in Gov. Hill McAlister and others scattered about the country who were impressed with his action in calling out the militia more than a year ago to thwart a lynching, are watching keenly for his action in the mob murder which shocked this community Monday.

Once before Governor McAlister acted just in time to save another unfortunate from the hands of mob violence. This time he had no chance as the uncivilized forces of a mob struck too quickly.

Victim Flung In Thicket

Disrespect for law and order here balked justice this week when the lifeless body of Baxter Bell, 45, was thrown into a muddy thicket, after the victim had been wrested from the hands of officers by a savage mob, who with full display of firearms had their will. Bell had been arrested and was being taken to the Ashville city jail on a charge of assault after allegedly "slapping" a white woman.

That same crew of headhunters returned and with hellish glee gave was able to point out to the Ashland City jail when they apped Mrs. Dotson. In were halted on a busy downtown on there are those whostreet by a small band, who, with ask if any attack tookfull display of firearms, took the

Mr. Dotson, thou victim and drove off with him.
a warrant against Bell About four miles from here near sault and battery. has Kingston Springs, Bell was shot why she was struck once through the chest and his body risoner City Marshall was thrown into a thicket, where lly and Deputy Sheriff it was removed later by order of started on the journey the coroner.

"Cause" For Slaying
of fact is that neither the mob nor Clyde Petty

Oneida, Tenn. News
November 8, 1935

MOB SURRENDERS AFTER LYNCHING NEGRO

Daylight Mob Takes Negro From White Bluff Officers

On a daring daylight raid into the center of White Bluff, Tenn five white men captured a Negro from two officers, took him for a ride into the country and lynched him for reportedly slapping a white woman.

The Negro, Baxter Bell, about 45, was shot once through the chest. The killing occurred about four miles from White Bluff over the Cheatham county line. Bell's body was found lying in a thicket where the killers had thrown it.

took him for a ride into the country and lynched him for reportedly slapping a married woman.

Bell was shot once through the chest. The killing occurred at a point five miles from White Bluff near the Kingston Springs road, in Cheatham county. Bell's body was found in a thicket where the killers had thrown it.

Luther Dotson, 37, husband of the woman who was reported to have been struck by the negro last night, told officers that he fired the shot that killed Bell. He added that he shot the negro in the breast when he fired ten feet distant.

Others held in jail here are Dodson's three brothers, Clyde, Jesse and James Dotson and their cousin Allie Brown.

City Marshal Louis Downely of White Bluff said the five men held up Deputy Sheriff Clyde Petty and him about 9 o'clock this morning. Petty had arrested Bell at White Bluff in Dickson county last night on charges brought in Cheatham county by Mrs. Luther Dotson, 26.

Today the two officers had started to deliver the negro to authorities here.

A "crowd," Donnelly said, gathered and watched the seizure of the negro, unable to do anything against the five armed with two shotguns and three pistols.

After the negro was slain, five men surrendered to officers at White Bluff. They gave Donnelly back the pistol which had been taken from him, he said.

"They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he reported. "They told me they shot the negro with my gun. I don't know. It had an empty shell in it when they gave it back to me."

After leaving the White Bluff jail with Bell, Petty and Donnelly drove to a restaurant and the negro had breakfast. He was alone on the back seat of the car, the marshal said. Donnelly sat on the front seat. Petty went across the street to a drug store to make a phone call.

"I hadn't paid any particular attention to some men parked in an automobile behind mine," Donnelly related. "Suddenly they ran up and covered me with guns, two with shotguns and three with pistols.

"One of them said, 'We've come after this negro.'"

The marshal, his hands up, got out of the car and was disarmed. Petty, crossing the street from the drug store, was similarly treated.

"We'll be back in a few minutes and bring your gun," Donnelly quoted one of the men as saying. He said that "about 25 minutes later they came back and gave up. They said, 'Here we are.'"

Mrs. Dotson said that the negro hit her in the eye with his fist last night about 6 o'clock when she resisted his advances as she was drinking beer in a negro store on highway 1, about four miles from White Bluff.

She declared that she had gotten off a bus from Nashville a few minutes before and stopped at the store before walking on to her home. The store was owned by Ed Daniels, negro.

According to the woman, Bell grabbed her by the shoulder while she was in the store and demanded: "Do you know who I am?"

She said she told him who he was and that he offered her $5 to go with him.

Mrs. Dotson remonstrated with the negro, she said, and he struck her in the face with his fist. Ellis Parker, only white man present, went to her aid and scuffled with the negro.

Parker and the negro were separated and Mrs. Dotson went to the home of 'Squire J. W. Greer at Kingston Springs to swear out a warrant.

The warrant charged the negro with assault and battery and with using abusive language.

The negro lived at Kingston Springs. He was married and was the father of a 10-year-old boy.

Mr. and Mrs. Dotson have two children, Ewell, 6, Doris, 3.

The Dotson brothers live in Cheatham county where Jesse and James have been on relief. Brown is a resident of Dickson county.

Nashville, Tenn.
Morning Tennessean
NOV 5 1935

NEGRO TAKEN AWAY FROM OFFICERS AND SLAIN IN CHEATHAM

Five Kinsmen of Woman Surrender, Charged With Murder

ASHLAND CITY, Tenn., Nov. 4—(Spl.)—Four brothers and a cousin were being held in the Cheatham county jail tonight, following their surrender to Dickson county officers after they took a negro away from the officers and shot him to death near here this morning.

Deputy Sheriff R. H. Williams said the quintet declared they would waive examination before Squire W. B. Adkisson here Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock, when trial for the five will be called on a charge of murder.

"It is my opinion," Williams said, "that they will be sent to the Davidson county jail at Nashville for safekeeping."

Officers said the five prisoners captured the negro, Baxter Bell, from two officers this morning,

Lynchings - 1935
Cases of Texas.

4616

New York World Telegram
NOV 13 1935

Lynchings 'Will of People,' Say Judge and Prosecutor

County Attorney Defends Texas Mob That Strung Up Two Negro Boys as White Girl's Murderers—Jurist Holds Law Could Not Have Punished Them Adequately.

By the Associated Press.

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 13.—County Attorney O. P. Moore said today he believed the lynching of two youthful Negroes by a mob of 700 persons, including several women, on a farm near here last night, was "an expression of the will of the people."

Moore's statement came soon after Justice of the Peace E. C. Thrower said he would conduct a court of inquiry into the lynchings during the day.

The town was quiet. The mob seized Ernest Collins, 15, and Benny Mitchell, 16, who assertedly had confessed the criminal attack and subsequent drowning of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, high school honor graduate, from officers and left them dangling from an oak tree near the girl's home.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob," said Mr. Moore. "I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

County Judge H. P. Hahn, said, however:—

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

At Austin Governor James V. Allred said he did not know the facts, but the thought of "lynching was deplorable at any time."

groes allegedly made statements involving a third negro. The mob left the bodies hanging and went in search of the third negro.

About 500 men were in the party which took the negroes away from Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and deputies as they were being brought here from Houston for trial in juvenile court tomorrow. Both were under 17 years old.

Oldest Boy Was 16

The town was quiet. The mob seized Ernest Collins, 15, and Benny Mitchell, 16, who assertedly had confessed the criminal attack and subsequent drowning of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, high school honor graduate, from officers and left them dangling from a live oak tree near the girl's home.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob," said Moore. "I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

County Judge H. P. Hahn said, however:

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

Deplored by Governor

At Austin, Gov. James V. Allred said he did not know the facts, but the thought of "lynching" was deplorable at any time."

Sheriff Hoegemeyer said he didn't think there would be an immediate investigation of the incident.

"I didn't recognize any of the members of the mob and I have no clues to go on," the sheriff said. "I guess the grand jury will make an investigation. It meets in February.

"All the license plates on the cars of the mob were covered with cloth or had pieces of paper twisted over them."

SHERIFF YIELDS VICTIMS TO MOB WITHOUT RESISTANCE

EVERYONE KNEW ABOUT LYNCHING

Episcopal Priest Pleads With Mob To Let The Law Take Its Course

COLUMBUS, TEXAS.—The savage, merciless roar of a blood-maddened mob thundered in terrifying fashion at Altair, 11 miles from here Tuesday night and left in its wake the murdered bodies of two Negro boys, one 15 and one 16.

The boys, who had been held in Houston for a month for safekeeping, were taken from Sheriff Frank Hoegmeyer and a deputy at a bridge over the Colorado river by a mob estimated to have included at least 700. Despite the fact that the sheriff claimed that secrecy shrouded the move to return the boys to Columbus, where they would have been tried in the juvenile court Wednesday, everyone in and near Columbus seemed to know from early morning Tuesday that a lynching was to take place and approximately where.

The lynch victims were Ernest Collins, 15 and Benny Mitchell, 16. They were charged with the brutal murder of Geraldine Kollmann, 19, on October 17. Officers claimed the boys confessed to the crime.

Auto Caravan

The mob had ridden to the point where the boys were "captured" from the sheriff in a caravan of automobiles. There the long line of machines halted and their occupants "visited" with each other as a bottle of whiskey passed freely among them. Plans for handling the "lynching bee" were discussed and a spot for the actual commission of the crime was chosen.

When the sheriff's car, traveling at a very moderate rate of speed reached the bridge, the boys quickly passed from the custody of the sheriff to that of ten men, whom the sheriff claims were armed and masked. One of them called the sheriff by his first name, it is said, and the officer is said to have responded in a similar manner.

Then the two boys were beaten, kicked and manhandled as they were being taken to the car of their abductors. With blood streaming down their childish faces, the boys were flung into the machines of the mob and rushed away perhaps a half mile where other cars were already drawn up in a semi-circle, headlights making a glittering circle of radiance centered about a huge oak tree.

Collins Wasn't Afraid

Young Collins, crimson staining the deep brown of his face, disdainfully spat out several teeth which had been broken by a blow from the butt of a gun wielded by a lyncher and grinned crookedly at the rim of hostile white faces which surrounded him.

"Go on an' kill me," the boy is reported to have said. "That's all you can do and I can't die but once. Anyway I didn't do anything."

But Bennie Was

But his companion, Bennie Mitchell, was not made of such stern stuff. Above the rumbling roar of the hundreds who pressed closer to see the "fun" his shrill young voice protesting his innocence and praying could be heard. His voice rose in a childish treble above the din and even some of the members of the murder mob are said to have turned their heads at the spectacle.

The one redeeming feature of the whole ghastly affair was the courageous attempt of the Rev. E. B. Marmion, an Episcopal minister of Columbus, to stop the murders.

The minister leaped to the top of a car and in a voice filled with

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle
NOV 13 1935

Prosecutor Defends Lynching of 2 Boys As Will of the People

Wouldn't Call Them a Mob, He Says of Texans Who Executed Negroes for Attack on Girl—Judge Calls Hangings Justice

Columbus, Texas, Nov. 13 (AP)—County Attorney O. P. Moore said today he believed the lynching of two youthful Negroes by a mob of 700 persons, including several women, on a farm near here last night, was "an expression of the will of the people."

Moore's statement came soon after Justice of the Peace E. C. Thrower said he would conduct a court of inquiry into the lynchings during the day.

TWO YOUNG NEGROES ARE LYNCHED IN TEXAS

COLUMBUS, Texas, Nov. 12.—(AP) Two negro youths charged with slaying a young white woman October 17 were seized by a mob at Altair, 11 miles south of here tonight, and hanged to a liveoak tree a mile from the girl's home.

Before they were hanged, the ne-

11-13-35

pleading. begged the mob not to go on with their "sinful, barbaric acts." The minister, his face pale in the light of the automobile lamps, pleaded for the mob to let the proper legal procedure be carried out. But his impassioned plea was greeted with boos and jeers—and the two boys were placed under the limbs of the giant oak, loops placed around their necks and they were hauled aloft where within a few minutes their frenzied jerkings had ceased.

Then the lynchers, more quiet now, piled into their cars and drove off sedately—some towards Columbus—and some toward Houston.

Columbus Quiet

In Columbus, the streets were deserted. An air of guilt hung over the town like a visible pall.

Later the bodies of the boys were delivered to the homes of their grief-stricken parents, while the Negro section of the town seethed in an ineffectual anger which dared not to give expression to its feelings.

In one of the most morbid bits of advertising ever seen in these parts, a drug store in Columbus displayed the two nooses which chocked the boy's to death while hundreds passed by to see them.

R. Weinert, district attorney when "notified" of the lynching had no idea as to what could or would be done. Everybody concerned said nobody was recognized among the mob.

Greensboro, N. C., News
November 13, 1935

RATE TEXAS MOBS LYNCH NEGRO BOYS

Two Youths Said to Have Confessed Murder of Girl—Posse Hunt Third Suspect.

Columbus, Tex., Nov. 12.—(AP)—Two negro youths charged with slaying a young white woman October 17 were seized by a mob at Altair, 11 miles south of here, tonight and hanged to a live oak tree a mile from the girl's home.

Before they were hanged, the negroes allegedly made statements involving a third negro. The mob left the bodies hanging and went in search of the third negro.

About 500 men were in the party which took the negroes away from Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and deputies as they were being brought here from Houston for trial in juvenile court tomorrow. Both were under 17 years old.

The negroes, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, were alleged to have attacked and killed Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, after she came up on them in her father's pasture and accused them of stealing pecans. Officers said soon after their arrest that they had confessed the crime.

The girl's body was found floating in Cummins creek by her brother and it was believed at first she had drowned.

Officials said the limit of punishment for the negroes had they been tried in juvenile court would have been imprisonment in a juvenile prison until they were 21 years old.

Lynchings - 1935
Cases of.

Texas.

4949

NEGROES HANGED BY MOB IN TEXAS

Telegraph
11-13-35

Lynchers Go in Search of Third Suspected of Complicity in Murder of Girl

COLUMBUS, Texas, Nov. 12 (AP).—Two Negro youths charged with slaying a young white woman near here Oct. 17, were seized by a mob at Altair, 11 miles south of here, early tonight and hanged to a live-oak tree about a mile from the girl's home.

Macon, Ga.

Before they were hanged, the Negroes allegedly made statements involving a third Negro. The mob left the bodies hanging and went in search of the third Negro.

About 500 men were in the party which took the Negroes away from Sheriff Frank Hoegemyer and deputies as they were being brought here from Houston for trial in juvenile court tomorrow. Both were under 17 years old.

The Negroes, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, were alleged to have attacked and killed Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, after she came upon them in her father's pasture, and accused them of stealing pecans. Officers said soon after their arrest that they had confessed the crime.

The birl's body was found floating in Cummins creek by her brother and it was believed at first she had drowned.

She was graduated last spring from Columbus high school with highest honors.

Officials said the limit of punishment for the Negroes had they been tried in juvenile court would have been imprisonment in a juvenile prison until they were 21 years old.

Two Negroes Are Hanged In Texas

Altair
11-13-35

COLUMBUS, TEXAS, Nov. 12.—(AP)—Two negro youths charged with slaying a young white woman near here Oct. 17 were seized by a mob at Altair, 11 miles south of here early tonight and hanged to a liveoak tree on Highway 71, about a mile from the girl's home.

Before they were hanged, the negroes allegedly made statements involving a third negro. The mob left the bodies hanging and went in search of the third negro.

About 500 men were in the party which took the negroes away from Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and deputies as they were being brought here from Houston for trial in juvenile court tomorrow. Both were under 17 years old.

The negroes, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, were alleged to have attacked and killed Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, after she came up on them in her father's pasture and accused them of stealing pecans. Officers said soon after their arrest that they had confessed the crime.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
NOV 13 1935

TEXAS MOB HANGS 2 COLORED BOYS

Youths Confessed Killing White Girl—Sheriff Says No Arrests Will Be Made.

(By United Press.)

Columbus, Tex., Nov. 13.—Sheriff Frank Hoegmeyer announced today that he would make no arrests in connection with the lynching of two colored boys.

"The men were masked," he said. "Their automobiles had licenses from other counties. I didn't recognize any of them. The Grand Jury will meet in February and may investigate the lynching then."

The boys, both 16, were seized by a masked mob last night. Accused of slaying a white girl, they had been sent to Houston several weeks ago to frustrate a mob. They were both returned for arraignment in juvenile court, guarded by only two deputies.

Mayor O. A. Sumwalt issued this statement: "Feeling has been high here ever since the boys confessed they killued Miss Kollman.

"Under the law the killers could only be tried in juvenile court and the only punishment possible was confinement until they became of age. The citizens didn't think that was punishment enough."

The boys, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, were hanged from the limb of an oak tree. The mob was reported to have extracted a confession involving another colored youth in the slaying and there were reports he would be lynched if found.

Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, a farm girl, was assaulted and killed while patrolling the family pecan orchard on horseback.

New York American
NOV 13 1935

Mob Lynches Two Murder Suspects

Negroes Accused of Killing Girl Jerked from Sheriff's Car

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 12 (AP).—A mob estimated at 700 persons, including several women, tonight took two Negro youths accused of the murder of Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, from Colorado County officers, and hanged them to a live oak tree, four miles north of Columbus.

The mob then scattered in search of another Negro believed to be implicated in the crime.

The two prisoners, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, both less than 17 years old, were being taken from Houston to Columbus by Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and Deputy Berry Townsend to stand trial tomorrow in juvenile court for criminally attacking and killing the girl Oct. 17.

As the officers and their prisoners reached the Colorado River bridge at Altair, 11 miles south of here, the mob stopped them, jerked the Negroes from the car and rushed them to a spot a mile from the farm of the slain girl's parents. Asked for any last statements, the two youths allegedly implicated another young Negro.

The leaders of the mob placed knotted ropes around the necks of the pair and pulled their kicking bodies into the air.

Miss Kollman, honor graduate of Columbia High School, was slain and her body thrown into Cummins Creek, which flows through her father's pasture

New York World Telegram
NOV 13 1935

TWO NEGRO BOYS LYNCHED BY MOB IN DEATH OF GIRL

Taken from Deputies, Hanged on Nearby Oak—Third Faces Like Fate.

NO ARRESTS ARE PLANNED

No Chance of Identifying Men Who Took Suspects, Sheriff Declares.

By the United Press.

COLUMBUS, Texas, Nov. 13.—Sheriff Frank Hoegmeyer announced today that he would make no arrests in connection with the lynching of two Negro boys.

"The men were masked," he said. "Their automobiles had licenses from other counties. I didn't recognize any of them. The Grand Jury will meet in February and may investigate the lynching then."

The boys, both 16, were seized by a masked mob last night. Accused of slaying Miss Geraldine Kollman, a white girl, they had been sent to Houston several weeks ago to frustrate a mob. They were being returned for arraignment in Juvenile Court, guarded by only two deputies.

Feeling High in Town.

Mayor O. A. Sumwalt issued this statement:—

"Feeling has been high here ever since the Negroes confessed they killed Miss Kollman.

"Under the law the Negroes could only be tried in Juvenile Court and the only punishment possible was confinement until they became of age. The citizen's didn't think that was punishment enough, and some of them apparently decided to take matters into their own hands."

The boys, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, were hanged from the limb of an oak tree. The mob was reported to have extracted a confession involving another Negro youth in the slaying and there were reports that he would be lynched if found.

Attacked In Orchard.

Miss Kollman, a farm girl, was assaulted and killed while patrolling the family pecan orchard on horseback. Mitchell and Collins were arrested and were said to have confessed. They were being returned here for arraignment tdday.

As Hoegmeyer and his deputy, Berry Townsend, drove onto the Colorado River bridge near Altair several automobiles blocked their path. Bobsen leaped on the car and seized the Negroes, snatching the ignition key to block pursuit.

The lynching party sped to Columbus and beyond to the tree, apparently selected in advance, a mile from the home of Miss Kollman.

Hoegmeyer found them and cut them down an hour later. Coroner E. C. Thrower held an in quest and issued a verdict that the Negroes died at the hands of persons unknown.

Reports varied concerning the size of the mob. The sheriff said some ten or fifteen men were in the party that stopped his car. Other reports said 700 men were in the mob.

New York Herald-Tribune
NOV 13 1935

2 Negro Youths Hanged by Mob Of 700 Texans

Boys Under 17 Years Old Lynched for Assaulting and Killing White Girl

Crowd Hunts 3d Culprit

Prisoners Seized on Eve of Juvenile Court Trial

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 12.—A mob estimated at 700 persons, including several women, tonight took two Negro youths accused of the murder of Geraldine Kollman, nineteen years old, from Colorado County officers and hanged them to a live oak tree four miles north of Columbus.

The two prisoners, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, both less than seventeen years old, were being taken from Houston to Columbus by Sheriff Hoegemeyer and Deputy Berry Townsend to stand trial tomorrow in Juve-

...ails Court for criminally attacking and killing the girl October 17 last. They had been taken to Houston for safe-keeping.

"While we were crossing the bridge," the sheriff said, "a large body of men stopped us. Before I could make a move, they opened the automobile door and took out the two prisoners. They placed the Negroes in another car and sped away toward Columbus. Seven cars on the bridge blocked my way so I could not follow them. None of the men was masked, although some carried guns."

After the mob had dispersed in search of a third victim the bodies were cut down and left lying under the tree. The two ropes, each with its noose, were taken into Columbus and placed in a drug store, where they were viewed by hundreds of curious persons.

"We knew all afternoon this was going to happen," several citizens remarked tonight.

Miss Kollmann was killed when she rode into her father's pasture in search of thieves who had been stripping pecan trees. The Negroes said in their confessions they were seated on a log on the farm when the girl approached on her horse. When they denied they had been stealing pecans, she told them to follow her and she would show them a tree that had been stripped.

As they walked behind her, according to statements attributed to the Negroes, one of them picked up a limb and knocked the girl from her horse. Then both attacked her, the confessions said. Her body was found in a creek.

C. C. C. Foreman Hanged, Burned

RIPLEY, W. Va., Nov. 12 (AP).—The blazing body of a white man identified as J. S. Gunnoe, fifty years old, a C. C. C. camp foreman, was found hanging from a tree on a farm near Ripley late tonight. He was identified by a tag. His clothing had been soaked in oil or gasoline and set on fire.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

NOV 13 1935

2 BOYS STEAL PECANS—SLAY GIRL, 19—LYNCHED

(By Associated Press)

Columbus, Tex., Nov. 14.—Two colored boys who had confessed that they attacked and killed a 19-year-old white girl who caught them stealing pecans on her father's ranch were taken from the sheriff tonight and hanged by a mob of 500 men. They were taken to Altair, 11 miles south of here, and hanged side by side from a live oak tree within sight of the home of their victim, pretty Geraldine Kollman on Oct. 18. At first it was thought she had been thrown from her horse and been killed. An examination showed that she had been attacked, however, and a manhunt started that led to the arrest on Oct. 22 of Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, both under 17.

Before they were hanged the youths involved a third colored boy. Leaving the bodies swinging in the tree, the mob turned their cars and went in search of the third youth.

Miss Kollman's body was found in Cummings Creek by her brother. They confessed to Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer that they were stealing pecans on the Kollman ranch whe nthe girl came upon them, riding a horse. She told them to follow her to the house. Instead, one of them pulled her from the horse and struck her over the head wit ha club. Then they attacked her and threw her into the creek.

Tell of Hiding Body.

"Ernest took her by the shoulders and I got her legs and we carried her to the creek and threw her in," Mitchell told Hoegemeyer.

When news of their arrest spread, a mob gathered around the "hanging" oak on the courthouse grounds and demanded the boys be turned over.

The sheriff spirited the boys to Houston for safekeeping, and he and deputies were bringing them back tonight for trial in Juvenile Court tomorrow when the mob met the officers.

Cartersville, Ga., News
November 28, 1935

Texans Lynch Negro Youths

Columbus, Tex., Nov. 27—A mob of masked men took two 16-year-old Negroes from officers bringing them here for trial today on charges of murdering a white girl and hanged them from a limb of an oak tree.

The victims were Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins. They were said to have confessed assaulting and beating to death Geraldine Kollman, 19, a farm girl. She was patrolling the family pecan orchard.

"I don't plan any arrests," Sheriff Frank Hoegmeyer said. "The men were masked. Their automobiles had licenses from other counties. I didn't recognize any of them. The grand jury will meet in February and may investigate the lynching then."

Mitchell and Collins were taken to Houston for safekeeping because of high feeling subsequent to the slaying of Miss Kollman. Hoegmeyer and Deputy Berry Townsend were bringing them back for Juvenile Court trial scheduled today.

As the officers drove onto the Colorado River bridge near Altair several automobiles blocked their path. Mobsmen leaped on the car and seized the Negroes, snatching the ignition key to black pursuit.

The lynching party sped to Columbus and beyond to the tree, apparently selected in advance, a mile from the home of Mis Kollman. Ropes were placed around their necks and thrown over a limb. The struggling youths were then jerked into the air.

MONTREAL, QUEBEC
DAILY ~~STAR~~ Gazette
NOV 13 1935

3 NEGROES LYNCHED UPON A SINGLE DAY

Two Hanged at Columbus, Texas, Third at Ripley, W.Va.

19 CASES FOR YEAR 1935

Two of Victims Taken From Police Custody—Body of Other Soaked in Gasoline and Burned

Two negroes were hanged at Columbus, Texas, and a third at Ripley, W. Va., yesterday, bringing to 19 the number of lynchings in the United States for 1935.

The negroes lynched at Columbus were 'teen aged youths who allegedly had confessed assaulting and killing a young white girl. The mob which took them from the sheriff and a deputy went looking for a third believed implicated in the crime.

The West Virginia victim apparently was soaked with an inflammable fluid and hanged in flames. He was burned so badly no identification was available immediately.

Columbus, Texas, November 12.—(AP)—A mob estimated at 700 persons, including several women, tonight took two 'teen age Negroes accused of the murder of Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, from Colorado county officers and hanged them to an oak tree four miles north of Columbus.

The mob then scattered in search of another Negro believed to be implicated in the crime.

The two prisoners, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, both less than 17 years old, were being taken from Houston to Columbus by Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and Deputy Berry Townsend to stand trial tomorrow in juvenile court for criminally attacking and killing the girl October 17.

As the officers and their prisoners reached the Colorado river bridge at Altar, 11 miles south of here, the mob stopped them, jerked the Negroes from the car and rushed them through Columbus to a spot only a mile from the farm of the slain girl's parents. Asked for any last statements, the two youths allegedly implicated another young Negro.

The leaders of the mob placed knotted ropes around the necks of the youths and pulled them into the air. Leaving them hanging, the crowd then started toward the home of the third negro implicated. Late tonight they were reported still searching for him.

Miss Kollman was criminally attacked, slain and her body thrown into a creek which flows through her father's pasture. Finding of the body next day and the discovery that she had been beaten started a manhunt that ended in the arrest of the two youths.

Fearing mob action, Sheriff Hoegemeyer took his prisoners to Houston for safe keeping. After their arrival there they admitted the crime in a signed statement, officers said.

The sheriff had hoped to slip the prisoners into town tonight without notice, and was approaching Columbus in a roundabout way when the mob intercepted him.

Lynchings - 1935
Cases of.

West Virginia.

4617

BLAZING BODY FOUND HANGING FROM TREE

RIPLEY, W. Va., Nov. 12.—(AP)—The blazing body of a white man identified as J. S. Gunnoe, 50, a CCC camp foreman, was found hanging from a tree on a farm near Ripley late tonight.

The body was identified by a tag and by Roy Bradley, commander of the Jackson Civilian Conservation Corps camp several miles from Ripley.

Attracted by the flames, James Elliott found the body on his farm four miles from this Ohio river valley town.

Elliott told police the dead man's clothing had been soaked in oil or gasoline and set on fire.

State police from Charleston and Ripley said Gunnoe had been slain. They ordered the body removed to Ripley.

RIPLEY, VA., Nov. 12.—(AP)—A strange light burning on his farm led James Elliott tonight to the discovery of the flaming body of an unidentified Negro hanging from a tree.

Elliott who lives about four miles from this Ohio valley community in Jackson County, said he was attracted by the flames and went to investigate.

He added he heard no commotion before he made the discovery.

Coroner C. R. Kessel of Jackson County, Corporal William Beckett and Trooper Wayne Lanham of the State police ordered the body removed to Ripley.

New York Evening Post
NOV 13 1935

CCC Foreman Lynched And Burned in W. Va.

Veteran Found Hanging in Flames—Texas Mob Kills Two Negro Boys as Girl-Slayers

RIPLEY, W. Va., Nov. 13 (AP).—A placid evening's walk terminated in a flaming death from a tree limb last night for J. Fulton Gunnoe, fifty-five-year-old war veteran and CCC camp foreman.

A frightened farmer, James Elliott, saw flames lighting his window. In his night clothing Elliott ran out to a low ridge about 150 yards from the Charleston-Parkersburg highway and found Gunnoe's blazing body hanging from a tree.

He hurried four miles to Ripley to tell State police a Negro had been hanged. Troopers discovered later, however, a tag identifying Gunnoe as a white man and foreman of the Jackson Civilian Conservation Corps camp some miles from Ripley.

Roy Bradley, superintendent of the camp, confirmed the identity.

State police said a heavy wire was wrapped six times around the dead man's neck. His body had been burned from head to foot after gasoline was poured over it.

Pocketbook Empty

Gunnoe's hat, lashlight and empty pocketbook were found a few yards from the tree. It was not known whether he had any money with him.

"The flames were up around the neck when I got there," said Elliott. "The body was so badly burned it couldn't be recognized.

"The light was the first thing that aroused me. I never heard any automobiles pass by, nor was there any noise to disturb me."

Lieutenant James H. Filinger of Charleston organized a detail of troopers to start covering the rain-soaked woods and hills near the farm for clues to the torch death.

Officers said their first investigation failed to disclose how Gunnoe's body reached the Elliott farm, nor could they learn of any motive for the slaying.

Two Negro Boys Lynched

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 13 (AP).—A mob of 700 persons, including several women, hanged two Negro boys last night for the brutal slaying of Geraldine Kollman, nineteen, high school honor graduate.

Ten masked and armed men forced two officers to surrender Ernest Collins, fifteen, and Benny Mitchell, sixteen, who allegedly had confessed attacking the girl and throwing her body into a creek, October 19.

The mob hurried its victims to a tree a mile from the Kollmann farm and quickly strung them up despite the plea of the Rev. E. B. Marmion, Episcopal rector, to let the law take its course.

The mob listened to him in silence and then broke into jeers.

Pleads for His Life

"White folks, please don't do this," pleaded iMtchell as the hangman's knot was slipped about his neck.

Collins, apparently unshaken peered into Mitchell's face and grinned.

The two prisoners were chained together about the neck. Failing in an effort to break the chain, the mob hustled the youths beneath the tree and threw two ropes over a limb. Twenty men seized the ropes and pulled up the kicking Negroes.

Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and Deputy Harry Townsend were returning the prisoners from Houston, where they had been held for safekeeping, to Columbus for juvenile court trial today.

The maximum sentence they could have received was confinement in a reformatory until they were twenty-one.

Blocked By Caravan

A large caravan of motor cars blocked the officers path at a bridge eleven miles south of Columbus. The mob sped away with the prisoners, leaving the road blocked by automobiles so the officers were unable to pursue.

Mitchell assertedly told his captors the name of another Negro he said planning the slaying of Miss Kollmann. Some of the mob went in search of the third Negro but were told that he had left this section.

Miss Kollmann was killed on her father's farm after she had gone in search of pecan thieves.

Nashville, Tenn. Banner
November 13, 1935

CCC Foreman Found Lynched Near Camp

Ripley, W. Va., Nov. 13—(U)—Discovery of the burning body of J. S. Gunnoe hanging from a tree on a Jackson County farm brought state troopers and county authorities here for an intensive search for the slayers today.

Gunnoe, forestry foreman at a Civilian Conservation Camp four miles south of here, was found lynched late last night by Jim Elliott, a farmer, 200 feet from his home. Officers could give no immediate motive for the lynching. No trace of Gunnoe's assailants had been found.

Ripley, W. Va., November 12.—(AP)—The body of an unidentified Negro was found hanging from a tree four miles from here late tonight. The clothing had been soaked in gasoline or oil and the body was burned beyond identification.

Passing motorists saw the flames and discovered the body.

State police from Ripley and Charleston started for the scene.

In their absence reports that a mob had lynched the Negro and burned his body for attacking a white woman could not be confirmed.

Lynchings- 1935
Discussions.

Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynchings.
4516

LYNCHINGS IN SOUTHERN STATES DECLINED 50 PER CENT IN 1934

Association of Women Report 55 Killings Were Prevented in Dixie

ATLANTA, Jan. 10 (AP)—The Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching received a report today that there were 50 per cent fewer lynchings in 1934 than the year previous.

Representatives of the association in 13 Southern states, who gathered here to study further activities to prevent lynchings, were informed there were 55 prevented lynchings last year. Forty-five of these occurred in the territory of the association.

The report was contained in the association's official bulletin.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Decatur, Ga., executive director of the association, explained that the purpose of the council was to agree on further methods of prevention and to restate the association's policy of education.

The council was to be presided over by Mrs. Atwood Martin, chairman of Louisville, Ky. Mrs. W. A. Newell, of Salisbury, N. C., is the secretary.

Members Active

"Every member of our association has been particularly active in every instance where there has been a threatened lynching," said Mrs. Ames, discussing the report.

"The policy of the association is based on the profound relief that education and enlightenment of the Christian citizens of the South was the surest way to create public opinion which would not tolerate lynching."

She said the association was formed because it recognized the belief that lynchings were tolerated by the public "as needful for the protection of Southern white women."

Since its organization, Mrs. Ames said it was found that only about 20 per cent of the lynchings resulted from attacks on white women.

Claim Repudiated

"We felt that the least we could do was to repudiate this claim not only in resolutions but by public speeches and pledges on the part of women to educate along this line."

In four years the association has grown from 30 signatory members who indorsed its program to 26,000 signatures coming from all the Southern states, she said. The members represent over 1,000 of the 1,400 counties and approximately 2,600 cities.

The sheriff, a deputy and one other county official of Bedford county, Shelbyville, Tenn., accepted the program, Mrs. Ames said. It was at Shelbyville where an enraged mob of citizens burned down a courthouse recently after an unsuccessful attempt to get a Negro in the custody of the sheriff.

Governors Back Plan

Thirteen governors have committed themselves to the program, and five made pledges to prevent lynchings during recent political campaigns, she said.

During the past year association members obtained signatures from 287 county officials.

Besides state representatives, attending the session here also are representatives at large from the following organizations:

Woman's missionary union of the Southern Baptist convention; woman's council of the Southern Methodist church; woman's committee of the Southern Presbyterian church; National Council of the Protestant Episcopal church; National Congress of Parents and Teachers; Association of Professional and Business Women, and the National Young Women's Christian Association.

LYNCHING ON WANE IN TEXAS

FORT WORTH, Tex., Jan. 3 — (ANP)—That 22,000 Southern white women have joined the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching [illegible] than 200 sheriffs in Southern states have pledged their efforts to the same end, were stated at a meeting here of the State Interracial Commission and the Texas branch of the Women's Anti-Lynching Association. It was reported that the Association has more than 4,000 signed members in the state and that 38 Texas sheriffs and other officers have personally signed the Association's pledge.

Reports as to interracial conditions were made from various sections of the state, and Dr. Channing H. Tobias, of New York, national secretary of the Y. M. C. A., delivered an address upon the general situation. Another speaker was Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, director of Woman's Work of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation and organizer of the Association of Women.

Mrs. J. L. Brock, of Bryan, was elected chairman of the commission for the coming year and President W. R. Banks of the State College for Negroes, was reelected secretary. Dr. M. W. Dogan, president of Wiley College, was elected vice president.

ANTI-LYNCHING GROUP BARS POLITICAL STAND

Body Refuses to Indorse Costigan-Wagner Bill in Congress.

The Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, meeting here Thursday, declined to take a position concerning the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill proposed in congress.

Two suggestions came from the floor asking that the council clarify its position as regards legislative matters, but the council indicated it loooked with disfavor on indorsing as a body any political measures.

Instead, a resolution was adopted giving further emphasis to the association's program of educational activities to prevent lynchings.

Resolution Offered.

Mrs. John W. Hanna, of Dallas, Texas, former president of the national Y. W. C. A., and now council representative of the Texas association, and Mrs. Walter S. Jones, of Jacksonville, Fla., asked that the association adopt a resolution stating members "as individuals" were interested in "becoming conversant" with legislation for the reduction of crime.

The resolution was not voted on.

In 1934, the council stated that "we look with favor upon any legal measure which promises sure and permanent eradication of this crime of lynching."

A suggestion was made that the council restate this statement, but it was opposed.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, of Decatur, executive director of the association, advised the council to steer clear of political legislation until the group became "large enough to be felt."

The resolution expressed the association's belief that lynchings "generally grow out of a racial hysteria caused by fear that white supremacy is in danger. We know that in many places any person, man or woman, can create a mob and incite it to destruction of life and property by arousing this ever present fear. In condemning lynching, we must face these factors and publicly acknowledge them."

The association said areas still retarded by ignorance and prejudice should be intelligently cultivated by social, educational and religious forces to reduce the crime.

The 1935 objectives were: To enlist 10,000 men and women in this work; to give immediate publicity to causes behind every lynching; to secure the signature of every sheriff in the south through personal calls by local constituents; and to enlighten the public.

The Association received a report Thursday that there were 50 per cent fewer lynchings in 1934 than the year pervious.

Representatives of the association in 13 southern states were informed there were 55 prevented lynchings last year. Forty-five of these occurred in the territory of the association.

The report was contained in the association's official bulletin.

Association's Growth.

In four years the association has grown from 30 signatory members who indorsed its program to 26,000 signatures coming from all the southern states, she said. The members represent over 1,000 of the 1,400 counties and approximately 2,600 cities.

Thirteen governors have committed themselves to the program, and five, during recent political campaigns, made pledges to prevent lynchings, she said.

During the past year association members obtained signatures from 287 county officials.

Besides state representatives, attending the session here also are representatives-at-large from the following organizations: Woman's Missionary Union of the Southern Baptist convention; woman's council of the Southern Methodist church; woman's committee of the Southern Presbyterian church; national council of the Protestant Episcopal church; National Congress of Parents and Teachers; Association of Professional and Business Women, and the National Young Women's Christian Association.

Atlanta, Ga. Journal
January 10, 1935

50 PER CENT DROP IN 1934 LYNCHING RECORD REPORTED

Association of Southern Women Here to Study Prevention Plans

The Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching received a report Thursday that there were 50 per cent fewer lynchings in 1934 than the year previous.

Representatives of the association in thirteen southern states, who gathered here to study further activities to prevent lynchings, were informed there were fifty-five prevented lynchings last year. Forty-five of these occurred in the territory of the association.

The report was contained in the association's official bulletin.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, of Decatur, Ga., executive director of the Association, explained that the purpose of the council was to agree on further methods of prevention and to restate the association's policy of education.

The council was to be presided over by Mrs. Atwood Martin, chairman, of Louisville, Ky. Mrs. W. A. Newell, of Salisbury, N. C., is the secretary.

"Every member of our association has been particularly active in every instance where there has been a threatened lynching," said Mrs. Ames, discussing the report.

"The policy of the association is based on the profound belief that education and enlightenment of the Christian citizens of the south is the surest way to create public opinion which would not tolerate lynching."

She said the association was formed because it recognized the belief that lynchings were tolerated by the public "as needful for the protection of southern white women."

Since its organization, Mrs. Ames said it was found that only about 20 per cent of the lynchings resulted from attacks on white women.

"We felt that the least we could do was to repudiate this claim not only in resolutions but by public speeches and pledges on the part of women to educate along this line.

In four years the association has grown from thirty signatory members who indorsed its program to 26,000 signatures coming from all the southern states, she said. The members represent over 1,000 of the 1,400 counties and approximately 2,600 cities.

The sheriff, a deputy and one other county official of Bedford County, Shelbyville, Tenn., accepted the program, Mrs. Ames said. It was at Shelbyville where an enraged mob of citizens burned down a courthouse recently after an unsuccessful attempt to get a negro in the custody of the sheriff.

Thirteen governors have committed themselves to the program, and five made pledges to prevent lynchings during recent political campaigns, she said.

During the past year association members obtained signatures from 287 county officials.

Besides state representatives, attending the session here also are representatives at large from the following organizations:

Woman's Missionary Union of the Southern Baptist Convention; Woman's Council of the Southern Methodist Church; Woman's Committee of the Southern Presbyterian Church; National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church; National Congress of Parents and Teachers; Association of Professional and Business Women and the National Young Women's Christian Association.

Atlanta, Ga. Georgian
January 11, 1935

WOMEN REPORT LYNCHINGS OFF 50 PER CENT

Forty-two women from 13 states, delegates to the convention of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, returned to their homes Friday, following a session Thursday at the Piedmont Hotel in which marked progress in the educational campaign against lynching was reported.

Encouraged by a report that lynchings decreased 50 per cent during 1934, the women decided to continue their educational work.

They adopted these objectives for 1935:

To enlist 10,000 men and women in the fight against lynching; to give immediate publicity to the causes underlying every case of mob violence; to enlist peace officers throughout the South and to spread public enlightenment.

The association decided not to work now for state or federal legislation. The pending Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was not taken up.

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, of Decatur, executive director of the association, explained that the affiliated church and educational organizations could take such action as they chose regarding legislation and the association might be able to act later, but felt it could do more valuable work now in spreading information and exacting pledges from officials to prevent violence. Every Southern Governor has enlisted in this, she said.

In four years the association has grown from 30 signatory members to 26,000.

New York Times
JAN 11 1935

FIFTY-FIVE MEN IN 1934 SAVED FROM LYNCHING

Success of Fight by Southern Women's Group Is Told at Atlanta Convention.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATLANTA, Jan. 10.—Fifty-five lynchings were prevented in the United States in 1934 and there were 50 per cent fewer victims of mob violence during the year, members of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching were told today as they heard annual reports and mapped new objectives for their 1935 program.

The association tabled a resolution favoring the Wagner-Costigan Anti-lynching Bill. This was done at the suggestion of Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, executive director, who advised the council "to steer clear of political legislation until we become really large enough to be felt."

Objectives for 1935, as approved by the council, are as follows:

1. To enlist 10,000 more men and women in the work.
2. To give immediate publicity to causes behind every lynching.
3. To obtain the signature of every Sheriff in the South, through personal calls by local constituents, that he will do his utmost for the prevention of lynchings.
4. To enlighten the public on the causes and cures of the lynching evil.

Mrs. Ames said thirteen Governors had committed themselves to the program of the organization.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
BULLETIN
JAN 12 1935

REAL ANTI-LYNCHING POWER

Members of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching at their annual meeting at Atlanta found encouragement in the record of the past year, showing that in 55 cases lynchings were prevented by the action of the authorities entrusted with the protection or the custody of threatened persons. That record suggested as part of their effort in 1935 the attempt to secure from every sheriff in the South, through personal calls from citizens of his bailiwick, the written pledge that he will do his utmost to prevent lynchings in his county.

Official laxity in dealing with lynchings occurs mainly in cases where the sheriff or other responsible official feels that the community sympathizes with the mob and would resent efforts to protect the victim. Demonstration such as the Southern women propose to give that there will be community support for a man endeavoring to do his duty, affords the best possible means of stiffening official backbone.

The formation of this association of women, and the active part which educators, editors and other public men in the South have taken in organizing sentiment against this form of outrage are welcome signs of the times. Outside condemnation makes little impression on a community in which mob violence is condoned by popular sentiment. When the South's natural leaders, and its women, combine to brand the crime as a disgrace to the section, results may be expected.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
April 24, 1935

HEAR MRS. AMES AT JOINT MEET

Interracial Expert Tells Status of Negro Under Phases of New Deal.

Mrs. Jessie Denial Ames, director of woman's work of the Southern Interracial commission, was the principal speaker at a joint meeting of the Young Women's Christion association and the Council of Social Agencies at the Y. W. C. A. yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Ames declared that negroes are facing new economic conditions under the New Deal and that the commission is devoting its time to efforts in working out these problems.

"Hardships have been wrought upon the negroes by the agricultural policies of the New Deal," she continued. "With the plowing up of crops and the reduction of acreage, there is less demand for negroes to work in the fields at chopping and picking cotton, ginning, hauling and loading at the docks."

She said that she favored the proposed plan of the government whereby homesteads would be arranged for jobless negroes, where they would be allowed to have their own places and work them under proper supervision.

She said that the commission has done much to educate the people of the South against lynching. "We Southern women," she said, "do not believe that lynching is necessary for the protection of southern womanhood. That excuse has been used by the white men to get absolute control over the negro."

She predicted that by 1937 anti-lynching laws will have been proposed by governors of each of the southern states.

Mrs. Ames stopped in Charlotte to deliver her address as she was on her way from Washington to her headquarters in Atlanta.

Charlotte, N. C., News
April 23, 1935

Atlantan Says Negroes Face New Problems

Interracial Commission Director Says Education To Stamp Out Lynching.

Negroes in the South are facing new economic problems under the New Deal and the Southern Interracial Commission is devoting its energies to help work out these solutions as well as to educate the populace against lynching, according to Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, director of woman's work of the commission, who was in Charlotte this afternoon.

Mrs. Ames came to Charlotte en route from Washington to her headquarters in Atlanta for the purpose of addressing a joint meeting of the Young Women's Christian association and the Council of Social agencies this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at the Y. W. C. A. building on East Trade street.

Discussing the interracial situation in the South, Mrs. Ames said that while in some communities the negroes were given the same consideration as whites in the handling of relief funds, in many communities they were given less relief because they were assumed to have lower standards of living to uphold.

Bring Hardships

"The agricultural policies of the New Deal have also wrought hardships on the negroes," she said, "for with the plowing up of cotton and other crops and the reduction of acreage, there is less demand for negroes to work chopping and picking cotton, ginning, hauling and loading cotton at docks."

Mrs. Ames said that she favored the proposed plan of the government's arranging homesteads for jobless negroes and allowing them to have their own places and work them under supervision.

"Education of the southern people in the matter of lynching is a goal of the Interracial Commission and also the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. We southern women believe that lynching is not necessary for the protection of southern womanhood and never has been. That excuse has simply been used by the white men to obtain definite control over the negroes. Women were used as a screen and such a use is definitely humiliating."

Educational Work Stressed

By educational work through churches and missionary societies, women's clubs, Y. W. C. A. groups and other women's organizations in the south, the Interracial Commission and the Association to Prevent Lynching have cooperated in the attempt to mold public opinion of the south to take a bold and definite stand against lynching under any circumstances, Mrs. Ames explained. They have also sent speakers to state associations of sheriffs and other officers and have secured the signed statements of these officers and of thousands of southern women to take every possible precaution against lynching.

Sentiemnt for the anti-lynching bill now before congress is divided, Mrs. Ames said, with many of the southern cities strongly in support of it.

"We believe, however," she declared "that by 1937 we sall have state anti-lynching bills introduced by the governors of every southern state in their own legislatures. The south can and will want to handle the situation itself."

Jacksonville, Fla., Times-Union
April 30, 1935

Anti-Lynching Group Meets This Morning

Mrs William P. Cornell, chairman of the Florida Council of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, announced last night that she had called a meeting to be held at 10:30 o'clock this morning in St. John's Episcopal Community House, 328 Market Street.

Mrs. Cornell said that she expected members of the council to assemble from various parts of Florida, in addition to all local members of the group.

ANTI-LYNCHING PLAN SUBMITTED TO CONNER

Kentucky Women Request Governors' Study

From Jackson, Miss., Bureau of The Commercial Appeal.

JACKSON, Miss., May 8.—Consideration of a proposal for the eradication of lynching by the governor's conference at Biloxi in June was suggested to Governor Conner today by the Kentucky Council of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

"The state of Mississippi has laws against lynching, and our governors have uniformly done everything in their power to prevent these unfortunate occurrences," was the attitude of the governor on the proposal.

As to the recently defeated Costigan-Wagner bill in Congress, the governor said:

"The enactment of that bill would have destroyed the last vestige of state's rights, and would have violated the fundamental principles of the federal constitution."

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

4517

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

APR 23 1935

Atlantan Says Negroes Face New Problems

Interracial Commission Director Says Education To Stamp Out Lynching.

Negroes in the South are facing new economic problems under the New Deal and the Southern Interracial Commission is devoting its energies to help work out these solutions as well as to educate the populace against lynching, according to Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, director of woman's work of the commission, who was in Charlotte this afternoon.

Mrs. Ames came to Charlotte en route from Washington to her headquarters in Atlanta for the purpose of addressing a joint meeting of the Young Women's Christian association and the Council of Social agencies this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at the Y. W. C. A. building on East Trade street.

Discussing the interracial situation in the South, Mrs. Ames said that while in some communities the negroes were given the same consideration as whites in the handling of relief funds, in many communities they were given less relief because they were assumed to have lower standards of living to uphold.

Bring Hardships

"The agricultural policies of the New Deal have also wrought hardships on the negroes," she said, "for with the plowing up of cotton and other crops and the reduction of acreage, there is less demand for negroes to work chopping and picking cotton, ginning, hauling and loading cotton at docks."

Mrs. Ames said that she favored the proposed plan of the government's arranging homesteads for jobless negroes and allowing them to have their own places and work them under supervision.

"Education of the southern people in the matter of lynching is a goal of the Interracial Commission and also the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. We southern women believe that lynching is not necessary for the protection of southern womanhood and never has been. That excuse has simply been used by the white men to obtain definite control over the negroes. Women were used as a screen and such a use is definitely humiliating."

Educational Work Stressed

By educational work through churches and missionary societies, women's clubs, Y. W. C. A. groups and other women's organizations in the south, the Interracial Commission and the Association to Prevent Lynching have cooperated in the attempt to mold public opinion of the south to take a bold and definite stand against lynching under any circumstances, Mrs. Ames explained. They have also sent speakers to state associations of sheriffs and other officers and have secured the signed statements of these officers and of thousands of southern women to take every possible precaution against lynching.

Sentiemnt for the anti-lynching bill now before congress is divided, Mrs. Ames said, with many of the southern cities strongly in support of it.

"We believe, however," she declared "that by 1937 we sall have state anti-lynching bills introduced by the governors of every southern state in their own legislatures. The south can and will want to handle the situation itself."

Perry, Fla., News
June 20, 1935

Women Are Wrong About Lynching Law

Members of the federation of women's clubs, returning from the Detroit convention revealed that the entire delegation from Florida supported birth control and anti-lynching resolutions.

We cheerfully concede that the first proposition is peculiarly within the woman's field and we have no comment to make on the stand taken by federation members.

But we regret the necessity of disagreeing with the federation on the anti-lynching bill.

The Daily Democrat has maintained a firm position for law and order and against extra legal methods of inflicting punishment upon those who offend society.

Our stand against lynching is no less firm than that of the federation of women's clubs.

But we are in sharp disagreement on the remedy suggested in a bill pending before congress and which was endorsed by the federation. This bill would penalize the taxpayers of the county where each lynching took place.

It requires but little thought to realize that such a penalty would be unfair and would fail to serve the purpose.

In the first place the membership of mobs is seldom drawn heavily from property taxpayers. Those who pay no property taxes would not be hindered by the penalty. In the second place, it is seldom possible to determine who took part in a lynching or where it was held. An example is the recent unfortunate incident in Marianna. The victim was taken from an Alabama jail and left in the Marianna court yard. Where was the victim lynched and by whom? Does anyone know?

Should the taxpayers of Jackson county be penalized for an act which may have been committed in Alabama? Or should the taxpayers of some Alabama county be penalized for an act in which their own residents had no part. — Tallahassee Democrat.

Six White Women Protest Lynching In Miss. State

JACKSON, Miss.—Following the double lynching near Columbus on July 15 six prominent white women of this state sent Governor Sennett Conner a telegram calling attention to the outbreak and expressing the conviction that if local authorities continue indifferent in such cases, federal intervention will be imperative.

"This opinion," the women said, "is growing in the South, as well as throughout the nation. Such outbreaks as that at Columbus strengthen the claim made by many people that only by federal law can lynching be eradicated. Federal intervention is necessary and inevitable, unless our public officials take a more active part in apprehending and punishing lynchers than they are doing at present."

Replying to the communication, Governor Conner assured the committee that he concurred in their views and agreed that everything possible should be done to prevent lynchings and punish lynchers. He called attention to the fact, however, that "under our system of jurisprudence persons guilty of the crime of lynching must be indicted, tried and convicted in the county where the crime occurred before they may be punished." He further stated that under Mississippi law the Governor has no authority to remove or punish any officer who does not perform his duty in this connection.

The telegram to the Governor was signed by Mrs. Lester Greer, of Potts Camp; Mrs. L. W. Alford, of McComb City; and Mrs. C. H. Alexander, Mrs. W.W. Epperson, Mrs. E. M. Weston, and Mrs. Theo D. Bratton, of Jackson, comprising the Executive Committee of the Mississippi Council of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. The Mississippi Council has a signed membership of 3,000 and is part of the Southern Association of Women for the same purpose, which has a total of 26.722 signed members.

Mobile, Ala., Press
July 19, 1935

WOMEN'S UNIT PROTESTS LYNCHING OF NEGROES

JACKSON, Miss., July 19.—(AP) The lynching of two negroes near Columbus, Miss., early this week by a mob of infuriated white citizens, today brought a storm of protest from the executive committee of the Mississippi division of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

At a call meeting of the committee here today, presided over by Mrs. Lester Greer, of Potts Camps, chairman, a telegram of protest was dispatched to Gov. Sennett Conner.

"Unless our public officials take a more active part in apprehending and punishing lynchers than they are doing at present we cannot hope to maintain our integrity as sovereign states," the telegram stated.

Commercial Dispatch
COLUMBUS, MISS.

JUL 19 1935

WOMEN OF STATE PROTEST HANGING

Double Lynching Early This Week Causes Meeting Of Mississippi Group

JACKSON, Miss., July 19—(AP)—The lynching of two negroes near Columbus, Miss., early this week by white citizens, today brought a storm of protest from the executive committee of the Mississippi division of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

At a called meeting of the committee here today, presided over by Mrs. Lester Greer, of Potts Camp, chairman, the following telegram was dispatched to Governor Sennett Conner:

"We, the executive committee of the Mississippi division of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, respectfully call your attention to the outbreak of mob violence on July 15 in Lowndes County, the fourth one in the state this year.

"These outbreaks strengthen the claim made by many people that only by federal law can lynchings be eradicated. We believe that each state is entitled to administer its own criminal law without interference by other agencies. Nevertheless we cannot fail to recognize that there is growing a national public opinion extending into the South which demands that when local authorities do not or will not punish lynchers, resort should be made to the federal courts."

Talladega, Ala. Home
July 20, 1935

PROTEST AIMED AT LYNCHING FLAREU

JACKSON, Miss., July 20.—Th lynching of two Negroes near Colum bus, Miss., early this week by a mob c infurated white citizens Friday brough a storm of protest from the executiv committee of the Mississippi Divisio of the Association of Southern Wome for the Prevention of Lynching.

At a called meeting of the committe here Friday, presided over by Mrs. Les ter Greer, of Potts Camps, chairman the following telegram was dispatche to Gov. Sennett Conner:

"We the executive committee of th Mississippi Division of the Associatio of Southern Women for the Preventio of Lynching, respectfully call your at tention to the outbreak of mob violence on July 15 in Lowndes County, the fourth one in the state this year.

"These outbreaks strengthen the claim made by many people that only by federal law can lynchings be eradi cated. We believe that each state is en titled to administer its own criminal law without interference by other a gencies. Nevertheless, we cannot fail to recognize that there is growing a national public opinion extending into the South which demands that when local authorities do not or will not punish lynchers, resort should be made to the federal courts.

"Unless our public officials take a more active part in apprehending and punishing lynchers than they are doing at present we cannot hope to maintain our integrity as sovereign states."

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
July 19, 1935

PROTEST VOICED IN LYNCHING OF TWO

Women Members of Anti-Lynching Unit Make Appeal

JACKSON, Miss., July 19—(AP)—The lynching of two negroes near Columbus, Miss., early this week by a mob of infuriated white citizens today brought a storm of protest from the executive committee of the Mississippi division of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

At a meeting of the committee here today, presided over by Mrs. Lester Greer, of Potts Camps, the following telegram was dispatched to Governof Sennett Conner.

"We, the executive committee of the Mississippi division of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, respectfully call your attention to the outbreak of mob violence on July 15 in Lowndes county, the fourth one in the state this year.

"These outbreaks strengthen the claim made by many people that by federal law lynchings can be eradicated. We believe that each state is entitled to administer its own criminal law without interference by other agencies. Nevertheless we cannot fail to recognize that there is growing a national public opinion extending into the south whcih demands that when local authorities do not or will not punish lynchers, resort should be made to the federal courts.

"Unless our public officials take a more active part in apprehending and punishing lynchers than they are doing at present we cannot hope to maintain our integrity as sovereign states."

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
JUL 22 1935

PUBLIC OPINION
on a Question a Day

QUESTION: Do you believe lynching is ever justified?

Alice Garrett, 57 E. Flagler st.: Lynching sometimes is justifiable, I think. Take a case such as the Fort Lauderdale affair, where a white woman was attacked by a negro man, lynching was too tame for him. In these days of supposed advanced intelligence and higher civilization, attacks of this nature, which bring back thoughts of the days of barbarism, are not to be condoned. And the one and only way to curb this is to resort to swift and drastic measures, such as lynching.

J. L. Harrison, 1236 Obispo ave., Coral Gables: Lynching is never justified. The law should take its course. Intelligent people nowadays do not resort to mob influence, believing and knowing that the courts of our land mete out proper justice. The negro arrested at Fort Lauderdale, and held by the sheriff, never had a chance to prove himself not guilty. He most certainly should have had a trial by jury like any other citizen, white or black.

J. T. Robertson, 258 N. W. 27th terrace: I think the law should handle situations of this nature. If the negro accused and identified by Mrs. Jones at Fort Lauderdale had confessed, then there would have been some excuse for the mob lynching. In her excitement it is quite possible she may have identified a negro who had no connection with the attack. This is why I think the law should deal with these cases, eliminating any chance of hanging the wrong person.

Jeanne King, 253 N. E. 14th st.: No; our courts are most able to carry out justice at all times, to both white and black. I think Governor Sholtz, in ordering an immediate and searching investigation of the lynching in hopes of bringing the guilty ones to justice, is doing quite the lawful thing. Acts of violence and committed in undue haste, such as the lynching of the negro at Fort Lauderdale Friday, do Florida little good.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
PRESS SCIMITAR
JUL 18 1935

'A Healthy Sign'

By JOHN QUINCY JOHNSON,
Pastor Allen Chapel
1023 N. Manassas St.

The abatement of mob law is a healthy sign of the times. For the past 40 years, in the daily press of the state, more or less on this subject I have written. The statistics of lynch law will show that in these later years it has been substantially reduced.

Nowhere has this evil in our national life been more effectively condemned than in the South. The white women of the South have, in club organizations, condemned lynching in no uncertain terms; also the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and the Southern Baptist Convention.

The national conscience has been quickened about this evil, as seen in certain bills introduced, but defeated in the Congress now in session.

The Tuskegee Year-Book took note of 13 lynchings in 1934. We are gradually moving on toward a government of law. That the states can handle the mob was shown last winter in the way Governor McAlister handled the Shelbyville, Tenn., mob. This old town is one of the best in the nation. Black and white are on the best of terms. I taught 20 years in Turner College in Shelbyville.

The United States is the most lawless nation in the world; more murders are committed than in any other civilized country. The cheapness of the negro's life has made all life cheap.

In England murderers are hanged; in the United States they escape the gallows thru legal technicalities.

Government of law, and not government by the mob, is a consummation devoutly to be wished in this our great nation.

WINSTON SALEM, N.C.
JOURNAL
AUG 1 1935

Punish the Lynchers

It is unnecessary to comment at length upon the horror, the brutality and the inmate savergy which characterized the lynching of Govan Ward, insane Negro, by a Franklin county mob. Incidents of this kind are always heinous and horrible. They bring a flush of shame to a state which had prided itself on the apparent fact that hoodlumism was at last beginning to die out within its borders.

The circumstance that the Negro victim was insane adds to the gruesome and macabre aspects of an unforgivable group murder. But the Negro was not quite so insane as that crazy mob which allowed emotion to sweep beyond the control of decency and common sense to blotch with blood the name of this State.

To this extreme in mob sadism and butchery the State must resolve to put an end. The sheriff of Franklin county has been quoted as saying that the lynching is a closed incident. Common decency demands that it not be considered as a closed incident.

Surely the sheriff and his deputies must have recognized some members of the mob that relieved them of their prisoner, else broad daylight doesn't have the virtues in Franklin that it has in Forsyth. These men should be brought into court that in this way the authorities might learn the identity of other members, the ring-leaders of that mob.

When these facts are learned the State should proceed to make an object lesson of these men to the discouragement of butchery and barbarism in North Carolina. Then and then only will the affair become a "closed incident."

That Governor Ehringhaus and Solicitor Bickett do not consider the affair closed is the most encouraging aftermath of the atrocity.

Lexington, Ga., Echo
August 1, 1935

DEPUTY PAUL COMMENDED

Deputy Sheriff John Paul is in receipt of letters from the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynchings and from the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Georgia Coference commending him highly upon his prevention of the possible lynching of the Negro Semmie Gaines who, on the morning of June 26th, slew Mrs. G. C. Goolsby and daughter, Miss Mettie, in their home near Vesta, and who after a day's man hunt by hundreds of men was caught and by strategy of Sheriff Paul was probably saved from drastic treatment by the party. Both the associations commend him highly for having "saved the state [illegible]."

Woman Defends Lynchings.

AUSTIN, Texas, Nov. 14 (AP).—A white-haired woman, protesting against demands for an investigation into the lynchings of two Negroes, shouted today:

"Nothing in the world will save Southern women from those brutes except lynching."

Unrecognized by the chair, Mrs J. R. White, of Coleman, rose at the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs Convention and assailed demands for an inquiry by Governor Allred into the hanging of two Negroes accused of assaulting and slaying a white girl at Columbus, Texas.

The demand had been voiced by Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, Ga., executive director of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching, who had said that such lynchings made the South and Texas "ridiculous."

Lynchings - 1935
& Discussions.

Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching.

4519

SAN ANGELO, TEX.
TIMES

NOV 15 1935

Coleman Club Woman Challenges Speaker Who Deplores Lynching

"Nothing In World Will Save Southern Women From Brutes Except Lynching," Mrs. White Says

AUSTIN, Nov. 14. (AP)—A lone delegate at the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs convention today protested a speaker's demands for a state investigation of a dual lynching at Columbus.

White-haired and elderly Mrs. J. R. White of Coleman arose without recognition at the conclusion of a plea to Governor Allred for an inquiry and said:

"Nothing in the world will save Southern women from those brutes (negroes) except lynching."

Mrs. Jesse Daniel Ames of Atlanta, Ga., executive director of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, demanded in a speech before the federation that Governor James V. Allred order an inquiry.

A mob of men lynched two negroes accused of criminally assaulting and murdering a young white school teacher. County Attorney O. P. Moore said he believed the action was an "expression of the will of the people."

"The county attorney's attitude being what it is," said Mrs. Ames, formerly of Georgetown, Texas, "I think the governor owes it to the state to order a speedy investigation. Such lynchings not only make the South and Texas ridiculous to other states but appear lacking in civilization."

She said absence of decisive action "makes it appear that we're helpless or don't care."

WACO, TEX.
TIMES HERALD

NOV 18 1935

HITS TEXAS LYNCHINGS

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, executive director of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynchings, in a speech at Austin, Texas, called on Governor Allred to investigate the lynching of two negroes at Columbus, Texas, and assailed the attitude of the county attorney there. (Associated Press Photo)

Corpus Christi, Tex.
CALLER

NOV 15 1935

Woman Demands Lynching Probe

Member of State Federation Asks Governor To Order Inquiry

AUSTIN, Nov. 14.—(AP)—A lone delegate at the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs convention today protested a speaker's demands for a state investigation of a dual lynching at Columbus.

White-haired and elderly, Mrs. J. R. White of Coleman arose without recognition at the conclusion of a plea to Governor Allred for an inquiry and said.

"Nothing in the world will save Southern women from those brutes (negroes) except lynching."

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, Ga., executive director of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching, demanded in a speech before the federation that Governor James V. Allred order an inquiry.

A mob of men lynched two negroes accused of criminally assaulting and murdering a young white school teacher. County Attorney O. P. Moore said he believed the action was an "expression of the will of the people."

"The county attorney's attitude being what it is," said Mrs. Ames, formerly of Georgetown, Texas, "I think the governor owes it to the state to order a speedy investigation. Such lynchings not only make the South and Texas ridiculous to other states but appear lacking in civilization."

She said absence of decisive action "makes it appear that we're helpless or don't care."

Negro Press, Northern.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

4908

16 LYNCHINGS KNOWN SO FAR FOR 9 MONTHS

Figure But Fraction Of Mobbings Says ILD

10-5-35

NEW YORK, N.Y., Oct. 4.—Sixteen lynchings, fifteen of them Race citizens, came to light during the arst nine months of 1935, according to a compilation made public last week by the national office of the International Labor Defense in this city. Half of the total number of lynchings occurred in Mississipi.

Four of the lynchings were a direct result of the terror of landlords against the Share Croppers Union.

Alabama saw three lynchings between January 1 and September 30; California, North Carolina and Florida one each; Louisiana two; and Mississippi eight.

Evidence that the lynchings that are discovered an dreported in the press are only a fraction of the lynchings that acually occur, is more abundant than ever this year, the I.L.D. announced.

The lynching of Joe Spinner Johnson, at Greensboro, Ala., was carried out with considerable secrecy, and was brought to light by friends of Johnson and by inmates of the jail where he was confined.

This lynching was not mentioned in the press until representatives of the Share Croppers Union and the International Labor Defense made the matter public; even the then the enormous majority of newspapers chose to ignore it.

That the terror of the landlords in the cotton belt was responsible for even more than the four reported lynchings, is indicated by reports from that territory. Al Jackson, secretary of the Share Croppers Union, with headquarters in Montgomery, stated in a report to the I.L.D.:

"Two unidentified bodies were found in the swanmps between one was found about five miles northwest of Fort Deposit. It is practically impossible to check up on who they were because so many local union leaders and strikers have been hiding out in the woods in fear that they would be killed on sight by the landlord thugs. The county made no attempt to find out who the dead persons were and dumped the bodies is hastily-dug graves."

The fate of John Foster, Race worker of Birmingham, is stilll a question mark. Foster went into Selma, Ala., on May 19, to investigate the whereabouts of Robert Washington, who had been arrested there and beaten by a gang. Foster was arrested after he had been in town two hours, and then released, but efforts to trace him since he stepped out of the door of the Selma jail met with little success.

Shortly afterwards two Race farmers of the locality found the dead body of a man not far from Selma. They were cautioned by the local police not to mention the matter.

The White Press

A Tennessee Lynching

THERE have been more brutally executed lynchings than that which occurred this week at White Bluff, Tenn., but rarely if ever one as brazen. The victim, a Negro accused of slapping a white woman, was taken from a deputy sheriff and another official who were enroute with their prisoner to the county jail.

The "mob" consisted of five armed men. They took the deputy's pistol but assured him that they would "be back in a few minutes and bring your gun." The promise was kept. In less than half an hour they returned and surrendered to the official. "They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he says. "They told me they shot the Negro with my gun." The sheriff placed no charge but said that they would be taken to the county seat for arraignment.

Only less shocking than the crime itself is the cheerful confidence of this quintet that the law which they boast of flouting will not punish them for it. In the history of lynchings, to be sure, they have ample assurance for such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance for such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance to a lynching mob. Seldom is there even an effort afterward to identify its members, although in the case of the ringleaders at least that should be comparatively simple. Instances in which they have been brought to trial are still more infrequent. A conviction is almost unknown.

But no mob has had the audacity to do its barbarous, bloody deed and then deliver itself to the law in the attitude of "What are you going to do about it?" The country waits to see how Tennessee will meet an unprecendented challenge. —Dayton (O.) News

"THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE"

Two Negroes were lynched in Texas Tuesday night. They were accused of murdering a white girl. The crime is alleged to have been committed on October 17. The youthful victims were being taken to the juvenile court for trial by deputy sheriffs who were overpowered by the mob consisting of about 700 including several women.

11-15-35

Of course nobody will be prosecuted. The county attorney announced that this act of barbarism was the "will of the people." Take notice Moussillini. Come over and civilize this country.

Yes, we agree with the county attorney that it was the will of the people, but are we to allow the will of some people to undermine our civilization? It is the will of Italy that its directing head prosecute an unjust war against Ethiopia but does that make it right? It is the will of the south that Negroes are disfranchised and otherwise discriminated against — and the north too in many instances— but does that make it right? No. not by a long shot.

This is the best argument in the world that our constitution and the Supreme Court are essential to the very existence of minorities for the will of the majority becomes very unjust at times.

Why the Bad Name

It is reasonable to take the word of the Tennessee daily paper, white, about the facts leading up to the lynching in that state recently. Instead of having slapped the woman as she alighted from a bus, as alleged in the story of the lynching, the Negro victim of the mob had been the woman's companion in a Negro drinking joint, where trouble arose between them. The woman took revenge in typical southern fashion.

Negroes by the hundreds of thousands in Tennessee—and other southern states—live industrious, sober, moral lives. But their good works get no attention in press or public opinion, nor earn any semblance of the equal treatment promised every citizen by federal and state constitutions. But the Negro, bad from choice or mental blight, is first page news even though others involved in his offense are not highly esteemed themselves.

11-22-35

The American habit of calling special attention to offenses by Negroes is the follow-up of the nation's need during the slave era of an excuse for its inhumanity. Having said the blacks are no good, and continued to mistreat them, it still must emphasize every shortcoming they have, and minimize every virtue.

Whatever the relations which the dominating sentiment of the South would have exist between the races, partnership violations of them should not be charged up to Negroes alone. The reasonableness of that view is admitted by southern whites, whenever they put forward fake causes of lynchings.

Heaven only knows how many Negroes have been lynched, poor fools who did not see that for them illicit relations were always a game of "heads I win and tails you lose" against them.

Other lynch victims are Negroes who resisted the invasion of their homes but whose death was heralded to the world as the result of their own sins, their confessions attested by their slayers.

Lynching, like slavery, is such an abomination to men of good sense and human impulses that its defenders realize they must besmirch its victims. Gangsters by

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

On Tuesday night, November 4th Baxter Bell, a Negro was lynched at Kingston Springs, Tennessee, charged with "slapping" a white woman. According to the Nashville Tennessean the slapping took place in a Negro drinking place where the white woman was drinking.

The lynching of Baxter is the fifteenth since January 1st and the tenth since the filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill in the United States Senate succeeded in sidetracking the bill during the last session of Congress. In addition to these known lynchings, two other Negroes were shot to death in the Gretna, Louisiana, jail on Nov. 1st. There have been several other killings which will probably be proved to be lynchings after the facts are gathered.

But leaving these aside and considering for the moment only the ten proved lynchings since the filibuster, they present a problem and a challenge to American Negroes which I ask your permission to place before your readers.

The forces fighting for passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill succeeded in tying up the Senate for eight straight days. Informed persons in Washington were unanimous in believing that had we been able to hold our lines for a few days longer the filibuster might have been broken.

Why weren't we able to hold on a few days longer? For the simple, practical reason that we did not have money enough for telegrams and stenographic service to keep up steady pressure on the wavering senators upon whom terrific pressure in the form of bribes and threats was being exerted by enemies of the anti-lynching bill. Had there been put $1500 available for such telegrams we could have held on. Because we did not have fifteen hundred dollars—just about enough to give modest funerals to the ten persons who have been lynched since the filibuster—these ten have died, and others now living will die at the hands of mobs. It may even be you.

The fight will be renewed in the next session of Congress. But unless money is available for printing, postage, telegraph and telephone bills and other necessary expenses the bill may again be defeated. Do Negro Americans really want lynching stopped? The skimpiness of their support of the fight against the evil does not seem to indicate it. The N. A. A. C. P. is laboring now under the terrific handicap of a seven thousand dollar deficit, in part caused by the fight in the last Congress. May we urge individuals churches, lodges, sororities and fraternities, women's clubs and the like to help us prepare for the coming struggle by (1) bringing pressure to bear upon their congressmen and senators; (2) getting others to do likewise; (3) making as generous a contribution as they can afford. Cheques and money orders should be sent to the N. A. A. C. P. 69 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

WALTER WHITE
Secretary N. A. A. C. P.

Use What You Have

Senator Borah's statement that if elected president he would veto an anti-lynching bill because it is unconstitutional, should set Negroes to thinking. To call him prejudiced does not save them from facing facts. All laws passed by Congress do not pass the test of the supreme court. The NRA, the key-measure of the new deal, met with disapproval. The American people agreed with the court when they condemned the President himself for asking Congress to pass other laws without first considering their constitutionality. Negroes will be frowned upon for asking the same thing and need not cry prejudice.

Three victories won in the supreme court by Negroes—over residential segregation, the all-white primary and the all-white jury—indicate that the solution of their problems may be found in legislation already tested in the courts and accepted by the American people. They may need no special laws.

Besides being quicker and surer, using present laws to get for Negroes equality as citizens has other advantages. Where an anti-lynching law would affect only lynching, the old laws cover all relationships. Law enforcement would give Negroes equal schooling, equal accommodations on common carriers, equal chance to work on public works. Discrimination against Negroes is woven into the web of American life. It would take a myriad of special laws to get it out piece-meal. Worst of all, Negroes by asking special legislation set themselves apart, the very thing they wish to do away with.

Either the Constitution requires equality before the law, or it does not! If it does, present laws will serve all Negroes' needs. If it does not, special laws will be no better enforced and prove no more successful than the basic law in giving them equality as citizens.

Prejudice could not have devised a more cunning scheme to rob Negroes of their full citizenship than to send them on a wild goose chase after special legislation. It is for them to see the trap, turn, and go after law enforcement just as the Maryland Negro did who is now studying law in the state university, because Maryland, having provided no place else for Negroes to get a law education, must admit him.

Equal treatment of all citizens is the very soul of the Constitution. With that their plea, and the 14th amendment to back them, Negroes in Missouri can do away with the present failure to provide schools for Negro children in rural districts. Wherever union labor enjoys preferential treatment on public jobs, the same effort can either force the open shop or make unions open their doors without discrimination. Law enforcement is the key to the Negro's problem, in protection for his life, enjoyment of the franchise, and opportunity for work on public jobs.

JUST A PRANK

Attention of chivalrous southern senators, who blocked passage of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, is called to what happened in White Bluff, Tenn., the other day.

A band of armed white men there seized a Negro from officers of the law, drove him to a thicket, shot him in the chest and left him to die. The victim had been charged with slapping a white woman.

The lynchers, who had borrowed the gun from a deputy sheriff named Donnelly, returned it after their deed.

"They were all laughing," Donnelly reported, "and seemed like they had enjoyed what they had done."

Lynchings-1935.

Discussions.

Negro Press, Northern.

4909

Pontius Pilate Borah

Senator William H. Borah (Republican, Idaho) declared, last week, that if elected President of the United States, he would veto such legislation as the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill.

His announcement came in reply to Walter White, of New York, secretary of the N.A.A.C.P., who is putting Presidential candidates on the spot as to their attitude on the lynching question. 11-30-35

Senator Borah's attitude in the Senate on lynching is well known. His misguided speech in opposition to the bill on technical grounds, while undoubtedly sincere, came at the critical moment which swayed many Senators to vote to sidetrack it.

The death of the measure in the last Congress was, therefore, due to Senator Borah more than to any other single individual who, like Pontius Pilate, turned colored Americans over to the mobs to be lynched, although he found no fault in them.

Senator Borah's constitutional sensitiveness to States' rights and legal technicalities would, we presume, never permit him to approve the Lindbergh kidnaping law or the organization of G-Men who, operating in the States, have assisted in breaking up crime and rackets.

To Senator Borah the Constitution is everything, and human welfare nothing. Faced with the job of halting lynching, kidnaping and crimes, with which States are unable to cope, Senator Borah says we must first amend the Constitution.

President Roosevelt, not so finicky about the Constitution and States' rights, put G-Men on the trail of kidnapers and criminal big shots, and announced that if Congress would pass the anti-lynching bill, he would sign it and enforce it.

Between Pontius Pilate Borah as Republican candidate for President and Franklin D. Roosevelt, carrying the Democratic banner, Walter White's N.A.A.C.P. will loudly thump for F. D. Mr. White's reminder to Senator Borah that colored people want lynching stopped and that they hold the balance of power in many States was no cock-a-hoop boasting.

Pontius Pilate Borah's retort that, if President, he would veto any anti-lynching bill is not vaporous bombast either.

By inference, the Senator is saying he doesn't care a piffle about the vote of colored people or the way they are lynched.

The Senator has spoken quite plainly and honestly, we think, and we ought to thank him for it. At the same time, Mr. White will be telling the national Republican leaders that they cannot win with Borah, and that is plain honesty too.

LYNCH BOYS ON WAY TO TRIAL

Record

COLUMBUS, Texas, Nov. 15.—(Special)—The dead bodies of two young colored boys were cut from the limb of an old oak tree Thursday, hastily stuffed into crude pine boxes and thrown into gaping holes more than thirty-six hours after their lives had been mercilessly snuffed out as the latest sacrifice to the savagery of blood-thirsty Southerners. They were seized while on their way here for trial.

Despite the fact that reports of the blood-curdling lynching were broadcast throughout the country within a few hours, Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and Coroner Thrower permitted the revolting spectacle to remain in public view obviously to satisfy the morbid passion of the local townspeople.

The two youths, Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, both under 17 years of age, were seized by a mob of 500 whites at Altair, 11 miles south of here Tuesday night and hanged to the oak tree, a mile from the home of a young white girl whom they were accused of slaying Oct. 17. A third youth, said as an accomplice, so far has not been found by the mob who immediately went in search of him to have been named by the boys after severly beating and lynching Mitchell and Collins.

No Confirmed Confessions

Reports that the boys confessed the killing of the young white girl have not been verified. The boys are alleged to have attacked and killed the girl, Miss Geraldine Kollman, 19, after she came upon them in her father's pasture and accused them of stealing pecans. Her body was found floating in a nearby creek by her brother and it was at first believed that she had drowned. Not a single clue has been found which would connect the boys with the alleged crime. In fact, even the story of an alleged attack is based upon flimsy evidence.

The girl was very popular here and the uncorroborated story of a brutal murder in connection with her death stired considerable feeling. Wild rumors quickly connected the colored boys with the affair.

Same Old Story

The Sheriff Hoegemeyer repeated the threadbare tale told thousands of times during the history of America's lynch craze. He said, though he was heavily armed and accompanied by several deputies, the mob, then only a handful of men, overpowered him after stopping his automobile as he drove over the Colorado River at Altair, and pulled the boys from the car. He admitted he made no effort to stop them. He added the mob left seven cars on the bridge to keep him from following them.

As far as could be learned and as usually happens, no investigation to find the lynchers and bring them to justice will be made.

Negro Press, Northern.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

4910

HOME IS WORTH DYING FOR

Louisiana started the new year in accustomed style. It lynched a Negro last week. To get their man, the mob invaded a jail and shot him down in his cell. He had been found guilty of killing a deputy sheriff and sentenced to hang, but the state supreme court intervened and granted him a new trail. The mob refused to be denied its victim.

Anyone familiar with conditions knows this must have been a flagrant case of official tyranny or the clearest act of self-defense for a southern court to save from the gallows a Negro who had killed a white man.

One needs no other proof than the action of the Louisiana supreme court to understand how innocent this Negro was of crime. Negroes do get an even break in the courts there. The trial and conviction must have been unconscienceably irregular and unjust for the superior court to set it aside.

It is easy to imagine what happened. A Negro farmer to whom an official would go "investigating livestock inspection" must have been of the thrifty sort, an industrious worker who had made his time and efforts count, the last man to get into trouble. To his home comes this deputy, doubly domineering because to his race superiority inflation had been added a bit of authority.

Had the deputy gone to a white farmer, he would have carried the thought that here is one of the voters who has a part in making or breaking his political fortunes. But this was a Negro, whose feelings and interests were of no concern. No explanation, only a blunt order which the bewildered Negro did not comprehend.

A man's home is his castle, says the law, and he has a right to prevent the entrance of anybody except he comes with the proper authority. Being the law, it follows that experience has proven this safeguard to be for the good of society. But the deputy, imbued with the South's contempt for Negroes, would think his word of mouth sufficient authority where it was a Negro's home. A word, a blow, a shot. Two families, the one black and the other white, are involved in a tragedy all because some southerners refuse to treat Negroes as Americans.

If the results of the mob's act were not ghastly, it would be amusing to read how it stole into the jail at three o'clock Thursday morning and took possession of the keys without the sheriff becoming aware of their presence. They were late arriving. They were due to be on the job Monday night, immediately after the state supreme court let it be known that the Negro was not to be hanged. Maybe they hanged him because he was one of those "uppity" Negroes. The very idea of any black man appealing from the decision of a white jury.

The blood of martyrs is the seed of man's advancement. This Negro's death will inspire other Negroes to defend their homes. It will be costly, but it will be worth it. Tyranny, whether based on race or class, is abhorrent to wholesome community life. Every black man who refuses to submit to it will be greater than Patrick Henry whose faith was only a speech, "Give me liberty or give me death." Negroes will give their lives for theirs.

It is the vogue to write into the history of the United States that Negroes are a docile people, who have not enough spirit to resent anything. Even their sympathetic natures which caused them to protect the families of their masters away fighting to continue slavery, is interpreted as cowardice. Yet the truth is that Negroes are the sons of the greatest fighting peoples that ever trod the earth. Their record in the wars of this country is of a piece with what they did in their homeland, Africa. There, tribe after tribe took the field in battle against European soldiers armed with modern rifles, though they had only shields and spears, and died to a man rather than surrender. Even the slaves brought to this country were captured by treachery more than by might. Negroes have nothing in their ancestry to give anyone the basis for calling them cowards.

Talladegans Adopt Plea Against Lynching As A Memorial To R. L. Vann

Dedicated as a memorial to Assistant Attorney General Robert L. Vann, the Talladega Chapter of the American Scottsboro Committee at Talladega College, Talladega, Ala., adopted the following resolution:

"Justice is usually symbolized by scales which are exactly balanced, the weight on one side being equal to that on the other. In every human heart there must be a yearning for justice and a recognition that sooner or later honest effort is rewarded." This then, is the passion of more than 120,000,000 Americans.

The records indicate, however, that there has been a startlin miscarriage of justice in this "Land of the Free and Home of the Brave;" that Americans who have been "endowed by their Creator, with certain unalienable Rights, to wit, Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness," can no longer regard these verities with any de-

The lynchings of 5,068 human beings in the United States since 1882 with less than a dozen convictions, and, moreover, the fact that in each of these cases, only nominal prison terms were given the lynchers, and, furthermore, during the year, 1934, the total number of lynchings was 18, bring into the picture America's major crime — LYNCHING, which is a travesty on justice in our country.

It is our desire to prevent the further miscarriage of justice in these United States and to that end we join hands with more than 42,000,000 people in this country, who are members of organizations representing the church, school, labor and other groups sponsoring for enactment, anti-lynching legislation.

We, the undersigned, respectfully urge that the President and members of both Houses of Congress, place on the list of preferred, immediate and indispensable legislation during the present Session of Congress and strive untiringly for its enactment, the COSTIGAN-WAGNER ANTI-LYNCHING BILL. "Such action will mean unfaltering devotion to the common good and will serve best to bring JUSTICE, SECURITY AND HAPPINESS to the PEOPLE of our COUNTRY and the WORLD."

Respectfully submitted:

CHAS. HENRY HAYNES
PETER COOPER
EDWARD SAYLER
JULIUS MORAN, Secretary
L. P. O'HARA
CHARLES W. QUICK
ALMA SMITH
LELIA T. GARDNER
EARL C. SEABRON
FREDERIC A. RANSOM

Exhibit on Lynching Opens in New York

NEW YORK—An exhibit called "An Art Commentary on Lynching," will open here February 15 at the Jacques Seligman Galleries, 16 East 51st Street, under the sponsorship of a group of distinguished persons of both races. It will close March 2.

Included in the exhibit will be oils, sculpture, black-and-white and photographs all on the subject of lynching. A long list of colored and white artists has submitted pieces for the exhibit, including Hale Woodruff, E. Simms Campbell, Thomas Benton, John Steuart Curry and Julius Block.

SOLONS HEAR OF LYNCHING

Civic Club Asks Legislature to Memorialize Congress

A public hearing on a petition to the Massachusetts Legislature to memorialize Congress in behalf of an anti lynching law was held Wednesday morning at the State House. The petition was filed by Representaive Samuel A. Cohen on behalf of the Roxbury Civic Club.

Atty. Joseph S. Mitchell, the president of the Club, presented the petition. The speakers in favor of the petition were George E. Gordon, David E. Lane, Atty. John T. Lane and William N. Goodman, members of the Roxbury Civic Club.

Rep. Cohen and Rep. Abraham I. Zimon, Atty. John S. R. Bourne, Attorney William W. Lark, Arthur R. Hall, Alfred Baker Lewis of the Socialist Party; Mr. Mullinger of the Communist Party; Prof. James Humphrey Murphy Sheldon, Committee of Independent Political Action; and a descendant of a GAR veteran—all spoke on various aspects of lynching and the urgent necessity for an appropriate Federal Law to curb this barbarous national scourge.

Opposition to the petition was presented by Eben W. Burnstead of 70 Mora Street, Dorchester. Mr. Burnstead whose has offices at 45 Bromfield Street, represented the Mass. Civic Alliance. He gave a long harangue on the South's pet argument "States' Rights."

SAYS LYNCHING IS AMERICA'S SHAME

James W. Johnson, poet, author, lecturer and former consul to three countries, addressed the House of Representatives at the afternoon session, Thursday. The speaker was introduced to the legislature by Rep. S. A. Stockwell, member of the 32nd district (Hennepin County).

He began his address by telling of the Negroe's struggle in America since the landing of the first twenty slaves, two years before that of the Pilgrims. "The Negro," he said "has always been a part of America and will continue to be, he has contributed much to its advancement. Built your cities, homes, tilled your fields, hewed down your forest and in time of war answered the call to arms" continuing he said, "white

J. Weldon Johnson

America should and must if it intends to advance forward, remove the obstacles and acknowledge that the Negro of which I am a part is an important part of our country and civilization."

Condemns Lynching

"In no other civilized country are human beings lynched. It is America's Shame." He then, in striking words gave a vivid picture of lynchings and how they torture their victims by giving the facts of the lynching of a young Negro boy at Estil Springs, Tenn. "Lynching is a dastardly act for any people to commit, while you may not have such occurrences in Minnesota, you as the lawmakers of this great state should go on record, letting the rest of the states know that you are against lynching."

Mr. Johnson was given a tremendous ovation at the close of his address. The galleries were filled almost to capacity. He addressed the weekly Convocation at the U. of M., Thursday noon and spoke before a large crowd Thursday evening at the St. Paul Y. W. C. A.

Lynching Books

Mollie V. Lewis, writing in January Metropolitan, describes the scene in Berlin in 1932 at the height of the anti-Jewish revolution.

The place was the public square before the University of Berlin. Papers had [illegible] announced the burning of the books of Jews and Communists.

Hitler and his associates worked the crowd up to a frenzy. Works of Einstein, Freud, Marx, Lenin, Walter White, James Weldon Johnson, Upton Sinclair, Engels and Mann were tossed on the blaze. Miss Lewis saw this picture:

> Around the bonfire, uniformed figures are shrieking and leaping in the air like madmen. . . . The mob is becoming aroused. . . . Some of the faces are not pretty to behold. . . . A savage roar goes up from the mob. Books are dumped on the fire. The roar—its savagery, its barbaric triumph—startles me.
>
> Suddenly I am afraid. I have never seen a lynching. I had never visualised one in mind. But in this moment, I know, to the minutest detail, what one is like.

Mob spirit in Germany is much like that of the United States. There they burn books, here they burn people.

LYNCHING ON THE RUN

Under the triple attack of sheriffs who protect their prisoner, governors who direct state troops to shoot into the mob, and individuals who go before Congress with their condemnation of lynching, the great American pastime is losing ground. All its pretended respectability is disappearing. No longer does any Senator Tillman speak in defense of it.

Even newspapers, the barometer of public opinion, are less disposed to excuse it. The slogan, "Lynch law must go", raised a generation ago by John Mitchell, the veteran Negro publisher of Virginia, and spread to the four corners of the earth by the diligent efforts of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, has taken root in all men's minds. Never has an anti-lynching law been so probable of passage, never has it been more likely of enforcement as now.

The United States invites the world's ridicule by its lynchings. In its Constitution it declares that no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted, but by custom it commits Negroes to the flames, carries away their bones as souvenirs, and in all respect imitates head hunters. Its revolting practices are even the subject of books being sold among Asiatic peoples.

The American church, school and home represent the majority, but the pistol, the rope and the fire of cowards who run in packs typify the American citizen about whom the world is hearing the most.

Mob Got Wrong Man in Neal-Lynching, Belief

PENSACOLA, Fla.—Last week, the father of Lola Cannidy, white girl whom Claude Neal was accused of murdering and for which crime he was lynched by a mob, was sentenced to five years in prison for an allegedly murderous attack on his niece, Dora King, white.

Testimony at the trial revealed that the father of Lola Cannidy believes that she met her death at the hands of white men.

Johnson Defends Selling of Life to Inhuman Mobs

NEW YORK—While expressing no fears that his group would indulge in revolutionary measures in mass, even though it labored under great prejudicial disadvantages, James Weldon Johnson, asserted that he approved of "selling one's life at the highest possible price when attacked by a brutal mob."

Speaking at the Ford Hall, Sunday, Mr. Johnson, professor of creative literature at Fisk University, asserted that the masses are not thinking of any sort of revolution by force. The difference in thought, he said, is along the lines of whether the race shall voluntarily isolate itself, or continue persistently trying to become an integral part of the nation.

Wary of Communists

The speaker declared that he did not believe that the citizens have a tendency toward Communism, but if they do, the party would have to be made up partly of Americans from sections where lynchings now take place. He asserted that his group would be far worse off than at present if it were to bring on itself the antagonism raised by Communism in addition to the prejudices it now suffers.

He urged his listeners to show no friendliness to Fascism, which he considered similar to the spirit they have had to live under in the South since the abolition of slavery. In conclusion, Dr. Johnson exhorted the group not to forget that all white America is not against us, and to demand our common rights as citizens along with other Americans.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Northern.

4912

NORTH CAROLINA OFFICIALS SENT NAMES OF LOUISBURG LYNCHERS

Investigator Charges Officials Cooperated With Lynchers; National Guardsman Said To Have Cut Off Man's Toe As Souvenir

Sensational disclosures of the circumstances of the lynching of Govan "Sweat" Ward in broad daylight at Louisburg, N. C., on July 30th which were made by an N. A. A. C. P. investigator were forwarded this week by the N. A. A. C. P. to Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus of North Carolina and Solicitor W. Y. Bickett. The N. A. A. C. P. investigator, a Southern white man, reveals in his report the names of nine members of the mob of twenty-five to thirty who lynched Ward at Louisburg at eleven o'clock in the forenoon. Among the alleged lynchers are several county and city officials.

A second startling disclosure made by the N. A. A. C. P. is that a member of the National Guard, sent to Louisburg to prevent the lynching and restore order, is reported to have cut a toe from Ward's foot as a grisly souvenir. Members of the National Guard sent to Louisburg from Henderson, N. C., arrived after the lynching had taken place.

Ward Insane

The investigator's report reveals that Ward was known to be insane and had had frequent spells of violence. The N. A. A. C. P. charges that the State of North Carolina is indirectly responsible for the homicidal attacks made by Ward prior to his death on his female cousin and two men, one of whom he killed, in that the State should have long since placed Ward in an institution for the insane. Further evidence of Ward's mental state is given in the N. A. A. C. P. investigator's report which tells how Ward after having struck Charles G. Stokes, a white farmer, with a brick as Stokes worked in his tobacco field, returned to his cousin's home, got an axe with which he returned to the field and cut off the head of Stokes. Ward then took the severed head to his own home, wrapped it in bed clothing and then took a seat in the yard, placing the head by him, in which position he was found when officers arrived to arrest him.

Negroes Did Not Participate

The published reports that Negroes joined in the lynching mob were characterized by the N. A. A. C. P. investigator as "entirely false." The investigator attributes this report to the fact that a Negro did aid in the arrest of Ward. In calling Governor Ehringhaus' attention to this phase, Walter White, secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., cited the charge frequently made that if Negroes would help arrest other Negroes charged with crime and cease shielding Negro criminals there would be fewer lynchings and better race relations. "But here is an instance; Mr. White reminded Governor Ehringhaus "which is unfortunately neither the first nor, we fear, the last, where a Negro did help apprehend a Negro charged with crime only to see him put to death in broad open daylight."

Convictions Impossible

"It is impossible to convict anyone before a jury from that county on account of public opinion", the N. A. A. C. P. investigator states. "The officials of Franklin County were either a part of the mob or in sympathy with it. The local paper justified the act. Solicitor W. Y. Bickett of Raleigh held an investigation using the local legal channels but nothing can be done through that procedure. He was sincere in deploring the deed. The important papers of the State, such as the Raleigh News & Observer, the Raleigh Times and the Greensboro Daily News, were outspoken in their criticism of the local officials." Governor Ehringhaus censured the local officials for neglect of duty.

Mr. White also wrote again to Senator Josiah W. Bailey, one of the leaders of the filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner bill, with whom there has been an acrimonious exchange of correspondence recently. The Ward lynching and the fact that participants in it are now known is cited by Mr. White to Senator Bailey as further proof of the fact that lynching cannot be stopped without Federal action. "Do you still maintain," Mr. White asked Senator Bailey, "that Federal aid to honest state, county and municipal officials is unnecessary?"

Roosevelt Supplied With Louisburg Lynching Facts

Calling attention to the fact that Senator Josiah W. Bailey, a member of his pary and a leader in the filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner bill, has threatened that he will filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill whenever it is brought up, President Roosevelt was supplied by the N. A. A. C. P., with the facts of the lynching of Govan Ward at Louisburg, N. C., on July 30.

The President is asked by Walter White, secretary of the N. A. A. C. P. "what steps you as President and your administraton will take in the next session of the seventy-fourth Congress to insure a vote upon the Costigan-Wagner bill?"

Houston Hammers Bailey

Inquiring "whether there are any circumstances whatsoever under which North Carolina will take action against a lyncher" Charles H. Houston, special counsel of the N. A. A. C. P. on Friday, forwarded to Senator Josiah W. Bailey, one of the leaders in the filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner Bill, a report from North Carolina of the refusal of officials to ask for the return of a lyncher who, troubled by his conscience, offered to return to stand trial.

The report, which is confirmed in a news item in the High Point (N. C.) Enterprise of August 19th, tells of the receipt by Carteret county officers of a letter from A. F. Taylor, now of Cortez, Florida, in which Taylor stated that he had participated in a lynching at Beaufort (N. C.) thirty-five years ago. Taylor asserted that he had become religious and was being troubled by his conscience. He volunteered to return for trial and punishment if officers wanted him. According to the North Carolina paper the officers "decided it was useless to accept his offer."

The man lynched was Louis Patrick who was shot and hanged for the the alleged slaying of Elijan Weeks, a merchant.

It is the Association's intention to offer no quarter to the filibusterers against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill

EDITORIAL OF THE WEEK

OUR RAW DEAL

(California Eagle)

IF you were one of the thousands of Negroes who climbed aboard the Roosevelt bandwagon during the last presidential campaign expecting, as did millions of others, for Roosevelt to wave a magical wand and transport us all safely over Jordan, you have probably known as much disappointment as the rest of us.

Since this was not our first time voting or listening to proverbial 'grains of salt', yet knowing the background of our President, and the humanitarian views held by his first family, we had hoped that the cries of minority groups would at least receive an impartial hearing.

Many groups have long since flaunted the flowery promises Roosevelt made during pre-election days in his face. Because we are trusting to a fault, we, for the most part have kept silent, hoping that our turn would come pretty soon. In the face of recent happenings, both faith and patience are at low ebb.

We had hoped that the President, given more power than any other peace time president, would carry on such programs, and aid such legislation as to further the cause of Americanism.

America, one of the leading world powers, and destined, because of its strategic position to be the deciding power in the world affairs, can never hope to gain the respect of the civilized world while she allows her citizens to revel in the barbarian practice of LYNCHING.

Only last week did we receive a sharp rebuke from Mussolini on the threatening Italo-Ethiopian conflict when Americans protested the Italian invasion, we were told by Il Duce to stop lynching in America before we began worrying about Ethiopia.

The President personally went to bat for all his pet theories and programs, but when sympathetic Congressmen battled day and night for the passage of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching bill, our President never once raised his voice.

Sometimes silence is more eloquent than speech and by his silence, Mr. Roosevelt did much to sway spineless Congressmen against the bill.

Lynchings have increased under the Roosevelt Administration. Each year the toll mounts higher and higher. Mob law is dangerous! Dangerous to nations as well as to the individaul. Mob law not only has wrecked communities—Mob Law has wrecked Nations!

We expected for our President to exterminate this evil, if not exterminate it, we certainly expected him to speak out against it.

It is time for us to take stock!

What has the New Deal handed us?

Aside from a few political appointments, segregated C. C. C. Camps, further disfranchisement of Texas Negroes in the primary elections, and a few cans of government beef, we have received very little.

We owe the New Deal nothing!

WILL HE ACT THIS TIME

This picture was taken in the state capitol at Nashville in August when a committee from the National Bar Association called at the executive mansion to thank Governor Hill McAlister (indicated by arrow) for calling out troops to prevent a lynching. Now Governor McAlister is being petitioned to order a direct and thorough investigation into the lynching of Baxter Bell, murdered at White Bluffs, Monday.

SHOTGUN CIVILIZATION

The public press of North Carolina rises with the usual promptness and proficiency of the mob propaganda institution to contend that the lynchings in Mississippi, and in fact throughout the south are caused largely by "law's delays". An examination however, of this defense not only proves the contention utterly false but introduces another aspect pertinent to the situation of those who are to execute the laws.

If a defendant is to be tried by judge and jury as the law says he should be tried, is he to be hurriedly tried without giving due consideration to the evidence presented? If so his trial is a farce and he is in fact as well off in the hands of one mob as another. If he is not permitted to have proper counsel to choose the proper judge before whom he desires to be tried through a process or change of venue, providing he believes that the judge before whom his case has been docketed, cannot give him a fair and impartial trial, he still is in the hands of a mob.

If he is denied the right to examine the jurors who are to hear his case and question them upon their oath as to their ability to give him a fair and impartial hearing, he is still in the hands of the mob. It would appear that the law's delay is not the cause of lynchings in the south. The cause is rather to be found in the conscious disrespect of law and order of the southern white man when the interest of black people are at stake.

Shotgun civilization will continue to exist in the south until the south has undergone a mental and spiritual regeneration. It is a state of mind and not law which needs to be changed.

Inexcusable Killings

The Tennessee mob which killed a Negro this week for "insulting" a woman is a case in point proving how supersensitive the South is where contacts, usual in civilization and unavoidable in communities, take place across the color line. The story of this lynching relates that the "insult" took place as she alighted from a bus, circumstances which make it very clear that whatever the man did, his was no sex offense. The lynchers might as well have said they killed him "for cause," that vague charge used to get rid of men in public office when their superiors want to dismiss them but lack sufficient reason.

Many is the lynching which has occurred where the victim was said to have been guilty of "insult." The choice of the word "insult" is a deliberate attempt to convict the Negro of grave offense, when none exists and the lynchers are forbidden by circumstances to cry rape, attempted rape, murder or some other grave crime. They fall back on "insult" because they know that the American people will imagine the grossest sex offenses.

Any lynching is bad enough. But this excuse is worse, because it proves that the lynchers know they had no justification. A robber who specializes on blowing safes is "insulted" if classed along with a pickpocket or confidence man. A gambler deems it insult to be charged with welching on his bets. Women are "insulted" under a wide range of circumstances. The one great contribution to respect for law in the South is the declaration made public by a group of prominent southern white women that their womanhood did not need lynching as a defense.

Maybe this victim of the Tennessee mob was clumsy and jostled the woman as she alighted from the bus. The sorrow of the victim's relatives, the break down of law, the abandonment of common sense and the deliberate faking of a justification for the lynching are debts to the future which Tennessee and the South are too blind to see that they must pay. Killing without excuse is what lynching for "insult" amounts to, a state of lawlessness and inhumanity that horrifies fair minded men everywhere regardless of their attitude toward the Negro.

White Woman Who Caused Lynching Was With Negro

NEW YORK, — The alleged "slapping" of a white woman, for which Baxter Bell was lynched at White Bluff, Tenn., on November 1, took place the N. A. A. C. P. learned today, in a Negro drinking establishment on Highway No. 1, in Dreatham County, Sunday night, according to preliminary reports made to the N. A. A. C. P. The Negro, who the woman claims slapped her is said to have been intoxicated.

No attempts at vengeance were made by any white persons, including relatives of the woman, until after Bell had been taken into custody on a warrant sworn out on Monday, and deprived of all means of defense, either by himself or by any other Negro.

The woman's husband and four other relatives, who voluntarily surrendered to the police, are being held the authorities of the law apparently having no other recourse since the men gave themselves into the custody of the officers.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Northern.
3

4913

NEW YORK WOMEN ON LYNCHING.

The New York State Women's Democratic News is a monthly published in Manhattan. Its president and editor is Mrs. Daniel O'Day, whose highly esteemed friend, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, is a regular contributor. In its current issue the leading editorial is devoted to discussion of the Senate filibuster against the anti-lynching bill. Views on the subject are enunciated with such courage, vigor and compelling candor that they are gladly republished herewith:

We want to talk to you this month about the defeat of the anti-lynching bill. It had the ardent support of the Junior Senator of New York, Hon. Robert F. Wagner, and the Congresswoman-at-large, Mrs. O'Day. Many of us feel that in this session it should have been possible to pass this bill. It would have accomplished very little in eliminating the evil but at least it would have been a step in the right direction and it cannot be that any of us really want lynching to go on. Of course, in some southern States they are so actuated by the feeling of fear of the bad Negro that they seem to forget that there are hundreds of thousands of good ones whom it is nothing short of crime to treat as they are treated at present.

To have this bill finally laid aside because certain southern Senators insisted on filibustering to prevent its coming to vote is one of those injustices which make us feel that our particular form of government is not always representative of the true feelings of the people of the country as a whole, or even of the majority of the people that some of these representatives claim to represent.

Lynching is a blot on our national honor and means that in the States where it occurs people haven't yet learned to abide by the law and to insist on justice to all men, no matter what color they may be or what creed they may profess. Until we do this in every State in the Union we cannot feel really secure that we ourselves will recive justice. In our own State there is little chance that this law would matter to us any way or the other, but we are a part of the whole United States and therefore we feel that our people, men and women alike, should make it their business to try to influence their friends and relatives to think this whole situation out and begin to take such steps as are necessary for the elimination of lynching as a form of justice.

What a refreshing, heartening editorial? No pussyfooting, straddling or qualifying. Not only do the sponsors of The New York State Women's Democratic News make themselves perfectly clear in their unalterable stand against lynching, but they voice criticism of the short-sighted, unfair policy of condemning an entire race for the questionable acts of a few. That paragraph making ironical reference to representative government should be read and re-read by every member of Congress.

The white Americans who believe the Negro should enjoy the full protection of the law as provided by the Constitution are many. But very few are articulate when it comes to championing the race's cause publicly. One political demagogue can attract more attention and more conspicuously get into the headlines by viciously attacking the Negro than 100 sympathizers who are reluctant about getting into a free-for-all discussion on the race question.

It, therefore, is a unique and gratifying experience to read in print what the Democratic women of New York think about lynching, filibustering and representative government. They do not care what others of divergent views may think of what they think.

Penna. Legislator Seeks New Curb on Mob Violence

(Special to the AFRO)

HARRISBURG, Pa.—A legislative measure that would authorize citizens to petition the attorney general to appoint an attorney to supersede the district attorney, in lynching cases and other crimes and outrages, has been postponed by the Pennsylvania House of Representatives.

In explaining the bill to members of the house before action to postpone it was taken, Representative Reising, white, sponsor of the bill said:

Purpose Explained

"The purpose of this bill is to set up an arrangement by which our citizens will have some means of getting protection when there has been an outrage committed upon them, after the district attorney of the particular county and the judge or judges of the county refuse to take action.

He cited a recent occurrence in Beaver County, in which four truck loads of innocent persons were forcibly ejected on a deserted highway, in the Green County line in the middle of a cold winter night, with orders to get out and stay out of Beaver County, as an example of the need for such a provision.

Representative Sowers, white, of Philadelphia, said twenty petitioners—the number suggested by Reising—was too small a portion of the population of his section to use influence in this manner. Mr. Reising then postponed the bill.

Predicts Lynch Bill Shelving Will Cost Democrats Black Vote

Noted Washington Writer Says G. O. P. Will Make It Campaign Issue

WASHINGTON, D. C.—In his May 10 dispatch, Rodney Dutcher noted Washington correspondent for NEA Service, predicts that the shelving of the Costgan-Wagner anti-lynching bill will be used effectively by the Republican party to woo the Negro voter back into its ranks and may conceivably result in the Democratic loss of eight pivotal states in the 1936 Presidential election.

"A Northern senator high in the Democratic councils," he writes, remarked privately after the burial of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill by a southern filibuster that if the 1936 election were close the episode might cost his party eight or ten important states.

"He referred to the fact well-known among politicians that the Negro vote can exert a balance of power in certain states—Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland are usually named—in close contests.

"The best qualified guessers estimate that the Negro vote went 85 per cent for Roosevelt in 1932, whereas perhaps 80 per cent in previous election years had been cast for the Republican ticket.

"Negroes are more concerned as a group with lynching than with any other issue. Democratic politicians now anticipate a Republican drive to convince them that their worst enemies' control the Democratic party.

"The southern filibusters, however, were more worried about their own jobs than about national complications".

Illinois to Retire Senator Dieterich at Next Election

Afro American 6-8-35

Senator Who Opposed the Anti-Lynch Bill on Way Out, NAACP Says.

HE SPELLS NEGRO WITH A SMALL "N"

Senator Still Thinks Most Lynchings Justified.

CHICAGO — The relegating of Senator William H. Dieterich, (Dem., Ill.) into political oblivion for his opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is forecast by Irving C. Mollison, president of the Illinois NAACP, following an exchange of correspondence with the legislator.

In an attempt to clarify his position, some time ago, the senator wrote to A. C. MacNeal, member of the NAACP board of directors, that he was "emphatically not in favor of paying $10,000 of taxpayers' money to the family or descendants of a person lynched for a serious crime."

In his reply, Mr. MacNeal said in part:

"It was presumed from the first that you as a former judge, coming from a small town which in sentiment differs but little from small southern town in respect to mob murder, would appreciate that the provision for a $10,000 penalty was for the specific purpose of forcing the apathetic but 'good citizens' to a proper interest in preventing the usurping of the orderly process of law.

Uses Small "N"

"In passing, we must call your attention to the fact that you spelled 'Negro' with a small 'n.' Would you have done the some in the case of the German?

"We trust that your 'judgment' never extends to sponsoring legislation calling for the piercing out of the eyes of all persons of foreign parentage, and hope that no matter what 'your position and judgment' are in respect to the Costigan-Wagner Bill, that you will insist on it being acted upon before the close of the current session of Congress.

"You probably resent deeply the fact that the United States has in the past paid the Italian and Mexican governments large sums for the mob-murder of their citizens. Do you place less value on the life of an American than you do on that of citizens of foreign countries who happen to reside in America?"

Senator on Way Out

Regarding the situation, Mr. Mollison had the following to say, last week:

"Although Senator Dieterich pretends that he is not in favor of the mob taking the administration of justice into its own hands yet he plainly shows that he condones lynching in cases of crimes which are revolting enough to excite a mob to commit murder.

"We do not care anything about what Senator Dieterich may say about us. The senator is on his way out of public office and we will personally see that the colored people of Illinois are sufficiently informed of his apparent condonation of lynchings that they will rise as one body and send him into political oblivion which he so richly deserves.

Look Forward to Defeat

"Like all one-termers, the senator is apparently free to disregard the disposition of his constituents. His acts impress us with the fact that no man ought to be allowed to retain an office for six years without some provision being made for his removal. We look forward with great pleasure to the defeat of Senator Dieterich, when and if he ever presents himself to the people of Illinois for public office."

Lynching Is Still A Substitute For Justice In South

Chicago Defender

Chicago Illinois

7-18-35

Passage of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill by the present Congress may not have changed the report of the International Labor Defense for the first six months of this year which declares that at least six members of the Race have been ruthlessly lynched.

It is certain that the legislation would not have changed the intent or temper of the southern white man in regard to a member of the Race charged with any crime involving a member of the opposite race.

There would still be lynchings. There will always be lynchings. We have murders notwithstanding the strict penalties incurred. The Lindbergh Law is effective but still there are kidnapings. Yes, there will always be lynchings.

It is also vain to look forward to the day when the races will dwell in complete and Utopian harmony in this country. Some whites will always hate some blacks even if all the panaceas propounded by students of race relations were applied.

But in spite of this dark picture—one of the mangled, mutilated bodies of six black men who even were they guilty deserved at least not their fate but a legal road thereto—in spite of all that, passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill would give to the many million other members of the Race a feeling that such desecrations of human rights do not have the sanction of the government to whom they are asked to be loyal and look to for protection.

The lynchings are just as much the crimes of that narrow-minded bloc of congressmen who defeated the bill as they are the crimes of mobs which drowned, hanged and shot six black men. In the ultimate, responsibility for the lynchings rests on the shoulders of the citizenry which placed the pro-lynch congressmen in office.

The 1935 lynch rate of one per month (and there have probably been more) should be the strongest brief in favor of some legislation which will seek legal redress for such barbarisms.

ELEVEN LOSE LIVES

Eleven members of the Race have been victims of social strife in this country during the first six months of this year, according to the figures of the International Labor Defense.

Six of the 11 were victims of southern mob violence. Four of the known six lynchings occurred in Mississippi, while the other two are accredited to Louisiana. Tennessee was incidentally involved in one of the lynchings. Ab Young, one of the victims was captured by a mob in Rossville, Tenn., and carried across state lines to Slayden, Miss., where the lynching occurred.

Only in one of the six lynchings was the customary charge of rape invoked as justification for the crime. Another of the victims had been convicted of murdering a white sheriff. Three others were lynched because of fights they had had with whites. Direct provocation for the lynching of the sixth is not known.

The other five, according to the Crusader News Agency, met their deaths "in struggles for better economic and social conditions." Four of the five "were murdered during the police terror that swept Harlem on March 19 and the days following after the Negro people there had risen in protest against their long sufferings."

Following are the names of the victims, the date and place of their deaths and the circumstances surrounding the killings:

LYNCH VICTIMS

Jerome Wilson, January 11, Franklinton, La.; Wilson had been convicted of the slaying of Delos Wood, a deputy sheriff, after officers had invaded his house. The lynching took place after the State Supreme Court had ordered a new trial. Wilson was shot to death in his cell; his body was taken from the jail and dumped on the road three miles north of town. Sheriff J. L. Brock said: "There wasn't any lynching. There were just six or eight business men going about their business."

Anderson Ward, February 24 Maringouin, La.: Ward had an altercation with Dennis Brudroe, a white man. Brudroe drew his gun on Ward, but it failed to explode properly. Ward drew a knife to protect himself. A mob of 25 gathered to search for Ward, stormed the local jail where he was locked up and killed him. He was hanged from an oak tree and his body riddled with bullets.

Ab Young, March 12, Slayden Miss.: Young was an organizer among the share-croppers who was urging them to demand their share of the AAA funds. He was approached and threatened by Hardy Mackie, an agent of the landlords. Mackie drew a pistol and Young shot in self-defense. He was seized by lynchers, placed on top of an auto with a rope around his neck, one end was tied to a tree, and the car was driven from under him. He was captured at Rossville, Tenn., and carried across the state line.

R. J. Tyrone, March 22, Hattiesburg, Miss.: Tyrone was supposed to have committed suicide, but a month later the following facts were revealed: A group of rich white plantation owners had wanted his property and had provoked Tyrone to a fight. When he defended himself the landlords organized a gang to lynch him. Three days later his body was found riddled with bullets, making the coroner's verdict of "suicide" ridiculous.

Roy T. A. Allen, April 5, Marks, Miss.: Body found shot to death and weighted with trace chains about his waist in a river near here. Carried literature indicating that he was interested in the conditions of the poverty-stricken share-croppers.

R. D. McGee, June 22, Wiggins, Miss.: Accused of "attempting to attack" 11-year-old white girl in a blackberry patch and of beating her in the attempt. Posse seized him in his bed and carried him to the woods, where a mob of 200 to 400 hanged him from a tree and riddled his body with buckshot and bullets.

SOCIAL STRIFE VICTIMS

James Thompson, March 20, New York City: Shot by Detective Nicholas Campo, during police terror that swept Harlem when the Negro people rose in resentment against their long-accumulated grievances.

Andrew Lyons, March 23, New York City: Died of internal injuries received during the Harlem events of March 19.

Edward Laurie, March 24, New York City: Murdered by Policeman Abraham Zabutinski on the "excuse" that he had "talked back." This was part of the police reign of terror established in Harlem.

Thomas Wilstrom, June 24, New York City: Died of fractured skull received at hands of police in March 19 events in Harlem.

Lynchings – 1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Northern.

4914

4914

CROWDS SWAMP LYNCHING ART EXHIBIT IN NEW YORK

Courier 3-2-35

Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Wife of Secretary of Treasury, Among Notables In Attendance—Over 1,500 Have Viewed Works.

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—The exhibition of Art on lynching at the Arthur Newton Galleries here has been swamped by visitors since its opening on February 16, according to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which is sponsoring it. Among the visitors was Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury. During the first two days more than 800 people visited the galleries to see the macabre drawings and paintings. In the first week over 1,500 people came to the xhibit, journeying from such cities as Asbury Park and Orange, N. J., Louisville, Ky., Rutland and Bennington, Vt., Peekskill and Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Harrisburg, Germantown, Haverford, Pa., New Haven, Manchester, and Westport, Conn., Macon, Ga., Cleveland, O., London, England, Los Angeles, Cal., Washington, D. C., Paris, France, Pittsburgh, Pa., Boston, Mass., Nashville, Tenn., Norfolk, Va., Copenhagen, Denmark, Philadelphia, Pa., Detroit, Mich., Chicago, Ill., Hollywood, Cal., Plainfield, N. J., and Rome, Italy.

Exhibit May Tour 17 States

Officers of the National Association report that plans have been almost completed for a tour of 17 cities. Four of the cities are in the South. The tour may last six months. Requests for the exhibit have already come from Washington, Philadelphia and Cleveland.

FAMOUS ARTISTS WITHDRAW FROM NAACP ART EXHIBITION

NEW YORK - (CNA) - Three nationally-known sculptors, Isamu Noguchi, Sam Becker and Aaron Goodelman, have withdrawn their works from the current N.A.A.C.P. anti-lynching art exhibition here.

Courier News Agency 3-2-35

Opposed To Wagner-Costigan Bill

2162 Seventh Ave., New York, N.Y.

They declared that although they were heartily in favor of such an exhibition, they were opposed to the Wagner-Costigan Anti-Lynching Bill which the exhibit sponsors.

These sculptors and many others who have refused to participate, pointed out that the Wagner-Costigan Bill neither provides for the death penalty for lynchers nor considers the vital issue of civil rights for the Negro people.

Resent Exclusion Of Other Org's.

They also stated that they resented the exclusion by the N.A.A.C.P. of all those organizations "which have consistently fought for the civil rights of the oppressed Negro peo[illegible]" Notable among these, are the National Scottsboro-Herndon Action[illegible]mittee, the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, and the Internationa[illegible]ker Defense.

Lynch Pictures Too Hot for Maryland Institute Exhibit

Four of the Most Vicious Paintings Shelved as Group Is Shifted to Smaller Room; Move On to Remove Entire Show

BALTIMORE. — Some of the pictures included in the art commentary on lynching which has been hanging at the Maryland Institute proved too hot for sensitive Baltimoreans and four of the pictures have been removed.

The entire exhibit which was opened in the main gallery of the institute at Mt. Royal Avenue and Lanvale Street last Sunday, after being on view for a week was shifted into a smaller room and some of the more striking, showing the work of the mobs in their most vicious states, have been left out of the present exhibition.

The picture of a victim being burned at the stake with his genital organs cut out has been shelved in the smaller room.

So has the charcoal, showing what purports to be Prosecuting Attorney Thomas Knight, of Scottsboro fame, with a white girl sitting on his knee, saying, "Our girls don't sleep with n——s," been left out of the new set-up.

No reason could be assigned by any of the attendants at the gallery for the removal of the exhibit to a smaller and far too inadequate room after arrangements had been made with the NAACP to keep the exhibit for two weeks.

One attendant ventured the explanation that it was just a custom to remove all exhibits after a week to make room for a new display. The new pictures on view in the main gallery, however, are ancient and musty painting which have evidently reclined in the archives of the gallery for a generation and may have hung in the gallery for months.

May Move Exhibit

Interested persons were busily trying to locate a new display room early this week with the end in view of removing the entire show to another gallery. The Municipal Art Gallery was suggested as the logical place, but political opposition was blamed as a stumbling block. Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP who attended a secret conference here Friday, is reported to have wired permission to remove the exhibit from the Maryland Institute as soon as a suitable place can be found. Thousands of both races have viewed the paintings since they have been on view.

"PROTECTING" WOMANHOOD

Prominent white Southern women do not agree with Senator Smith of South Carolina, who, in a speech replete with stock phrases against the Costigan-Wagner Anti-lynching Bill argued about the "very humiliating necessity of going outside the law at times to vindicate the sanctity and virtue of our fireside and the virtue of our women." Mrs. Jesse Daniel Ames, executive director of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, declares that "if Senator Smith and other Southern Senators are allowed to go forward with this method of opposition our whole program of education for the prevention of lynching will be set back for years."

It is pointed out by Mrs. Ames that four years ago a group of Southern white women met and adopted the following resolution:

> Distressed by the recent upsurge of lynchings and noting that people still condone such crimes on the ground that they are necessary to the protection of womanhood, we, a group of white women representing eight Southern States, desire publicly to repudiate and condemn such defense of lynching and to put ourselves definitely on record as opposed to this crime in every form and under all circumstances.

It was because of this half-baked talk as made by Senator Smith in his advocacy of mob law that prompted the unanimous adoption of the foregoing resolution. Available statistics give the lie to any charge that lynchiny is a necessary evil in order to safeguard the virtue of the white woman in the South. No small wonder that it has aroused the ire of members of the gentler sex in Dixie.

There has been some talk in Washington about Senators conducting the debate on the measure on a high plane, which is hardly possible when opponents think with their feelings, not gray matter, and inject sectional and racial prejudices which are as much a part of their makeup as their manner and speech. Logic and facts do not figure. If proponents want to pass the bill it is incumbent upon them to play the opposition at their own game. In the preliminary skirmishes the authors of the bill have displayed a fearless leadership and a tenacity of purpose most unusual in a Senate fight in which the race issue is directly or indirectly injected. Bombastic verbal blasts and threats of filibuster "if it takes all summer," have not intimidated the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado. They know they are on the side of right and cannot be intimidated or cajoled into giving ground.

When Senator Costigan offered to present telegrams from Southerners supporting the lynching bill, Senator Smith insisted that the names and addresses of "these patriots" be placed in the Congressional Record. While the gentleman from South Carolina meant to be sarcastic, he in fact, was paying those white people of the Southland who possess the temerity to express their public opposition against the reign of mob law a deserved compliment. They are patriots in every sense of the word.

A TENNESSEE LYNCHING

(From the Dayton, O., News, Nov. 7)

There have been more brutally executed lynchings than that which occurred this week at White Bluff, Tenn., but rarely if ever one as brazen. The victim, a Negro accused of slapping a white woman, was taken from a deputy sheriff and another official who were en route with their prisoner to the county jail.

The "mob" consisted of five armed men. They took the deputy's pistol but assured him that they would "be back in a few minutes and bring your gun." The promise was kept. In less than half an hour they returned and surrendered to the official. "They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he says. "They told me they shot the Negro with my gun." The sheriff placed no charge but said that they would be taken to the county seat for arraignment.

Only less shocking than the crime itself is the cheerful confidence of this quintet that the law which they boast of flouting will not punish them for it. In the history of lynching, to be sure, they have ample assurance for such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance to a lynching mob. Seldom is there even an effort afterward to identify its members, although in the case of the ringleaders at least that should be comparatively simple. Instances in which they have been brought to trial are still more infrequent. A conviction is almost unknown.

But no mob has had the audacity to do its barbarous, bloody deed and then deliver itself to the law in the attitude of "What are you going to do about it? The country waits to see how Tennessee will meet an unprecedented challenge.

Lynchings - 1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Southern.

4509

CLAUDE NEAL, MOB VICTIM, WAS INNOCENT

Relatives Bare Facts Pointing To His Guiltlessness

PENSACOLA, Fla.— (ANP) — The kidnapers of the Weyerhaueser boy have been captured by agents of the federal government. There is no evidence to prove that the abductors transported the boy from one state to another, or that they harmed or injured him. But immediately he was returned to his parents, the entire force of the department of justice was placed on the trial of the kidnappers, acting under the Lindbergh anti-kidnaping Act. The federal government, within a few days, has succeeded in running down the kidnapers, who used every possible means to cover up their tracks.

Claude Neal, a colored man of this state, was lynched in October, 1934, by a mob of 3,000 whites, after he had been kidnaped from the Brewton, Ala., jail, and transported across state lines to Marianna, Fla.

The abduction and murder of Neal were advertised. The members and leaders of the mob were well known.

Appeals to the President of the United States and to the department of justice to act against the kidnapers and lynchers of Claude Neal were met by stony indifference.

New Evidence

No harm was done to the Weyerhaueser boy. Claude was murdered.

It now begins to appear as though Claude Neal was absolutely innocent. Colored citizens of this state are exercising themselves to have the governor of the state to do something to lift the odium of Neal's alleged crime off them.

Claude Neal was accused of murdering a white girl, Lola Cannidy, who is alleged to have been his clandestine sweetheart. He was not only murdered, but has home was burned and his family was threatened.

Now, after all that has happened and his slayers have gone unpunished, new evidence comes to light that points to Lola Cannidy's uncle as her slayer.

Last week, the father of Lola Cannidy was sentenced to five years in prison for assault with intent to commit murder against his niece, Dora King. At the trial of the elder Cannidy, the King woman testified that Cannidy had held a grudge against her father since the killing of Lola, and that he had sought legal permission to Kill King and two other persons in Greenwood because he believed they had a part in killing his daughter, Lola.

Before passing sentence on Cannidy, the court stated: "I hate to pass this sentence on an old man such as you, but I must do it. To be perfectly fair with you, I don't believe you have any too many brains."

Cannidy replied: "Yes, judge, I am plumb crazy."

OUTLINE THE PLAN

NOW THAT CERTAIN of our senators have exhibited a most flagrant condonation of the lynch evil that has served to classify many sections of our land as the homes of heartless, beast-like beings, with no regard for constituted authority, it is hoped that immediate steps will be taken for placing lynching on our statute books so as to make the savage custom legal. Then it will be that our citizenship will know what to expect when persons, or certain persons, are taken into custody, accused of committing crimes. Whether it is for stealing a chicken in Missippi or engaging in an argument with some Arkansas sharecropper,' if the lynch evil is to have such sanction on the part of our nation's law makers as was exhibited last week when members of the United States Senate successfully staged a filibuster resulting in defeat of the well designed anti-lynching measure, we should have the laws governing such terrible practices written on the books of those states so desiring them.

It is extremely unfortunate for any nation that it should become necessary to devote so much valuable time to efforts toward the enactment of laws that would put a stop to such savage practices as lynching, but since the people of our country are confronted with the terrible evil, it is even worse that men should quibble for one second over the need of laws that would bring about prompt and adequate punishment for those of the lawless element who stage lynchings. Especially is it all the more surprising when men of the supposed calibre of United States senators discourage the enactment of such laws.

The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynch bill failed of passage last week, but it does not require the ability of a prophet to foresee the enactment of a law that will deal with this terrible evil and too, the attendant suffering that a nation will endure as they continue to tolerate such savagery is clear to the most casual observer.

ONE REASON WHY—

One reason why I am in sympathy with the hope expressed by some for a political upheaval in the United States is my own hope that out of such an upheaval might come a means for coping with just such a situation as was presented by the lynching at Wiggins, Mississippi, last Saturday. When a nation gets to the place where 200 men, simply because they belong to one race, can take a man who has been proved guilty of no crime, simply because he belongs to another race, and hang him to a tree until he is dead, while the nation looks on powerless to do anything about it,—I say that a nation that has reached that point of degeneracy deserves a political upheaval; and the sooner it comes, so far as I am concerned, the better off the nation will be. Certainly, which is more important, the better off will I and the rest of the American Negroes be.

Such a brutal murder, condoned by the sheriff, could not have happened in Mississippi when Federal troops ruled it after the Civil War. And, while I am neither advocating revolution nor suggesting military rule of the semi-barbarous regions of America, yet I confess that I am naturally not opposed to any change that may come in our present political set-up, which will make such a disregard of the life and liberty of Negroes impossible.

ANYTHING IN MISSISSIPPI—

As usually is the case, the sheriff of the Mississippi county where R. D. McGee was lynched last Saturday, "arrived on the scene as the lynchers were leaving." Even in cases where the sheriff is present all the time, he officially arrives only "as the lynchers were leaving."

This is thought necessary in order to give some semblance of credence to the further lie that "he did not recognize any of them."

From a rural county where everybody knows everybody else and everybody else's business, America is made to accept the tale that the sheriff found out about the party participated in by 200 of the few hundred white men of the county, only in time to get there "as the lynchers were leaving;" and that "he did not recognize any of them."

If a country is gullible enough to believe a story like that, it naturally would not be shocked by the further statement by the same author: "I don't believe there will be any investigation."

While anything can happen in a semi-barbarous region like Mississippi, yet it is remarkable how the nation falls for it.

Confessions

ANY ONE at all familiar with how persons suspected of having committed crime are made to "confess" by third degree methods will view with a degree of doubt the "prompt confession" of EARL CONNOR WILLIAMS, arrested in Mississippi and returned to Virginia for a murder committed more than a year ago on a government reservation near Fredericksburg.

While department of justice operatives are given credit for the "solving" of this mystery murder, it should be remembered that the suspect was arrested by a Mississippi police officer, who took WILLIAMS in custody because, as he is quoted as having said, he "looked like a Negro that would commit such a crime."

As soon as WILLIAMS was returned to this state he was carried by federal and state officers to Fredericksburg, where the surviving victim of the murderous attack which resulted in the death of a young woman, could not identify him. Still, he "promptly confessed." There is something strange about the alacrity with which confessions are obtained when suspects are given over to the custody, or partial custody of local or state police officers.

Discussing the capture and confession of WILLIAMS, the Richmond Times-Dispatch expresses the hope that there will be "no railroading" in his case and after asserting its confidence in the Federal Bureau of Investigation says:

"But we cannot help bearing in mind that 'confessions' are often extorted from accused persons by third-degree torture, and that WILLIAMS has had no legal advice throughout this entire proceeding. If he was a person of means, we can imagine the swarm of attorneys who would be advising him as to his rights, the alienists who would be scrutinizing his sanity, and the various others who would be endeavoring to shield him in every possible way. But he is a poor, friendless devil, and pretty much everybody assumes him to be guilty."

The Times-Dispatch concludes by saying that while at present "everything points" to the guilt of WILLIAMS, "it is the sort of case in which the court ought to lean backward, if necessary, in order to be sure that no injustice has been done." The Richmond paper further expresses the confidence—which we share—that Judge LUTHER B. WAY will do this.

The probabilities of a tilt in the scales of justice due to the use of third degree methods in obtaining a confession in this case are not so apparent to the Danville Register. That paper inquires if the Times-Dispatch can "recall a single instance in which the third degree has been administered by federal officers?" Again, it should be remembered that WILLIAMS was handled first by a Mississippi state officer, and latterly by Virginia state officers. With no intention of reflecting upon these state officers, we say that there is little doubt that WILLIAMS underwent, as a matter of police routine, the third degree in both Mississippi and Virginia.

But there is open to WILLIAMS the chance, if he wishes to take advantage of it, to relate what has happened to cause him to confess so hurriedly to guilt of a crime that he must know will send him to his death. He has a fair trial ahead of him, and given the advantage of competent counsel he should be able to establish his innocence, if he is innocent. If he is guilty he should, of course, pay the penalty of his crime. But too much stress should not, at this stage of the proceedings, be placed upon the "confession" he is reported to have made.

This Is Incredible

UP TO THE time this article was written Mississippi had had five lynchings this year, three during the past month. Every one of the five men lynched has been accused of "attempting to assault a white woman." During the past forty years the experience tables show that only 25 per cent of the persons lynched were accused of rape or attempted rape. It is incredible that the recorded experience of 40 years has been totally upset this year in Mississippi. Has Mississippi embarked upon a campaign to justify lynching, since it is the popular belief that a lynching for rape or attempted rape is justifiable?

The Baltimore Afro-American has discovered the record of several women suffering from what psychiatrists call hebephrenic illusions. Two in Washington, suffering from this mental-sexual twist falsely accused colored men of attacking them. The men were cleared, the women declared insane. Another in Virginia, seized with the peculiar malady, involved her husband in a Negro-blood divorce action, only to have it revealed by alienists that she was hebephrenic.

Norfolk remembers a case, in which a colored man was accused of attacking a white woman, tried and sentenced to the electric chair. He was saved therefrom by after-discovered evidence that the woman was hebephrenic.

The mad trend of conditions in Mississippi indicate that there is an epidemic of hebephrenic illusions.

WHITE SOUTHERN LYNCHING FOES GET PLAUDITS

Ministers Don't Urge U. S. Anti-Lynch Bill Directly

Special to Journal and Guide

HAMPTON, Va.—The Ministers' Conference meeting here last week did not itself directly endorse a federal anti-lynching measure, but it did "heartily commend those individuals and organizations in the white South who have lately gone on record as favoring the passage of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, loking to the abolishment of that disgraceful form of mob murder."

The resolutions adopted also commended "those of the North who have made possible the recently enacted civil rights bills in New Jersey and Pennsylvania."

Other items in the resolutions approved "all measures against war and making for international peace" and deplored the use of "intoxicating liquors as a beverage, especially by the civic and religious leaders of the people."

These particular resolutions were prefaced by the statement that "our conference as a whole is not unmindful of the tremendous changes going on in national and international affairs which affect us as a people and regarding which our people look to us for guidance."

It was assumed from this preface that the item concerning war was drafted with an eye on Italy's intentions toward Abyssinia.

The "earnest and untiring efforts of the officers and workers of Hampton Institute" in connection with the conference was commended and a vote of thanks extended to President Arthur Howe, Assistant Chaplain Herbert King, Mrs. Charles Isham and her aides, and Chaplain S. Arthur Devan.

For the "improvement of our conference," the resolutions included disapproval of "loud laughter and talking . . in the evening hours that should be devoted to study and rest," participation in "game or other forms of recreation during regular devotional or lecture periods," and the "use of tobacco in the presence of the teachers and young people on the campus."

Punctuality among the delegates was lauded, as was regular attendance at the various sessions. To the various speakers and others who took a leading role a vote of thanks was extended. Those mentioned by name were: the Revs. E. R. Carter, W. J. Clark, Henry W. McLaughlin, Chas. H. Wesley, Robert E. Speer, T. J. Smith, Allen A. Stockdale, and S. Arthur Devan; and Messrs. W. M. Cooper and J. Milton Kelly.

The resolutions characterized this session as "largely attended, well directed, and inspiring."

"WHITE FOLKS, PLEASE DON'T DO THIS"

These are the last words of 16-year-old Benny Mitchell, Texas Negro youth before he and his 15-year-old friend, Ernest Collins, were tortured and hanged by a mob of fiends and ghouls supposedly members of a superior race. This pathetic plea fell upon deaf ears, however, for the Nordic oppressor in his blood thirsty arrogance hearkens neither to the cries of children nor to the moans and groans of advanced years.

"White Folks, Please Don't Do This", has been the attitude of Negroes to their oppressors too long. If the government is too impotent and powerless to suppress these outrages or too indifferent and cowardly to attempt it, then reprisals are in order. An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth resolution will be more efficacious in the future than the pitiable plea of this dying black boy: "White Folks, Please Don't Do This."

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Southern.

4915

AMERICAN MOBOCRATS MUST GO!

An article appeared in a recent issue of Time, national white magazine, allegedly quoting a white physician of Shelbyville, Tenn., with the statement that his examination of the white girl supposedly raped by E. K. Harris, the Negro whose trial threw the community into civil insurrection, showed that the complaining witness had not been attacked, if in reality she had even been touched.

This physician, whose name was mentioned in the article, is regarded as a reputable member of the medical profession and having examined the girl immediately after the report of the alleged crime, he stated that the "assault victim" was not pregnant, as claimed by her father and other relatives, and that his examination failed to disclose any rapacious attack or sexual relations.

As The Defender has so often cited in these columns, the American mob does not want to know the truth, it is not interested in the truth or facts, just so it can stage a saturnalia of hunnish kultur at the expense and detriment of some unfortunate and defenseless black man or woman. (Yes, they lynch Negro women in the Southern states of this self-styled civilized and Christianized country!)

Mobs work on the hypothesis that any Negro charged with some offense against society, is guilty without the necessity of a fair and impartial trial; and we have men sitting in judicial seats in this section of the country who hold to similar views where a black man or woman is involved, if the victim happens to be a member of the dominant race.

An assistant district attorney of Harris County once remarked that he favored lynching any Negro charged with attacking a white woman, but when asked what about a white man who attacks a Negro girl or woman, he flushed red in the face and gave an evasive answer to the effect that he favored "punishing such a man, if his guilt were proven."

He said nothing about proving the guilt of the accused Negro, but worked on the presumption that all Negroes charged with or accused of criminal attacks upon white women and girls are guilty without the formality of a trial.

This mob-condoning and encouraging attitude on the part of public officials, whose sworn duty it is to uphold, defend and protect the law and those committed to their custody on any and all criminal charges, is the main reason why the mob has been able to throw its tentacles around our body politic, and why it is so exceedingly difficult to curb Judge Lynch's League, Inc., in this country.

Aside from the means and measures, such as the soldiers used at Shelbyville, Tenn., with such gratifying results, the next best mobocratic antidote is a vigorous and stringent federal anti-lynching statute, such as the proposed Costigan-Wagner bill.

LYNCHLESS RECORD ANTICIPATED

The law loving element in Georgia feel keenly the lynching record of the state and hope for a decided change. It is true that the record in recent years is far more favorable than that of years ago, but there is no reason why the state can not be free from all mob actions. This hope is especially expressed for the present year. Several counties of the state boast of the fact that their record is not tainted with any act of lynching. There is cause to be elated over such a record. This was shown by the editor of the Albany Herald, who proudly states that Dougherty county has never had a lynching. He states that

"Dougherty county has never had a lynching, and I am not sure that there is another county in this section of the state of which that can be said. A number of men charged with capital offenses have been tried and convicted in the county and there is an impressive list of legal executions, but never yet have officers of the law failed to protect a prisoner menaced by a mob. Indeed, it is probably no more than fair to say that there has never been imminent danger of lynching in Dougherty county. This community has preferred to uphold the courts, permitting the law to take its orderly course."

It was just as easy for the other counties of the state to have maintained a similar record. If their officers were of the same stamina as those of Dougherty county, Georgia would not be so deeply stained and placed in the column of lawless states.

In commenting on the record of Dougherty county, the Albany Banner-Herald states that "lynchings usually are caused from the committal of the crime of rape, persons rarely ever being lynched in this section of the country for other crimes." The above statement is misleading. The editor of this paper is in a position to know better. The charge of rape forms but a very small per cent of the alleged causes for lynching. By investigation it will be found that victims have been lynched on the merest pretext. Most of the offenses charged are detailed in the report given by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for the past year. It states that only two were actually accused of rape. Four were accused of murder, one for association with a white woman, one mistaken identity, knocking down a white man, writing a note to a white girl, "talking disrespectfully" to a white man and stealing. Among the sixteen cases, it is noted that only two rape offenses were charged, thereby refuting the statement given about rape only being the cause of lynching. Another refutation of this is found in the very first lynching of the year, which occurred in Louisiana last week. While protecting his home, a general gun fight occurred, during which an officer was killed. The owner of the home was arrested, tried for the killing and convicted. The supreme court granted a new trial. This enraged a lawless [illegible] jail and shot the accused fatally. The body taken out and dragged away and left on the side of the road. The editor of the Athens Banner-Herald is in a position to know all of these facts, yet he persists on saying that rape is the only cause of lynching. The editor of this paper and all Georgians should join in making this a lynchless year for Georgia.

Louisana Leads The League

THE Lynching League standings, so far, show Louisiana in the lead. They lynched a man there the other day simply because he was not railroaded to the chair. It was the first mob murder of 1935.

Here's what happened. There was a dispute. A white man was shot to death. Among others, this man was indicted, tried, convicted and sentenced in ten days. An appeal was taken to the state's highest tribunal. This solemn body, composed of the most representative citizens and jurists of the state, decided that the defendant's trial was not fair and ordered that he be given another.

Forthwith they lynched him. In our news columns you'll find the gory details. Twice before mobs unsuccessfully sought to do the poor man to death illegally.

We're not going to go into this problem of lynching in a profound way.

We're simply going to ask a few questions.

Have most of the states affected by lynching given up to the law of the mob?

Is there no safety for men accused of crime under the precautions and penalties for mob violence set up by the states?

Are mobs—and some juries—just interested in "getting a Negro"—regardless of guilt or innocence—and are they so bent on unthinking savagery that they will not await the outcome of legal processes required by the courts of their own states?

If this situation keeps up isn't it very likely that a federal anti-lynching law—with teeth in it—will become inevitable?

When human lives are being taken illegally by mobs, isn't that murder in the worst form?

Isn't it probable that pretty soon even conscientious objectors to "federal intervention" through a federal anti-lynching law will be asking for just that as a last hope to prevent the continuation of this shame that is America's?

The answers lie in the deed of that Louisiana mob, which wasn't willing to abide by its highest state court's verdict that a fair trial is every man's right and every citizen's obligation.

The Root of Mob Spirit

Lynching Negroes will never cease in the South until the white man is finally willing to submit to the proposition that there are times when a Negro has a right to strike a white man, and defend his property as it the acknowledged right of all citizens whose faces are not black.

The idea that a Negro has no right to defend his physical person is a carry-over from slavery. Reference to old slave codes will show that slaves were in many instances denied the right to carry sticks, stones or any other defensive weapons. Every known artifice was resorted too, to reduce the black man to a state of physical helplessness. In those days the greatest crime a slave could commit was to strike his master or overseer.

This carry-over from slavery is amply evidenced in the South by the attitude of the whites. If a white man engages in an altercation on the street with a Negro, all whites in the immediate neighborhood close in on the black. If the Negro shows fight, he is immediately ganged. In the back side of the head of all whites present is the thought that this Negro and all Negroes must understand that there is no justification, under any circumstance, for a Negro to strike a white man.

No group of white men assume this attitlde to "gang" fight an individual at such times when two white men are fighting.

Take, for instance, the first lynching of 1935. There is no evidence published to date other than that the man ynched did not deliver a mule that belong to him, to an official who wanted to dip the animal. If the Negro farmer had been a white man the matter would have gone no further than a resort to legal means to dip the mule.

But in Louisiana and most sections of the South, Negroes are forced by white authority to submit to any fiat issued by a white man. Failure to do this means he will be ganged and taught the error of his ways. No emphasis is ever placed upon the justice of the black man's position. All the gang wants to know is "Did he raise his hand against a white man?"

If you will trace the history of ninety per cent of all the racial disorders in the Southland, its genesis will be found in this faulty behaviorism of white people. Their unwillingness to admit the black man into the brotherhood of citizenship. This goes right back to the Bill of Rights. You know the Bill of Rights grants to every citizen the right to bear arms in his home and protection from unlawful search and seizure.

The moment that racial trouble breaks in Dixie the law among the whites is to disarm Negroes in their homes, and the search and seizure clauses are immediately set at naught. This is the common knowledge of every 16-year-old white boy. Several years ago in Oklahoma City a Negro was lynched. He was taken from the county jail at night. Instead of the authorities organizing a posse to apprehend the lynchers, the time was spent over in the Negro district disarming Negroes. You can reach your own conclusion. You, of course, understand that the Negroes were not attempting to shoot one another that night because of the mob's activities.

The Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill, nor anything else is going to be the cure for this vicious ante-bellum psychology dominating white people. Somewhere in his own forum, and alone, the white man is going to have to recede from the unsportsmanlike viewpoint that one human being does not have the right to protect himself against another.

The Sherman Grant

It is interesting, surprising, almost shocking, to read in the news that the United States government has made a loan and grant to the city of Sherman, Texas, to rebuild a court house which was burned by a fiendish mob that also at the same time lynched one Negro and destroyed the homes and business properties of other Negroes, whose only crime was the crime of being black and law-abiding. The mob took the lynched man from the very court room itself, locked him in a vault in the court house, and burned the building to the ground around him.

But this did not satisfy their lust for blood and destruction. They dragged the charred body of the victim through the streets of the Negro district, made a bonfire of it in front of a Negro church, and distributed his bones as relics and souvenirs to those who had not yet enough. Then to cap the evening of "fun" the torch was applied to Negro homes and to the Negro business district.

It is to such a city that Uncle Sam gives money to rebuild a court house which its mob has destroyed. When it had a good court house it made of it not a temple of justice, but a funeral pyre on which to burn alive a citizen who had been convicted of no crime.

What evidence is there that any better use will be made of a fine court house built out of Federal Funds.

It looks very much to THE INFORMER like a case of encouraging, rather than condemning that "vile form of collective murder—lynch law," about which President Roosevelt spoke in such scathing

Lynchings - 1935
Discussion

Negro Press, Southern

4916

A. N. P. CORRESPONDENT RELATES FEAR OF FRANKLINTON NEGROES IN REPORT OF WILSON LYNCHING

ZONES ESTABLISHED; WHITE ELITE FORCED TO DO OWN HOUSEWORK

Drunken Whites Shoot Up Negro Businesses At Will

By PIERRE VIGNEAUX

BATON ROUGE, La., Feb. 28.—(ANP)—I have just returned from a trip to Franklinton, La., where early on the morning of January 11, Jerome Wilson was shot down in a jail cell, dragged from the jail and dumped on the road near to a Negro school house a short time later.

Wilson and eight other members of his family had been arrested after the fatal shooting of Deputy Shreriff Delos Wood last August. Wilson, convicted and sentenced to die, had won a new trial through a supreme court reversal of the original verdict. That was January 8. Three days later, the mob had slain Wilson. A brother, Luther Wilson, in jail at the same time, in connection with the same offense, was not touched and is still in custody.

Reports have spread throughout the state among colored people of the precarious position in which the Wilson family and other colored residents of Franklinton and the countryside find themselves. In an earlier dispatch, shortly after the lynching, I had reported the warning given to colored school teachers in Franklinton to leave because of their assumed subservience to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. This report had come to me from reliable, but secret sources, and it was later denied in a statement published in a New Orleans weekly, signed by a number of colored residents of Franklinton.

I therefore decided to visit Franklinton again despite the danger my presence there might involve for me personally and colored citizens there. My apprehension over my own safety was not unwarranted. I discovered after three days in the town that the hoodlum leaders or the mob element were on my trail and that it would be best for all parties concerned if I put some distance between myself and the town. The only reason, I suppose, that I was not caught is because the hoodlum element had been searching for a "light- colored nigger" and I am dark.

Before I left Franklinton, however, I had learned that Negro residents of the town are now living in constant fear of their lives. I could not get a single Negro to talk to be about incidents there. Many of the better-class whites were apologetic about what had happened, but they strongly insisted that Negro newspapers and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were to blame. In spite of their regret, they seemed powerless to afford Negroes any protection.

The report is current that some Negroes aided the whites who lynched Wilson. This story smacks of the report from Bethany, La., last year to the effect that Negroes there had lynched a Negro. It is probable, if the story is true, that the white men involved, either paid or coerced some Negroes to help in the dirty work.

Some of the whites involved in the lynching are known. The son of the deputy slain last August is freely mentioned as one of the lynchers. At the time his father was killed he was in New Jersey.

When Lynching Becomes Commonplace

By DAVID JONES

The lynching of Negroes in the state of Mississippi has become so commonplace and trite that it has been turned into just a laughing matter.

So savage and barbarous, so utterly devoid of the finer parts that are very evident in cultured and refined people and which go to make up the datum posts of civilization, are they that they are murdering Negro now without the slightest twinge of conscience.

They are now calling it suicide by coroner's verdict when Negroes are lynched in this state.

The body of R. J. Tyrone, a prosperous Negro farmer of Lawrence County, was found shot to pieces in the woods by his house on the night of the 25 of March, where he had been lynched by a mob of whites about the 22nd of the same month—the body having lain there since that time.

There are quite a number of prosperous Negroes in that county who by stint and the practice of economy have placed themselves far above dependence upon the whites of that locality and are living above want and need.

Tyrone was among that number. And since the race is not expected to prosper and their prosperity not only excites the wonder of their white neighbors, but also their vicious envy, and arouses in them a desire for the exploitation on their part—he was marked for slaughter.

A prosperous Negro in the state is considered an evil example to be gotten rid of by fair or foul means, and is just about as welcomed as the proverbial bull in a china shop—and particularly if he refuses to stand still while he is being skinned.

William Evans, a white farmer near Tyrone's farm, it is said, has been trying several methods to separate Tyrone from the produce of the years of hard toil and deprivation which Tyrone has undergone in his effort to raise himself and his family above lack and indigence.

These several attempts to take away his life's earnings were hotly resented by Tyrone, and he has been brave enough to hold off the voracious whites by going armed whenever he had to leave his home. While walking along the county road on his way to Monticello, Tyrone was accosted by Evans, who was sitting on the gallery, concerning some matters that have not yet been divulged.

Evans is not talking for publication, not yet, as he is too busy chasing and beating Negroes—he has not caught his breath.

Tyrone has been lynched.

Still it could be seen from afar that Tyrone was resenting something that Evans was attempting to force on him and that for his audacity in refusing to obey and acquiesce, Evans determined to chastise him.

Tyrone resisted and having armed himself for just such occasions as this was compelled to shoot Evans, slightly wounding him, in order to save his own life.

Evans was carried to Jackson for attention to his slight wounds at the hospital there.

In the meanwhile the mob formed, and the man hunt in general for Negroes began, during which hunt Tyrone was lynched by the mob and left in the woods where his body was found some days afterwards.

When the coroner's jury was summoned to hold the inquest over the dead body of Tyrone, they promptly returned a verdict of—"Suicide."

And this is a so-called civilized nation of people.

The remnant of Tyrone's family had been found up to a few days past, though sympathetic Negroes are exercising their best endeavors to have them taken away to some place of safety before the mob makes another attempt to wreak vengeance upon them, and this at the peril of their own lives, for if the mob learns that any Negro gives them food, water or shelter, it will be woe to them.

The women of his family fled rather than face the ordeal of being stripped naked by a riotous mob of whites, knowing that after being exposed in such a state to the public view of hundreds of men, the external organs of their bodies would be crushed and beaten until they fainted from the agony.

The county around is in a seething turmoil, for Lawrence County is just adjoining the "Slaughter Pen"—that is Lincoln County,—so named from the great number of Negroes that were slain during the white cap regime about forty years ago.

Negroes are afraid to come out in the open during the daytime and still more fearful to remain in their houses during the nighttime.

Women and girls are hiding in every place of concealment dreading the inhuman bestiality from which they will have to suffer if caught by the mob, and from which nothing save a miraculous power can ever save them.

Hattiesburg, Miss.

Exposing The Mob

Occasionally writers claiming to have given deep stud to our social organization, suggest that the murderous mo spirit resides solely in the stratum of the poor whites Tomes are written telling how by education and other de velopment measures the illiterate may be lifted above thi brute level.

The action, however, of the United States Senate thi week, or the lack of action by this body on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, indicates very clearly that the mob is fairly well entrenched in the very seat of govern ment authority.

In spite of the fact that President Roosevelt, in his recen radio chat with the nation, did not include lynching upon his "must" program, mob murder is the most important problem faced by the American people today. What is there more important than the protection of life? The federal constitution expressly guarantees life, and yet in the Senate of the United States we find Solons who make the puerile argument that it would be unconstitutional for the federal government to enforce its guarantees.

Certainly the proponents of state sovereignty are meeting themselves coming back when we turn to the "Lindburgh Kidnaping Law." Here is a statute Congress hurriedly passed, which invades the sanctity of state government, but was passed for the purpose of protecting property. Criminals were snatching men and women from their homes and holding them for ransom. Huge sums were being extorted from private exchequers by this method. Congress found a way to protect money. The federal government does not even have to wait for state government to act. It can take original jurisdiction in kidnaping cases.

Government has gotten to a pretty rotten place when it will protect money and property before it will succor human life. Serious senators argue that the soldier bonus bill is more important than the Costigan-Wagner measure There you have the meat in the cocoanut. Money is more important than life in this nation.

The Texas youth who recently slew his father and mother in order that he might acquire some few thousand dollars in insurance, was fed up in this brutal atmosphere of materialism. This child was taught in the home that God was wrapped up in a dollar, and so it is that the Senate of the United States is imbued with the same complex and outlook when it can argue that old age pensions, unemployment insurance and bonus legislation is more important than curbing the mob. Making America a safe and decent place for humanity is of second importance.

No longer need we argue that the mob spirit is extant solely among poor white folk. The Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill has proved conclusively that the savage lyncher has friends in the halls of the mighty. America's conscience is corroded with hate and racial prejudice.

WAS IT A SUICIDE?

In September of 1932, the body of Shadrack Thompson, a Negro charged with an assault on a white woman, was found hanging to a tree in the woods near Warrenton, Va.

The coroner's verdict was that Thompson hanged himself when cornered by an incensed posse. Virginia accepted this strange verdict despite the fact that the circumstances surrounding the case made such a conclusion almost incredible.

On May 15th, 1935 at Markham, Va., not far removed from Warrenton the body of Nelson Pendleton, 25 year old Negro alleged to have attempted an assault upon a white woman was found in an orchard by a group of enraged citizens armed it is said, with rifles. The coroner immediately returned a verdict of suicide. It is patent to every sensible person that this suicide yarn has been over-worked in Warrenton and vicinity. It has been too readily accepted in order to save Virginia the disgrace of being listed with the lynch states of this Union. There is a strong probability that Judge Lynch is still holding court in this state in defiance of the Byrd anti-lynch law. The Governor should order a searching investigation to establish the facts.

Virginia may stand by and in self complacency assert that the Byrd law precludes lynching in this state, but the rest of the country will not believe this last suicide story and will check up a lynching to her discredit. Better to face the ugly fact, accept the disgrace and enforce the Byrd law than to attempt to evade the issue by setting forth this unbelievable suicide defense. If she fails to do her duty, the Virginia senators who are opposing the enactment of a Federal anti-lynch law, on the ground that the state already has a formidable anti-lynch statute, will have lost their main argument.

The position of the proponents of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynch bill will also be measurably strengthened.

Other Papers Say—

THE SUREST LYNCHING PREVENTIVE

Bristol, Va., Herald Courier

Senator Glass, opposing the anti-lynching bill now before the Senate, quoted the late President Coolidge as saying that if the States did not more vigorously assert their rights the Federal government would invade them and take them away. "And that," the Virginia Senator added, "is what is happening in this bill."

It would be interesting to know what State right the pending anti-lynching bill would invade. If it is the right to prevent mob murders, or to find and punish those who commit these crimes, that is a right which the States seldom exercise. They seem jealous of it only when a Federal anti-lynching law is proposed.

Looking at the question from another angle, the Federal Constitution provides that no person shall be deprived of life without due process of law. That provision is violated every time a lynching occurs. Indeed, mobs often interfere directly with the due process of law by seizing their victims from the hands of its officers. Should this provision of the Constitution be regarded as a dead letter?

There was an attempted lynching at Shelbyville, Tenn., some time ago. It was averted when the local authorities asked Governor McAlister for troops and the troops were sent. Four of the would-be lynchers were killed when the mob clashed with the troops in a defiant and determined effort to invade the courthouse and take a prisoner from the very presence of judge and jury and kill him.

This newspaper has cordially commended Governor McAlister and the local authorities of Shelbyville for the stern measures taken by them to uphold the law in this instance. But has any member of that mob, which later ran amuck and burned the county courthouse, been apprehended and brought to account? If so, the fact has escaped notice. Drastic steps may be taken to prevent lynchings, but as long as mobsters feel that they risk no penalty for their crimes lynchings will continue to be perpetrated.

There is a growing sentiment in the South for a Federal anti-lynching law, not because the prospect of such a statute is pleasing but because under it lynchers would be hunted down and haled to court and sent to prison. And that is the surest preventive of lynching.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Southern.

4917

EDITORIALS

Justice: Southern Style

A few weeks ago a Negro charged with slapping a white woman was lynched by a mob of five men in Tennessee.

Last week a white man charged with slapping a young colored woman was freed by a judge in Recorder's Court in North Carolina.

The colored man was unlettered and untrained. He was drunk at the time. The slapping is related as having occurred as the white woman was alighting from a bus, but one investigating agency has reported that the woman was in a Negro "hip joint." There is not much other information available as to the circumstances leading up to the slapping. Nothing more serious was charged. The lynchers, at least those under indictment as the lynchers, were four brothers and a cousin. The woman was the wife of one of those indicted.

The white man who slapped the colored woman in Carolina was a lettered and educated man, an attorney and business man. The woman he slapped was guilty of nothing except being the sister of a six-year-old boy who had thrown a missile at the attorney's nine-year-old son. She was neither present at, a party to, nor in possession of any knowledge of the youngsters' quarrel.

The attorney, however, invaded her home; raced to the second floor and into her bedroom, and slapped her when she offered no information on her brother's whereabouts.

In court he used the insulting epithet "nigger" and was not rebuked. In open court, he was asked if he slapped the young woman. He answered: "Yes, I'm guilty. I did it and I'd do it again."

The judge dismissed the case.

Outside of the court the attorney is quoted as saying he would have "killed the little 'nigger' if I had got my hands on him."

Slapping any woman is not only unchivalrous, it is illegal. It constitutes assault and battery. Invading the home of another is illegal.

The colored man in Tennessee broke one law and violated a code that should protect ALL women. The white man in North Carolina broke two laws and violated the same code. The Tennessee whites lynched the Negro. The North Carolina Negroes have not laid a finger on the white man. We'll be generous to the white lawyer and say the cases were equally provocative of lynching. Then we will write you the respective headlines:

SLAPS WOMAN, IS LYNCHED
SLAPS WOMAN, IS FREED

It seems to depend on whose women are slapped. The white lawyer-slapper is very lucky. He was and is now in no danger of lynching, but we know of many Negro homes where, if an adult male relative or husband had been present, he would have lost his life, because a justifiable homicide would have been committed in defense of relative or wife and the sanctity of the home.

The South justifies lynching sometimes on the grounds of the assured guilt of the victim—something which is often the opposite of the facts; sometimes on the grounds of the delay of legal processes; and sometimes on the grounds of a miscarriage of justice that frees the suspect. Men have even been lynched during the process of a trial or after a verdict of guilt, even a verdict carrying the death penalty. If the arguments advanced by the apologists for lynching have any merit, they have merit alike for Negroes and whites. One of these days—and we hope not, for we deplore lynching in any form or by any group—but one of these days the nation is going to be treated to the spectacle of a white man being lynched by Negroes.

To look at it from the viewpoint of the apologists, what more justification than an admission of guilt to a charge in a court of justice, and then to witness the admittedly guilty party being freed! Negro women are as sacred to Negro men as white women are to white men; and Negroes in an overwhelming majority respect white womanhood. White men daily rape and assault and seduce Negro women. They do so with impunity in 99 per cent of the cases. Even when a Negro is accused of raping a woman of his race, the charge usually winds up to simple assault or something equally as ridiculous.

Is there any basis for a continuing respect for and faith in judicial processes by the Negro in the face of daily equivocations by juries and judges who dismiss white men accused of crimes against colored women, or when district attorneys decide against arrests and prosecutions because a lynching has "expressed the will of the people," as did the prosecutor in Texas last week? Then why not expect that eventually and inevitably the Negro will adopt the same barbaric practices characteristic of his lighter-skinned neighbors?

Thinking white people must realize that, human nature being what it is, such continued disregard for the elemental rights of a race will ultimately lead to reprisals and vengeance. Negro men, who have emulated white men in so many other respects, are coming to the place where they are going to protect Negro women from abuse and assault regardless of the consequences.

There is no ultimate and logical reaction to a judiciary that evades its solemn duty to protect the lives and property of ALL citizens except more lawlessness. The North Carolina lawyer-slapper has emerged from a court of justice exonorated of a charge of assaulting a colored woman after admitting in open court that he committed the acts complained of. Every white man in that jurisdiction can rightfully feel that he now has a license to break stautory and moral law with impunity, where Negroes are involved. It is not illogical to reason that in due course such action will be met with more lawlessness, more contempt of law, and less faith in the moral or legal integrity of the judiciary.

A Corrupt and Shameless Answer

SENATOR WILLIAM H. BORAH, Republican, of Idaho, has re-affirmed his unequivocal opposition to the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill which met defeat in the last Congress, and which undoubtedly will be re-introduced at the next session. Moreover, asserted Mr. BORAH, should he receive the "unexpected and great honor" of being President, he would veto as unconstitutional any anti-lynching legislation passed by Congress. This blunt statement of his position was given Saturday as "a simple answer to what I consider a corrupt and shameless question" which had sought to sound out his views as a possible Presidential candidate.

The Idaho Senator has just announced a series of radio speeches in which he unquestionably will attempt to enlighten the American people on the faults of the New Deal and its chief exponent, President ROOSEVELT. Such activity can be construed only as an indication that Mr. BORAH has his hat in the 1936 Presidential ring. We are not fearful of his election—not even of his nomination by the Republican Party—for we agree with the political sages that Mr. BORAH, for all of his strength in Idaho, has so little chance of entering the White House other than as a visitor that one may safely say he has no chance at all. Hence, Mr. BORAH'S promised veto of anti-lynching legislation, fortunately, will remain forever a consummation by him devoutly to be wished. In all other respects its only importance is as a subject for academic discussion such as the JOURNAL AND GUIDE indulges itself in this week.

UNLESS we grievously misunderstand the functions of the three branches of our national government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—Senator BORAH should he receive the "unexpected and great honor" of being President, would usurp the duties and powers of the nine Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States by presuming to determine the constitutionality of legislation passed by Congress. And yet Senator BORAH says he opposed the Costigan-Wagner bill because he had no doubt it violated the Constitution, and added: "That being my view then and now, ... I would unhesitatingly veto it" if elected President.

When one recalls the calibre of Senators and Representatives who supported the anti-lynching legislation, it becomes apparent that wisdom was on both sides of the controversy. Certainly, the opposition gave no evidence of omniscience. If Senator BORAH is willing to determine for himself the constitutionality of a measure designed to stamp out mob murder, which already has taken more than five thousand lives in this country, even while other and equally able legal minds in Congress vouch for its constitutionality, then he has either an exalted estimate of his own talents or a disparaging opinion of those of his colleagues.

In every instance when the weight and number of differing opinions are so close, no man may wisely set himself up as a sacrosanct arbiter, and especially where by so doing he prolongs the physical suffering of defenseless victims, stretched and stabbed and scorched in the unholy processes of lynch law. Such a man is not Presidential timber, and we suppose that is why Mr. BORAH will never enter the White House except as a visitor.

Perhaps the Senator from Idaho might feel also that it is for the best interest of the country to retire the "nine old Justices" and perform their constitutional duties himself from the White House. It may be that such legislation as the Costigan-Wagner bill which he has read with a degree of satisfaction of the personal achievements of MUSSOLINI in Italy, of HITLER in Germany, and of STALIN in Russia.

* * *

SEARCHING Mr. BORAH'S record, one cannot escape the suspicion that he is shamefully insincere about anti-lynching legislation. On May 1, 1935, he delivered on the floor of the Senate what is generally conceded to have been the death blow to anti-lynching legislation, the Costigan-Wagner bill. In 1922, aligned with the Senators from those states with the worse lynching record by that very act he would be destroying the Constitution by presuming to determine the constitutionality of legislation passed by Congress. And yet Senator BORAH says he opposed the Costigan-Wagner bill because he had no doubt it violated the Constitution, and added: "That being my view then and now, ... I would unhesitatingly veto it" if elected President.

When one recalls the calibre of Senators and Representatives who supported the anti-lynching legislation, it becomes apparent that wisdom was on both sides of the controversy. Certainly, the opposition gave no evidence of omniscience. If Senator BORAH is willing to determine for himself the constitutionality of federal laws that he has read with a degree of satisfaction of the personal achievements of MUSSOLINI in Italy, of HITLER in Germany, and of STALIN in Russia.

* * *

SEARCHING Mr. BORAH'S record, one cannot escape the suspicion that he is shamefully insincere about anti-lynching legislation. On May 1, 1935, he delivered on the floor of the Senate what is generally conceded to have been the death blow to anti-lynching legislation, the Costigan-Wagner bill. In 1922, aligned with the Senators from those states with the worse lynching record by that very act he would be destroying the Constitution by presuming to determine the constitutionality of legislation passed by Congress. And yet Senator BORAH says he opposed the Costigan-Wagner bill because he had no doubt it violated the Constitution, and added: "That being my view then and now, ... I would unhesitatingly veto it" if elected President.

When one recalls the calibre of Senators and Representatives who supported the anti-lynching legislation, it becomes apparent that wisdom was on both sides of the controversy. Certainly, the opposition gave no evidence of omniscience. If Senator BORAH is willing to determine for himself the constitutionality of federal laws that he has read with a degree of satisfaction of the personal achievements of MUSSOLINI in Italy, of HITLER in Germany, and of STALIN in Russia.

* * *

SEARCHING Mr. BORAH'S record, one cannot escape the suspicion that he is shamefully insincere about anti-lynching legislation. On May 1, 1935, he delivered on the floor of the Senate what is generally conceded to have been the death blow to anti-lynching legislation, the Costigan-Wagner bill. In 1922, aligned with the Senators from those states with the worse lynching record by that very act he would be destroying the Constitution by presuming to determine the constitutionality of legislation passed by Congress. And yet Senator BORAH says he opposed the Costigan-Wagner bill because he had no doubt it violated the Constitution, and added: "That being my view then and now, ... I would unhesitatingly veto it" if elected President.

When one recalls the calibre of Senators and Representatives who supported the anti-lynching legislation, it becomes apparent that wisdom was on both sides of the controversy. Certainly, the opposition gave no evidence of omniscience. If Senator BORAH is willing to determine for himself the con-

sion is unconstitutional. Yet last May when he helped to quash efforts to put a federal anti-lynching law on the books he conceded, for his purpose, that such a law if passed might be sustained by the Supreme Court. But if it were unquestionably in violation of the Constitution, as he insists, could there be any doubt that the nine Justices, whose power it is to say so, would have annulled it? At that time, the gentleman from Idaho chose a line of attack more appealing to the opposition—the gentlemen from the states which make anti-lynching legislation necessary.

"If this kind of bill can be passed and sustained by the Supreme Court," declared Mr. BORAH in May, "we have utterly annihilated all state sovereignty; we have broken down state lines completely." Now he attributes his opposition to his view of its unconstitutionality.

Is it a right or privilege of lawless men, guaranteed by the Constitution, to whip and mutilate and shoot and lynch others without the benefit of legal accusation, trial and conviction? Is there anything sacred about a doctrine of "states' rights" which permits and preserves the lynching evil? Is the federal government more powerless to cope with human rights imperiled by lynching than by kidnapping, economic upheavals, or unnecessary holding companies?

No sane person will contend that lynching can be defended morally. Even Mr. BORAH terms it a horror. And yet he becomes a leader in the fight to block passage of legislation to wipe out the evil, denying to the Supreme Court the opportunity to pass upon its constitutionality. Is it possible that an intelligent person could be sincere in such inconsistencies?

Where is the shame or corruption in a question propounded to elicit the attitude of a lawmaker on a bill to end lawless mob murder? The shame and corruption are in his illogical and apparently insincere answer.

* * * *

AS A leader of the Republican party and one of its most prominent Presidential potentialities, Mr. BORAH stultifies whatever reason the Negro might have had for holding out hope that the G.O.P. might be his salvation. The party that is credited with giving to the race its civil and political rights, and that in some quarters today is regarded as The Only Party for the Negro, now comes forward with a prospective leader for 1936 who openly and unashamed opposes a measure that would safeguard his human rights. If, by any turn of the political tides, Senator BORAH should become the Republican standard bearer next year, no Negro could possibly vote for him or any of his party's candidates.

If that increasing number of colored voters who are aligning themselves with the Democrats need any assurances, they may look with satisfaction to this ironical twist of political fortunes.

TEXAS COURT OFFICIAL LOOKS LIGHTLY ON MOB ATROCITIES IN KILLING TWO NEGRO YOUTHS

County Attorney Says Lynching Is "Will Of People."

COLUMBUS, Tex. (ANP)—Grotesque humor was added to a horrible crime against law here Wednesday when County Attorney O. P. Moore, in discussing the lynching of Ernest Collins, 15 and Benjamin Mitchell, 16, declared: "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the people." The statement likewise served notice that nothing would be done to prosecute the lynchers.

Collins and Mitchell were charged with having criminally assaulted and murdered a young white girl, Geraldine Kollman. They were in the custody of a group of officers when a mob of some 500 whites, including several women, met the officers and took the prisoners, with the firing of a single shot and carried them near the home of the alleged victim and there lynched them.

Victims Smile as Noose is Fixed

According to reports, the two youths, who are alleged to have confessed to the crime, were chained together and members of the mob sought to break the chains to no avail. When all efforts to break the chains asunder proved futile, ropes were placed about the necks of the two youths and they were strung up simultaneously.

The bravado of the doomed youths non-plussed the members of the mob when Mitchell looked at Collins and smiled as the noose was being placed about his neck. As the white man fastening the noose noticed this he tightened the rope and exclaimed: "Now 'nigger,' see if that makes you smile." The tightening of the noose did not erase the smile from Mitchell's face. He was resigned to his fate and Collins, also realizing that to cry for mercy would have stamped him as great a coward as those who were about to execute him, returned the smile and as the youths were being drawn up to the limb of the tree and the guns of the lynchers were being trained upon them smiled a fond farewell to the mob.

An added statement by the prosecutor that he would "prosecute any of the lynchers vigorously" brought forth much laughter on the part of citizens here, who are apparently in accord with the "Will of the People" that prompted the lynching following an order from the state capitol "to do everything possible to apprehend the lynchers."

According to reports, the youths implicated a third youth in the crime and if he is apprehended it is certain in the minds of people here that a like fate awaits him.

Women Flay Ga. Lynchings

M. E. Missionary Ladies Say Mob Law IS NEVER EXCUSABLE And Especially In Two Most Recent Cases

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 22.—The Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta District of the ME church, South, today made public resolutions deeply deploring the two recent lynchings in Georgia and asserting that in neither of these cases was there even the pretense or excuse for mob violence. One of the mob's victims, they asserted, was not accused of any offense whatever and the other was accused only of drunkenness and of effecting his escape from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol. Registering "unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances," the society voiced its protest against 'officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob," and urged 'upon all religious, educational, and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence." The society commended county and state officials who in recent cases have averted threatened lynchings by calling out the troops. The resolution follows:

"We, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta District, ME church, South, in quarterly session, note with deep humiliation that two lynchings have disgraced our state in the last two months; one near Vienna, another near Moultrie. Mobs have defied our laws, discredited our civilization, and mocked our religion. We bow our heads in shame and contrition that such things can happen among us.

"Lynching in our opinion is never excusable, but in these two cases there was not even the pretense of an excuse. Lewis Harris, lynched on September 27, near Vienna, was accused only of drunkenness and of escaping from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol. When he was rearrested, the same officer, apparently without resistence, handed him over to a mob to be shot to death. Bo Brinson, lynched near Moultrie on October 16th, was not accused of any offense whatever. Searching for another Negro, a mob entered Brinson's house. When he objected, they shot him to death in his own home. So far none of the participants in either lynching has been apprehended.

"Therefore, we register our unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances, our protest to officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob, and our shame for a Christian civilization so superficial as still to tolerate such savagery.

"We urge upon officers and courts their sacred obligation to uphold the constituted processes of law, and upon all religious, educational, and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence.

"We are glad to commend the county and state officials who in recent cases have called the organized power of the state to protect persons in the custody of the law and the vindicate the authority of the courts."

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Southern.

4918

He Will Never Be President Borah

Senator William H. Borah doubtless cast the die which will prevent him reaching the presidential chair when he became the champion of state rights in the United States senate, and made his now famous speech which many feel sounded the death knell of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching bill.

Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in a letter to Senator Borah last week, called the Idaho solon's attention to what Mr. White characterizes as "state wrongs." Fourteen lynchings are reported by the Association secretary, and in no single instance have the states where these horrible mob murders occurred, penalized the perpetrators for their crimes against organized society.

Borah, in his senate speech, took the position that anti-lynching laws would not stop lynching. In this we can agree to the extent that our basic laws would prohibit murder has not entirely stopped the slaying of one human being by another. Laws do not obliterate crime, but they are positive deterents to the criminally-minded.

The thing for you to reflect upon is the chaos, slaughter and confusion which would exist but for the penalties of the law. There is no one who would be safe in America but for the constraints placed upon the lawless through fear of law.

Experience teaches that in deliberative bodies, where our emotional self is calm, humanity reaches its highest idealism. It is in such an atmosphere we write law. Most of America's basic law was written at a time when men were fighting for human liberty. No one would in reason be willing to direct his future based on impulse as contrasted to well advised, surefooted deliberation. Neither men nor mobs can think through problems in a moment; we can only look at the outer covering with the glance.

Out of his experiences man knows this, so in his moments of poise and sober judgment he deliberately writes statutes governing human behaviorism. Mexico offers a fine example of how unstable conditions become when we attempt to inject our passions and emotional selves into government. Mobs are momentary outbursts of passion. Mobs offer no permanent solution of any problem. Governments are instituted basicly for the purpose of organizing people out of their natural tendencies to form irresponsible rabbles.

Forgetting the right and wrong in the perspective and viewpoint of Senator Borah, the thing we wish to point out is that he undoubtedly has ruined his chances for the presidency by his untimely utterances. Negroes now vote in such large numbers that they determine presidential elections. It will take all of the Negroes the Republican party ever voted to elect Senator Borah. His pro-mob utterances have divorced about 95 per cent of the black voters in America.

THE FIFTEENTH LYNCHING

Dear Editor: On Tuesday night November 4th, Baxter Bell, a Negro was lynched at Kingston Springs Tennessee, charged with "slapping" a white woman. According to the Nashville Tennessean the slapping took place in a Negro drinking place where the white woman was drinking.

The lynching of Baxter is the fifteenth since January 1st and the tenth since the filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill in the United States Senate succeeded in sidetracking the bill during the last session of Congress. In addition to these known lynchings, two other Negroes were shot to death in the Gretna, Louisiana, jail on November 1st. There have been several other killings which will probably be proved to be lynchings after the facts are gathered.

But leaving these aside and considering for the moment only the ten proved lynchings since the filibuster, they present a problem and a challenge to American Negroes which I ask your permission to place before your readers.

The forces fighting for passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill succeeded in tying up the Senate for eight straight days. Informed persons in Washington were unanimous in believing that had we been able to hold our lines for a few days longer the filibuster might have been broken.

Why weren't we able to hold on a few days longer? For the simple, practical reason that we did not have money enough for telegrams and stenographic service to keep up steady pressure on the wavering senators upon whom terrific pressure in the form of bribes and threats was being exerted by enemies of the anti-lynching bill. Had there been but $150 available for such telegrams we could have held on. Because we did not have fifteen hundred dollars—just about enough to give modest funerals to the ten persons who have been lynched since the filibuster—these ten have died, and others now living will die at the hands of mobs. It may even be you.

The fight will be renewed in the next session of Congress. But unless money is available for printing, postage, telegraph and telephone bills and other necessary expenses the bill may again be defeated. Do Negro Americans really want lynching stopped? The skimpiness of their support of the fight against the evil does not seem to indicate it. The N.A.A.C.P. is laboring now under the terrific handicap of a seven thousand dollar deficit, in part caused by the fight in the last Congress. May we urge individuals, churches, lodges, sororities and fraternities, women's clubs and the like to help us prepare for the coming struggle by (1) bringing pressure to bear upon their congressmen and senators; (2) getting others to do likewise; (3) making as generous a contribution as they can afford. Cheques and money orders should be sent to the N.A.A.C.P., 69 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Walter White, Secretary.

THE USUAL CAUSE IS RARE

The lynching of a Negro in Tennessee for slapping a white woman adds another to the long list of examples of lynch law that are not prompted by "the usual cause." Legally the Tennessee Negro was charged with assault and battery. He was not accused of criminal assault.

The comparatively recent lynching in North Carolina and numbers of others that have taken place in States farther south this year, with hardly an exception, were in consequence of other than the proverbial "usual cause."

Examine any authoritative statistics on lynching and it will be found that in the South as elsewhere only a comparatively small percentage are prompted by the crime known as criminal assault upon white women.

And yet it has been the custom when answering denunciations of lynchings in the South, for some spokesman of this section to argue in general terms that the victims were to blame because of their attacks upon white women and to assert rather defiantly that lynchings by Southern white men could never be stopped until criminal assaults upon their women by blacks ended.

Such arguments are out of date. Comparatively few lynchings in these times are inspired by wrath aroused by criminal assaults upon women. Some of them have been and continue to be inspired by grave crimes against white men, including murder, but numbers of them in late years have been the result of nothing more serious than misdemeanors.

The time has come when those who condone lynchings and cry out in defense of States where lynchings are frequent must find some other defense than the traditional "usual cause." Lynchings for "the usual cause" have become comparatively rare—and the apologists of lynching know it.—The Charlotte Observer.

Lynching In Tennessee

THE fifteenth lynching of the current calendar year took place on Tuesday night, November the fourth. The cause of this particular disgrace to our American civilization and to the fair name of the South was the slapping of a white woman by a half-drunken Negro at a drinking establishment.

It is reasonable to conjecture that the white woman would not have been at this establishment if the atmosphere had been uncongenial to her.

She was evidently at home among congenial folk. If they had not been congenial she could have remained away. No one compelled her to go to this establishment. She went of her own will and accord.

Disputes and altercations are likely to arise in any drinking establishment of whatever group. When disputes arise some one is likely to get slapped or otherwise injured.

At this Negro drinking establishment at Kingston Springs the white woman was slapped.

The man who slapped her was taken into custody by officers of the law. Whereupon the woman's husband and four other relatives took the law into their own hands, and lynched Baxter Bell, the slapper.

These five voluntarily surrendered to the officers of the law, and the country is waiting to see what Tennessee is going to do with these self-confessed murderers.

It is not a case of lynched by parties unknown. The lynchers have admitted their identity, and confessed their guilt. What will the courts do about it?

WALTER WHITE'S APPEAL

Pointing out that the lynching of Baxter Bell at Kingston Springs, Tennessee, on November 4th for slapping a white woman was the 15th since the 1st of January, 1935 and the 10th since the failure of the enactment by the last Congress of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, Walter White, Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People makes an earnest appeal for funds with which to fight for the enactment of the anti-lynch bill at the next session of Congress in January. The full text of the appeal is published elsewhere in these columns.

"Do Negro Americans really want lynching stopped?" is the pertinent question addressed to all Negroes by Mr. White.

The question might be broadened to include, not only lynching, but also every right and immunity guaranteed to Negro Americans under the laws of the land.

It is an indisputable fact that Negroes must learn to sacrifice and pay the price to regain and to safeguard their liberties. They will get no more than they are willing to pay for. This is the sum and substance of Walter White's appeal.

Lynchings-1935
Discussion.

Negro Press, Southern.

4919

NORTH CAROLINA SENATOR WHO OPPOSED ANTI-LYNCH LEGISLATION IN TROUBLE IN HIS HOME STATE

RALEIGH, N.C. (ANP)—When the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was before the United States Senate, one of the first and most bitter of the southern senators to arise in opposition to the bill was Senatr Josiah Bailey of North Carolina. Hour after hour he help up the nation's business in an obstructive filibuster.

At the time he was condemned by the Greensboro Daily News of this state.

But prior to consideration of the anti-lynching measure, the Bankhead Farm Tenants Home Amendment had been placed before the Senate. This measure would have enabled the federal government to inaugurate a program of providing farms and homes for the millions of sharecroppers in the south. Due to the mouthings of Bailey ,the amendment was not voted upon, but sent back to the committee on agriculture where it has rested ever since.

A white man, S. C. Merritt residing in Magnolia in an open lette rto the News and Observer, took Bailey to task last week for his opposition to the sharecropper measure as follows:

"What hopes were dashed to nothing when Senator Josiah W. Bailey took the floor to bombard this plan with objections and obstruction and criticisms so forceful that the bill has been shunted aside. Another victory for Senator Josiah W. Bailey. We cannot understand how a senator of Josiah W. Bailey's supposed intelligence can expct to pursue such a course, knowing as he does, that the enactment of this measure would have bn truly a gift from God to the tenant farmers.

"Citizens, farmers, World War veterans, you have witnessed his slaughter of measures dear to your hearts. You have bgged him for help in behalf of righteous causes, and you have pleaded in vain, and now soon it will be his turn to beg you for something.

"In 1936 Josiah W. Bailey will be coming to you begging for your votes. He likes that job of his in Washington that you gave him. He wants to keep it. But when you go to that ballot box, Mr. Tenant Farmer, Mr. World War Veteran, don't vote for Josiah W .Bailey because he is your enemy and has at every opportunity fought you with his votes in Washington. He refused your pleas. Now you refuse his."

It thus looks like the white tenant farmers may take over the responsibility of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to see that Bailey does not return to the Senate after 1936.

MISSISSIPPI LYNCHING 8TH DURING YEAR

Journal & Guide 9-28-35

Last Affair Incites NAACP Attack On Filibusters

Norfolk, Va.

NEW YORK—In a telegram to President Roosevelt the day following the thirteenth lynching of the year at Oxford, Miss.—and the eighth during the year within Mississippi—the NAACP asserted that the senators who filibustered against the Costigan-Wagner federal anti-lynching bill last spring "lied and knew they were lying when they claimed the states could and would prevent lynchings and punish lynchers."

The complete telegram follows: "Within sight of the University of Mississippi a mob at Oxford yesterday, September 18, perpetrated the thirteenth lynching of 1935. One may be certain that there was grave doubt of the guilt of Elwood Higginbotham, the Negro farmer lynched, when a white jury delayed in finding him guilty.

"Action of mob in seizing victim in open daylight as jury deliberated, with apparently no resistance whatever from the law enforcement officials, is anarchy and nothing else. It is certain nothing will be done by Mississippie authorities to punish lynchers.

"This clearly proves filibusters against Costigan-Wagner bill during last session of Congress lied and knew they were lying when they claimed states could and would prevent lynchings and punish lynchers.

"Does America by its callous indifference and criminal inaction against lynchers mean to say to prospective lynching victims and their friends that they can expect no hope of protection from Federal or State Government and thus must resort to physical force to check anarchic mobs?"

Police Take Precautions With Charges

Journal & Guide 9-28-35

One Charged With Assault In N. C. Rushed To Pen

Norfolk, Virginia

MOB SPIRIT HIGH

Accused Miss. Man Not Thoroughly Identified

RALEIGH, N. C.—State Highway Patrolmen, under Captain Charles Farmer, snatched Willie Myers, 21, from the jeopardy of mob violence in Johnson County Tuesday of last week, outran to Raleigh those interested in lynching him and placed him in Central Prison here for safe keeping.

Myers, who is described by Johnston County officers, as "a stranger in that immediate section, is alleged to have attempted a criminal assault on a 10-year-old white girl earlier in the day near Wilson Mill between Smithfield and Clayton.

The accused man was arrested around two hours after the alleged attack by a posse of approximately 30 men deputized for the search. He was caught about two miles from the scene and taken to the girl's home for possible identification before being turned over to State Highway Patrolmen to be brought here. Several other persons living near Wilson's Mill also identified Myers as the man being sought for the crime.

Arrived Late Once

This was the fourth time in less than two months that the Highway Patrol has been called out to prevent mob violence and has brought successfully to the prison here accused Negroes regarded in jeopardy from Person County and from the Virginia line after extradition, but failed on its first mission, to Franklin County, when it arrived too late to prevent the lynching of Govan Ward, former Norfolk, Va., man, on July 30.

Governor Ehringhaus' office was notified of the attack and immediately dispatched highway patrolmen to the scene where five of them joined local officers and started the search. They found Myers at a house, but whether the occupants were relatives or not the officers could not say.

The attack was not complete as a capital offense, as first reports represented that Myers had dragged the girl into a tobacco barn and committed the crime, but investigating officers disclosed that the attempted attack occurred in the middle of the road, where after a struggle, Myers, hit her in the face, cutting her lip, and then pulled out a knife and slashed her body several times.

After the excitement was over, with Myers safe in Central Prison, officers investigated another charge against their prisoner upon whom they found a purse allegedly to have been stolen from the home of a white man entered Monday night. The prisoner is said to have confessed the crime. It is reported that no one was at home, which reduces that charge to burglary in the second degree.

Threats against Myers were heard from several groups bent upon taking the law in their hands. Governor Ehringhaus regarded the work of the highway patrol particularly good in getting the prisoner to Raleigh as the attitude of neighbors in that vicinity would have probably led to a lynching.

9-21-35

Man Arrested In Miss. Does Not Fit Description

Norfolk, Va.

JACKSON, Miss (ANP)—With the lynching at Oxford yet fresh in the minds of Mississippians, officers at McComb fearing mob violence rushed Oliver Thompson, accused of raping a 14 year old white girl, here to the Hinds County jail Friday morning of last week.

Thompson was arrested early Thursday afternoon, and according to officers confessed to the crime. When confronted by the victim, however, he was not positively identified, neither did he fill the complete description of the assailant.

According to the description given immediately following the attack, the rapist was "a tall slender Negro dressed in ragged clothing and about 24 years old." Thompson is about 24 years old but is not tall and although arrested within a short time of the reported attack was not dressed in rags.

Feeling against the prisoner was described as "intense" by the McComb officers and while no move has been made to lynch him, the officers rushed him to Hinds "lynch proof jail" to prevent any possible trouble.

LYNCHING RIGHT ON

It is, of course, no news to announce another lynching in uncivilized Mississippi. This is to be expected weekly in any of the backward states which comprise that great hinterland of ignorance and barbarism known as the "solid south." The circumstances, however, surrounding the lynching of Elwood Higginbotham, 28-year-old Negro in Oxford, Miss., last week, make this particular lynching a little more colorful than the rest in that it exposes the psychology which prompts the administration of justice to Negroes in most southern courts.

It is said that in this case, the jury took too long in bringing in the verdict demanded by the mob. On the other hand it might be possible that the mobsters shared the views recently expressed by a Virginia judge to the effect that the death penalty decreed by a court of law is a light sentence for such heinous offenses. Which of these considerations influenced the Oxford lynchers is a matter for conjecture. The fact remains, however, that most courts of justice in the Southland must fashion their procedure in cases where Negroes are involved in order to meet the demands of the mob rather than the demands of the law. The mob is made the sole judge of whether the punishment meted out is either too light or too slow. The courts invariably meet the demand of the mob which is lynching right on.

A TENNESSEE LYNCHING

Dayton, Ohio, NEWS

There have been more brutally executed lynching than that which occurred this week at White Bluff, Tenn., but rarely if ever one as brazen. The victim, a Negro accused of slapping a white woman, was taken from a deputy sheriff and another official who were en route with their prisoner to the county jail.

The "mob" consisted of five armed men. They took the deputy's pistol but assured him that they would be back in a few minutes and bring your gun." The promise was kept. In less than half an hour they returned and surrendered to the official. "They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he says. "They told me they shot the Negro with my gun." The sheriff placed no charge but said that they would be taken to the county seat for arraignment.

Only less shocking than the crime itself is the cheerful confidence of this quintet that the law which they boast of flouting will not punish them for it. In the history of lynching, to be sure, they have ample assurance of such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance to a lynching mob. Seldom is there even an effort afterward to identify its members, although in the case of the ringleaders at least that should be comparatively simple. Instances in which they have been brought to trial are still more infrequent. A conviction is almost unknown.

But no mob has had the audacity to do its barbarous, bloody deed and then deliver itself to the law in the attitude of "What are you going to do about it?" The country waits to see how Tennessee will meet an unprecedented challenge.

Says Lynching Is The Will Of Savages In Texas

Columbus, Texas, Nov. 20—(ANP)—Grotesque humor was added to a horrible crime against law here Wednesday when County Attorney O. P. Moore, in discussing the lynching of Ernest Collins, 15, and Benjamin Mitchell, 16, declared: "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the people." The statement likewise served notice that nothing would be done to persecute the lynchers.

Collins and Mitchell were charged with having criminally assaulted and murdered a young white girl, Geraldine Kollman. They were in the custody of a group of officers when a mob of some 500 whites, including several women, met the officers and took the prisoners, without the firing of a single shot and carried them near the home of the alleged victim and there lynched them.

Victim Smiles As Noose Is Fixed

According to reports, the two youths, who are alleged to have confessed to the crime, were chained together and members of the mob sought to break the chains asunder proved futile, ropes were placed about the necks of the two youths and they were strung up simultaneously.

The bravado of the doomed youths non-plussed the members of the mob when Mitchell looked at Collins and smiled as the noose was being placed about his neck. As the white man fastening the noose noticed this he tightened the rope and exclaimed: "Now, nigger, see if that makes you smile." The tightening of the noose did not erase the smile from Mitchell's face. He was resigned to his fate and Collins, also realizing that to cry for mercy would have stamped him as great a coward as those who were about to execute him, returned the smile and as the youths were being drawn up to the limb of the tree and the guns of the lynchers were being trained upon them smiled a fond farewell to the mob.

Will Prosecute

An added statement by the prosecutor that he would "prosecute any of the lynchers vigorously" brought forth much laughter on the part of citizens here, who are apparently in accord with the "Will of the Peole" that prompted the lynching following an order from the state capitol "to do everything possible to apprehend the lynchers."

According to reports, the youths implicated a third youth in the crime and if he is apprehended it is certain in the minds of people here that a like fate awaits him.

The Mote in Our Own Eye

Americans who hold up their hands in holy horror because of the murder of women and children in Ethiopia by Italians, should turn towards Columbus, Texas, and observe what is going on down there in one of the barbarous sections of the United States.

Associated Press releases tell us that a mob of 700, among whom the sheriff could recognize no one, recently seized two Negro juveniles, and without color of authority or law, hanged them to a tree. The bodies of the dead youths were later delivered to their parents, we presume, by parties unknown to the sheriff.

The usual story of rape is offered to cover up and justify such Roman holidays, and the county attorney is quoted as saying that he did not consider the murderers as constituting a mob. They were to the county attorney an expression of the will of the people.

But through the maze of lies creeps a story of a white girl who went down to drive some boys out of a pecan grove. Something happened down there which made white men mad, and when white men get mad at Negro men they immediately jump behind white women's skirts and yell rape. Such an act is just about as courageous as Mussolini's "Desperate Squadron" riding high in the air over tribesmen armed with spears and knives in East Africa, upon whom they drop lethal gases and bombs, classifying themselves as brave and desperate.

We have an idea that the youthful Negro boys might have thrown rocks or did something similar when discovered in the pecan grove. It looks strange that if the white girl was riding a horse, two Negro boys on foot could outrun the horse, capture the girl, and immediately change their program from the petty thievery of pecans to the commission of a felony—rape.

Then again, if the youths did rape the girl and murder her, almost a month ago, how is it now possible to know so much of the details about the alleged crime? As usual the mob says the Negro boys confessed. Mobbists are always liars. The man or woman who hides his or her face in the commission of an act is a coward to start with and by his very act is planning to dodge truth.

Murderers, cowards and liars. These are the human hyenas who constitute mobs, and yet they would have honest people substitute them for courts of justice. America is supposed to be a government of law and not of men.

The county attorney down at Columbus, Texas, should be advised that the "will of the people" should not run contrary to written statutes. Let us cease being horrified at what is going on in Ethiopia. There can be no more hell and heathenism anywhere on earth than exposed at Columbus, Texas.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

Negro Press, Southern.

4911

THANKS BE TO THEM—

Thanks be to Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, formerly of Georgetown, Texas, now of Atlanta, Georgia, for the stand which she has taken against the lynching of two Negro boys at Columbus last week. Mrs. Ames called upon the Federation of white women's clubs of Texas and the governor of the state, to help put a stop to a barbarism which does not exist in any other country outside of the United States.

Thanks be to Bishop Clinton S. Quin, of the Texas diocese of the Episcopal church, for daring even to take the governor of the state to task for his failure to vigorously oppose lynching.

Thanks be to Editor Marcellus E. Foster ("Mefo") of The Houston Press for that fine editorial on the Columbus lynching, which editorial is reprinted elsewhere in this issue.

Thanks most to the Rev. Charles Gresham Marmion for daring to challenge the beastly and fiendish mob—for daring to risk his own life in defense of the principles which he preaches on Sunday. It is such ministers as Charles Gresham Marmion who truly represent Jesus Christ on earth.

VIRGINIA LYNCH RECORD

It has been repeatedly asserted that for the past nine years, Virginia has had a perfect record in regard to lynching and that the enactment of the Byrd Anti-lynch law sounded the death knell of lynching in this state. Two cases, however, cast suspicion upon the accuracy of these claims. In September 1932 the body of Shadrack Thompson, a Negro charged with an assault upon a white woman was found hanging to a tree in the woods near Warrentown, Va. When law officers arrived the body had been cut down by a posse and burned beyond recognition. The coroner's verdict was that Thompson hanged himself when cornered by the incensed posse which afterwards burned his body. This strange verdict was accepted although the circumstances made it well nigh incredible.

On May 14th, 1935, at Marklwaan, Va., not far removed from Warrenton, the body of Nelson Pendleton, 25-year-old Negro alleged to have attempted an assault upon a white woman, was found by a group of enraged citizens armed with rifles. A gunshot wound had caused the death of Pendleton. The coroner immediately returned a verdict of suicide.

These suicide verdicts have enabled Virginia to have an official no lynching score for the past nine years but they certainly impose a severe strain upon the credulity of those not definitely interested in preventing the enactment of a Federal anti-lynch law.

DEAN MILLER CONVINCED OF SENATOR BORAH'S SINCERITY STAND ON ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

(By KELLY MILLER)

For the past three weeks the colored press, and to some extent the white press as well has been lambasting Senator William E. Borah for his outspoken opposition to the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill, on strictly constitutional grounds. Senator Borah ranks as the greatest constitutional lawyer in either house of Congress. His declaration on the floor of the Senate that the impending bill, in his judgment, is unconstitutional perhaps contributed more than any other single measure in the defeat of that ill-fated measure.

Walter White, the dynamic secretary of the NAACP, deemed it advisable to take Senator Borah to task for this frank expression of opinion. He indulged in the implied threat that the Senator's attitude would defeat his political ambition as an aspirant for the Presidency in the approaching election of 1936. This put the doughty Senator on his metal, who threw back the challenge with defiance. He not only reiterated his previously expressed position, but added that if by any unexpected good hap he should be elected to the Presidency, he would veto the pending anti-lynching bill should it come to him with the approval of both houses of Congress. His position is thus far made so clear and emphatic that there is no further need for doubt or questioning.

One might be disposed to question the wisdom of Mr. White's prodding the Idaho Senator for his constitutional position. But zeal for a righteous cause must justify the wisdom of the methods used in attaining the end in view. Those who bear the brunt of lynching evil as well as those who are obsessed with the enormity and iniquity of its villiany are chiefly concerned with relief and remedy, regardless of the method employed to bring this about. William Lloyd Garrison and John Brown were so obsessed with the wickedness and villiany of slavery that they would do away with the evil with or without the constitution. On the other hand, Senator Borah is a strict constitutionalist and believes that as a public official, he must live up to the obligation of his oath to uphold the constitution and the law. To his undeviating attitude in this respect, I can freely and frankly testify after 15 years of more or less casual acquaintance with him. I first met Senator Borah in his home in Boise City, Idaho, during the Presidential campaign of 1920. After an interview of more than an hour, I was convinced that in public life he would follow the lead of his conscience regardless of all other considerations. During this interview he recounted an incident of which I had previously heard. of how he, as prosecuting attorney, had single handed, saved a Negro from lynching in his home city. He hired an engine and personally conducted the culprit to a nearby town where he was safely lodged against the fury and vengeance of the enraged mob.

When the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill was under consideration before the Senate, I called upon Senator Borah and urged his good offices in behalf of the measure. He then expressed grave doubts as to the constitutionality of the Bill, but assured me that if he could convince himself or be convinced, of the constitutionality of the measure, he would rather vote for it than for any other bill then pending in Congress. On the morning of the day when the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill was facing its fate in the Senate, I called up Senator Borah by phone and asked him if he would give me the "low down" on its chances in the upper House. He advised me that it did not have a ghost of a chance, and that some of the Negroes' so-called friends were merely playing politics to delude the race.

It is now claimed by the Negro press generally that Senator Borah himself is playing politics with this grave measure. By championing the cause of states rights he undoubtedly ingratiated himself in the favor of the South; but the Southern vote can be of little or no service to him either in securing the Republican nomination or the election if nominated. The Senator himself does not deem it at all probable that he will be either nominated or elected. But in either contingency, the Negro vote would be of greater political asset to his ambition than the Southern white vote which, it is alleged, he seeks to placate. I think that Senator Borah's consistent record entitles him to the fair and candid judgment that his attitude on the Costigan-Wagner Bill is not dictated by political consideration but by conscientious conviction.

It does not seem to me that we get anywhere by condemnation and abuse. The lynching evil will not be stamped out or checked by vehement abuse of those who oppose some particular measure on strictly constitutional grounds

But, alas, it is human nature to denounce and condemn those who disagree with us on any issue in which our interests, feelings and passion are aroused. Righteous indignation is always a dynamic which reacts on the character and determination of those who give vent to it. We are strengthened in the righteousness of our own position when we can villify those who oppose us. We cannot fight unless we are angry. To call one's enemy an ugly name before striking him serves to justify the blow in the mind of the striker. The Negro's impatience with all opposition to anti-lynching measures is understandable, although it may be pathetically ineffectual.

How to put an end to lawlessness of which murder, kidnapping and lynching are the most outrageous expressions, constitutes the greatest task in which American statesmanship can interest itself. The lynching burning of human bodies at the stake constitutes the greatest blot which stains the American character and stigmatizes its reputation in the eyes of the world. In the main, the perperators are white, the victims are black. We hear it said that this is a white man's country; if so, it is high time that the white were looking after it and safeguarding its fair name in the eyes of mankind. The chief responsibility devolves upon the white race, which makes and executes the laws.

Suppose we advise the NAACP to change its tactics concerning Senator Borah, the oldest, boldest and most forthright member of the upper house of Congress. His conviction of the iniquity of lynching is well attested. Instead of denouncing him for a forthright expression of judgment as to the constitutionality of the pending measure, why not urge him to use his great legal talent in devising an anti-lynching bill, which in his judgment, would meet the objections which now stand in the way. I think he will agree that he can use his high legal talent to no more patriotic purpose.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5188

New York Herald-Tribune
DEC 6 1935

The Mob in the Courtroom

One of the darkest aspects of the tragedy of lynch law in America is the tendency of anti-lynching movements to end simply in a substitution of "judicial murder" for mob violence. Too often the savagery of the crowd is held in check only by a perversion of the court system into an agent of mob passion. The Scottsboro case was an illustration of this. The militia was called out in that affair to protect the defendants, and the case went down in the records as a "lynching averted"—but it was averted only to allow a farcical trial in which the accused were condemned almost as hastily and with as little justice as they would have been by the mob.

Mississippi yielded an illustration of the opposite sort only recently in the case of a Negro accused of the murder of a white man. The defendant had here been accorded a regular trial, but when the jury failed promptly to bring in a verdict of guilty the mob stormed the jail and lynched the defendant while the jury was still deliberating. An article in the current issue of "The Nation" now describes another Mississippi case in which three illiterate Negroes, likewise suspected of having murdered a white man, were run through the mills of Southern rural justice had confessions extracted from them by torture and were expeditiously convicted and sentenced to death in a flagrant miscarriage of justice. But what makes this latter case notable is not these tragic and too familiar details but the fact that they aroused Associate Justice Griffith, of the Mississippi Supreme Court, in an opinion dissenting from that tribunal's refusal to grant a rehearing, to a striking repudiation of this subservience of the courts to the mob spirit:

> It may be that in a rarely occasional case which arouses the flaming indignation of a whole community, as was the case here, we shall continue yet for a long time to have outbreaks of the mob or resorts to its methods. But if mobs and mob methods must be, it would be better that their existence and their methods should be kept wholly separate from the courts; . . . that what the mob has so nearly completed let them finish, and that no court shall by adoption give legitimacy to any of the works of the mob, nor cover by the frills and furbelows of a pretended legal trial the body of that which is in fact the product of the mob.

This was a magnificent attack, delivered by a Southern justice, at the core of the lynching evil. This particular case now goes to the United States Supreme Court, but in the meanwhile the fact that Southerners are more and more coming themselves to a clear insight into the character of the lynching problem is the nation's best guaranty that it can be overcome.

KILLS 'CARRY ME BACK TO DIXIE' BILL

Negro Senator Helps Defeat Trick Law for Extradition

12-14-35

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Dec. 12 (ANP).—Raising the specter of lynching that has taken the lives of more than 5,000 colored men and women and supported by Republicans and liberal-minded Democratis, Senator William R. King succeeded in blocking the passage of the "reciprocal state compact bill" here in the State Senate Tuesday.

This bill, listed as No. 38, provides that any judge of any court of any state which passes a similar bill may by subpoena compel any resident of Illinois, who may be wanted as a material witness, to go to that state to testify.

Cites Danger of Lynching.

Opposing the bill, Senator King made an impassioned address in which he cited the danger faced by colored citizens of Illinois of being subpoenaed to appear in courts in the southern states in cases where the race question was involved. After pointing out the prevalence of lynching, Senator King declared:

"Whatever else this bill may do there is one thing certain, it will pave the way and open wide the door on the slightest pretext for taking people of my race back to southern states, and God only knows what will follow once they are there. I know the proponents of this bill say that Illinois may exact a guarantee from the demanding state for the safe return of its citizens, but if a southern state cannot guarantee the security of Negroes of its own state, how in God's name can Illinois hope for the protection of Negroes sent back to a southern state?

Two Kinds of Justice.

"There is not a man on the floor of this Senate chamber who does not know that in every southern state there are two standards of justice and that to be a Negro is to be robbed of the protection of law. Pass this bill here tonight and you will place upon the gibbet of crucifixion 500,000 defenseless citizens of our state and strike the cruelest blow to the liberty and security of my race since the Dred Scot decision and the Fugitive Slave Law."

New York Evening Post
DEC 23 1935

LYNCH LAW IS NOT AMERICANISM

We have always had a high regard for former Ambassador James W. Gerard. He has been a clear-sighted observer. He had come to be a sort of American Elder Statesman.

That is why we were so deeply shocked at his speech in Jersey City on Friday. He was supposed to have made an Americanization address to 230 new citizens.

In such an address one expects a statement of the free principles on which this country was founded, and the contrast between those principles and contemporary despotisms, Fascist and Communist.

But the language he used was not the language of Americanism but the language of Fascist thugs and hooligans. Our former Ambassador to Germany said—

> Let me warn parents and children alike that those who will not conform to the institutions of this country, who seek to overthrow our Government and substitute some foreign communism will soon be hunted like mad dogs in our streets.

That is the language of a Hitler, a Goebbels or a Goering, not of a responsible American teaching new citizens the principles on which this Government was founded.

Mr. Gerard should know that this is an incitation to mob violence. He should know that every worker who goes on strike for an extra dollar in his pay envelope is at once accused of seeking to overthrow the Government.

He should know that America's budding Fascists and their spokesman, the Hearst press assail every proposal at reform or social security as "foreign communism."

From the Hearst standpoint Mr. Gerard is himself open to suspicion. Was he not the first important American diplomat to come out for recognition of Soviet Russia?

Did not Mr. Gerard attack exploitation of stockholders "by their hired men and even by their corporation directorates"? Wasn't the securities and exchange act passed to end that exploitation?

And isn't the Hearst press attacking that legislation as "communistic" as it attacks legislation to help workers and farmers and consumers as "communistic"?

Mr. Gerard is playing with dynamite. Let down the bars against despotism, curtail our basic liberties, and no one knows where the wave of reaction will end.

Violence against workers and poor farmers in the sharecropper country, in the Imperial Valley, in the Ohio onion country and in Tampa is not violence in defense of Americanism.

It is violence in defense of unreasonable profits and low wages. It is violence using the bogy of "communism" in defense of special privilege.

The James W. Gerard who once told us who were the real rulers of America should know better.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
DEC 24 1935

Lynch Law Is Not Americanism

We have always had a high regard for former Ambassador James W. Gerard. He has been a clear-sighted observer. He had come to be a sort of American Elder Statesman.

That is why we were so deeply shocked at his speech in Jersey City on Friday. He was supposed to have made an Americanization address to 230 new citizens.

In such an address one expects a statement of the free principles on which this country was founded, and the contrast between those principles and contemporary despotisms, Fascist and Communist.

But the language he used was not the language of Americanism but the language of Fascist thugs and hooligans. Our former Ambassador to Germany said—

Let me warn parents and children alike that those who will not conform to the institutions of this country, who seek to overthrow our Government and substitute some foreign Communism will soon be hunted like mad dogs in our streets.

That is the language of a Hitler, a Goebbels or a Goering, not of a responsible American teaching new citizens the principles on which this Government was founded.

Gerard should know that this is an incitation to mob violence. He should know that every worker who goes on strike for an extra dollar in his pay envelope is at once accused of seeking to overthrow the Government.

He should know that America's budding Fascists and their spokesmen, the Hearst press, assail every proposal at reform or social security as "foreign Communism."

From the Hearst standpoint Gerard is himself open to suspicion. Was he not the first important American diplomat to come out for recognition of Soviet Russia?

Did not Gerard attack exploitation of stockholders "by their hired men and even by their corporation directorates"? Wasn't the Securities and Exchange Act passed to end that exploitation?

And isn't the Hearst press attacking that legislation as "Communistic" as it attacks legislation to help workers and farmers and consumers as "communistic"?

Gerard is playing with dynamite. Let down the bars against despotism, curtail our basic liberties, and no one knows where the wave of reaction will end.

Violence against workers and poor farmers in the sharecropper country, in the Imperial Valley, in the Ohio onion country and in Tampa is not violence in defense of Americanism.

It is violence in defense of unreasonable profits and low wages. It is violence using the bogy of "Communism" in defense of special privilege.

The James W. Gerard who once told us who were the real rulers of America should know better.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

DEC 31 1935

Kidnaping and Lynching Blacken America's Record

To the Editor of The Star:

Two editorials in The Star stress the importance which you place upon the departure of Lindbergh and his family for England to escape the machinations of the kidnapers. Small wonder that he flees from the land of his birth for fear that the same wicked fate will be visited upon his infant son which befell his first-born. The approaching execution of Bruno Hauptmann and the revival of the heart-rending incidents of the tragedy and trial serve to revive a cruel memory and to waken afresh the wounds which only time and oblivion can assuage. In England he hopes to find not only greater respect and reverence for law but also a more assuring and tranquil atmosphere.

Things have come to a pretty pass when America's most distinguished and beloved son must seek security and relief from harassment by flight to a foreign land. On account of this unhappy incident the fair name of the land of the free and the home of the brave has suffered and will suffer in the estimation of the civilized world.

Lynching and kidnaping are twin iniquities of which our country enjoys all but a monopoly. These extreme forms of criminal manifestation cannot be isolated and dealt with apart from the general equation of crime of which they are common factors. America is the richest and the wickedest civilized nation on earth. It takes the lead in every form of measured crime. New York and Chicago have 20 times the murder rate of London and Paris. Lynching and kidnaping, two mountain peaks of atrocity, are but special emergences from a common criminal background. While they spring from a common criminal instinct, yet they apply to opposite poles of society. The mob seeks for its victim the poor, the underpriviliged and the defenseless; on the other hand, the gangster visits his dastardly deeds upon the elite, the rich and the mighty. The mob is cowardly because it anticipates impunity; the kidnaper, with dare-devil recklessness, takes his life in his own hands.

There have been over 4,000 lynchings during the past 50 years. The frequency of the horrid happening has so dulled the public conscience that it responds but feebly to each fresh occurrence.

The relative infrequency of kidnaping causes a greater shock to our sensibilities. The different social status of the lynched and the kidnaped also serves to accentuate the difference in public attitude. But the lesson is clear, the inference from the Lindbergh incident is imperative, life at no level is safe and secure unless life at all levels is held sacred.

Four thousand lynchings have not resulted in effective legislation, State or Federal, to cope with the evil. A single case of kidnaping, on the other hand, precipitated a Federal anti-kidnaping law. In the one case constitutional barriers are alleged to stand in the way; in the other such technicalities are swept aside by the aroused purpose to cope with the evil. Legislation, by itself, without supporting public sentiment, is no cure for any form of crime.

Statutes against crime, in any of its forms, will be of little effect unless the American people evince a regard for the sacredness of life in rich and poor alike, and assert the determined purpose to uphold and defend the law as the basis of ordered society. Then, and not till then, we shall have a government of laws, and not of mobs and gangsters.

KELLY MILLER.

Daily Worker
N. Y.
DEC 23 1935

Inciting Lynch Mobs

HEADED by William Randolph Hearst, the lynch wolves are in full cry.

They seek to incite lynch feelings against labor, against liberalism, against every bit of progressive thought in America.

This, and only this, is the meaning of the Hearst streamers in the advance copy of yesterday's New York American (exposed in Saturday's Daily Worker).

When Hearst writes that 'Reds Plot to Massacre All Who Oppose Them In U. S.,' he is clearly seeking to whip up pogrom sentiment. When he deliberately runs side-by-side the pictures of Communist leaders like Earl Browder, Clarence Hathaway, 'Mother' Ella Reeve Bloor and I. Amter with liberals like Professors George S. Counts and Robert Morss Lovett, the implication is clear.

Mr. Hearst wants heads to roll in the sand—heads of Communists, of Socialists, of union leaders, of liberals, of progressives. He wants to make of America one vast concentration camp, so that he and a small group of Tories may continue to plunder and starve the country to the limit of their wildest desires.

The hand of Hearst is truly against everything and every man that is progressive, that is truly American; let the hand of all that is progressive be set against Hearst.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press,- Northern.

5189

Scores of Lynchings and Strike Killings Mark New Terror in South

By ROBERT WOOD

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 22.—A wave of barbaric lynch frenzy is sweeping the South.

In the past few months no less than ten lynchings have taken place in Georgia, Mississippi, Texas and Tennessee. This does not include the officially admitted murder of 15 sharecroppers during the heroic cotton pickers' strike, the two murders in the cotton choppers' strike, both led by the Share Crop-pers' Union. This excludes the 11 deaths in the longshoremen's strike on the Gulf Coast, the murder of two union miners in the Alabama coal fields in the recently concluded strike and several killings in the Kentucky fields. In addition there have been further steps taken in tightening the noose for "legal" lynchings of two Negro workers in Arkansas, three in Mississippi and the nine Scottsboro boys in Alabama.

The key reason for this barbaric wave of murderous reaction is to be found in the fact of the unprecedented militancy and magnificent growing unity being molded in the fire of struggle by the Southern toilers. In the coal fields, in ore mines and blast furnaces, on the Gulf coast among the longshoremen, in the Black Belt among broad sections of the farm workers, in strikes against W.P.A. coolie wages in Alabama, in strike threats against the differential wage scales and increased organization among relief workers in Georgia, everywhere on the industrial and agricultural front the Southern working class is on the move. In bitter struggle against the efforts of the ruling class to drive them into deeper and unprecedented degradation and poverty, the Southern workers are learning the lesson of unity, that by uniting their ranks solidly, in the face of the further attacks against their miserable conditions, lies the way to militant unionism and the end of "popsycle" company unions, the road to better conditions and a better life.

Directed Against Unions

The answer of the bloody ruling class, which has destroyed the lives of countless workers in its resolve to wring super-profits out of the backs of the divided working class in the South, is an intensified campaign of terrorization against efforts at unionization, against labor and especially against the Negro people. This is the frantic effort of a murderous parasitic class to perpetuate its exploitation, and to keep the working class divided, weak and unorganized.

The cold, premeditated effort to murder nine innocent Negro boys continues at Decatur, Alabama. The five years of struggle, led by the I.L.D., during which world-wide interest, protest and aid was enlisted in the fight against this monstrous frame-up, again has focused itself on this small Alabama community. Lieut.-Governor Tom Knight reaches out again for nine lives in order to further advance his political ambitions by serving well the masters of Alabama. From Attorney General he has been elevated to Lieutenant-Governor through his prosecution of the Scottsboro boys, many times over proven innocent of the "rape" charge foisted on them in March, 1931. Knight is striving for the Governorship when Bibb Graves steps down.

The Negro people of Alabama are disfranchised. The laboring white men of Alabama are equally disfranchised by a prohibitive poll tax and other discriminations. The voters in the main are drawn from the ruling class, the court attaches, clerks of the various municipalities and of the state, and some part of the middle class. It is to these that Knight is looking for election in reward for his drive in seeking to send the Scottsboro boys to their death.

Another Scottsboro

In Arkansas the Supreme Court has affirmed lynch verdicts against Bubbles Clayton, age 21, and Jim X. Carruthers, age 19, for alleged "criminal attack." The workers in the Memphis area and throughout Arkansas and sections of the Southwest are familiar with this crude and obvious frame-up against these young boys. The appeals have been financed by the pennies of thousands of workers in that section of the terror-laden South.

Three Negro boys in Mississippi have been sentenced to die. The appeal from the verdict has been taken to the U. S. Supreme Court. When the Supreme Court of Mississippi affirmed the lynch verdicts against these farm workers, two judges dissented.

One of them wrote the dissenting opinion in which he declared his opinion that "the famous Scottsboro cases were models of constitutional perfection in comparison" with the procedure adopted in railroading these youths to their death. "Affirmation of the death sentences," the judge stated, "would be as becoming a court of law as to say that a lynching party has been 'legitimate and legal' because the victim, while being hung, did not object in the proper form of words." Detailing the torture inflicted by the police and "posse deputies" in order to secure a "confession" the judge wrote of defendant Ellington whom "they hanged by a rope to the limb of a tree, and having let him down they hung him again, and when he was let down a second time, and he still protested his innocence, he was tied to a tree and whipped and still declining to accede to the demands that he confess, he was finally released and he returned home suffering from intense pain and agony. The record of the testimony shows that the signs of the rope on his neck were still visible during the so-called trial."

Murderers Get Official Blessing

At Ashland, Tennessee the four Dobson brothers and one Brown were whitewashed by a picked jury after they hd murdered a Negro worker. Their "defense" was that Mrs. Luther Dobson had been insulted by Baxton Bell, the murdered Negro. The cold-blooded manner in which this worker was slaughtered was testified to by Louis Donnelley, the city marshall, who swore that the five killers had unarmed him and seized Bell. Donnelley testified that the five men took his gun and a short time later Luther Dobson, returning it, told him, "Here we are. The Negro is on Kingston Creek. You can say one thing—your gun has killed one Negro."

In Columbus, Texas, Benney Mitchell, age 16, and Ernest Collins, age 15, were lynched, while being taken to Juvenile Court to be tried for "assault," after having been held in Houston for "safe-keeping." For brazen, outspoken, official condonation of these murders it would be difficult to find an equal even in the South. Even the Birmingham News was moved to comment on the villainous "justification" for the lynchings advanced by the county officials and the county judge.

Editorially the Birmingham News writes that "The point was made by local authorities in Texas that under the law these prisoners could not have been executed because of their age. This point is advanced to condone the lynchings. In fact, the county attorney, in whose county the lynchings took place said he considered the mob's action 'an expression of the will of the people.' The county judge said the fact that the Negroes could not be 'adequately punished' by law because of their ages prevented him from 'condemning these citizens who meted out justice to the ravashing murderers.'" Sheriff Frank Hoegmeyer completed the official chorus of approval of the brutal murders and paved the way for future actions of a similar sort by stating brusquely that "I don't plan any arrests."

In Moultrie, Georgia, John Henry Sloan, 21-year-old Negro worker, was sentenced a few days ago to be electrocuted on Dec. 10, for "slaying a white youth." No evidence was presented to connect this young Negro worker with the killing. A month ago a mob of deputies lynched another Negro for the same "slaying of a white youth." The Birmingham News, in commenting on the Sloan case, remarked editorially, "Unfortunately there was a lynching in Georgia in connection with the same case. An entirely innocent Negro was put to death by a mob."

South is Spearhead

In Sparta, Georgia, Winton Boyer, Negro worker, was "captured by a posse" and is now held "for the slaying of a Sparta motorcycle policeman." He has been removed to a Macon jail for "safe-keeping." Losing no time, Judge James B. Park ordered the immediate convening of a special term of the Hancock County Superior Court "to try" Boyer.

In Alabama, Knight has announced that the Scottsboro boys will be arraigned on Dec. 16 before Judge W. W. "Speedy" Callahan and the first trial will be started Jan. 6. The time is short. The boys must be freed. The I. L. D. has issued a call to all who "wish to be counted as friends of American liberty and of justice for the Negro people" to rally unitedly in the defense of these innocent boys.

The need for united and intense action is great. This is no longer even a case of saving nine innocent boys from death. It is a case of rescuing our country from fascist terror.

The workers of the South call to everyone throughout America to join the defense fight. The spearhead of fascist reaction is the South. The struggle to free the innocent Scottsboro boys is a fight to destroy the daily terror visited upon the Southern workers and to stem the spread of fascism in the United Sta

Tractors Raise Farming Levels In the Soviets

Central Stations Used to Service Machines for Collectives

By LEM HARRIS

(Federated Press)

A few years ag the average Russian peasant did all the farm work with oxen and horses and the crudest sort of implements. Wooden harrows were more common than steel ones. Even scythes were not designed with the curved handle and two pegs of the kind found in America, but with a handle as straight as a hoe.

Now these same peasants are to be seen on the seat of Soviet-made wheel-and-track tractors, serviced by their local machine station. The station makes it possible for the few available mechanics to exercise control over most of the heavy implements and at the same time train as quickly as possible new qualified operators.

Imagine the M. T. S., as the machine tractor station is called for short, as a central establishment for servicing surrounding collective farms. The heart of the M. T. S. is the machine shop where the heavy implements are serviced. Roads are built from the M. T. S. in all directions to nearby villages, and telephone connections are set up. The tractor station, as a government institution, owns and controls many units of heavy machinery and tractors.

Former Estate Used

Each spring this machinery moves breakdown.

But the major aim of the station Director Levechenko explained to me, is to have the machinery in such fine condition that a minimum of repair work will be necessary during the season. They planned during the heavy work periods to run the tractors 20 hours a day with two shifts of men working and a third shift for the servicing. I learned from the land department of the whole territory that the tractors averaged 2,000 work hours a year. This forms a dramatic comparison with the 400 work hours which tractors on American farms averaged in 1930.

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.
OBSERVER
NOV 7 1935

WITH OTHER EDITORS

A STRANGE KIND OF MOB.

(Charlotte News)

Tennessee's recent lynching experiences have been unique. There was the affair at Shelbyville last December, when a mob mad with the lust for black blood charged troops around the courthouse and left four mobsters dead. Thereafter, Tennessee was free from even attempted lynchings until yesterday, when five white men took a negro away from two officers, carried him into an adjoining county and killed him with one shot.

It is unusual for a mob, even so small a mob, to be content with firing one shot, or with one cause of death. Each member of a mob likes to have a part in the finale, whether it be firing a gun into the body, giving a hand with the hope, dismembering the victim or simply throwing rocks. This five-man mob in Tennessee was an exception.

But the strangest part of it all is yet to be recounted. A short time after the lynching, five white men surrendered to the sheriff of the county, admitting complicity. So astonished was the sheriff that he hardly knew what to do with them or on what charge to book them. But the State will, we trust; the State will

MADISON, WIS
STATE JOURNAL
NOV 14 1935

A Blot on Texas

LYNCHING of two colored boys aged 15 and 16 years by a mob at Columbus, Texas, adds another score to the already long list of incidents in the south where mob have taken the law into their own hands and placed a stain on the nation by the unlawful killing of Negroes.

The crime that the boys are charged with having committed was revolting. They were responsible for the death of a young white woman 19 years old. This, however, did not warrant their hanging without a trial. Respect for law is not being taught the people of Texas by lynchings.

The south conceives that the lynchings are a lesson to the colored race whom they desire to hold in subjection. They are, however, only a reflection of brutality that engenders race hatred.

The south will never solve the Negro question by the lynching of colored people. The Negroes have their rights before the law which must be respected. The Texans who hanged the two boys at Columbus have simply given an opportunity to other nations to criticize our lack of civilization.

Brute force will not accomplish even the objective which the south hopes. The lynching of the two colored boys presents a picture that will arouse horror in the nation.

The state officials of Texas should in the interests of law and order demand that the perpetrators of the lynching be discovered and prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

ROCKFORD, ILL.
STAR
NOV 28 1935

THE BORAH LETTER

Senator Borah's extraordinary letter to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, upholding his stand on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, which he opposed in the senate, is inevitably being interpreted politically because of the Idahoan's postulation of himself in the White House. We believe it should be taken as the blunt statement of a man irked by the unfortunate wording of an open letter and by the wholly false light which that letter threw on his own record of being generally on the side of justice and right.

Borah's constitutional stand is utterly correct. If the Costigan-Wagner bill were to become law it would mean federal policing of every state in the country, a kind of perpetual martial law. It would lead to federal intervention in many other types of crime, to the end that the last bulwark of states' rights would be cast down. Senator Borah apparently feels that the surest way to achieve the brusque centralization of Moscow, Rome or Berlin is to pass such legislation as the anti-lynching bill.

He is right. Yet what it is difficult to make people understand is why the government can play fast and loose with the constitution in such measures as NRA (now defunct), the Guffey act, the various other pieces of legislation which nullify state rights in an industrial or business way, yet draw the line against an invasion of states rights to protect people from lynching. Senator Borah, of course, has had nothing to do with promoting these invasions of states rights, although he supported some of them with his senate vote, including NIRA and TVA. His stand for extreme constitutionalism would be stronger but for that record.

As for the political slant on the Borah letter: Borah is probably not attempting to get himself nominated for the presidency. He is, almost certainly, hoping that his influence may be felt in the actual nomination. The enigmatic thing about the letter to the colored people's association is not that he risks antagonizing a few million voters at the polls by his bluntness, but that he risks antagonizing the Republican delegations from the south in the national convention. For colored voters have some influence there. And that influence will hardly go to Borah's choice for the nomination now.

The Lynchings of Two Days

Christian Century
11-27-35

DATA in regard to lynchings and attempted lynchings on two days, November 13 and 14, included four items: (1) Moultrie, Georgia. National guardsmen were sent from Atlanta to protect a Negro charged with killing a white man. After he had been convicted and sentenced to death it required the use of tear gas and rifle-butts to save him from immediate death at the hands of the mob, which had already killed another Negro while searching for its victim. (2) Ashland, Tennessee. Five white men are on trial for murder in connection with the lynching of a Negro ten days ago. (3) Austin, Texas. At a convention of the Texas federation of women's clubs, while a resolution was under consideration asking the governor to investigate the recent lynching of two Negroes charged with assaulting a white woman, an elderly woman protested against investigating the case and voiced the sentiment now less frequently heard than in earlier days: "Nothing will save southern women from those brutes except lynching." (4 and worst) Columbus, Texas. Two Negro boys, fifteen and sixteen, had been lynched on a charge of murder and assault. The county attorney said: "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people." The county judge said: "The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers." Under Texas law, which is supposed to express the will of the people, boys of fifteen and sixteen cannot be sentenced to death by the courts. Under the law of Texas and every other state, no one can be sentenced except by a court. To the county attorney and the judge these expressions of the will of all the people count for less than the righteous wrath of a single community against two offenders. Sworn defenders of law, order and justice have seldom sunk to the level indicated by the utterances of these two officers of the courts.

Lynchings- 1935
Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5190

WILMINGTON, DEL.
NEWS

NOV 6 1935

DEATH FOR A SLAP

LYNCH law, in all its cold, merciless, unreasoning brutality made its appearance on the front pages yesterday.

In Tennessee a small band of armed men held up a deputy sheriff, and took his gun and a Negro prisoner away from him. A few miles away they shot the Negro in cold blood and threw his body in a thicket.

What had the Negro done to be murdered?

The day before, on a busy downtown street, he had slapped a white woman. He had been arrested on a charge of assault and battery. To the sheriff, he had said: "I don't know what I done. I was just drunk."

He was drunk and he had slapped a woman of another race. For this crime he was taken out and shot without a trial and without a chance.

Afterwards five men surrendered at the jail, presumably part of the band which seized the Negro from the sheriff. But so far no charge has been placed against them. Their willingness to give themselves up indicates that they feel that in Tennessee, at least, no punishment will be meted out.

Unless these men are brought to trial and an attempt is made to punish the murderer, this is the way the Tennessee code will read.

A slap on the face merits death without a trial.

Murder merits a mild reproof.

That is the kind of law that lynch law is. It flouts the law and the officers of the law. It flouts the courts. And unless it is stamped out it sets up a lawlessness that is higher than law and that has no respect for ordinary concepts of justice and right.

Tennessee is on trial before the nation for tolerating that sort of lawlessness now. And the nation will be watching to see what Tennessee does to redeem herself.

HUTCHINSON, KANS.
HERALD

NOV 6 1935

SOUTHERN MANHOOD

The other day in White Bluffs, Tennessee, a white woman came to the sheriff's office and complained a Negro had slapped her as she alighted from a bus. The Negro was arrested on an assault and battery charge. A short time later, five valiant Nordics wrested him from jail, shot him fatally in the chest, tossed his body as so much rubbish into a thicket. By tradition, they bungled the job. Their victim was not subjected to the inhuman torture usually reserved for those of his race who sully the pure flower of southern womanhood.

Hutchinson in the past year has had several cases in which white women allegedly were insulted by Negroes. In at least one of them, the charge was groundless, the figment of a highly nervous woman's imagination. In the others, justice was administered temperately, and only after a fair trial.

But in Tennessee, Judge Lynch who listens to just one side is on the bench. Brutal death is the only punishment he knows, however trifling the crime, whatever the facts. Justice he regards is only for poor white trash of the north.

One sometimes wonder about the quality of southern manhood. Its womanhood, of course, is kept unsullied.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

NOV 9 1935

JUST A PRANK

ATTENTION of chivalrous Southern Senators, who blocked passage of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, is called to what happened the other day in White Bluff, Tenn.

A band of armed white men there seized a Negro from officers of the law, drove him to a thicket, shot him in the chest and left him to die. The victim had been charged with slapping a white woman.

The lynchers, who had borrowed the gun from a deputy sheriff named Donnelly, returned it after their deed.

"They were all laughing," Donnelly reported, "and seemed like they had enjoyed what they had done."

BUFFALO, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 8 1935

JUST A PRANK

ATTENTION of chivalrous Southern senators, who blocked passage of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, is called to what happened the other day in White Bluff, Tenn.

A band of armed white men there seized a Negro from officers of the law, drove him to a thicket, shot him in the chest and left him to die. The victim had been charged with slapping a white woman.

The lynchers, who had borrowed the gun from a deputy sheriff named Donnelly, returned it after their deed.

"They were all laughing," Donnelly reported, "and seemed like they had enjoyed what they had done."

TEXAS COUNTY ATTY. JUSTIFIES LYNCHING

There seems to be no end to the lynching of HUMAN BEINGS in this LAND OF THE FREE AND HOME OF THE BRAVE, and as long as public officials condone mob action, a certain element (THE LYNCHING ELEMENT) will continue burning people to death. Perhaps you remember the instance of Governor Rolph of California, who sought to defend a lynching two years ago, and of Cole Blease of South Carolina who repeatedly approved of lynching Negroes.

Beaumont 11-22-35

And now a County Attorney down in Texas seeks to justify lynching by saying that the lynching of two Negro youths in Texas recently was "AN EXPRESSION OF THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE." Public officials who condone lynching should be removed from office forthwith. A FEDERAL LAW SHOULD BE PASSED and enforced to keep individuals with a such a low standard of culture from holding public office. The SOCIAL CONSCIOUSNESS OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE should be awaken to the extent that individuals like O. P. Moore, of Columbus, Texas, the man who holds the office of County Attorney, be removed from office.

The two Negro victims were in the hands of the law when they were seized by the lynchers. The officers of the law could have dealt out the justice demanded by their offense, but that was not the will of the people. It is high time that decent American Citizens rise up and STOP lynching and the public defiance of law.

TEXAS SEN. QUIZZED ON DOUBLE LYNCHING

Senator Tom Connally, Who Declared States Could Stop Lynching, Asked To Act By N. A. A. C. P.

NEW YORK.—Senator Tom Connally of Texas, who wrote the N. A. A. C. P. last December that he did not intend to support the Costigan-Wagner federal anti-lynching bill because he believed the states could and would stop lynching, was asked this week by the N. A. A. C. P. to advise it of what steps the state of Texas was taking to punish the lynchers of Bennie Mitchell, 15, and Ezell Collins, 16, who were hung November 12 by a mob at Columbus, Texas. The N. A. A. C. P. telegram stated:

"Will you wire us and advise what steps if any Texas authorities will take to punish lynchers of two boys, fifteen and sixteen years old, at Columbus, Texas, yesterday. We ask this in the light of your bitter opposition to and filibuster last April against Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill which would have given federal aid as in kidnaping to states. You and other small group of filibusterers contended federal government had no right to interfere with lynching and that states could and would stop lynching and punish lynchers. We call your attention to statement of County Attorney Moore describing lynching as "expression of will of people" and to statement of County Judge Hahn who violates every principle of judicial behavior by calling dead boys guilty when no trial had been had to establish their guilt. Texas has supplied country with 17th and 18th lynchings of 1935, 13 of which have occurred since filibuster, proving states cannot or will not act. Please advise if you in coming session of Congress will support federal legislation."

The association also telegraphed a protest to President Roosevelt on the two lynchings in Texas and the lynching of a white CCC worker in West Virginia.

Columbus, Texas—Chalking up the season's high with number eighteen lynching, more than 700 persons, including several women, took two Negro youths accused of the murder of Geraldine Kollman from Colorado county officers Tuesday and hanged them to a live oak tree four miles north of Columbus. "It is an expression of the will of the people," commented County Attorney O. P. Moore on the incident. The bloodthirsty gang is still searching for another Negro whom they say is implicated in the crime.

The two prisoners, Benny Mitchell, 15, and Ernest Collins, 16, were being taken from Houston to Columbus Deputy Sheriff Berry Townsend for trial Wednesday in juvenile court for criminally attacking and killing the girl October 17th. As the officers and their prisoners reached a bridge at Altair, eleven miles south of here, the mob stopped them, jerked the boys from the car and rushed them to a spot only a mile from the farm of the slain girl's parents.

Accused of Thievery

Miss Kollmann, high school graduate, was criminally attacked, slain and her body thrown into Cummings creek, which flows through her father's pasture. Miss Kollman is thought to have been killed when she rode into the pasture in search of thieves who had been stripping pecan trees. Police claim the Negroes said in their confessions they were seated on a log on the farm when the girl approached on her horse.

When they denied they had been stealing pecans, she told them to follow her and she would show them a tree that had been stripped. Officers quoted the Negro boys as saying they conceived the idea of attacking her as they walked behind her. "Let the law take its course," pleaded E. B. Morain, an Episcopal rector, as the "citizens" wreaked their vengeance with the rope.

LYNCHING AND PUBLIC OPINION

THERE ARE SIGNS of an awakening public opinion against lynching in the South, although recent statistics may appear to the contrary.

Following the lynching in Texas last week of two Negro minors, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching met in Austin and demanded that lynchers stop making the South "ridiculous," although one Texas woman assailed the demand for an inquiry and used the old exploded argument about lynching saving "southern womanhood."

The state of Georgia, which in many ways has taken the lead in unfair treatment of Negroes, took a stand for law and order last week when National Guardsmen were sent to Moultrie to prevent the lynching of Henry Sloan, who was on trial accused of slaying a white man. Sloan was convicted and has been sentenced to die December 10. As the prisoner was being taken from the court room, the soldiers repelled the would-be lynchers in a hand-to-hand fight in which several of the attackers were felled from blows with the butts of rifles. Sloan was taken to Macon by motor for safe keeping until he could be removed to the state prison at Milledgeville.

In Ashland City, Tenn., five white men were placed on trial in Circuit Court Nov 14 on charges of murder in connection with the lynching of Baxter Bell, who had been accused of striking a white woman while she was drinking with them in a colored saloon.

These incidents are cited to show the growing sentiment in the South against lynching. This is a step in the right direction, for until the majority sentiment of the South is against mob murder, the several states will be powerless to stop it.

On the other hand, a local judge and other officials in Texas attempted to condone the recent outbreak in that state as being "expressions of the will of the people." It is the weak-kneed officials, who are sworn to stand for law and order who must be reformed. It is because they will not stand by their oath of office that federal intervention is needed now.

RACINE, WIS.
TIMES-CALL
NOV 18 1935

OUR NEIGHBORS

SOUTH MUST CHANGE

Wisconsin State Journal: Baxter Bell, a Negro, slapped a white woman in White Bluff, Tennessee, and was lynched by a mob for the offense.

Five of the leaders of the mob that took Bell from the sheriff of Cheatham county and after running him out in the country shot him have surrendered to the authorities. They consider they meted righteous justice to the Negro because of his alleged insult to the white race.

The charge of murder has been lodged against the men under arrest. The good name of Tennessee should compel a vigorous prosecution of the men who thought so lightly of human life that they would kill a man because he slapped a woman.

Lynchings under any circumstance are a deplorable blot on this country. The killing of a man, however, for an offense as trivial as assault and battery, the charge filed against the Negro, is an outrage that even the citizens of the southern states with their prejudices against the colored people and their desire to keep them in subjection can not overlook.

Lynchings of persons charged with revolting crimes are not defensable but the killing of a man simply because in the heat of anger he committed a minor assault is beyond comprehension.

The south will never win the respect of the world through citizens taking the law into their own hands and punishing Negroes without even the semblance of a trial.

Such methods are merely bull-dozing attacks on the colored race in an attempt to keep it a peasant population.

Southern sentiment on the race question can not but be viewed as unfair in the north as long as such incidents occur as the White Bluff lynching.

CUMBERLAND, MD
TIMES
NOV 19 1935

LEGAL EXECUTOR

What began to look like a new epidemic of lynching parties was halted by the courageous action of national guardsmen in Moultrie, Ga. They dispersed a mob of 2,000 enraged citizens who were trying to take a condemned Negro from sheriff's deputies.

It isn't evident that justice is going to suffer from that bit of law-enforcement. The prisoner, already convicted, is to die in the electric chair on Dec. 10. The individual crime will be punished without adding to it a social crime.

Lynchings will die out in time, because it doesn't pay for society to brutalize itself in avenging crimes. Slowly people learn that the surest way to prevent crime is prompt, certain justice by legal processes.

NEWTON, KANS.
EVE. KANSAN-REPUBLICAN
NOV 18 1935

They pulled off a lynching bee in Texaas, a mob of several hundred taking a couple of Negro youths from a sheriff and hanging them. A local justice of the peace criticized the action of the mob and the governor of the state has asked for an investigation. The county attorney on duty in the locality where the lynching took place expressed an entirely different sentiment, however, when he asserted that "This was not a mob, it was merely an expression of the people." He intimated that he considered it utterly impossible to identify and prosecute any members of the mob. That idea will hardly square with the opinion outside of the "lynching zone." The "will of the people" is to ob'ey the laws and to expect officers charged with enforcement to do their duty. It is not the will of the people to take the laws into their own hands and set them aside whenever it pleases their fancy or passions. An officer whose sworn duty is to enforce the law who throws up his hands helplessly and side-steps an ugly job by dismissing the act as the "will of the people" is unfit for the office and unworthy of the confidence of those who trusted him.

Lynchings - 1935
& Discussions.

White Press - Northern.

5191

New York Evening Post

NOV 16 1935

As The Crow Flies

Jehovah's Witnesses Fired, But a Judge Keeps His Job

By ERNEST L. MEYER

IN TEXAS this week two young Negro boys accused of murdering a white girl were taken from the sheriff by a mob and lynched. Nothing has happened. County Attorney O. P. Moore said, according to the Associated Press, "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

And County Judge A. P. Hahn added that he could not condemn the members of the mob because the youth of the Negroes would have prevented them from being "adequately punished."

One assumes that both the county attorney and the county judge, on being inducted into office, took an oath to uphold the Constitution, which, according to report, guarantees all defendants the right of fair trial. Nothing in the Constitution or in all of its amendments gives a mob the power to seize, murder and mutilate criminal suspects.

Two Kinds of Oaths

Proving again the idiocy of "taking oath." As illustrated by the hocus pocus of making school children swear fealty to the flag and to the Constitution of which the flag is a symbol.

The irony is this: a number of immature children, members of a religious cult, Jehovah's Witnesses, have been expelled from school for refusing to abide by the silly ceremony of saluting the flag.

But the mature Texas prosecutor and judge, already sworn, flagrantly violate their oath and wink at lynch law and mob murder. And they keep their jobs, with amens from "nigger haters."

Will the same people, organizations and papers that condemned the "unpatriotic" school children and demanded their expulsion now step forward, please, and demand the ouster of the Texas officials?

In the scales of simple justice, if any still exists, which is the greater offense: a pledge withheld or a pledge betrayed?

The Grateful Bankers

IN THEIR annual convention at New Orleans the American Bankers Association went on the warpath against the New Deal.

Pondering this news story and remembering the plight of the bankers three years ago when banks were falling faster than a barometer in a hurricane, I dreamed this dream:

A beggar, tattered, down at heels, stood at a corner, whining: "For the love of God, help me. Once I was strong and healthy as you. But now I have anemia, fallen arches, and suffer from malnutrition and boils. Please, sir, please. . . ."

So I took what loose change I had in my pocket and tossed it into the old wool sock that the beggar thrust at me.

"Why," I said, noting the bulk and the heft of the sockful of panhandled coins, "what a big and heavy stocking you have there."

"The better to bang you with, my dear," said the beggar, baring his yellow teeth.

And he twirled the sock and brought it down on my head. And I saw stars, and heard bells ringing, and awoke with a start to find it was only the doorbell, rung by the newsboy who had delivered a paper telling of American bankers, in convention, swatting the New Deal.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

NOV 15 1935

Condoning Lynching

When the Governor of California several years ago condoned a lynching, saying that he would pardon any of its perpetrators who might be convicted, he provoked a storm of criticism the echoes of which must still ring in his ears. After the rebuke that he received, including a statement from the President, it seemed unlikely that other public officials would lay themselves open to similar criticism.

Yet a County Attorney in Texas has invited a like reprimand for his declaration, following the lynching of two boys, one fifteen, the other sixteen, that he did not consider the citizens who "executed" them a mob. "I consider their action," he said, "an expression of the will of the people." Apparently, then, he does not hold the law that he is sworn to administer in high esteem. His remark seems to imply that he believes that it should be set aside whenever it seems inadequate to any considerable group in the community, particularly if, as in the present case, the objects of resentment are Negroes.

His attitude is backed, not merely by the lynchers, but also by the County Judge. Under the law in Texas, the boys, who had been accused of murdering a white girl after assaulting her, could only have been sent to a reformatory until they were of age. Such punishment, in the opinion of the Judge, would not have been sufficient. Hence, he declared, he could not condemn "those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night." Like the County Attorney, he too apparently believes that whenever a law seems inadequate it should be set aside without protest. To say the least, such an attitude is curious in a man who is supposed to personify on the bench the dignity, the majesty and the supremacy of the law.

The circumstance that the accused boys were said to have confessed the crime does not justify the attitude of the County Judge and the County Attorney. The accused should have been tried by orderly process, and if found guilty, they should have been punished as the law requires. If the law does not provide adequate punishment, then it should be amended, by orderly methods. The lynching has done nothing to correct the situation of which the lynchers complain. On the contrary, it has only weakened respect for all law, and the sanction given the murders by the representatives of the court makes the matter infinitely worse.

ALBANY, N. Y.
NEWS

NOV 14 1935

'White Folks' Justice?

"WHITE folks, please don't do this."

That was the plea of Ben Mitchell Negro boy of 16, just before a mob of 700 men and women in Texas lynched him and Ernest Collins, 15, for slaying a white girl.

But the white folks ignored his plea and hanged him. The county attorney is quoted as saying that the lynching was an "expression of the will of the people." Is it the will of the people of Texas that law be flouted, that justice be taken into the hands of a mob? And did the people feel they were setting an example to the Negroes, an example that would make them lawabiding, make them respect law? If they did they were wrong. The crime of these boys cannot be condoned but the crime of 700 "white folks" is a worse crime.

[redacted]

NOV 13 1935

Lynching of two negroes in Texas only brought a statement from a county attorney there in which he expressed himself as believing it was "the will of the people" and apparently there isn't very much he can do about it. It's just possible, of course, that charges of disturbing the peace will be brought against members of the mob who should have known that such unmannerly procedure was out of place on any other night but Saturday.

SALINA, KANS.
Journal

NOV 14 1935

THE WRONG SPEECH

A mob made up of some 700 people of a Texas community, took two Negro boys accused of murder and hanged them on a farm. And just after the justice of the peace announced an investigation of the mob would be made the county prosecutor of that Texas county came out with a statement upholding the mob. He said he considered their action expressed the will of the people and therefore was justified.

It was a bad speech for a county prosecutor. It was a speech defying law and order and upholding the execution of vengence by mob rule and action. It is no wonder, when officials elected, paid and sworn to uphold the law, treat it so lightly, that the law gets the little respect it does.

There may be no public sympathy for the two Negroes, young as they were. The crime they committed was brutal and cruel. The murder of a 19-year-old girl, a high school honor graduate, deserved the death punishment even though the two murderers were young. They were not so young they did not realize to the full extent the wickedness of the crime they committed.

But for a county prosecutor to justify the action by the mob, is to justify and encourage law violation. It is to justify those who regard the law as a conglomeration of words on a piece of paper and nothing more. And certainly, with that kind of an endorsement, mobs will be more likely than ever to kill and probably will not be so greatly concerned as to whether or not they have the right person or whether the crime deserves a punishment as severe as death.

The inference by the county attorney is that people grow weary of delay by the law, of technicalities and of the performance of the courts. Therefore they are determined to make sure the guilty get their deserts.

That undoubtedly is true. Dilatory legal procedure and evasions no doubt have influenced many a mob. But is not the county attorney a part of that procedure? Is not he one of the causes of the delay often enough? Is not his own lack of diligence a factor that so often causes public resentment in these cases? The Texas county attorney, in upholding the mob, not only seeks to give official sanction to disregard for law, but he indicts himself.

Has he forgotten what happened a year or two ago when a certain western governor endorsed a mob?

The Rule of Lynch Law Terrorism

New York Evening Post

NOV 16 1935

To the Editor of New York Post:

Sir—The observations of "Justice" in your paper are correct, and I think the geographic location of my residence gives me the authority to verify a theory that the private lives of lynchers are generally inferior to the lives of the victim.

Although it is not logical to excuse men and women addicted to the American pastime of murder or attack, one must pause long enough to consider the environment and economic condition of various persons forced without premeditation into a life of crime.

By deliberate (perhaps malicious?) meditation we arrive at the opinion that the so-called "bourbon aristocracy" is directly or indirectly the cause of most of the minor and major crimes committed by the Southern poor whites, the Negroes, and, at fairly regular intervals, by this so-called "aristocracy" itself, an aristocracy that is not above murder when it comes to keeping the Southern workers contented with their starvation wage and pellagra or solving the more provincial and intimate problem of love affairs among the Bourbons.

An indication of the ultra-Southerner's fear of light is the recent censorship of "Tobacco Road," the Scottsboro, Dr. Begun, Gelders, Shields and Angelo Herndon cases, and the dismissal of several Southern newspaper men who were so careless as to "write the truth," not to mention recent Fascistic attacks on the literary productions of two authors, one from Mobile, the other from New Orleans.

There is no academic or political freedom in the South. Don't come South for justice.

A SOUTHERNER.

Alexandria, Va.

WEBSTER CITY, IA.
FREEMAN JOURNAL
NOV 16 1935

Two Negro boys were lynched in Texas the other day, "charged with murdering a young white woman near Columbus, Texas, on October 17." There was no evidence of guilt, but the boys were "suspected." They might have been "suspected" by the real killer. That often happens in the south. "If the Negroes didn't kill the woman," the theory is, "they were capable of it."

New York World Telegram

NOV 19 1935

Lynchings Threaten Government Foundations.

By S. McComas.

This morning (November 13) I read of lynchings in the South. I am a lower middle class Southerner, and whenever lynchings occur I am gripped by terror. I do not want to see this country in revolution. I do not want to go to a concentration camp.

I do not believe that those people who have been conditioned at the roughest end of a ruthless economic system are fitted to rule, but if lynchings continue nothing can stop such a cataclysm.

Lynchings in the South are the concern of every section of the country because they threaten the very existence of all of us. They are sticks of dynamite applied to the foundation of democratic government.

New York.

BROOKLYN CITIZEN

NOV 20 1935

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES

Condonation of the lynching of two Negro boys in Texas by both the County Judge and the County attorney "as an expression of the will of the people" seems strange to us Northerners. It is our conviction that two such officials should devote themselves to seeing the orderly process of the law being maintained. The fact that the two Negroes, aged 15 and 16, who confessed attacking and killing a white girl, could not be sentenced to death, but would be liable only to imprisonment until they came of age, explains what impelled the Texas mob to wreak its vengeance. Lynching, however, is not in accord with our national ideals, the South notwithstanding. The only possible cure would seem to be a Federal anti-lynching law to be passed over the South's opposition.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

NOV 16 1935

The Southern View

Many persons were shocked at the Associated Press dispatch from Columbus, Texas, where two Negroes were lynched after being charged with the murder of a white girl. "The lynching of two colored youths here last night was accepted as 'the will of the people' today by County Attorney O. P. Moore," it said. "Moore asserted he would make no investigation, though the grand jury might take up the case—next February."

Those familiar with the South and with Southern people understand that Mr. Moore undoubtedly is right in diagnosing the will of the people in cases of this kind. The youths who had confessed that they brutally murdered a fine young white woman after mistreating her on a lonely part of her father's farm were fifteen and sixteen years old—minors. Under the Texas law the most severe penalty for their crime would have been imprisonment during their minority. Had the law been allowed to take its course each young murderer would have gone free when he became twenty-one.

More than seven hundred persons took part in the hanging of the boys. In spite of the fact that Southerners are notably religious the assembled men and women refused to listen to a minister who pleaded for the lives of the Negroes. "Get another rope" some shouted as the clergyman persisted in his plea. No more convincing proof could be adduced that this lynching actually did represent "the will of the people."

Lynching is not so widespread in the South now as it used to be. Sentiment against it has grown below Mason and Dixon's line the last twenty-five years. Yet there is no denying that when a white woman is attacked by a colored man the will of the people of the South is that he should be executed. Possibly if legal capital punishment had always followed quickly upon swift conviction in such cases "the will of the people" would be that the courts should handle these matters.

Laws that are successfully enforced must really be the will of the people. We found that out during the time prohibition was the law of the land. In fact the ideal situation would be one where no laws were enacted unless they had the backing of a majority of the citizens.

Because it is the will of the Southern people that a Negro who violates a white woman must forfeit his life, probably no amount of indignation in the North and no Federal law will, for a long time to come at least, stamp out such occurrences as this recent double hanging by a mob in Texas.

BALTIMORE, MD.
MORNING SUN

NOV 14 1935

MORE LYNCHING

Late editions of The Sun yesterday contained a dispatch from Texas of the lynching of two Negro boys and a dispatch from West Virginia of the apparent lynching of a foreman of the Civilian Conservation Corps. In the latter case, authorities decided later the man had committed suicide. In the case of the Texas Negroes there was no question. They were hanged by a mob of 700 persons. Several women were present.

To make the lynching more disastrous to law and order, the county authorities apparently condone the crime. The county attorney calls it "an expression of the will of the people," and declines to speak of the lynching group as a mob. He terms the action an "execution." The county judge, while asserting he opposes lynching, declines to condemn "those citizens who meted justice to the murderers." His reason is that the Negroes, one of whom was 15 years old and the other 16, could not legally have been executed in Texas. They could not, therefore, he reasons, have been "adequately punished" for their alleged attack on and murder of a young white girl.

Such a state of affairs as is indicated by the expressions of these officers cannot exist in a truly civilized community. The State of Texas should take steps to apprehend and punish leaders of the mob.

LINCOLN, NEB.
MORNING STATE JOURNAL

NOV 7 1935

The execution of two Negroes in their jail cells constitutes a peculiar commentary on the administration of justice in the south. Two Negroes, charged with a statutory offense, were jailed in the Jefferson parish, Louisiana, jail. The sheriff claims that the prisoners opened fire on him from their cells. It is peculiar that the prisoners should have had weapons. Someone was negligent in the management of the jail. Even tho they possessed weapons, and the sheriff admits he had a tip that they had obtained them after they were committed to jail, they could have been disarmed. A man in a cell, even tho armed, is at a peculiar disadvantage. When the sheriff's deputies mowed the prisoners down with a volley of bullets they were committing an act more reprehensible than that of a bloodthirsty mob at a lynching.

Lynchings - 1935
Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5192

DECATUR, ILL.
HERALD

FEB 18 1935

Some Assignments For Roosevelt

Villard Suggests a Number of "Lost Opportunities"—Chances for Notable Reforms in the United States That Might Be Realized Easily By a President as Popular as F. D. R.

By OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD

SOMETIMES I think that the Roosevelt administration is going to be as famous for its lost and rejected opportunities as for its actual achievements. Probably that is unfair. But when I see what the President could accomplish, often by a mere stroke of his pen, by a speech, by a word to the newspaper reporters when they assemble to meet him, it seems extremely discouraging that these words are not forthcoming.

What About Lynching?

There is the question of lynching, for example. Senator Costigan has again introduced the bill which he and Senator Wagner put in last year to make lynching a federal offense. It is similar to the bill favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate at the last session of Congress, which because of pressure of Administration matters was not discussed or voted on. Last year if the President had lifted a finger it would have gone through and we might have had some action in regard to one of the most horrible lynchings of which I have ever read.

The details of the mob murder of Claude Neal are too foul, too bestial, too revolting, too obscene to print. It does not even suffice to say that what happened would have disgraced Sioux Indians. The dead man, whose body while he lived was burned with red hot irons from his head to his feet, was finally hung, after several hours of unspeakable torture, in the presence of from three to five thousand people, men, women and children, who had been notified of what was going to take place and were on hand to witness it.

I frankly do not see how Mr. Roosevelt can have failed to have spoken out about this horror, but just as he would not speak up for the Costigan-Wagner lynching bill last year, he has kept silent in the face of an atrocity which is being featured throughout the Latin press especially in South and Central America. But whether it is that he does not wish to alienate some of his Southern white supporters, or whatever the reason, he has said nothing. But he has not, of course, the excuse that Woodrow Wilson had when he refused to appoint a race commission to study the Negro problem scientifically and to gather the facts as to the Negro and the relationship of the two races, because he thought it would be misunderstood in the South and offend the section in which he was born.

The Hardest Lesson

As I have repeatedly pointed out, after the vote of last fall President Roosevelt has no need whatsoever to consider the political effect of any action that he may choose to take; no President has ever received such an endorsement at the polls as he—at least in modern times—and he need not have the slightest fear as to his reelection, provided we do not face much worse economic conditions. And this is only one of a number of things that he could do, which would not only tremendously enhance the United States, but increase his own prestige and win the regard of the people in still greater measure than he now has it.

But somehow or other it is the hardest lesson in the world for American politicians to learn that this people craves the opportunity to uphold and to admire courageous men in public life. The wide support of Theodore Roosevelt was due to the fact that people believed that he was courageous, sincere, consistent, and utterly fearless in dealing with big business, and the "malefactors of great wealth." Those who observed him at close range and were not blinded by the charm of his brilliant personality, knew that he was not what the people thought he was by any means, but it was because they thought that he was brave as well as picturesque that people rallied to him.

There are the civil service and Postmaster General Farley. I have already called attention to the extraordinary service the President could render his country if he covered all the offices by the merit rule and forever separated them from politics. There is the question of official lawlessness all over the United States, and particularly the violations of free speech, free thought, and free assembly. Those things are undermining the country; they are in considerable degree responsible for the prevalent American lawlessness which in nowise seems improved by the new warfare between the government and gangs, and the government's decision to shoot it out with the bandits.

There is the whole question of disarmament. Mr. Roosevelt made a most admirable and statesmanlike suggestion on the 28th of December, 1933, when he offered to lead the way to international compacts under which every nation would pledge itself to abandon defensive weapons and never allow its armed forces to cross the boundaries of its own country. That was a thrilling proposal, but so far as is known he has not followed it up in any way, but has gone on record for the heaviest military and naval expenditures in our history, asking 800 million dollars for the fiscal year 1935-36, more than the whole government of the United States cost, pensions and everything, prior to our going into the war.

The Case of American Youth

There is the question of our youth. It is idle to deny that there is great unrest and discouragement and hopelessness, particularly among the young men who come out of school and college and find themselves absolutely without prospect of work and the possibility of marrying and having a family and a home. If somebody who believes in democracy and this Republic of ours, does not get hold of this youth, some Huey Long or Father Coughlin or some Hitler will walk off with them, precisely as the German and Italian and Polish youth has been dazzled and captured by dictators and medicine men in the manner of Hitler and Mussolini.

That the President does not see this need of youth is the more remarkable because of his interest in the Civilian Conservation Corps which has now been built up to 360,000 youths whom he has successfully protected from the army's desire to use these camps for military purposes. But this involves only a small part of our discouraged and restless youth, which is getting into just the frame of mind to be swept off its feet.

The President, by calling a youth congress in the White House and making an appeal for the old-fashioned American ideals, and enlisting youth everywhere on behalf of our democratic institutions would achieve wonders. Oh, yes, I know he is one of the most overworked men in the world, but this partial list of the things he could do is, as I have said, something that he could accomplish almost by a stroke of his pen, by a word, a speech, an appeal, an Executive order. No man, I repeat, has ever been so free to do these things. No man in the White House was ever more naturally disposed to this sort of thing. What stays his hand and mutes his voice?

(Copyright 1935 by Oswald Garrison Villard)

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN

FEB 21 1935

Complaint Dept.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE EVENING SUN—Sir:

I am not unaware of Mr. Mencken's pen attitude toward lynching, as your caption would infer. I read all of his articles re the Princess Anne episode. Also I read the rejoinders of the "moron" editors, some of which I think H. L. M. will remember for a long time.

I want to say again that Mr. Mencken's inconsistency and hypocrisy disgusts me. Protest against lynching, sure! But what about the girl who last week was dragged by an automobile thirty-five feet to her death, and, according to your Evening Sun, the only clue left was a half-empty rum bottle that had evidently fallen from the speeding car? Has not Mr. Mencken and his ilk advocated this rum business?

(REV.) ALBERT TURKINGTON.

Baltimore, Feb. 19.

DECATUR, ILL.
HERALD

FEB 23 1935

Her First Lynching

—New York World-Telegram.

To any who hold that art cannot be propaganda and still be true and even great art we recommend a visit to the Arthur U. Newton Galleries, 11 E. 57th St., where a distinguished exhibition of the art of lynching is now on view.

There are numbers of persons, perhaps who might be inclined to steer away from such an exhibition as from a chamber of horrors. But here art and truth come in. A number of these paintings and drawings—by Bellows, Benton, Curry and the cartoonists and illustrators Kirby, Duffy, Fitzpatrick, Reginald Marsh,—are on their merit as pure art worth a place in any museum or art gallery.

Such is their power and strange beauty of execution and idea that to many who see them it becomes tragic that museums and art galleries are so exclusively concerned with mere objective beauty and afraid of art which exposes injustice and brutality and human degradation—art which tells a moving story, stirring thought and feeling.

Unforgettable fear and pity is in the face of the beautiful little girl raised high so she can see in the hands of her frenzied mother, who amid a mob cries to another woman "This is her first lynching."

Imparishable impression of dumb terror is in the face of the young Negro braced in a tree as a mob—dog led, afoot and one horseback—pass behind on the road in the moonlight, in the painting by John Steuart Curry, Kansan.

In these courageous artists with social zeal, combined with artistic genius, lies the finest immediate hope for art in America or the world.

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL.
JOURNAL
FEB 15 1935

Peculiar to America

In New York, a number of artists who have tried their hands upon the some tragic subject are going together to present an exhibit of pictures and statuary on the subject of lynching.

It is not a particularly pretty sort of exhibit nor a comfortable one to remember. Lynchings in the United States in recent years have managed to canvass pretty nearly the entire field of savagery, from simple hanging to burning at the stake and obscene mutilation. Some of the artists are able, and they have managed to capture in their works the hideous realities of such scenes.

The exhibit is as horrible as you please, but still it is unusual, and for that reason it has attracted the attention of many people. Several artists of note will make talks on the opening day, and among others a Japanese, Isamu Noguchi. It is not altogether pleasing to think of a visitor from Japan looking over this particular exhibit of American art. What sort of a notion will he get of American civilization With what sort of reservations will he hear in future our pious American protests against Japanese barbarities in Manchuria and China? What would an American visitor think, if he saw a lynching scene in Japan?

It is really very dreadful for visitors in this country to be permitted to hear about lynchings. These are a detail of our popular folkways that need to be very carefully concealed from the civilized world.

New York World Telegram
FEB 23 1935

Newton Exhibit Depicts Horror of Lynching

IT'S a rare art exhibition of which one can write urgently and fervently that it ought not to be missed by any man or woman in the city—or even in the country.

These are troublous times. And there are many things to distract the person not particularly interested in art. I still maintain that it ought to be made compulsive for every New Yorker to visit the exhibition entitled "An Art Commentary on Lynching," being presented at the Arthur U. Newton Galleries.

Despite newspaper accounts and cartoons, we of the North are perhaps insufficiently aware of the incredible barbarism which is still practiced in this country. We are not close enough at hand to understand the tremendous need for and importance of anti-lynching laws. This exhibition may do much to crystallize public opinion.

In it are fifty odd paintings, sculptures, prints, drawings and cartoons depicting the horrors of the practice. It is an exhibition which tears the heart and chills the blood. Many of the items have been exhibited before. Reginald Marsh's by-now-celebrated drawing "This Is Her First Lynching" is familiar. So are Curry's large oil "The Fugitive," Kopman's "Lynching," Biddle's "Alabama Code: Our Girls Don't Sleep with Niggers," Julius Bloch's "Lynching."

There are others which may have been exhibited before but which are new to this critic. Orozco's "Negroes," a print showing the writhing figures suspended above flames which have already burned off part of their feet. Harry Sternberg's sensational "Southern Holiday," depicting a lynched Negro unspeakably mutilated; Rollin Kirby's "It Can Be Done," Allan Freelan's "Barbecue—American Style," Paul Cadmus' "On the Way to the Lynching," a drawing recalling those of Rubens; Benton's palpably portrayed "A Lynching," all are deeply moving whether they have been seen before or not.

Remember, this is not an exhibition for softies. It may upset your stomach. If it upsets your complacency on the subject it will have been successful. E. G.

Anti-Lynching Exhibition

Reviewed by
JACOB KAINEN

THIS exhibition at the A. C. A. Gallery, 52 West 8th St., is a real broadside against lynching. The participating artists have turned some heavy guns against the bestial persecution of the Negro people with devastating effect. The fact that the artists deal with a common subject concentrates the impact of the exhibition.

This show was arranged by the John Reed Club, the Artists' Union the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, the Young Vanguard and the Artists' Committee of Action. It comes on the heels of the N. A. A. C. P. exhibition, characteristically called "A Commentary on Lynch," and based upon support of the spurious Wagner-Costigan 'Anti-Lynch Bill."

The show at the A. C. A. Gallery is the result of the repudiation by many artists of the N. A. A. C. P. exhibition, with its fake Anti-Lynch Bill, and the desire to support an Anti-Lynch Bill with teeth in it. And so this United Anti-Lynch Exhibition at the A. C. A. Gallery was arranged, supporting the Bill for Negro Rights and the Suppression of Lynching. This bill calls for the death penalty for lynchers and for full economic, political and social equality for the Negro people.

The exhibiting artists have produced some of their best work for this show. Obviously, the question of lynching stirred them emotionally as few other issues would.

* * *

WILLIAM GROPPER is represented by one of his finest drawings, "Southern Lanscape." The lynch tree is a masterpiece of characterization—savage, splintered, and with a shadowy excrescence at the end of the lynch bough. However, one expects Gropper to be politically sharper than this drawing would seem to indicate.

Anton Refregier's "Landscape—Black Belt" and "Solidarity" seem to me to be the finest of his four drawings. Refrigier possesses the ability to condense and simplify his material to the indispensible essentials. This faculty, among others, gives increasing prominence to Refregier as one of our best revolutionary artists.

Harry Sternberg's uncompromising drawing, "Southern Holiday" depicts the mutilation of a Negro. George S. Schreiber's "20th Century" is a sadist fantasy on the same theme. Louis Ribak's "American Festival" is first rate, as are Herb Kruchman's "Family Mourning," Sara Berman's "Scottsboro Story," Walter Quirt's "Have Faith in the Law," Philip Evergood's "That's the Man," Daniel Koerner's "Vigilantes Attack," Philip Reisman's "South," William Siegel's "Sharecroppers Meeting' and other drawings too numerous to mention. In fact, there are so many good drawings in this show that it becomes almost arbitrary to select some for mention at the expense of others.

Isamu Noguchi's much discussed 'Death," which incorporates metal and rope, has just been added to the sculpture pieces. Sam Becker and Aaron Goodleman have other fine pieces on view.

The exhibition will continue through March 10. We urge everyone to see this show and to bring as many people as possible to the gallery. It is an experience not easily forgotten. The gallery is open on Sunday from 2 to 6 p. m.

Drawing by Refregier, on exhibit at the Anti-Lynch Show

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
NOV 27 1935

'Will Of The People' Vs. Law: One Southern View

Frank Smethurst, in the Raleigh News and Observer:

"I DO not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

So said County Attorney O. P. Moore, of Columbus, Texas, after a band of men had lynched two Negroes who had confessed attacking and murdering a young schoolgirl.

I'm sure that by any other name the act would have been quite as atrocious. Yet it is fairly certain that the attorney is right. The lynching very probably was an expression of the will of the people.

It was the same sort of expression of the will of the people that we had in Franklin county not so long ago when the Sheriff, from whom a crazed killer was taken by lynchers, failed, as the Texas Sheriff failed, to recognize a single member of the crowd.

The question in Texas, as it was in North Carolina, is whether the will of the people shall be motivated by respect for law or by the spirit of anarchy.

Better, vastly better, that two Negro criminals escape the ultimate of punishment than that a whole community shall commit murder, or bless it.

Lynchings - 1935

Discussions

White Press, Northern

5193

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

JUN 26 1935

Less Lynching

Lynching takes place chiefly in the South, but it is a national disgrace for all that. Europeans do not understand, apparently, that it is a crime of passion confined usually to the region south of Mason and Dixon's Line. Every time a mob of more or less chivalrous Southern gentlemen burn, hang, shoot or drag to death a Negro suspected of crime, newspapers in London, Paris, Berlin and Leningrad gleefully report "another American outrage." That lynching is a common amusement in the public squares of New York, Chicago and Boston is the firm belief of many Europeans.

It is pleasing to learn that this so-called "summary form of justice" is dying down even in the deep South. Mobs do not wait for conviction. They kill, many times on mere suspicion. Not so many years ago a gang in Georgia burned a Negro who, it was learned after the flames had done their work, was innocent of the crime charged. "They had, though, exactly as much right to burn an innocent man as they would have had to burn the guilty one," said one critic with irrefutable logic.

Southern mobs lynch Negroes on suspicion of many offenses besides "the usual crime." Figures compiled by the Tuskegee State Normal and Industrial Institute show that luckless black men —and women—have been hanged, burned or kicked to death on suspicion—not conviction—of talking back to a white man, resisting a Sheriff, calling names to a white child and shoving a white man off a sidewalk. Reprehensible offenses, perhaps, in a social life such as obtains in the South, but scarcely deserving the death penalty, with torture.

In spite of the fact that figures show lynching is dying out, there is a determined effort to have Congress pass bills making it a Federal offense. It is proposed that Uncle Sam proceed to fine cities or counties where a lynching takes place. It is proposed, too, that Federal operatives be sent into a community after some one has been mobbed to death, to take charge of rounding up the mobsmen and of punishing them. And more of the same.

This United States of ours will be Utopia, a certain type of mind believes, when no State, city or county has anything to do except to sit back and let the Federal Government run everything. The Federal Government tried to run the railroads during the World War and ran them into the ground. The Federal Government tried to regulate the drinking habits of the people for many years, and the result was an orgy of drunkenness and lawlessness from which we have not yet recovered. Yet some persons persist in the fatuous belief that if the Federal Government ran everything that would mean perfection of living for everyone.

We need no Federal intervention to solve the problem presented by lynching. As the figures collected by the Tuskegee State Normal and Industrial Institute show, lynching is dying out. Public opinion and an increasing sense of decency and justice even in the deep South are eliminating this deplorable crime. Let us hope, then, Congress will have sense enough not to pass a law requiring the Federal Government to act the part of rural policeman every time a mob of Southern Crackers goes on a rampage.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS

AUG 1 1935

Lynching Goes On

A MOB of white men and Negroes took the law into their own hands in North Carolina, Tuesday, by lynching the twenty-five-year-old Negro slayer of a farmer. Sheriff's officers, attempting to prevent violence by getting the man out of the county, were overpowered. Their prisoner was hanged near the scene of his crime.

Condemnation of lynching is general in the United States. Protests against it are frequent. In 1932 there was some hope that public opinion had been effective, for in that year the total of eight persons lynched was the smallest number since 1885. For some reason 1892 was marked by the greatest number, 231 lynchings.

But in 1933 the figure increased to 28, more than in any year since 1926; although in 1933 a total of 48 persons was saved from death at the hands of mobs. Of the 4,174 lynchings in this Country since 1885, the victims were 3,185 Negroes and 989 whites. Georgia heads the list of States in which lynchings have taken place, with 457, followed by Mississippi, Texas, Louisiana and Alabama, all with more than 300. In Michigan, in the last 44 years, four whites and one Negro were lynched. Readers will recall that only police vigilance a few years ago prevented the lynching of the Milan "torch murderers."

Whatever excuse may have been made for lynching in the past, there is no justification for it now in the United States, which is supposed to be a Nation of civilized people. We cannot regard terrorizations and mob brutality elsewhere with a clear conscience until lynching ceases to be a stain upon our own shield.

NEW YORK SUN

AUG 6 1935

Causes of Lynching.

The old discussion as to why lynchers lynch is revived by comment of JAMES DAVIS, District Attorney at Yreka, California, near which place a mob on August 3 hanged a killer. He attributed such outbursts of popular rage to the tardiness of the ordinary processes of justice, citing in illustration the case of a man in that same county who more than a year ago was condemned to die for murder but who is still alive while appeals drag their tortuous way through the courts.

He would be rash indeed who attributed lynching to any single cause. Sometimes it may be the outcome of a settled policy of terrorism in a given section—terrorism compounded of fear, hatred, racial and economic prejudice. Sometimes it may represent an explosion of passions that lie deep in the heart of excitable humanity. But there can be no doubt that in any community where laxity of law enforcement has bred habitual violence on the part of lawbreakers it will sooner or later breed reciprocal violence on the part of more respectable elements of the population. The frontier days are not so far in the past that Americans have forgotten the lesson of the vigilante.

Every now and then somebody produces a bill in Congress designed to invoke Federal aid in the prevention and punishment of lynching. Aside from constitutional difficulties, these measures are usually ineffective in their terms, as if designed rather to crystallize national indignation on the subject than to provide any workable means of control.

Lynching will get its death blow in this country whenever every capital case can be disposed of in not more than ninety days from the beginning of trial to execution of sentence. This could be done by giving to such cases right of way in all the courts. Between imposition of sentence and argument on appeal two weeks might be allowed to elapse; in two weeks more the court of last resort in the State should be able to hand down a decision. Thirty days more should suffice for the United States Supreme Court to pass upon any Federal question which might arise. If lawyers and lawmakers are in doubt as to how this could be done they could obtain light by studying the processes of criminal jurisprudence in England.

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD

AUG 1 1935

MOB VIOLENCE.

Regardless of the atrocity or the repulsiveness of the crime the perpetrator or perpetrators thereof should not be subjected to summary punishment or the fury of a mob. The accused should be accorded the legal procedure provided in the laws of every civilized nation. Undoubtedly there are defects in our criminal laws and exasperating incidents in the trials of malefactors but these are being corrected. The imposition of penalties is gradually becoming more certain and this should develop a greater restraint among the people who are thoughtless enough to take the law in their own hands. While the Negro who was lynched in North Carolina this week by a white mob because he had killed a white farmer with an ax should have paid the extreme penalty for his crime the procedure should have been through legal courses. The culprit should have had his day in court.

Although this Negro received the treatment he deserved and should have been executed we must keep in mind the recognized fact that one crime does not deserve another. If the courts in accordance with the customs of civilization had sentenced him to capital punishment there could have been no murmur. And that the legal tribunals would have imposed such a penalty would have been practically certain for the evidence against the accused appears to have been conclusive. He would have received what was coming to him.

Because of the savage temper of otherwise decent people a mob sprang into existence and the culprit was executed through the agency of what must be termed mass murder. And all one can say of such desperate action is that the members of the mob, certainly the ringleaders, were morally no better than the man they hanged. The murder has been avenged not by legal execution but by scores of people who allowed their fury and unrestrained emotions to control their actions.

led them to be accessories to one of the most heinous and inexcusable of crimes.

Because white people of the South have occasional reason for becoming exasperated at the actions of some of the lowest members of the Negro population their resort to lynching cannot be condoned by a civilized people. They are the creators of their own courts and if those tribunals do not function satisfactorily to them they should institute the kind in which they would have confidence that speedy justice would be administered.

The great State of North Carolina cannot afford to overlook this latest lynching. It ought to hunt down the leaders of the mob and impose the punishment that the action deserves. No state of the Union can condone in the slightest degree the barbarism of mob violence.

SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS
JUL 25 1935

LYNCHING AGAIN

There were four lynchings during the first six months of this year, two in Louisiana and two in Mississippi. This was two less than the total for the same period of 1934, four less than occurred in the first half of 1933. All of the victims were Negroes.

The hope which came with this improvement was short lived. Hardly had the figures been released when Mississippi added two lynchings more to its record. Four of the six lynchings so far this year have thus occurred in that state. Except for the escape of another potential victim the same day, Mississippi's record might now stand at five. The two who were hanged by the mob—in the yard of a church—were taken from a deputy sheriff who reported that he was unable to resist it.

The recent six-state Republican conference at Cleveland called for enaction of a federal anti-lynching law. It must be significant that when congress has such a bill up for consideration, lynchings subside.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
LEADER
JUL 22 1935

The Monstrous Crime Of Lynching

In the first six months of this year there were four lynchings in the United States. The two recent lynchings in Mississippi and one in Flordia make seven. Two of the seven took place in Louisiana, Huey Long's state. Four were in Mississippi and one in Florida. All seven of the victims were Negroes. Three of them were charged with rape, two with murder, one with wounding a man in an altercation, and one with assaulting a woman. Whether any of the charges were true or not, it is impossible to say; mobs do not stop to find out the facts. If any of the charges were true, the fierce "justice" of southern courts toward colored people would have handed out ample punishment, and more than ample.

Whatever crimes the victims may or may not have been guilty of, the lynchers were guilty of far greater crimes.

There is no crime worse than lynching. It is the negation of law and order. It is like the chaos of tooth and fang which prevails in the jungle. It is savagery pure and simple. In a mobster, the reason abdicates and the bestial passions take control. Lynching intensifies the race hatred which must be allayed and abandoned ere there can be peace and justice between the races. It sets a horribly heinous and vicious example to the rising generation, erasing at a stroke much of the moral teaching the young may have received in the home and the school and elsewhere, and heading them toward careers of violence, lawlessness and race hatred.

It is quite possible that if the first of the above-mentioned seven lynchings had not taken place, the others would not have followed. A lynching sets an example of mob murder; hence the lynchers are not only guilty of murder in the particular case, but they are also guilty of murder when others follow their example.

Let the federal anti-lynching bill be passed as quickly as possible.

Nazis for Lynch Rule

WHAT have the Negro people to look forward to under fascist rule in America? Daily Worker

This question was answered on Thursday night by Julius Streicher—generalissimo of anti-Semitism in fascist Germany—in his speech calling for lynch rule against the Jews. Streicher spoke under the official auspices of the Nazi Party, now by law a part of the German government. This is what he said:

"I would like to say to Americans that almost every week we read about Negroes being lynched in America for having assaulted white women. Here in Germany we say that when a Negro is lynched for assaulting a white woman he gets what is coming to him. And as we do not bother about executions of Negroes, you should not bother when we lead a race desecrator through the street."

This confirms everything the Communist Party has been saying about the fate of the Negro masses if fascism should come to power in the United States.

Streicher openly supports the lynch rule of the Southern white ruling class by saying that the Negroes "get what is coming to them." Daily Worker Streicher slavishly borrows the oldest, rottenest, most exposed lie invented to cover up lynch rule. He howls that Negroes are lynched for "assaulting" white women." Precisely what the American fascists say.

Under the fascist rule of the biggest capitalists and landowners every national and racial minority suffer savage oppression. Every organization of labor, especially the most militant, is ruthlessly suppressed. The struggle against the Communists is simply the spearhead of the struggle against all progressive forces.

The Negro people will be the victims of the most savage terror under fascist rule. And the time to fight back is before fascism appears! Now is the time to prevent fascism and fight for the complete equality and liberation of the Negro people from lynch rule.

Only by uniting in struggle with the white workers, with al the oppressed, can the Negro people give Streicher the lie!

Lynchings-1935
& Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5194

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS
JAN 6 1935

ANOTHER SOUTHERNER ON LYNCHING.

Manhattan: So you want lynching here in New York, do you Georgia White Woman? You don't seem to understand that it is the trashy type of Southern woman that gets into trouble with colored men—and only the trashy type of Southerner that favors lynching.

TENNESSEE LADY.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.
LEADER
JAN 8 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

Little Episode

Sirs:

In your issue of Dec. 31, you published an alleged account of the trial of E. K. Harris, a Negro, on a charge of rape, in the Circuit Court of Bedford County, Tenn. . . .

This article was read by many of our citizens, who considered it so slanderous, and such a perversion of the facts, that I have been asked to answer it. . . .

Said article states:

1st—"Last week Tennessee wiped away its 13-year-old stain with the blood of four white men." This is absolutely untrue, for at this trial there existed no race prejudice. . . .

2nd—It says, Lillian Gibson, a Tennessee hill-girl of 15, went to school at Stump Valley, near Shelbyville, started home from school—later her teacher said she came running frantically back . . . screaming, 'I am going to have a baby.'" This is absolutely untrue, in that this little girl does not live in the hills—not a Tennessee hill-girl. There is no such school as "Stump Valley." The teacher never made the statement that the little girl said, "I am going to have a baby." These statements are untrue.

3rd—It says, that John Gibson, the father, with a wrathful posse of 300 hillmen scoured the woods, caught the 22-year-old Negro, named E. K. Harris, accused of the rape, and took him to the Shelbyville Jail, and a hill-billy mob demanded Harris be turned over to them. These statements are untrue. . . . There was no hill-billy mob. . . . Mr. Gibson is not a hillbilly. . . .

5th—The article further says: Mr. Gibson is dubbed as "Father Gibson," and says he inflamed his mountain neighbors by telling them that Dr. Moody, who is also dubbed, "a general practitioner of Shelbyville," had told him that the girl was pregnant. This is untrue. . . .

There was no disorderly conduct in the Court room from anyone at the trial until an adjournment for lunch, and then in a skirmish of some who apparently wanted to get admittance into the Court Room to hear the trial, against the orders of the National Guards to keep everybody out, and in trying to break the lines some were shot. . . .

It is greatly deplored that the Court House was burned, as well as the Government trucks but the records in the Court House were not burned, as charged in the article, and this, it is not believed here, was done by Bedford County citizens; but was the result of a communistic spirit that has been cropping out in this section but supposed to be by men coming in here to obtain work in the various mills and factories from the hot beds of communism, now existing in some of the Northern States, namely, New York City and Chicago. These Northern cities where exists hot beds of Communists, Bolshevists, rackateers and gangsters, and in poor grace to be so unfair as to make such charges as appears in this article referred to—about the little episode in Shelbyville—making a mountain out of a mole-hill. . . .

People of Tennessee are peculiarly an Anglo-Saxon Race, and ranks seven-tenths among the States of the Union in population—rich in agriculture, minerals, etc.; but the wealth of the State does not consist alone of its manufacturing enterprises, richness of its soil, the congeniality of its climate; but rather in the quality of its people. . . .

If you wish to know who the writer of this article is, I am a Lawyer, and I was appointed by the Court as one of the Lawyers to represent the defendant.

I have practiced in this State for 40 years. I am a Republican, and a recent Republican Candidate for Congress from this District—was U. S. Commissioner for the Middle District of Tennessee for more than 20 years. . . .

W. H. CROWELL

Shelbyville, Tenn.

AUBURN, N. Y.
CITIZEN-ADVERTISER
JAN 7 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934.

Even in its most favorable aspects, lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

REPUBLICAN
Phoenixville Pa.
JAN 8 1935

Lynching in 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

HERKIMER, N. Y.
TELEGRAM
JAN 5 1935

Lynching in 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects, lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

LYNCHING DEPICTED IN ART

Work by Isamu Noguchi, Shown Here, Was Created as a Protest.

East Fifty-seventh Street, in which are located many galleries of art dealers, yesterday harbored a sculptural lynching when work by Isamu Noguchi, young American, was placed on exhibition at the Marie Harriman Gallery, 63 East Fifty-seventh Street. The show will continue to Oct. 16.

At one end of the gallery yesterday stood an improvised metal gallows from which was suspended by a rope a contorted metal figure of a man about three-quarters life size. The figure is treated somewhat abstractly.

Mr. Noguchi explained that he decided upon this macabre theme, after seeing a published photograph of the victim of a lynching, as a protest against "man's inhumanity to man." The sculpture is cast from a nickel alloy, is highly polished and weighs about 230 pounds.

Bernice Abbott

DEATH

A gift to Texas?

which Sculptor Noguchi would like someone to present to the State of Texas (see cut). From a tall tripod hung a metal cable, at the end of which dangled the contorted body of a lynched Negro.

Sculptor Noguchi took his figure from a newsphotograph in The Labor Defender, official organ of the International Labor Defense, which showed the burning of the body of George Hughes, 41, at Sherman, Tex. in May 1930 (TIME, May 19, 1930). Negro Hughes had pleaded guilty to an attack upon a Mrs. Drew Farlow, a white farmer's wife. Infuriated Shermanites attacked and burned the courthouse with the result that Prisoner Hughes suffocated to death in a steel vault in the county clerk's office. From the vault his limp body was yanked out and paraded around town in a motor truck before being strung to a tree. A drugstore was ransacked for boxes, counters, sample cases to build a fire beneath the corpse. Cooked by the flames, the muscles of George Hughes's arms and legs twisted themselves up into the knots Isamu Noguchi eternally preserved in Death.

Lynching as a Japanese Sculptor Sees It

A YOUNG Japanese sculptor, Isamu Noguchi, is exhibiting in a New York gallery a bronze figure of a Negro who was lynched at Sherman, Texas, four years ago. The exact moment chosen for representation is that when the limbs of the already dead body writhed and contracted in the flames over which it had been suspended by a chain. A ghastlier subject could not well be imagined. The thing is hideous and haunting. One may say that, as art, it is inexcusable. But then, what is art for? One conventional answer is that it is to reveal beauty to those who cannot see it until the artist interprets nature or remolds its materials by his creative genius. That's good, but scarcely enough. "Beauty" is a rich and inclusive word. if it is not dwarfed into a synonym for prettiness. Perhaps it would be better to say that art reveals the beauty and/or significance of the materials that it uses, and that it heightens and intensifies the emotional response to these materials. If that is what art is for—we speak humbly and subject to correction by the critics and pundits—but if that is what art is for, then Noguchi's "Death" hits the mark. It intensifies the horror of a lynching. We venture the guess that the city of Sherman would not accept this figure and hang it in a public park, even if it came as a gift. Citizens who looked upon the event without emotion would shudder at sight of the bronze or go around the block to avoid seeing it. And as they shuddered and shunned it, they would, or they might, get some glimmer of the significance of a lynching which did not come to them when they saw the writhing limbs of the black corpse. And besides it is bitter but wholesome medicine for us to see what features of American life a Japanese artist considers important enough to perpetuate in bronze. Frightfully ruthless people, those Japanese! Think of their cruelty in Manchukuo and Shanghai!

sculptors. Last week he received guarded praise from New York's first-string critics.

To the Marie Harriman Gallery in Manhattan this week went shapes in polished nickel, bronze, marble, wood and plaster, the latest exhibition of the works of able young Isamu Noguchi, son of a Japanese father, a U. S. mother. The show contained the usual Noguchi mélange of clever portrait heads, elaborate abstractions, projects for impossible architectural developments. In the latter manner was a strange triangular something called Monument to the Plow.

One thing no eye could escape was a glittering metallic figure entitled Death,

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER-PUBLIC LEDGER

FEB 2 1935

40 GROUPS HIT LYNCHING

Spokesmen for 40 or more political, social, religious and civic groups last night filled the Friends Meeting House on Race st. near 15th and raised their voices in protest against lynchings.

They were pledged also to work for immediate enactment of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching bill now before Congress. Support was given the movement by Congressman William H. Wilson in a pledge he made to the group.

Representative Marshall L. Shepard, of this city, urged the passage of the Costigan-Wagner measure "to save the souls of white people as well as the lives of the black." He is also minister of a Negro congregation here.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN

JAN 18 1935

JUST ANOTHER LYNCHING

DOWN in Washington Parish, Louisiana, a mob entered the jail cell of Jerome Wilson, a Negro, and shot him to death.

It was just another lynching to add to the odious list of more than 5000 in the past half-century. Not even unique was the possibility of this victim's innocence. A deputy sheriff had been killed in a shooting affray at Wilson's house. Wilson was arrested, convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged. But the Louisiana Supreme Court had just granted him a new trial.

A federal anti-lynching law would make communities like Washington Parish hesitate. Under the proposed law now pending in Congress, the county would have been held financially liable for the young Negro's death.

Congress should pass this law before other such lynchings smirch the records.

NEW YORK SUN

FEB 5 1935

Women Support Anti-Lynching Legislation.

Great Pressure Is Being Brought to Bear to Insure Feminine Bloc for Measures.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Anti-lynching bills introduced in Congress will receive the full support of New York's new Democratic Representative-at-Large, Mrs. Caroline O'Day, for whose election Mrs. Roosevelt took the stump in the last campaign.

Mrs. O'Day said:

"I have already assured Senators Wagner of New York and Costigan of Colorado, authors of the Senate anti-lynching bill, that I would support the bill in the House to the utmost."

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Republican, of Massachusetts, is interested in the bill and has promised her support to its proponents. And from California where labor troubles and I. W. W uprisings have became a serious question for legislative consideration, Representative Florence P. Kahn, also a staunch Republican, has come out in favor of the measure.

Great pressure is being brought to bear upon the feminine bloc in the House by women's clubs and other organizations backing the anti-lynching bill, but a stiff fight on the floor of both the Senate and the House is predicted.

Lynchings-1935
6
Discussions

White Press—Northern.

5195

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS
NOV 14 1935

Law of Violence

THERE have been three lynchings in America during the past 48 hours.

In Texas, a mob of 700 lynched two youths who were believed guilty of a criminal attack. Sweeping aside law and the courts, the gang wrote another shameful chapter in the story of racial prejudice in America.

In West Virginia, a CCC camp foreman was horribly murdered by madmen unknown. Motives can not be learned.

Properly, there will be a thorough and relentless effort to discover and punish the criminal responsible for the West Virginia slaying.

Improperly, authorities will look the other way in Texas, dismissing the crime with the smug assertion that "it was an expression of the will of the people."

Liberty loving Americans grow indignant when they read of race discrimination in other lands. How hollow their protests become when they tolerate double standards of law enforcement in our own country.

BOSTON, MASS
TRAVELER
NOV 14 1935

"Will of the People"

Two Texas Negroes were accused of attacking and killing a nineteen-year-old girl. Whether they were guilty was not determined. A mob of 700 lynched them, despite the plea by an Episcopal rector to "let the law take its course." The mob jeered the clergyman.

County Attorney Moore's comment on the lynching was that it was "an expression of the will of the people."

It follows, therefore, we assume, that if 1400 armed Negroes had come along and murdered the mob, that, too, would have been "an expression of the will of the people." For, according to the district attorney, if the mob is big enough to defy the law, the "will of the people" is being exercised.

We have altogether too much of that philosophy today. The will of the people is not found in mob action; it is brought out through orderly process.

New Yorker - N.Y.
NOV 15 1935

Two More Lynchings

THEY were too young to be legally lynched through the instrumentality of the courts, as regularly happens to many Negro workers, therefore it was necessary to hand them over to a bloodthirsty mob, deliberately incited by the authorities with the tale of a fake "confession."

This is the gist of the cynical defense by County Attorney O. P. Moore, and County Judge H. P. Hahn, of Colorado County, Texas, of the hideous double lynching last Tuesday of two Negro youths, Ernest Collins, 15, and Benny Mitchell, 16, near Columbus, Texas.

The County Attorney, whose sworn duty it is to prosecute the lynchers, brutally declares his approval of the murderers: "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

To which County Judge Hahn adds his juridical approval on the grounds that the two youths "could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages."

No more brazen defense of lynch murder has been voiced in this country since Governor Rolfe approved the lynching of two white men in California. This open attack on the democratic and constitutional rights of the Negro people should evoke a mighty thunder of protest from all sections of the country. County Attorney Moore and County Judge Hahn should be deluged with protests, demanding the arrest, prosecution and punishment of the lynchers, and of Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer and Deputy Berry Townsend who turned the boys over to the lynch mob. Protests should also be sent to Governor James V. Allfred, Austin, Texas.

Was Hearst's Face Red?

IT WOULD be worth the price of a good movie to see William Randolph Hearst's face as he reads what crept into his own Milwaukee Sentinel in an interview with the famous Negro baritone, Paul Robeson.

"I am as much an alien here as any Negro," the Sentinel quotes Robeson as saying, "I can appear before Milwaukeeans tonight because I can sing. But my brother can't come here, he can't go any of the places where I can go. . . . In Russia it is entirely different. I am no different than anybody else in Russia. That's why I am going to spend more time in Russia. . . Perhaps in Russia I can find out how the Negroes in Africa can be made into a new people. . . Look at Russia—in a few years they have become a new nation. There were peoples in Eastern Russia more savage than many African tribes. . . . Perhaps in Russia I can find out how the Negroes in Africa can be made into a new people, with their own culture and their own civilization."

Mr. Hearst had better send that editor a telegram before it happens again.

LA CROSSE, WIS.
TRIBUNE
NOV 9 1935

South Must Change

BAXTER BELL, a Negro, slapped a white woman in White Bluff, Tennessee, and was lynched by a mob for the offense.

Five of the leaders of the mob who took Bell from the sheriff of Cheatham county and after running him out in the country shot him, have surrendered to the authorities. They consider they meted righteous justice to the Negro because of his alleged insult to the white race.

The charge of murder has been lodged against the men under arrest. The good name of Tennessee should compel a vigorous prosecution of the men who thought so lightly of human life that they would kill a man because he slapped a woman.

Lynchings under any circumstance are a deplorable blot on this country. The killing of a man, however, for an offense as trivial as assault and battery, the charge filed against the Negro, is an outrage that even the citizens of the Southern states with their prejudices against the colored people and their desire to keep them in subjection cannot overlook.

Lynchings of persons charged with revolting crimes are not defensible, but the killing of a man simply because in the heat of anger he committed a minor assault, is beyond comprehension.

The South will never win the respect of the world through citizens taking the law into their own hands and punishing Negroes without even the semblance of a trial.

Such methods are merely bull-dozing attacks on the colored race in an attempt to keep it a peasant population.

Southern sentiment on the race question cannot but be viewed as unfair in the North as long as such incidents occur as the White Bluff lynching.

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
NOV 14 1935

"The Will of the People"

IT IS not surprising that the United States suffers from mob violence. The surprising thing is that the American people, in view of the open defiance of the law by some of their officials and some of their Best People, enjoy as much security as they do.

In Texas two Negro boys have just been lynched by a mob of 700, including several women. The county attorney is quoted as saying that he considers this action "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge is reported to feel that he cannot condemn "those citizens who meted justice" to the Negroes, on the ground that "they could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages." They were too young to be legally executed, but not too young to be murdered.

If these official comments expressed an isolated view they would be shocking enough; they represent an opinion widely held and not infrequently expressed in the United States. The substance of this opinion is that we will obey the law only so long as it coincides with our desires and interests. When we can't get what we want, or can't get it quickly enough, by legal means, we'll take it anyhow.

This view was expressed two years ago by the late James Rolph Jr., as Governor of California, after two white men charged with kidnaping and slaying a San José man had been hanged by a mob. Referring to "those fine, patriotic San José citizens who knew how to handle such a situation," the Governor proclaimed that "if anyon is arrested for the good job I'll pardo them all."

It was really the same state of min that actuated the violators of the pro hibition law. It is the same state of min that leads dictators of whatever color t kill their enemies in order to hold power It is the same state of mind that cause some employers to hire private armies o incite vigilantes to crush their workers Indeed it is the same state of mind tha brings wars.

It is a state of mind which, if not controlled, will bring also an end of all orderly government.

NEW YORK TIMES
NOV 15 1935

GLORYING IN THEIR SHAME.

There have been half-hearted apologists for lynching, but it remained for Texas to furnish two out-and-out defenders of it. They happen also to be responsible for the trial and punishment of criminals in their particular county. The dispatch in yesterday's TIMES from Columbus, Texas, told of the lynching of two Negro boys who had been guilty of criminally attacking and murdering a white girl. Because they were only 15 years of age they could not, under the law, be sentenced to death. This fact was cited by the county judge as a reason why he could not condemn "those citizens who meted out justice to the ravishing murderers." The county prosecutor went even further, declaring that "I consider their "action an expression of the will of the "people."

The will of the people of Texas, and of all other States, has been deliberately "expressed" by setting up a system of government by law. This provides sworn officers to prosecute crime, and courts to try and to punish guilty men. It also enacts penal laws, which are to be enforced in an orderly manner, without fear or favor, against all violators of them, white or black. The will of the people was declared in the State Constitution and in the statutes of the Legislature to be opposed to entrusting to a mob the execution of those who had taken life or committed other capital offenses. The citizens who took the Negro boys from the custody of the Sheriff and hanged them showed that they were conscious of acting in defiance of law by wearing masks so that they would not be recognized and themselves brought to trial. In that case the will of the people was expressed with a handkerchief over its face. That does not look much like a proud and sovereign will. There is to be an official inquiry into this lynching but not much can be hoped from it. No inquiry is needed, however, to prove that the county prosecutor and the county judge have, by their extraordinary language, added their quota of disgrace to the whole affair.

NEW YORK SUN
NOV 16 1935

Frankness is usually considered a virtue, but in the case of the County Attorney and County Judge at Columbus, Texas, it got unusual attention because the officials, charged with enforcement of law, were talking about a lynching. Whereas prosecutors and judges in the South frequently say for publication after Negroes have been killed by mobs that it is indeed a blot of the fair escutcheon of this our beloved community, and then sit back and do nothing by way of vengeance, County Attorney O. P. Moore and Judge H. P. Hahn said what they thought, outright.

Ernest Collins, 15 years old, and Benny Mitchell, 16, who had confessed to the murder of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, white high school graduate, were taken away from peace officers and strung up on a tree near the girl's home.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob," said Mr. Moore. "I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Judge Hahn, having in mind the fact that because of their youth the two could have been punished only as juveniles, and confined until they reached their majorities, said, "I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

With Creed Conyers, Negro farmer, included as a concession to the findings of the Supreme Court, a Grand Jury in Jackson county, Alabama, reindicted the nine "Scottsboro boys," the Negroes accused of having assaulted two white girls on March 25, 1931, prisoners since then, saved three times on appeal from death sentences imposed by the trial court.

NEW YORK SUN
NOV 14 1935

The Will of the Mob.

The declaration of County Attorney O. P. MOORE of Columbus, Texas, that the lynching of two Negroes near Columbus on Tuesday night was "an expression of the will of the people" must be about the most inept defense of mob violence that has ever been uttered. It would be as easy, on the same grounds, to condone looting after a flood or an earthquake, or, on nearly similar grounds, to forgive the murder of one individual by another. The will of the people can be expressed through the verdict of a jury and through statutory punishment, but the man who reads the will of the people in the savage frenzy of a mob, with a personality and temperament far different from the sum of individual personalities and temperaments, is inviting the whirlwind.

Lynchings—1935
Discussions

White Press, Northern.

5196

SAN PEDRO, CAL.
NEWS-PILOT
JAN 1 1935

Truth About Mobs

MOB HYSTERIA has been mentioned often. Less has been said about mob meanness. There is nothing of nobility in the spirit that sways a murderous gang of lynchers. The latter fact was brought out by recent mob outrages in Tennessee.

There the mob desired to kill an accused man already under arrest, facing speedy trial, and in case of a demonstration of guilt, swift and certain penalty. So this mob did not have even the poor shadow of excuse that possibly could have been cited for other similar outbreaks.

The sheriff lacked the courage to remain at the scene, but soldiers were called out. They had no sympathy with the mob, and, as seemed in line of duty, killed some of them and wounded more. As an expression of its feelings the mob had burned the courthouse. This led to the necessary shooting. Blood transfusions were needed by some of the wounded but none of their comrades could be induced to yield the blood. It was supplied by soldiers.

Now the matter will rest with a jury. As a rule a jury fails to convict lynchers. In our own shameful affair at San Jose the lynchers were not even brought to trial. However, the firmness and promptitude of Tennessee troops in meeting the emergency there may indicate a change in the public attitude. The hanging of murderers who operate in crowds might have a salutary effect on the whole lynching program.

HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
JAN 3 1935

TENNESSEE THWARTS A MOB

A welcome variation from the uniform rule of success attending lynching enterprises is reported from Shelbyville, Tenn., where, for a change, the forces of law presented a determined front, with the result that another mob murder was not added to the shameful record.

Customarily, the law enforcements agencies of states in which lynchings are common merely fo through the motions of opposition when the crowds, usually inspired merely go through the motions of opposition when the crowds, usually inspired by a liberal indulgence 'n corn liquor, gather around the jail, demand their victim, take him to the outskirts, kill him and burn his body.

As a rule, the sheriffs and deputies, charged with responsibility for the safe custody of the prisoner, attempt the fulfillment of their duties only in the most perfunctory fashion. As a result of their feeble resistance, another murder is staged.

At Shelbyville, however, something in the nature of an awakened official conscience was encountered. An attempt to storm the court house was repulsed by a withering fire from the machine guns of national guardsmen. Terror reigned, the ancient court house was destroyed by fire and frenzied men terrorized the Negro sections of the city.

But the prisoner was guarded and removed to Nashville, where he will be held to await trial in accordance with the due processes of law. Tennessee has reason for pride in the sternness and effectiveness with which she met a serious threat against her honor as a state.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JAN 3 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

HAMMOND, IND.
TIMES
JAN 12 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects, lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

"However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD
JAN 5 1935

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE LYNCH

(From the Washington Post)

Two dead, half a dozen wounded and the destruction of a $150,000 courthouse. Such was the price paid for the prevention of a lynching in Shelbyville, Tenn. That price, if it helps to stop this cowardly and barbaric practice, is not necessarily exorbitant.

National Guardsmen successfully whisked away a Negro accused of attacking a young white girl and stood their ground when a rapacious mob, robbed of its prey, rushed the courthouse. Tear gas not availing, bayonets and finally bullets were called into action with the above horrible results. Late reports indicate that the bloodletting has greatly calmed the temper of the community.

The sordid episode again calls attention to the sentiments expressed by the organization of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, which claims to represent a membership of a million. That association will be remembered as the group which last year declared that lynchers have no commission to protect the virtue and honor of its members, thereby repudiating the traditional plea of extenuation and condemning its hypocrisy.

These women, who may be taken as representative of the finest citizenry of the South, are on record as condemning the lack of equal educational opportunity for Negroes and urging action to eliminate constant inter-racial friction. Lynching, the association describes as "the logical result" of racial oppression, coupled with the exploitation and intimidation of a weaker element for economic gain.

The impeachment of Judge Lynch and the maintenance of constitutional procedure, at whatever cost to rioters, is a welcome contrast to the customary course of lynchings.

CHRONICLE
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.
JAN 5 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934

EVEN in its most favorable aspects lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin blue line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

CATSKILL, N. Y.
MAIL
JAN 8 1935

LYNCHINGS IN 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects, lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

CLINTON, IA.
HERALD
JAN 10 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects, lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as high as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been reached.

WILLOWS, CAL.
JOURNAL
JAN 3 1935

Tennessee Thwarts a Mob

A welcome variation from the uniform rule of success attending lynching enterprises is reported from Shelbyville, Tenn., where, for a change, the forces of law presented a determined front, with the result that another mob murder was not added to the shameful record.

Customarily, the law enforcement agencies of states in which lynchings are common merely go through the motions of opposition when the crowds, usually inspired by a liberal indulgenece in corn liquor, gather around the jail, demand their victim, take him to the outskirts, kill him and burn his body.

As a rule, the sheriffs and deputies, charged with responsibility for the safe custody of the prisoner, attempt the fulfilment of their duties only in the most perfunctory fashion. As a result of their feeble resistance, another murder is staged.

As Shelbyville, however, something in the nature of an awakened official conscience was encountered. An attempt to storm the court house was repulsed by a withering fire from the machine guns of national guardsmen. Terror reigned, the ancient court house was destroyed by fire and frenzied men terrorized the negro sections of the city.

But the prisoner was guarded and removed to Nashville, where he will be held to await trial in accordance with the due processes of law. Tennessee has reason for pride in the sternness and effectiveness with which she met a serious threat against her honor as a state.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press-Northern.

5197

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle
NOV 17 1935

Lynchings: Mobs and Juries.

The apathetic attitude of great numbers of Southerners toward the lynching problem is probably best shown by the mere fact that such mob outbreaks still continue and that their perpetrators go unpunished in spite of the rising flood of condemnation of this barbaric practice. It is rare, however, that such acts are officially condoned in high places, a notable exception being the public statement of the late Governor Rolph of California in the case involving the kidnap-murderers of Brooke Hart, in which it may at least be said that the circumstances were very different from most of such acts in the South.

It comes as a shock, therefore, to read the declaration of County Attorney O. P. Moore of Columbus, Texas, that the lynching of two Negroes charged with assaulting and murdering a white girl near there Tuesday night was an "expression of the will of the people." This was practically an open invitation to citizens of that county to take the law into their own hands whenever they see fit. A more amazing or dangerous enunciation of public policy would be hard to imagine. Even the county judge, though favoring orderly process of law, virtually condoned the mob for meting out "justice."

It is at least somewhat encouraging to note that the Jackson County, Alabama, authorities have taken steps to conform to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in reversing the death sentences in the notorious Scottsboro case because of the systematic exclusion of Negroes from grand and trial juries there. New indictments against the nine defendants have been returned with a Negro sitting on the jury for the first time in sixty years. The repudiation of her original testimony by one of the girls involved apparently made little impression. It will be hoped, however, that the change of venue granted for the actual trial will tend to eliminate any prejudice which Judge Horton feared in case of a retrial in the original jurisdiction.

PITTSBURG, KANS.
HEADLIGHT

NOV 15 1935

A mob of Georgians, bent on lynching a Negro slayer already doomed to die within a month, met defeat at the hands of the state last night. The mob members were beaten because someone in Georgia, possibly Governor Talmadge, had the foresight to send national guardsmen to escort the prisoner to the town where he was tried from a place of hiding in another section, guard the courthouse and escort him to the prison.

The Negro had murdered a white man last month. He was tried yesterday and found guilty and condemned to die in the electric chair Dec. 10. When the officers, with the soldier escort, started to take the condemned man to the prison where he will be executed, the crowd, which had surged around the courthouse all day, made an effort to seize him. The result was hand-to-hand fighting the use of rifle butts for clubbing and the employment of tear gas bombs. The gas guns finally dispersed the mob and the soldiers went on their way with the doomed prisoner.

Here was a case where the law not only was taking its course but it was moving rapidly. In less than a month from the date of the crime, the slayer had been found guilty and his day to die fixed for less than a month in the future. But the mob, with the inevitable lack of sense or reason, attacked the troops. Perhaps it was believed that the national guardsmen would yield to the mob as civil officers in the states in the lynching belt, almost without exception, yield. The leaders guessed wrong. The state soldiers had been charged with a duty, a very simple duty, and they carried it out. Georgia escaped a blot on the year's record because someone saw the possibilities and the state executive was not afraid to act in defense of law.

LINCOLN, NEB.
EVENING STATE JOURNAL

NOV 13 1935

Seven hundred persons in Texas must feel pretty bad today. They are the persons who murdered two Negro boys Tuesday. It is difficult to see how they can feel otherwise than terrible, now that the fury of Tuesday has worn away. These persons violated the law. They let themselves be swept away by mob hysteria. They permitted their passions to reign, and murdered two boys. These boys had been accused of a particularly ghastly murder. But their guilt had not been proved. The law specifically states that they were to have been regarded as innocent until proven guilty. In the eyes of the law these boys were innocent. They were being taken to jail to face trial later on. But the mob interfered and slaughtered them. Has anything been accomplished by this action? Has the sacrifice of two human lives eased the pain of the relatives of the murdered? Does this sacrifice restore life to life? Seven hundred Texans should feel pretty bad today. They have the murder of two boys to answer for to their Maker.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

NOV 16 1935

A serious situation is indicated by the current series of lynching outrages, attempted or consummated in the South. Closely following the murder by a mob of two 16-year-old Negro boys in Texas, comes the news of National Guardsmen being called upon to protect a Negro accused of slaying a white man. Although the prisoner had been legally convicted and condemned to execution on Dec. 10, so unreasoning was the mob which attacked him at Moultrie, Georgia, that the Guardsmen had to fight their way out of town with the prisoner, using tear-gas bombs during the struggle and felling several of the mob with the butts of their rifles.

Meanwhile five white men have been placed on trial in Ashland City, Tennessee, on murder charges in connection with the lynching of a Negro railroad laborer.

This deplorable epidemic of violence will provide material for new arguments in favor of a national anti-lynching law, a measure which Congress has up to the present time persistently refused to pass.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D.
PRESS
Argus-Leader

NOV 19 1935

The Will of the People

A mob of 700 persons lynched two young Negroes last week on a farm near Columbus, Tex. The bodies of the two were left dangling from an oak tree.

County Attorney O. P. Moore, however, expressed no interest in the prosecution of those who were responsible for the lynching.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob," he said. "I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

If that be the will of the people, why are not the lynchings sanctioned by law? The law is the will of the people as expressed in the only manner in which it can be presented in a civilized nation.

County Attorney Moore has no right to assume otherwise. He cannot speak for the people as well as the chosen representatives of the voters who have been selected for that express purpose. It is his business to prosecute those who break the laws.

A mob lynching is never right and never justified. If the crimes of the victims are such that the death penalty is in order, proper action would come through the courts and the laws. It is the privilege of the people to decide whether they want capital punishment or not. It is also their right to determine whether their wishes should be expressed through the legislatures and the courts or by mobs. So far, they have displayed a profound preference for orderly justice.

No one who is familiar with a mob will respect its ability to judge carefully and dispassionately. When men assemble with a lynching in mind, they operate swiftly and violently. The evidence is not weighed with caution and prudence because if such considerations prevailed there would be no lynching.

CANONSBURG, PA.
NOTES
NOV 18 1935

"The Will of the People"

IT IS NOT SURPRISING THAT THE United States suffers from mob violence. The surprising thing is that the American people, in view of the open defiance of the law by some of their officials and some of their best people, enjoy as much security as they do.

In Texas two Negro boys have just been lynched by a mob of 700, including several women. The county attorney is quoted as saying that he considers this action "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge is reported to feel that he cannot condemn "those citizens who meted justice" to the Negroes, on the ground that "they could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages." They were too young to be legally executed, but not too young to be murdered.

If these official comments expressed an isolated view they would be shocking enough; they represent an opinion widely held and not infrequently expressed in the United States. The substance of this opinion is that we will obey the law only so long as it coincides with our desires and interests. When we can't get what we want, or can't get it quickly enough by legal means, we'll take it anyhow.

This view was expressed two years ago by the late James Rolph, Jr., as governor of California, after two white men charged with kidnaping and slaying a San Jose man had been hanged by a mob. Referring to "those fine patriotic San Jose citizens who knew how to handle such a situation," the governor proclaimed that "if anyone is arrested for the good job I'll pardon them all."

It was really the same state of mind that actuated the violators of the prohibition law. It is the same state of mind that leads dictators of whatever color to kill their enemies in order to hold power. It is the same state of mind that causes some employers to hire private armies or incite vigilantes to crush their workers. Indeed it is the same state of mind that brings wars.

It is a state of mind which, if not controlled, bring also an end of all orderly government.

ERIE, PA.
DISPATCH HERALD
NOV 30 1935

CAN'T LAST FOREVER

Down in Texas a county attorney expressed the belief that the recent lynching of two young Negroes by a mob of 700 persons was "an expression of the will of the people." That it expressed the will of 700 people can hardly be denied in face of the fact that 700 people participated in this outrage upon humanity and the law, but it certainly did not express the will of the American people generally.

Slavery was once an expression of the will of far more people in the United States than now condone or defend lynching: yet today it is nowhere tolerated in this country.

And the day will come when the mob-execution of criminals or persons suspected of having committed a crime, without due process of law, will pass into the same discard.

WILKES BARRE, PA.
NEWS
NOV 26 1935

"WILL OF THE PEOPLE"

The recent lynchings of two young Negroes by a mob of 700 persons, a county attorney down in Texas, declares was "an expression of the will of the people."

That it expressed the will of 700 people can hardly be denied in face of the fact that 700 people participated in this outrage upon humanity and the law, but it certainly did not express the will of the American people generally.

Slavery was once an expression of the will of far more people in the United States than now condone or defend lynching; yet today it is nowhere tolerated in this country.

And the day will come when the mob-execution of criminals or persons suspected of having committed a crime, without due process of law, will pass into the same discard.

NEW YORK TIMES
NOV 22 1935

Working Against Lynching.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As chairman of the executive committee, Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, and speaking, as I believe I may, for the 27,000 enrolled members and for the allied organizations committed to a program of education to prevent lynching, may I thank you for the editorial in THE TIMES of Nov. 15, "Glorying in Their Shame"?

That a county attorney and a county judge in Texas, through public statement, condone the action of a mob in lynching two Negroes makes more evident the work the women of the South have to do.

GEORGE MADDEN MARTIN.
Louisville, Ky., Nov. 18, 1935.

CORTLAND, N. Y.
STANDARD
NOV 23 1935

THE WILL OF THE MOB

The declaration of County Attorney O. P. Moore of Columbus, Texas, that the lynching of two Negroes near Columbus last Tuesday night was "an expression of the will of the people" must be about the most inept defense of mob violence that has ever been uttered. It would be as easy, on the same grounds to condone looting after a flood or an earthquake, or, on nearly similar grounds, to forgive the murder of one individual by another. The will of the people can be expressed through the verdict of a jury and through statutory punishment, but the man who reads the will of the people in the savage frenzy of a mob, with a personality and temperament far different from the sum of individual personalities and temperaments, is inviting the whirlwind.—New York Sun.

TRANSCRIPT
NOV 6 1935

LYNCHINGS CONTINUE

Two Negro boys, fifteen and sixteen years of age, respectively, are alleged to have murdered a white girl. A Texas mob lynched them. County Judge H. P. Hahn is alleged to have said, "The fact that the Negroes  could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted out justice  last night." County Attorney O. P. Moore was alleged to have remarked, "I consider [the mob's] action an expression of the will of the people."

In other words, the judge and the county attorney interpret our Federal and state constitutions and laws according to the color of the skin of persons who are to be tried. To avoid such discrimination, murder cases should not be held from trial any longer than necessary to obtain evidence, and justice should be according to law and swift.

The reason that Negroes do not use their ballots on election days as a protest against the Hitler-like demonstration is probably due to their having little sympathy with wrongdoers.

Lynchings—1935
& Discussions.

White Press, Northern

5198

CARTHAGE, MO.
DEMOCRAT
APR 26 1935

LYNCHING'S WORST FEATURE.

One bad feature of lynching—which it must be admitted pretty generally in the South picks on the Negro—is the sort of defense of the practice that is offered by members of the United States Congress from South aCrolina. Indeed, we are inclined to think this is the worst feature, because, believe it or not, there are scattered throughout the entire South a lot of mushbrained electors who seem to feel the same way about lynching as do Coley Blease and Cotton Ed Smith.

It was Senator Smith's turn this year to rise in the national legislative halls to oppose the anti-lynching bill. Mr. Blease is not at Washington this term, or he would have "to helled with-the-Constitution" long before Cotton Ed got around to it.

It is the argument of such old-fashioned Southern chivalves as Smith and Blease that there is one crime for which lynching is the only fit punishment. When a white woman has been insulted by a "black brute," all that should be asked of her is to point her finger. (By the way, a presumably intelligent woman pointed her finger at a white man t'other day over at Kannapolis, but he proved he was at prayer-meeting at the time of the alleged assault.)

Which might be all right if the remedy for rave were simply that of hanging, shooting or burning the first convenient victim. We have never been able to believe it is. In the first place there is the danger of mistakes—we have heard of rapists' victims making some mistakes; we have known mobs which did.

Passage of a federal anti-lynching law is not a pet project of our—we haven't been able to make up our mind to vote for the Federal child labor amendment as yet—but we are glad Cotton Ed didn't happen along at Scottsboro when the whole covey of Negro hoboes was arrested. Doubtless he'd have helped string them all up.

And then when one of the women in the case sought to recall her testimony as to the outrage, he'd have been out on a limb his ownse'f.

Honestly, we, who have never lived or moved and had being for appreciable time anywhere else save right down here in the midst of those who believe in the high hand as the savior of womanhood, have never met more than half a dozen Southern gentlemen to whom we would delegate the right to lynch.

None of these, we might add, was, had been or expected to be right soon a member of Congress.—Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.
STANDARD STAR
MAY 1 1935

Lynching 'Enemy No. 1,' Rabbi Asserts in Sermon

Temple Israel Leader Denounces Racial Discrimination, Bitterly Scoring Defeat of Federal Bill

Though the epithet of "Public Enemy Number 1" has been applied to a succession of criminals tracked down by the Department of Justice, none of the men deserved the appellation, according to Rabbi Alvin S. Luchs, Temple Israel.

The title in this land belongs to the crime of lynching, he said last night from the pulpit, for it is diametrically opposed to those rights of liberty and pursuit of life and happiness guaranteed by the Constitution.

Burial of the Costigan-Wagner Bill against lynching, which is favored by the majority of American voters, the speaker said, was brought about by the anti-filibuster rule. He bitterly denounced the move.

The anti-lynching move is especially important, he said, because the Negro race is rapidly becoming conscious of its power and numbers, and will not long tolerate the position of inferiority into which it is now forced.

Women Support Measure

The speaker went on to point out white women themselves do not sympathize with defenders of lynching who say it makes the white women safe from Negroes thus inspired with fear. A million women have organized in the past three years to fight this public enemy Number 1, Rabbi Luchs said.

"They do not want to hide behind the skirts of untruthfulness hypocrisy and pervarication," which lynching needs, he said.

Since 1889, he said, 3,724 people have been lynched in America "the crying share of a nation that calls itself Christian." In France lynching is called the great American pastime.

Rabbi Luchs went on to cite scientific research to show the Negro mentally superior to the average white of backward states, and the equal of the average white if given equal opportunity to develop.

Would Root Out Attitude

"We cannot consider ourselves civilized until we root up every vestige of this reactionary vicious attitude . . .," the speaker said.

The average Negro child in the South, he pointed out, has but one-eighth of the average American expenditure for his educational preparation for citizenship, one-fourth of what is spent on the average white child of the South. He urged Federal support of Negro education.

Racial segregation was also condemned by Rabbi Luchs, who pointed out the unwillingness of white congregations to accept a Negro in their midst. The YMCA's of the land will not permit Negroes in their buildings, unless they be special Negro buildings, he charged, and for that reason no Negro can be on the Senior High School swimming team here, which trains in the "Y."

Cites Reason for Radicalism

"We wonder when we read in the papers today why the Negro element in this country is becoming radical, Communistic . . . It will tell you why: Because the Negro has not benefitted from the so-called Democratic government. He is submerged by bigotry, oppressed by hatred, misunderstood by those who rule the land.

"The great leaders of Communism and International Labor Defense today are Negoes, at one time the most docile people in our land. Not with threat but rather from the point of view of justice, let those who believe in fair play, in uprightness, in giving the underdog a chance, let those raise their voices against discrimination which takes place socially, politically and economically against the Negro.

Prays For Economic Fair Play

"And let them raise their voices in prayer to God" Rabbi Luchs concluded, "that He gives those who rule the insight and knowledge, the uprightness and the sense of fair play and justice by which minority groups shall share in the goods, in the wealth, in the industry, in the morality of our great American Commonwealth."

DANVILLE, ILL.
COMMERCIAL NEWS
MAY 2 1935

GOVERNMENT AND CRIME

The solving of 36 kidnapings by the Department of Justice warrants the government in believing that it should take a hand in stamping out lynchings.

Yet, determined resistance is being met with in Washington by the supporters of the anti-lynching measure, this resistance coming chiefly from Southern Democrats.

It is the old argument about the invasion of state's rights by the federal government, not that belligerent senators uphold the right of a state to condone lynching parties, but they claim the state has the exclusive right to prosecute members of lynching parties.

Lynching, as a fanatic method of dealing with crime, is not confined to the South, but it is more prevalent there, with the Negro as the chief victim.

The Southern states do not permit the Negro to vote, yet base their representation in Congress upon population, which includes the Negro. Even in the enlightened state of Texas, the Democrats have won a court decision upholding them in the refusal to permit a Negro to participate in the party primaries.

The evils of lynching have reached proportions that merit federal intervention, similar to that given in running down and prosecuting kidnapers.

The Southern Democratic senators admit the evils, but insist upon their states being left to deal with the problem, despite the fact that there is nothing in the history of the South that would indicate the slightest effort to stamp out this particular form of crime.

If the opposing senators persist in filibustering against the measure, it might be well for some of our more broad-minded senators to bring out into the open the question of the Negro voting in the South. Such action might improve the political complexion of the South. Domination of any section by one group year after year does not give all the people proper representation in Congress.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

APR 28 1935

LYNCHING'S WORST FEATURE

[illegible]ro [N. C.] Daily News)

One bad feature of lynching—which it must be admitted pretty generally in the south picks on the Negro—is the sort of defense of the practice that is offered by members of the United States congress from South Carolina. Indeed, we are inclined to think this is the worst feature, because, believe it or not, there are scattered throughout the entire south a lot of mush-brained electors who seem to feel the same way about lynching as do Coley Blease and Cotton Ed Smith.

It was Senator Smith's turn this year to rise in the national legislative halls to oppose the anti-lynching bill. Mr. Blease is not at Washington this term, or he would have "to-helled-with-the-Constitution" long before Cotton Ed got around to it.

It is the argument of such old-fashioned southern chivalves as Smith and Blease that there is one crime for which lynching is the only fit punishment. When a white woman has been insulted by a "black brute," all that should be asked of her is to point her finger. (By the way, a presumably intelligent woman pointed her finger at a white man t'other day over at Kannapolis, but he proved was at prayer meeting at the time of the alleged assault.)

Which might be all right if the remedy for rape were simply that of hanging, shooting or burning the first convenient victim. We have never been able to believe it is. In the first place there is the danger of mistakes—we have heard of rapists' victims making some mistakes; we have known mobs which did.

Passage of a federal anti-lynching law is not a pet project of ours—we haven't been able to make up our mind to vote for the federal child labor amendment as yet—but we are glad Cotton Ed didn't happen along at Scottsboro when the whole covey of Negro hoboes was arrested. Doubtless he'd have helped string them all up.

And then when one of the women in the case sought to recall her testimony as to the outrage, he'd have been out on a limb his own-self.

Honestly, we, who have never lived or moved and had being for appreciable time anywhere else save right down here in the midst of those who believe in the high hand as the savior of womanhood, have never met more than half a dozen southern gentlemen to whom we would delegate the right to lynch.

None of these, we might add, was, had been or expected to be right soon a member of congress.

PITTSBURGH, PA.
[illegible]
Press
MAR 16 1935

DISEASE AND REMEDY

ON TUESDAY a Mississippi mob crossed the Tennessee line, captured Ab Young, a Negro accused of fatally shooting a white laborer, placed him in a truck and drove into a school yard. There they tied a rope around his neck, fastened the rope to a tree and drove the truck from under the praying victim.

This was the third lynching since Jan. 1, the other two being in Louisiana, a state that Senator Long says knows how to prevent such crimes without help from the Federal Government. It is the second interstate lynching within a year, the other being the unspeakably savage killing of Claude Neal in Florida last October. It is the 96th lynching in the past five years.

The lynch evil is a cankerous social disease. Congress has a remedy, if not a cure. It is the anti-lynching bill, making such mob murders Federal offenses and holding counties financially liable for them.

On Tuesday the Senate Judiciary Committee put this measure squarely up to the Senate membership by voting unanimously to report it. Its authors, Senators Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, are determined to reach a vote early in the sessions to prevent a filibuster. Obstructive tactics by Southern Senators last session killed this same measure. By the same method the Dyer anti-lynching bill was killed in the Senate in 1920, after it had passed the House by a two-to-one vote.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is backed by organizations with membership of more than 40,000,0000 citizens. President Roosevelt supported it by inference when he said in his message to Congress: "Crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security."

The graves of more than 5000 lynch mob victims, killed in the past 50 years, testify that local communities are not coping with this evil. A Federal law will not cure the disease outright, but it will remedy it. Southern Senators will have much to answer for if they kill this measure again.

NEW YORK JOURNAL

JUN 12 1935

CLUB WOMEN BATTLE REDS

DETROIT, Mich., June 12.—The General Federation of Women's Clubs, representing 100,000 American women, today is unanimously on record as opposed to Communism, Fascism and other political systems which tend to curtail free thought or undermine our democracy.

Meeting here in their triennial convention, the 1,550 voting delegates voted to a woman to pass the "Declaration of Democracy."

The clubwomen also demand that birth control literature be allowed to go through the mails.

The federation also went on record as favoring entrance into the World Court, and a resolution on anti-lynching, introduced by delegates from Louisiana and Virginia, passed with only three negative votes.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

MAY 31 1935

LED LYNCHING, ADMITS CLERIC, TWICE KILLER

De Ridder, La., May 30 (U.P.).—Rev. C. E. Eskridge, 240-pound Baptist preacher of Orange, Texas, held here on a murder charge, admitted today he once led a mob that lynched a colored man in Tennessee.

Eskridge, who used to show his marksmanship by writing his name on a board with bullets from two six-shooters, was captured here yesterday a few hours after killing Police Chief Ed J. O'Reilly at Orange.

Admitting the shooting of O'Reilly, Eskridge later said to officers that he once before had been the "instrument of death."

"When I was a senior student at Cumberland University in Tennessee," he said, "I was forced to lead a mob that lynched a colored man."

Eskridge, a former Federal prohibition agent, said he shot O'Reilly because he had been persecuted. A short time before the shooting the officer arrested the minister and took two pistols from him.

O'Reilly recently had been baptized by Eskridge.

MISSISSIPPI ON THE RUN

Bravery and chivalry of the good old state of Mississippi have been tested and found wanting; two outlaws—just two, robbed a bank and kidnaped two women and went about their business. Of course, the sheriff organized a posse of fifteen men and pursued them; but that was bad, the two outlaws turned around and disarmed the sheriff and his posse of fifteen men, took their guns and continued their journey.

The conduct of the outlaws in taking the sheriff's gun and disarming his posse was not a nice thing to do, but it should teach those cowardly colored men down there to at least defend their women when the hill billies insult and rape them at will. Those same fifteen white men could have gone to the homes of forty colored men and lynched all of them and not one would have been willing to risk his life in defense of his rights.

Yet two outlaws can rob the bank, take away their women and kick fifteen men in the pants and continue their journey. Mississippi is only brave when she is dealing with cowards. There is only one thing for Southern black men to do if the government does not pass the Costigan-Wagner Anti-lynching bill, and that is to prepare to defend themselves; to defend their lives and homes by taking life for life.

If you must die, and the law will not protect you, then die like men. The fifteen men and the sheriff whom the two outlaws disarmed are typical of the rest of the lynchers in Mississippi—they are cowards when real men show fight. Then real men of courage could stop lynching in the whole state of Mississippi. But you cannot stop lynching by prayer meetings. But shotguns will stop lynchings.

You have been praying three hundred years, and these Christians whose prayer books you use are still burning both you and your homes. Now, just lay down the prayer book and take up the shotgun and see if that doesn't stop lynching. Even the Bible tells you "Without the shedding of blood there can be no redemption of sin." You say that you believe in the Bible.—the same rule applies to all Southern states.

When the governor, the courts, and the peace officers refuse to enforce the laws of the United States and the states and cities, then go to the defense of your country and see that those laws are enforced. You have nothing to lose—but your chains. Freedom is not worth having if it is not worth fighting for. Men who will not protect their homes and families have no right to call themselves free men.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5201

PHILADELPHIA, PA
RECORD

FEB 2 1935

CIVIC GROUPS OPEN FIGHT FOR WAGNER ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

Speaker Blames Exploitation of Negro Labor for Evil.

A vigorous campaign for passage of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill in Congress was launched in Philadelphia last night.

Representatives of more than 40 civic, social and religious organizations met in Friends' Meeting House, 15th and Race sts., and pledged themselves to service in the campaign.

They heard lynching denounced by a group of prominent speakers as "the greatest social problem confronting the United States today."

Calls It Instrument of Terror.

Charles H. Houston, dean of the Law School of Howard University, attributed lynching and the lynching spirt primarily to widespread exploitation of Negro labor in the South.

"Lynching is not a natural phenomenon," he declared. "It is not a natural expression of race prejudice. It is an instrument deliberately used to strike terror, to subject one class of men to a system which exploits them."

Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the audience that the Wagner-Costigan bill can be tremendously effective in checking lynchings. It not only sets penalties up to death for members of a lynch mob, but also punishes peace officers who fail to check lynchings.

"The Senators and Representatives from the sections where lynchings are most prevalent realize the power of that law," White said. "For that reason they will seek to kill it in Congressional committee."

Congressman William H. Wilson, of the 2d Philadelphia district, pledged himself, as a member of the House Judiciary Committee, to do everything possible to put the anti-lynching bill onto the floor of the House, if it is sent to the lower House by the Senate.

State Representative Marshall L. Shepard told the audience he was considering introducing a State anti-lynching bill in the legislature.

Blames Economic System.

"They say we don't need it in Pennsylvania," he declared. "But the lynch spirit in present day civilization is everywhere in America."

Frank R. Crosswaith, editor of the Negro Labor News Service, called lynching "an institution peculiar to the United States." "That proves," he said, that it is attributable solely to an economic system."

In 245 years before emancipation of the slaves, he asserted, there was not a single mob lynching in the South. But in some 70 years since the salves were freed to come into competition with free white labor, there have been more than 5000 lynchings.

Last night's meeting was presided over by Miss Marjorie Penney, chairman of the Young People's Fellowship.

IN FIGHT TO STOP LYNCHING

Speakers at last night's anti-lynching mass meeting at Friends' Meeting House, 15th and Race sts., included (left to right) Charles H. Houston, dean of Howard University Law School; Congressman William H. Wilson; Frank R. Crosswaith, editor of the Negro Labor News Service; State Representative Marshall L. Shepard, and Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

LA SALLE-PERU, ILL.
DAILY POST-TRIBUNE

JUN 17 1935

Very Little is Needed to Rouse Mob Spirit

The human race has to cope with many enemies in its long struggle to work out a scheme for peaceful living, but the greatest enemy of all is the mob.

For a perfect picture of the way the mob acts, consider the riot that swept up and down the streets of New York's Harlem the other day.

A colored boy tried to pinch a 10-cent knife from a store counter. A floor-walker collared him and the boy, naturally enough, set up a holler. An excitable woman saw and heard just enough to touch off her motor reactions, and she ran out into the street yelling that the boy had been killed.

Up and down the streets went the cry. Out of poolrooms, lunchrooms, and workshops came angry men, milling in the streets, yelling, looking for someone to fight, afraid, suspicious, and angry. A crowd of a thousand men and women swept into the store, turning things upside down, breaking things, yelling, hitting, fighting.

Police reserves came, by the hundreds. There were dozens of fights. Scores of men were cut, beaten, or slugged. More than a hundred were arrested. Thousands of dollars' damage was done to property.

And the juvenile knife-stealer who unintentionally started it all managed to jerk away from his captors during the melee and vanished, utterly unharmed.

You could search the world over without finding a better example than this of the blind, panicky insanity of the mob spirit. Here was a riot of major proportions, an ugly welter of fights that spread all across a populous section of a great city—and all for what?

Not one of the rioters knew. They could not possibly have hoped to know. It started, literally, from nothing at all; and because men and women were jittery, and gave way to the combined emotions of anger and fear, there was merry Ned to pay.

Now you don't need to think very hard to draw the needed moral from all this. The mob spirit that can seize a few thousand people in one city is the same spirit that can and frequently does seize whole nations, when hatred and panic get together.

It sweeps dictators into power, causes mass executions, concentration camps, sluggings and clubbings; it fills the air with bombing planes and the fields with infantrymen and sets cruisers loose on the sea lanes; it inflicts more misery and destruction on the earth than a generation can repair.

And all, as in Harlem—for what?

CUMBERLAND, MD.
TIMES
JAN 31 1935

BILLS OFFERED IN HOUSE WOULD STOP LYNCHING

Three Measures Introduced By Delegate From Fourth Baltimore District

POINTS ARE LISTED

Sheriffs In Counties Would Be Made More Responsible For Keeping Prisoner

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 31 (AP) —A new attempt to put an end to lynching in Maryland was inaugurated in the legislature today.

Three bills aimed at this end were offered in the House of Delegates by Theodore B. Berman, Republican, of the fourth Baltimore district. In pattern, they followed generally the lines of laws proposed two years ago at the time of a lynching outbreak on the Eastern Shore. The principal points of the Berman bills were:

Remove Prisoner

County sheriffs would be required to move a prisoner suspected of a capital offense to a distant jail for safekeeping.

All sheriffs would be made responsible for damages for failure to exercise care for the safekeeping of persons in their custody.

A sheriff found guilty of negligence in this particular would be subject to removal by the governor.

The trial of removed capital cases would be speeded by a requirement that the transcript of proceedings be furnished to the court at the new venue within four days.

Summon Jury

Judges in the counties, where grand jury terms are widely separated, would be definitely authorized to summon the jury panel in special session for quick indictments.

The bill dealing with the duties of sheriffs in capital cases, Berman said, would cure the greatest weakness in the present system.

"If this bill is adopted, it will, in my opinion, go far toward preventing lynchings in Maryland," he said.

A second bill, dealing with quick indictments Mr. Berman said would do away with over emphasis of heinous cases while prisoners remain in jail for long periods awaiting trial. This legislation, he pointed out, is not needed in Baltimore, when the grand jury meets continually, and the petit juries sit ten months of the year and are subject to recall during the two months of the summer recess.

NEW YORK TIMES
FEB 12 1935

PROTESTS BAR SHOW OF ART ON LYNCHING

Macabre Exhibition Canceled on 'Outburst' of Objections From Secret Sources.

SOCIAL MESSAGE WAS AIM

Display Backed by Prominent Persons Will Be Held, Negro Group Official Insists.

Protests from unidentified sources resulted yesterday in the cancellation of one of the most macabre art shows ever scheduled for this city.

The exhibition was to be called "An Art Commentary on Lynching" and was to be opened to the public on Saturday of this week at the Jacques Seligmann Galleries, 3 East Fifty-first Street, after an invitation opening on Friday. After several announcements had been issued by the galleries and after paintings, drawings, prints and a few pieces of sculpture had arrived, Mr. Seligmann decided last night not to hold the exhibition.

Although no public announcement had been made of the fact, the show had been arranged by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Seligmann declined to reveal the source of the protests.

"I took over the show merely on its artistic merit," he said. "Some of the exhibiting artists are well known. However, I was faced with an outburst of opposition. Since I wish to keep the galleries free of political or racial manifestations, I thought it better to cancel the show."

Work by Prominent Artists.

The pictures and sculpture in the show were to be the work of contemporaries, some of them well known. Among the work included was to be the famous print by the late George Bellows, "The Law Is Too Slow," showing a Negro being burned by a mob. Another picture was a large oil painting by Thomas H. Benton, mural artist, showing a Negro being hanged on a telephone pole, with members of a mob replenishing the fire beneath him.

One of the most sensational works scheduled for the show was Reginald Marsh's portrayal in black and white called "This Is Her First Lynching"—a young girl being held by her mother above the heads of a mob so the child can get a view of the lynching.

In almost every picture a Negro was portrayed as the victim of a vengeful mob. The treatment varied, but its effect on the person viewing the work was generally one of horror.

The work had been selected not only with an eye to its subject-matter but also to artistic merit, and much of it was effective from that point of view.

Long List of Sponsors.

Among those on the long list of sponsors of the show were Dr. and Mrs. Ernest Alexander, Sherwood Anderson, Katherine Anthony, Faith Baldwin, Harry Elmer Barnes, Charles A. Beard, Robert Benchley, Stephen Vincent Benét, Mr. and Mrs. Artur Bodanzky, Henry Bradford, Witter Bynner, Henry Seidel Canby, Mrs. Richard S. Childs, Mrs. W. Murray Crane, Mrs. Margaret Deland, Mrs. Bernard S. Deutsch, Max Eastman and Dorothy Canfield Fisher.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said last night he did not know the source of the protests, but he declared that cancellation of the show by Mr. Seligmann, who was donating his galleries, would not prevent holding the exhibition elsewhere on the scheduled dates.

Mr. White said the idea of holding the show had originated with his organization six or eight weeks ago. The purpose was to exhibit distinguished art with a social message. To prevent any disposition to dismiss it as mere propaganda, it had been decided to open the show under the auspices of a large committee of well-known persons rather than as an activity of the association.

Artists had cooperated willingly in the show, according to Mr. White, and some had even produced work especially for the exhibition.

Fasting as a Cure for Lynching

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

SIR: As one who loves the United States only next to his own motherland, may I from this end of the world suggest a remedy for lynching, which blackens the fair name of America more than anything else? As this is a corporate and almost a national sin, it has to be expiated in a deeper way than suggested by Mr. R. R. Gregg from Pendle Hill (The Christian Century, November 7, 1934).

While I was in Nashville in 1933, a young Negro was killed there in what was nothing less than a most flagrant disregard of the law of the land. Some of the white people of the place were doing all they could to get the perpetrators of the diabolical crime arrested and punished, but I am not sure how far they succeeded in this attempt. Although this was not a case of lynching, I suggested to some friends that one of the best remedies for such crimes was fasting, as the evil was too great to be cured by ordinary remedies. I said this to one of the finest Christians I knew in the place, but I am sorry to say the thing did not commend itself to the lady. Perhaps she thought it to be too medieval. I would, however, still persist in saying that such crimes as lynching should be expiated by fasting and prayer on the part of all those people all over the land who feel the awful injustice and iniquity that lie behind the neutrality that inspires such crimes.

All the other things that are being done today to get rid of this neutrality are very good, and what Mr. Gregg suggests is still better, but we need to get deeper still and take the punishment of the crime in some way upon ourselves. If such a thing as this were done on a large scale under the leadership of the Christian ministers all over the land, e.g., if a hundred thousand people and more were to fast for a day after every such crime, I am sure the effects thereof would be far-reaching, and this would perhaps be the most potent means of getting rid of a corporate crime the like of which it is difficult to find in any other part of the world.

Jesus said certain kinds of evil spirits can only be got rid of by fasting and prayer, and I am afraid this is one of them, although I do not believe that there are any other evil spirits besides our own hearts inspired by pride of race, etc., behind such crimes.

Harmony House,
Rajkot, India.

MANILAL C. PAREKH.

[redacted]

Two More Lynchings.

Mobs have taken the lives of eighteen victims in the United States during the year. Two persons were killed in this way Tuesday.

With more than a month and a half left of the year, it is probable that the lynchings of the year will reach an average of two a month. Four within the last two weeks have caused discouragement on the part of those who had hoped for a good showing for the year. They have shown that mob outbreaks are as uncertain as storms. Most unexpectedly the outbreaks of lawlessness in the name of punishment for the wicked occur. It happens that such outbreaks occur almost entirely in states where the most severe punishment is not only possible but extremely likely for the victims. Mobs bent on destruction of life, however, never are influenced by the assurance that the law will doom the guilty, or the fact that the culprits have little chance to escape the proper penalty for crimes.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5202

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
JAN 25 1935

TENNESSEE VENDETTA

One of the little-known aftermaths of the mob activities at Shelby, Tenn., has been the savagery with which citizens who openly and stoutly opposed the attempted lynching have been covertly persecuted. The latest incident has been the burning of a Methodist parsonage occupied by a minister who protested vigorously against the appeal to lynch law. Warned by an anonymous letter to cease from "meddling in matters of protecting Negroes against white people," the clergyman had a forcible demonstration of the fact that a barbarous minority of Shelbyville's population will stop at nothing to attain its ends.

It would be unfair to assume that any large number of responsible citizens share such views in Tennessee or in the South generally. There is, however, a savage element of the populace which would persecute the Negroes. Press and pulpit in Dixie often have inveighed against the heathenish practice of lynching. The former have in many instances found their circulation affected in districts where lynching is considered a sport. The latter have suffered from the savagery of morons who objected to any interference whatsoever with their practice of mob murder.

The Birmingham Age-Herald correctly calls the Shelbyville situation "monstrous" and it is. It is hoped the grand jury speedily will ferret out the offenders who committed the crime of arson in a vain attempt to still the Rev. W. O. Largen's tongue. The Alabama daily condemns Shelbyville as a "civilized town overrun by savages"; and none aware of the latest vendetta directed against the church in that community will be inclined to dissent from this verdict.

COLUMBUS, O.
CITIZEN
JAN 30 1935

War, Lynching

By

MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

WHAT a wonder it would be if the women's clubs decided to abandon their cultural and social programs for the duration of the 74th Congress!

Mrs. Ferguson.

This Congress will make history; whether that history is to be great or ignoble, we, the women of the country, must help to decide. Numbers of subjects demand our attention, but I am thinking particularly of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill and the Senate arms inquiry.

As long as lynchings and wars continue to be tolerated we cannot call ourselves civilized. All the club papers we prepare, all the educational programs we promote, all the social causes we sponsor, will never prove otherwise. War and lynching, being cousins in crime, go hand in hand, trailing their bloody robes down the highway of time. Both are induced by hysteria, which result in mob violence, and mob violence is always inimical to progress. In design and spirit they are one, and may well be called the umbilical cord linking us with barbarism. Until that cord is severed all other efforts for advancement will prove futile.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is designed to make lynching a costly business for the lynchers. If passed, the counties in which the law is flouted will have to pay in cash for their orgies of bestiality. Murder is murder, whether done by individuals or crowds.

Again, we know that startling information has been disclosed by the munitions investigation. Are we to have it stopped before we find out the whole truth? Fortunately, another $50,000 has just been appropriated for the inquiry. The women should see that more is obtained if necessary.

If the clubs would prove their boast of intelligent leadership, let them demonstrate their ability here. It's time to put some firm pressure on your legislators.

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS
FEB 4 1935

Groups Open Fight for Law On Lynching

An intensive campaign has been started by various interests for congressional legislation looking towards the prevention of lynching.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has been joined by a number of other organizations to work for the passage of the Costigan-Wagner bill, now before the Senate in Washington.

This anti-lynching bill would put the prosecution of lynchers in the hands of federal courts and provides stiff penalties for law officers who fail to perform their duty in protecting prisoners.

The associations backing the proposed law are urging interested persons to write to President Roosevelt, to Joseph T. Robinson, majority leader in the Senate and to their senators and congressmen in their respective states, asking them to aid in passing the bill.

Impetus was given the movement by the lynching of Claude Neal in Florida last October. Details of this occurrence led white and colored persons alike to demand congressional action.

The measure, which has been read twice and referred to the Senate judiciary committee, gives to the federal court in the district in which the mob violence takes place jurisdiction to punish those who take part in lynchings, provided that state officers have failed to prosecute or punish the offenders.

Such jurisdiction also may become effective if the jurors in the state courts are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability the guilty persons may escape the penalty. Failure of state authorities to act within 30 days after a lynching would also give federal authorities jurisdiction.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.
REGISTER
JAN 22 1935

OVERRULING JUDGE LYNCH

The mounting force of public opinion, manifested in active public support for law and order is gradually checking the lynching evil, according to the most recent statistics on the subject. The reliable figures of the Tuskegee Institute show that a total of 15, all Negroes, were victims of mobs during the past year—a marked decrease from the record of 28 lynchings in 1933.

The same authority reports that during that year 51 "necktie parties" were prevented by the forces of law and order, thus saving the lives of 14 white men, 57 Negro men and 3 Negro women. All 15 of the lynchings of 1934 occurred in the Southern states—6 in Mississippi alone.

The vigorous measures taken at Shelbyville, Tenn., in December last, reflected extreme credit upon the authorities of that town and the judge, sheriff and national guardsmen, who protected the prisoner and only failed to save the courthouse because they were reluctant to kill their fellow-citizens.

The 50-year lynching record, recently compiled, reveals that a total of 4,372 persons—including 1,050 whites—have met death in the United States at the hands of mobs, a record which every thinking citizen deplores.

However, as the St. Louis Globe-Democrat remarks, a fact that relieves to some extent the somber impress made by this appaling total and encourages antilynching effort, is that the annual average of 87 has not been approximated since the 83 total of 1919. Verily, "mobilization of public opinion against the mob pays."

BELLEVILLE, ILL.
ADVOCATE
JAN 29 1935

It is the hard-hearted land of lynchings and it is the generous land which will send millions of dollars to Japanese earthquake victims. It maintains a gigantic navy and spends millions on aircraft, but it is the only nation brave enough to expose the chicanery of munitions manufacturers.

You could go on like that for an hour. How, indeed, is any foreigner to understand such a people?

A compound of wisdom and foolishness, of braggadocio and humility, of strength and weakness—we can't understand ourselves.

We can only sense that we are a strange people of infinite possibilities, who are building a society unlike any other on earth. . . . and our saving grace is the fact that we have the courage and the idealism to insist that it shall also be better than any other.

BALTIMORE, MD.
EVENING SUN
NOV 15 1935

Invidious Comparison

In Columbia, Texas, two boys were lynched earlier this week. The county attorney, far from deploring this piece of mob violence, applauded it. He called it "an expression of the will of the people," thus demonstrating convincingly his lack of faith in the effectiveness of law, of the State's law-enforcement machinery and, indeed, of his own participation in that machinery.

Yesterday in Moultrie, Ga., a mob threatened violence to a Negro. Members of the National Guard were sent to Moultrie immediately, took the Negro into their custody and literally fought their way out of town with their charge. The Negro will receive justice, but it will be the civilized justice of the courts and not the mere satisfaction of mob lust.

Out of these two episodes, which emerges with its reputation enhanced—the law-enforcement machinery of Texas or that of Georgia?

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

FEB 1 1935

The Movement Against Lynching

Public support should be forthcoming for the Co-operative Committee Against Lynching which is sponsoring a mass-meeting tonight at the Friends' Meeting House, 15th and Race sts.

The meeting will be primarily one of demonstration and protest. But speakers also will discuss constructive measures looking toward ending lynching by legislation.

This subject is in need of careful thought. It may be possible to stifle barbaric mob spirit by passing laws against it. Yet grave doubts were raised concerning the potential effect of the Federal anti-lynching bill recently proposed.

It is certainly true that the lynch spirit will not be crushed so long as men who tolerate it—for instance, the late Governor Rolph, of California—are allowed to hold office.

By protest and ballot, the decent men and women of the nation must serve notice on police, politicians and potential mobsters that this blot on our civilization shall be wiped out.

British Columbian
New Westminster B.C.
JAN 29 1935

The Chivalrous South

The Literary Digest is authority for the statement that 15 negroes were lynched in United States in 1934, and all of them in southern states — that South which in romantic fiction is the very home of chivalry. Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas — so runs the list of states that have thus vindicated their honor by permitting mobs to indulge their bloodlust. For the statistically inclined, it is remarked that 1934 showed an improvement over 1933, when 28 met a dreadful end without process of law or benefit of clergy, but on the other hand it was not so good a year, from the humanitarian standpoint, as 1930, 1931, and 1932. Perhaps the depression had something to do with it. The number of Judge Lynch's victims increased each year of the depression, reaching its peak in 1933 and beginning to recede with recovery in the past year.

Perhaps, also, the 1934 record revealed no actual increase in a disinclination to vent mob fury on the hapless object of its rage, for the Digest goes on to say that in the same year officers of the law prevented 51 lynchings that were obviously on the way.

Illuminating also is a list of the various crimes or offences charged against the negroes who were lynched. In a certain famous lynching of some years ago, the Governor of California publicly exonerated the mob for taking the law into its own hands against the confessed perpetrator of an infamous crime. But consider the case of a negro charged with "talking disrespectfully" — it seems incredible but the Literary Digest is a publication with a reputation for accuracy and these are its words—consider such an alleged offender brutally murdered by a brutal mob; consider the enormity of lynching a negro accused of "striking a man," presumably with his fist. Surely the population where such crimes can be committed must include an extraordinary proportion of homicidal maniacs still at large. It will not do to call them savages, for that is to insult people who, although denied the "blessings" of civilization have yet a primitive sense of justice. Even the Red Indian of pioneer days had the excuse of being on the warpath when he slew his victims, and so subject to the war hysteria which no race escapes.

Salt Lake City, Utah
DESERET NEWS

JAN 22 1935

LYNCHINGS IN 1934

LYNCHING is not a pleasant subject to think or talk about, but there is some satisfaction in knowing that in the United States we are gradually outgrowing this relic of barbarism. It is important to know that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in this country during 1934. This is gratifying because it represents progress.

For many years the average number of persons who lost their lives through mob violence ranged between one and two hundred, and there have been years in which as high as 231 persons were put to death by mobs. Of late years, however, the number of these outrages against law and order has been definitely downward and this gives us hope and confidence that this evil will in the near future be entirely eliminated from our national life. Until that time lynching for any cause whatsoever will remain a black spot upon our civilization.

As an evidence of the extent to which mobs will go, inflamed as they generally are by drinking orgies, it is pointed out that seven of the fifteen men lynched last year were charged with what would have been classed in the states in which the offense was committed merely as a misdemeanor. One was charged with wounding a man in a quarrel; another with associating with white women; one with striking a white man; one of talking disrespectfully of others; another insulting a woman; one charged others with stealing, and one with writing a disrespectful letter.

During the year officers have displayed commendable courage and vigilance in defending their prisoners against attack. There were fifty-one instances of mob uprisings in which the victims were saved. On five occasions soldiers were utilized to repel the attacks of the lynchers. Six of the 1934 outrages occurred in Mississippi, two in Floride, two in Louisiana, and one in Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Texas.

Whether a man is white or black he is entitled to the protection of the law. Public sentiment everywhere should be active against this brutal and unconscionable practice, which degrades those who engage in it to the level of the beast. We cannot lay claim to a high state of culture or civilization until the unlawful taking of human life is eliminated.

British Columbian
New Westminster B.C.
JAN 2 1935

The Chivalrous South

The Literary Digest is authority for the statement that 15 negroes were lynched in United States in 1934, and all of them in southern states — that South which in romantic fiction is the very home of chivalry. Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Texas — so runs the list of states that have thus vindicated their honor by permitting mobs to indulge their bloodlust. For the statistically inclined, it is remarked that 1934 showed an improvement over 1933, when 28 met a dreadful end without process of law or benefit of clergy, but on the other hand it was not so good a year, from the humanitarian standpoint, as 1930, 1931, and 1932. Perhaps the depression had something to do with it. The number of Judge Lynch's victims increased each year of the depression, reaching its peak in 1933 and beginning to recede with recovery in the past year.

Perhaps, also, the 1934 record revealed no actual increase in a disinclination to vent mob fury on the hapless object of its rage, for the Digest goes on to say that in the same year officers of the law prevented 51 lynchings that were obviously on the way.

Illuminating also is a list of the various crimes or offences charged against the negroes who were lynched. In a certain famous lynching of some years ago, the Governor of California publicly exonerated the mob for taking the law into its own hands against the confessed perpetrator of an infamous crime. But consider the case of a negro charged with "talking disrespectfully" — it seems incredible but the Literary Digest is a publication with a reputation for accuracy and these are its words—consider such an alleged offender brutally murdered by a brutal mob; consider the enormity of lynching a negro accused of "striking a man," presumably with his fist. Surely the population where such crimes can be committed must include an extraordinary proportion of homicidal maniacs still at large. It will not do to call them savages, for that is to insult people who, although denied the "blessings" of civilization have yet a primitive sense of justice. Even the Red Indian of pioneer days had the excuse of being on the warpath when he slew his victims, and so subject to the war hysteria which no race escapes.

Lynchings-1935
& Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5203

Walter White Accuses Senator Bailey Of North Carolina Of Lying About Recent Lynchings

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina, one of the leaders in the filibuster against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill was charged Friday by Walter White, secretary of the N. A. A. C. P., with deliberate distortion of the facts regarding the lynching of Govan Ward of Louisburg, N. C., on July 30th. The controversy is one of the most acrimonious of the present session of Congress and reveals, according to informed observers here, how deeply opposition, even in the South, to the filibuster is getting under the skins of Bailey and other Southern Senators.

The N. A. A. C. P. Secretary charges Senator Bailey with lying unless his State can and does apprehend and punish Ward's lynchers. The full text of Senator Bailey's letter and of Mr. White's reply are:

"August 15, 1935"

"I have your wire of July 31st.

"I did assert that the people of the United States need no incentive by way of Federal interference to prevent lynching. I did assert that there had been more improvement in the reduction of the number of these crimes than in the number of the reduction of any other crimes whatsoever. These statistics were supplied by the Tuskegee Institute and are not to be questioned. I do not think Federal action would have the slightest thing to do with the stopping of lynching. I shall resist the Costigan-Wagner Bill as often as it comes up and it makes no difference whatever to me that the eyes of the world will be upon me and my State to see if I spoke truthfully and I need no reminder from you on this subject. I have nothing but contempt for your suggestion that I have spoken other than truthfully, and you know that you are lying when you undertake to make it appear that there has not been a very great reduction in lynchings throughout the country and in the South and in my State the past forty years. You have the facts before you. The idea of invoking the Federal power to prevent a crime, the number of which committed in the country is less than fifteen in a year, is an absurdity upon its face. I understand very well what your organization is up to and I do not hestitate to say that so far from advancing the interest of the colored race, it is doing as much as anything to keep the race race-conscious and in a condition of unrest.

"I do not want any more wires from you or any communications. You ought to go out and make an honest living instead of trying to attend to other people's business and taking up collections from people who are deluded by the folly which you put forward."

"Very truly yours,"
"(Signed) J. W. Bailey"

Walter White's Reply

"August 21, 1935"

"My dear Senator Bailey"

"Had I not with my own eyes and ears observed hysterical bitterness you displayed in filibustering against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill I should have been unable to believe that a member of a solemnly deliberative body like the United States Senate could have deliberately distorted the plain English language as you have distorted my telegram of July 31st in your reply to me of August 15th. My telegram to you regarding the Louisburg, North Carolina, lynching of Govan Ward on July 30th read:

"On April 26 you vigorously attacked the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill and asserted that 'we need no incentive to do our duty' in preventing lynching or punishing lynchers. Yesterday a mob in your own State, at Louisburg, presented you and the State of North Carolina with a challenge to prove the truth of your statement of April 26. Thoughtful Americans, including many white citizens of North Carolina, do not believe that lynching can be stopped except by Federal action. The eyes of the world will be upon you and your State to see if you spoke truthfully when you filibustered against the Costigan-Wagner bill."

"No statement is made therein as to whether or not lynchings are decreasing, increasing or remaining the same. Can it be that the reason you failed to answer my direct question as to what you and the State of North Carolina plan to do to bring the Louisburg lynchers to justice is because you know that neither you nor your State plans to do anything? The plain question is this: What do you intend to do to make good your boast that North Carolina needs no Federal or outside help to apprehend, convict and punish any and all persons who commit or participate in a lynching in North Carolina? The question as to whether or not you told the truth in the filibuster is not going to be answered in any other fashion except by the apprehension and punishment of the Louisburg lynchers. If they are punished, then that action and it alone will proclaim to the world that you told the truth. Likewise, failure to punish the Louisburg lynchers will prove that you did not tell the truth, and there is no escaping that fact through hysterical statements such as contained in your letter of August 15.

"I note your letter of August 15th states that you desire no further communications from me. It is not difficult to appreciate your wish to have the last word on this lynching which must humiliate and embarrass you in spite of your self-righteous attitude.

"I note further your statement that 'it makes no difference whatsoever to me that the eyes of the world will be upon me and my State to see if I spoke truthfully.' Is it beyond your comprehension to realize that the time has long since passed when territorial subdivision, whether they be nations or states, can ignore what the outside world thinks? Not even the most notorious European dictators dare be so arrogant.

"My comment on your remarks about 'earning an honest living' is that I prefer my own means of earning a livelihood from an Association to which contributions are wholly voluntary, to your own where you draw a salary from public funds raised through the taxation of Negroes as well as white citizens, yet utilize that position to prevent effective action against that bestial and unChristian crime of lynching which President Roosevelt has rightly termed 'that vile form of collective murder.'

"Perhaps even you have learned by now that the leading newspapers of your own State, and thoughtful North Carolinians of both races, not only do not approve of your attitude but heartily disapprove your participation in the filibuster to prevent even an honest debate and vote upon the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. I have too much respect for the integrity and intelligence of the large and constantly growing number of decent citizens of North Carolina not to feel confident that they will resent your threat to filibuster against Federal anti-lynching legislation 'as often as it comes up.' Do you not realize, my dear Senator Bailey, that the world is moving forward and that the growing number of intelligent people, especially younger ones, will not countenance your continued efforts to block action to eliminate bestial mob violence from our national life?"

"Ever sincerely,"
"(Signed) WALTER WHITE"
"Secretary"

Two Ways

These columns last week told of Congressman Arthur Mitchell's straddle on the anti-lynching legislation before Congress.

He says he is pressing his own anti-lynching measure, but admits that he doesn't think it could stop lynching, even if it became a law.

Mr. Mitchell wanted to stand with the white Southerners who oppose an anti-lynching bill, and he also wanted to stand with those of his own people who believe this legislation necessary.

Any time a Congressman faces two ways, it is difficult to discover which way he favors most. Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen, writing in a Washington newspaper, said this:

"Do you know that the sole colored member of Congress is opposed to anti-lynching legislation? He is Arthur W. Mitchell, Democrat, of Illinois."

THE INSIDE OF LYNCHING

A HIGHLY INTERESTING CASE was furnished in Municipal Judge Lausche's courtroom recently, when after an exhaustive effort, a white woman who had charged a Colored man—whom she claimed she did not know and had never previously seen—with assault was forced to admit, by the overwhelming facts that faced her that the man was her former husband.

There have been undoubtedly many lynchings in other parts of the country in cases not much dissimilar, for the only thing necessary in the present case to complete the stage for a lynching would have been to change the locale of occurence.

Incidents like this help to show the tremendous need that exists for curbing lynch-law.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS
SEP 4 1935

THE MAKING OF A MOB

Three little Kentucky girls, absent without leave from home the other day, "made up" a fanciful story of having been kidnaped by three Negroes. But the police of their home town, Louisville, were skeptical of the lurid tale and eventually ascertained the truth.

Those who realize how easy it is for lynching mobs to form will unite in condemning the children, but there is undoubtedly an explanation for their conduct. Having heard their elders discuss the fate of children "snatched" away, they immediately reached the conclusion that the alibi would be perfect, would make martyrs and heroines of them, giving each an opportunity to display that exhibitionist complex so prevalent among certain members of the present generation.

Children of those tender years could not be expected to realize that they were tossing a match into a powder keg, that they were playing on racial mistrust with a hastily concocted lie. It would not have taken a mob long to have lynched the wrong men. Members of the Negro race are all too often victims of unreasoning and distorted passion displayed by morons.

The childish fabrication at Louisville might have led to illegal murders, to race riots, to a public disturbance which would have blotted the fair name of Kentucky and have imperiled the amicable relations now existing between the citizens in that state.

WASHINGTON, D. C
STAR
SEP 3 1935

COLORED CATHOLICS OPPOSE LYNCHINGS

Appeals Voiced for Equality of Educational Opportunity for All Church Groups.

Delegates to the convention of Federated Colored Catholics of the United States here yesterday elected officers and passed resolutions favoring continued support of the anti-lynching measures introduced to Congress and continued appeal "to the hierarchy for equality of educational oportunities for all groups in the church."

G. A. Henderson of Pittsburgh was re-elected president of the federation. Other officers include Eugene A. Clark, W. P. Dickerson, Elbert A. Holmes and Edgar Kenny, vice presidents; H. M. Smith, executive secretary; L. De Reef Holton, assistant executive secretary; Sarah P. Kirby, recording secretary; Marian Bruce, assistant recorder; William B. Bruce, treasurer; Helen I. Pinkett, editor; William A. Prater, field agent, and Benedict Smith, sergeant at arms.

The sessions yesterday, held in the auditorium of the Holy Redeemer Church, concluded a three-day convention which attracted approximately 300 colored Catholics from the entire eastern section of the United States.

WATERTOWN, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 31 1935

THE SOUTH FACES THE LYNCHING PROBLEM.

Since the days of the Civil war the lynching of negroes has been a curse of the South. Every case is the same. A band of men, sometimes masked and sometimes not, will approach a jail, demand the prisoner, carry him off and string him to a tree. The officers of the law if they are brought before a court of inquiry never know anything about the lynchers nor how or when the hanging happened. They are affected by a complete loss of memory. The lynching of a negro in Franklin county, North Carolina, a short time ago is a true example of the process.

But, says Mr. W. J. Cash, a native North Carolinian, writing in the Baltimore Sun, a change in attitude toward lynching was noticeable after this Franklin county case. He points to the general dislike on the part of Southern people for lynching and the editorial attacks the practice always meets from the newspapers. Down through the years, he states, the substantial people have thrown up their hands at lynching, saying it was hateful, but have placed the whole blame at the door of the poor whites and the degraded citizens of a community.

The Franklin county lynching seemed to wake the people of North Carolina to a new responsibility. A new consciousness that the people as a whole are to blame and that the act cannot be pushed aside on the poor white population was noticeable, the writer says. The newspapers attacked the sheriff and his officials bitterly for handing the prisoner to the band of wrongdoers. Many pointed out that the South must awaken to the dreadfulness of the crime. The feeling that it is wrong is not enough. The attitude of indifference and the willingness to blame the poor whites must pass. The knowledge is dawning that lynching can never be stamped out while the great mass of solid men and women stand aside and frown at the practice but do nothing to halt it.

This, Mr. Cash feels, is striking progress. He makes no prophesies that lynching can be stopped immediately. He says that the temper of the South is such that it will take a long time. But, he declares, this willingness of North Carolina to face the lynching issue squarely and not to avoid it is a clear advance.

OAKLAND, CALIF.
POST ENQUIRER
SEP 20 1935

One More Lynching

Even When the Law Wasn't Slow

Ellwood Higginbotham, a Negro, was lynched last Wednesday night in Oxford, Miss., as a jury which had heard his murder case was leaving the courtroom to consider the verdict.

He was accused of killing a white farmer.

His case was tried promptly, and a legal verdict would have been reached shortly if the lynching had not intervened.

Most lynchings are excused on the ground that legal justice is too slow.

But that excuse hardly stands up in the case of Ellwood Higginbotham.

The real cause for lynchings is probably very deep, reaching back to the jungle days before the dawn of what we call civilization—and even the proposed federal anti-lynching law may not be able to reach it.

However, if those Mississippi lynchers who disregarded the law and the Constitution found themselves each involved in a personal murder case, that would tend to discourage lynchings in that vicinity.

NEW YORK JOURNAL
Bronx Section
OCT 8 1935

Defense of Lynching In C.C.N.Y. Textbook Stirs Student Protest

Because a City College textbook is said to contain a story defending lynching in the South, President Frederick B. Robinson today promised to investigate a protest by the Student Council against use of the book.

The book, an anthology of selections of English prose entitled "Models and Values," is condemned by the students because of the story by William H. Davis called "Unwritten Law."

The story is only a "psychological treatise portraying a mental state," according to Prof. William B. Otis, of the English Department.

Journal
OCT 3 1935

AND OF SUCH MOBS ARE MADE

On November 28, 1933, a Negro was lynched by a mob at St. Joseph, Mo. The story perhaps is recalled by most readers, for the mob was a particularly wild, disorderly and destructive one. The Negro was charged with attack on a woman and the crowd was inflamed as a result.

In a subsequent investigation there was an unusual ending. A mob leader was actually convicted and given a short time in jail. His name was Carl Fisher. No doubt Mr. Fisher was willing to be considered a patriotic protector of womanhood and an indivdiual to be reckoned with by anyone who might decide to overstep the boundaries of decency toward the weaker sex.

Now Mr. Fisher is again in jail. The charge against him is attacking a woman, a charge exactly similar to that allegedly committed by a Negro against whom he led a fatal mob. The incident is illuminating. No doubt lax enforcement of laws has encouraged many a mob. Certainly it has given the excuse for them. But the mob deserves little admiration. It represents people bereft of reason and judgment, it represents an agitator finding opportunity for violence and, too often, it enrolls quickly those who are not to be trusted too much themselves and who get into it, not for the laudable purpose of discouraging crimes against the innocent as much as sensing an opportunity to satisfy their craving for violence and action outside of the law.

It is a fine testimonial to the standing of a mob when one of its directing leaders himself is arrested for a crime exactly the same as it was alleged his victim committed and for which he had him torn to pieces by a mob goaded to fury.

DAYTON, O.
NEWS
NOV 7 1935

A Tennessee Lynching

There have been more brutally executed lynchings than that which occurred this week at White Bluff, Tenn., but rarely if ever one as brazen. The victim, a Negro accused of slapping a white woman, was taken from a deputy sheriff and another official who were en route with their prisoner to the county jail.

The "mob" consisted of five armed men. They took the deputy's pistol but assured him that they would "be back in a few minutes and bring your gun." The promise was kept. In less than half an hour they returned and surrendered to the official. "They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he says. "They told me they shot the Negro with my gun." The sheriff placed no charge but said that they would be taken to the county seat for arraignment.

Only less shocking than the crime itself is the cheerful confidence of this quintet that the law which they boast of flouting will not punish them for it. In the history of lynching, to be sure, they have ample assurance for such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance to a lynching mob. Seldom is there even an effort afterward to identify its members, although in the case of the ringleaders at least that should be comparatively simple. Instances in which they have been brought to trial are still more infrequent. A conviction is almost unknown.

But no mob has had the audacity to do its barbarous, bloody deed and then deliver itself to the law in the attitude of "What are you going to do about it?" The country waits to see how Tennessee will meet an unprecedented challenge.

Lynchings-1935
Discussion.

White Press, Northern.

5204

New York Evening Post

FEB 15 1935

Art Show Depicts Horrors Of Mob Lynching Hysteria

Pictures Express Seething Indignation of Civilized People Over Brutal Murders

By MICHEL MOK

You may get a little ill, as this reporter did, when looking at the pictures which have been gathered together in an exhibition entitled "An Art Commentary on Lynching" at the Arthur U. Newton Galleries, 11 East Fifty-seventh Street.

You may get a little ill, but it may do you good, for these canvases, etchings, water colors, cartoons and pieces of sculpture express the seething indignation civilized people feel when faced with the brutal murders committed by hysterical mobs in the darkest parts of this country.

No spoken or written argument against lynch law could be as hard-hitting as the work of these artists. It is unlikely that the editorial was ever penned, for example, that carries the conviction of George Bellows's etching, "The Law Is too Slow."

Man Burned at Stake

In this nightmare work, if you can stand it, you will see a huge Negro writhing at the burning stake, while a group of hooded, masked men, like figures from Dante's In[illegible] up the fire, replenish it with fuel.

[illegible] less shocking in its impact are Bertram Goodman's "Lynching" and Bernar Gussow's "Hysteria." The Goodman picture, an oil, shows a hanging. The mountaineers executing the Negro victim evidently are not satisfied with the rope they have brought and are applying. They are provided also with shotguns and burning torches.

"Hysteria" is a study of the mood of a lynching mob. With revolting frankness it depicts the faces of a group of men who are about to hang a Negro. A similar study is "This Is Her First Hanging," the original of Reginald Marsh's drawing printed some weeks ago in the New Yorker. The central figure in this picture is a moron mother lifting high a little girl who, finger in mouth, watches a burning at the stake over the heads of a throng.

Heywood Broun a Judge

Perhaps not the finest picture in the exhibition, but undoubtedly one of the strongest entries from the point of view of propaganda, is "I Passed Along This Way," by E. Sims Campbell, in which the figure of Christ, carrying the Cross, a hand covering the face, trudges up a hill beside a Negro who is being pulled up by a rope around his neck.

The exhibition, which includes forty-nine entries, has been prepared under the auspices of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Heywood Broun, Mrs. A. P. McMahon, Dr. Alain Locke and Alfred Barr are the judges.

At a preview this afternoon, Mrs. Pearl S. Buck made a brief address. The exhibit opens to the public tomorrow and will continue through March 2.

Is Too Slow," showing a negro being burned by a mob; an oil painting my Thomas H. Benton in which a negro was being hanged to a telephone pole, and a portrayal in black and white of a young girl being held above the heads of a mob by her mother so the child could see the lynching.

Invariably a negro was pictured as the victim of a mob. Treatment differed, but the general effect always was one of horror. The work was selected as to artistic merit and was said to be effective from that point of view.

Jacques Seligmann explained that he took over the show merely on its artistic merit.

SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS

FEB 8 1935

TO STOP LYNCHINGS

Since 1882 there have been 5068 lynching in the United States. The crime is no longe committed as frequently as it was a decad or two ago, but as long as it is permitte at all we do not escape the shameful blot There were 28 lynchings in 1933; last yea the number dropped to 16. There is mor than a suspicion that the drop was occasioned by the threat of the anti-lynching bill then before congress, for it would hold counties financially liable for mob violence within their own boundaries. While that measure was pending there were no lynchings. When it was evident that congress was not inclined to act they began again.

A courageous Tennessee sheriff showed recently how lynchings could be stopped without the necessity of such a law. He held his prisoner even at the cost of the lives of several members of the mob who were shot down when they attempted to storm the jail. But such instances are rare. Usually the mob encounters little resistance to its lawless purpose. Nine of the victims last year were taken from peace officers. Once a lynching has been accomplished, rarely if ever are the perpetrators brought to judgment, let alone punished.

A federal measure ending this virtual immunity to justice would put a powerful check on the mob spirit. Sociological studies have established a definite relation between ignorance and poverty and lynchings. The evil should be attacked at this source. Meanwhile the anti-lynching bill, once more before congress, should be enacted without further delay.

Greenville, S. C. Piedmont
February 13, 1935

TAKE 'HORROR' PICTURES DOWN

Works Showing Negroes Suffering Death Tortures Not To Be Shown In New York

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—A "gallery of horror" containing pictures, murals and statues of negroes suffering death tortures from mobs was dismantled today, ending an outburst of secret protests.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sponsored the exhibition, which was to have opened Saturday at the Jacques Seligmann galleries. An invitation opening was held last Friday and the exhibition was called one of the most macabre art shows ever arranged in New York.

Contemporary artists were represented. Included were a print by the late George Bellows, "The Law

Brooklyn, N. Y. Eagle

FEB 15 1935

Artists Call Attention to The Gentle Art of Lynching

Exhibit Canceled by Jacques Seligmann Gallery Finds a Home With Arthur U. Newton

By WINSTON BURDETT

A comprehensive show illustrating the art of lynching in all its phases will be put on view this afternoon at the Arthur U. Newton Galleries at 11 E. 57th St., Manhattan. The exhibit, which is being sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was originally scheduled to open at the Jacques Seligmann Galleries, but for reasons best known to the officials it was suddenly cancelled. Whether the move was made because of outside presure or out of consideration for those who still find lynching a useful amendment to the law or simply because the truth is hard to bear has not been disclosed. In any case a number of galleries offered space for the show after announcement of the cancellation and the Newton Galleries won the asignment.

The collection, which was seen in pre-view yesterday, ranges from George Bellows to Rollin Kirby and from Peggy Bacon to Orozco. It includes sentimental glorifications of the martyred Negro, symbolic analogies between the Negro and Christ, scenes of lustridden mobs at lynching parties and a number of cartoons. The pictures are particularly good when they satirize less the act of lynching than the state of mind which makes it possible—the state of mind which Rollin Kirby in his classic cartoon of Governor Rolph of California in the act of displaying two lynched figures sums up in the caption "California Points With Pride."

Governor Rolph, it will be recalled, gave official sanction to lynching as a civilized weapon by applauding the mass murder of two California criminals. Thereby he transformed an act of mob violence into one of administrative justice. He would probably agree with the title of George Bellows' contribution to the present show, "The Law Is Too Slow," as the distinction between law and anarchy was manifestly too fine for his perception. Among other things he entirely overlooked the fact that the next step would be for the lynchees or their kind to take advantage of his principles and turn on the lynchers.

Among the pictures which Mr. Newton displayed with particular pride were a lynching scene by Thomas Benton—the largest canvas in the collection and a typically dynamic Benton composition—John Steuart Curry's "The Fugitive," showing a Negro hiding in the woods from the pursuing hounds, and Reginald Marsh's "This Is Her First Lynching." The last is typical of the best in the exhibit in the line of satire. It shows a frightened and fascinated girl of about 8 hoisted up by her mother above the heads of the mob to get a better view of the gala proceedings.

Perhaps the most disappointing aspect of Mr. Newton's show is that the actual lynching scenes are the least successful. There are dramatic and striking compositions, but as propaganda they are rather innocuous. They are not nearly as gruesome as they should be, and do not compare for horror with any number of Goyas you might think of. The painters were more preoccupied with problems of space and coloring than they were with social issues. And quite naturally, as they had no idea when they painted their pictures, that they would be part of a show that would have the express purpose of acquainting the man in the street with the horrors of lynching.

Samuel J. Brown, for example, contributes an ingenious design of a lynching seen by an imaginary spectator from on high. The most prominent feature is the head of the victim; his body and the tree from which he is hung fall backward sharply foreshortened. A number of dots in the background give a nice effect of gaping onlookers. It is a decorative grotesque but not very violent, and preciosity is a little out of place in so urgent a subject.

At the opening this afternoon

Pearl Buck will deliver an introductory talk and Edwin Matthews, Negro singer, will entertain. The exhibit will remain here through March 2, and will thereafter be sent on tour.

From bed to verse has gone the National Roof Garden Theater, E. Houston St. and 2d Ave. Long noted as a burlesque house, a group headed by J. L. Smukler has taken over the place and renamed it the Ibsen Theater. They will open on Feb. 21 with "Ghosts." Other Ibsen plays in their repertory are "A Doll's House" and "The Master Builder."

Brooklyn film premieres today:

"The Gilded Lily," with Claudette Colbert, at the Paramount; "Under Pressure," at the Fox; "Shadow of Doubt," at Loew's Met., and "The Good Fairy" at the Albee.

New York World Telegram

FEB 18 1935

HER FIRST LYNCHING.

TO any who hold that art cannot be propaganda and still be true and even great art we recommend a visit to the Arthur U. Newton Galleries, 11 E. 57th St., where a distinguished exhibition of the art on lynching is now on view.

There are numbers or persons, perhaps, who might be inclined to steer away from such an exhibition as from a chamber of horrors. But here art and truth come in. A number of these paintings and drawings—by Bellows, Benton, Curry and the cartoonists and illustrators Kirby, Duffy, Fitzpatrick, Reginald Marsh—are on their merit as pure art worth a place in any museum or art gallery.

Such is their power and strange beauty of execution and idea that to many who see them it becomes tragic that museums and art galleries are so exclusively concerned with mere objective beauty and afraid of art which exposes injustice and brutality and human degradation—art which tells a moving story, stirring thought and feeling.

Unforgettable fear and pity is in the face of the beautiful little girl raised high so she can see in the hands of her frenzied mother, who amid a mob cries to another woman, "This is her first lynching."

Imperishable impression of dumb terror is in the face of the young Negro braced in a tree as a mob—dog led, afoot and on horseback—pass behind on the road in the moonlight, in the painting by John Steuart Curry, Kansan.

In these courageous artists with social zeal, combined with artistic genius, lie the finest immediate hope for art in America or the world.

New York Evening Post

FEB 18 1935

In the Wake of The News

—By Archer Winsten—

Art Goes Educational on Decorous East Fifty-seventh, Near Fifth

THE invitation originally read, "You are cordially invited to a private view of an Art Commentary on Lynching under the patronage of a committee of distinguished Americans at the Jacques Seligmann Galleries."

But fairly close to the last minute Mr. Seligmann began to think the subject matter might prove offensive to some one. There had been protests from unnamed sources. As you yourself will realize, it is one thing to deplore lynching, as who does not, and quite another to see it on the wall.

It is one thing to hear the familiar indignation and add your opinion to that of unanimity. Let us make a law about it. Or better, let them make a law about it. But it is another thing to look at the detail of a first class lynching. Can't we be spared the revolting details?

Never mind. Arthur U. Newton read of the homeless exhibition in the New York Times and he hastened to welcome it at 11 East Fifty-seventh Street, where his gallery was just ending an exhibition of Italian primitives . . . pink and blue and gold-leaf Virgin Marys and Christ Children.

The Exhibition

There are works by outstanding American artists and cartoonists, Peggy Bacon, Bellows, Benton, John Steuart Curry, Edmund Duffy, Daniel Fitzpatrick, Rollin Kirby, Reginald Marsh and Orozco.

Ten of the thirty-nine exhibitors are themselves Negroes. These include William Chase, young cartoonist of Harlem's Amsterdam News, and E. Simms Campbell, maker of humorous pictures for the New Yorker and Esquire. The latter's picture shows a noosed Negro being dragged along and by his side the dim figure of a Christ under the cross. It is called, "I Passed Along This Way."

Paul Cadmus, who painted "The Fleet's In" with considerable effect a year ago, has a picture here.

Noguchi's steel statue of a lynched figure hanging from a small gallows dominates one end of the room.

Orozco's picture of several figures hanging above the flames, their legs partly burned away, begins to touch the note of deep horror.

Allan Freelon, a Negro artist, is another who fails to pull his punch. He calls it, "Barbecue—American Style."

Harry Sternberg, the one picture of mutilation, cuts deepest. "Pass by quickly, nice people. Retain your fixed smile. This is not something that happened only once, somewhere, when a maniac got loose." It is called, "Southern Holiday."

A young unknown Negro artist submitted a much more violent treatment of the same incident. It was not accepted. There was, of course, a limit. He stood by Sternberg's picture, saying, "Well, what I drew happens." It may eventually be shown to a tough-minded John Reed Club audience.

A Speech Against It

Mrs. Pearl S. Buck made a speech, saying she would "always raise her voice against race feeling, against mad mob rule in any form." It was her opinion that the pictures could not be too terrible if they portrayed lynching horrors as they really are.

"Frankly," she said, "I have not looked at many of these pictures. I cannot bear them. And yet, if one of these pictures for one moment brings to any one a realization that behind every one of these pictures there is a reality—some one did so die at the hands of such a cruel horde—then we cannot spare these pictures. We must not let them escape into a false heaven of easy optimism and blind good cheer. We must show them there is a true optimism which determines not to rest until this wrong is righted."

The long, narrow room was crowded with distinguished and standing guests: Countee Cullen, the poet; Ruth Aley, the author's agent; Molly Picon, Second Avenue's perennial star of the Yiddish Theatre; several Spingarns; B. W. Huebsch, the publisher; Sheila Hibben, the author of a cook book; Inez Haynes Irwin, and, of course, Carl Van Vechten.

Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the organization which got up the show, was busy here and there.

Edward Matthews, the main Saint of "Four Saints in Three Acts," sang "Jericho" and "The Crucifixion."

Then every one began talking, just like a literary tea, and nobody paid much attention to the pictures on the walls.

A man was saying to another, "At the Pigeons-on-the-grass part I found myself going like this. I was hugging myself with delight. What did you say your name was?"

"Edward Matthews."

"Oh, yes. Well, if you ever come to Washington I hope you'll look me up."

The crowd thinned rapidly before the unrelenting pictures.

Owner of the Gallery

Soon Mr. Arthur U. Newton was left totting up a big day for an art gallery. He turned on the ozone machine—an aid to faulty ventilation—and the smell of ozone dominated.

He told of Mr. Seligmann coming in to see how the exhibition went. He said, "I thought the exhibition deserved to be shown. I feel it has real artistic merit, showing how many artists tackle the same problem. And then, too, it's still the crucifixion—the same problem so often treated by the old masters.

"Late this afternoon I had an inspiration about 3 o'clock. I remembered I had a Van Dyck lynching—'The Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian.' It parallels these absolutely. I hung it in the other room. Perhaps you'd like to see it."

In a rear room bathed in gentle light was the huge Van Dyck, valued at $25,000 and painted three hundred years ago. The colors were rich and gentle, the brown of age mellowed its oils. The Saint looked inquiringly at you. There was no blood, no fire, no hemp at the neck. No agony.

"You see," said Mr. Newton, "Van Dyck painted himself as the Saint. He's looking straight in the mirror."

DAYTON, O.
NEWS

FEB 8 1935

To Stop Lynchings

Since 1882 there have been 5068 lynchings in the United States. The crime no longer is committed as frequently as it was a decade or two ago, but as long as it is permitted at all we do not escape the shameful blot. There were 28 lynchings in 1933; last year the number dropped to 16. There is more than a suspicion that the drop was occasioned by the threat of the anti-lynching bill then before congress, for it would hold counties financially liable for mob violence within their own boundaries. While that measure was pending there were no lynchings. When it was evident that congress was not inclined to act they began again.

A courageous Tennessee sheriff showed recently how lynchings could be stopped without the necessity of such a law. He held his prisoner even at the cost of the lives of several members of the mob who were shot down when they attempted to storm the jail. But such instances are rare. Usually the mob encounters little resistance to its lawless purpose. Nine of the victims last year were taken from peace officers. Once a lynching has been accomplished, rarely if ever are the perpetrators brought to judgment, let alone punished.

A federal measure ending this virtual immunity to justice would put a powerful check on the mob spirit. Sociological studies have established a definite relation between ignorance and poverty and lynchings. The evil should be attacked at this source. Meanwhile the anti-lynching bill, once more before congress, should be enacted without further delay.

Lynchings - 1935
Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5205

Lynchings in the Land of the Free

I SHALL not bear my body proudly, now
That other bodies hang from gallows-trees.
The sun turns dark at mid-day, as of old,
And what were hills become grim Calvaries.

Was it for this He ordained brotherhood?
How long shall men partake the curse of Cain?
Have mercy, Lord, we know not what we do!
Speak pardon from each tree of cruel pain.

ELINOR LENNEN.

[redacted]
NEWS
MAR 20 1935

SCHOOL YARD LYNCHING

Mississippi's school yards have witnessed none too much progress during the political regimes of en like Theodore Bilbo, now a Senator from the Magnolia State. But it is retrogression indeed for education in Mississippi when a mob uses one of the State's school yards for a lynching.

What was the talk among the children as they came to school the next morning? And what was the talk among them as they gathered, first at a distance, for death is awing, and then closer about the tree from which the lynchers, 50 men of the neighborhood, had visited mob law vengeance upon a Negro suspected of killing a white man? And what did the teacher tell them if they had a lesson in civics the morning after the mass murder?

Perhaps the Costigan bill will receive now the legislative attention which President Roosevelt asked of Congress in his annual message.

HARRISBURG, ILL.
REGISTER

APR 6 1935

VERY LITTLE IS NEEDED TO ROUSE MOB SPIRIT

The human race has to cope with many enemies in its long struggle to work out a scheme for peaceful living, but the greatest enemy of all is the mob.

For a perfect picture of the way the mob acts, consider the riot that swept up and down the streets of New York's Harlem the other day.

A colored boy tried to pinch a 10-cent knife from a store counter. A floor walker collared him and the boy, naturally enough, set up a holler. An excitable woman saw and heard just enough to touch off her motor reactions, and she ran out into the street yelling that the boy had been killed.

Up and down the streets went the cry. Out of poolrooms, lunchrooms, and workshops came angry men, milling in the streets yelling, looking for someone to fight, afraid and suspicious and angry. A crowd of a thousand men and women swept into the store, turning things upside down, breaking things, yelling, hitting, fighting.

Police reserves came, by the hundreds. There were dozens of fights. Scores of men were cut, beaten, or slugged. More than a hundred were arrested. Thousands of dollars' damage was done to property.

And the juvenile knife stealer who unintentionally started it all managed to jerk away from his captors during the melee and vanished, utterly unharmed.

You could search the world over without finding a better example than this of the blind, panicky insanity of the mob spirit. Here was a riot of major proportions, an ugly welter of fights that spread all across a populous section of a great city—and all for what?

Not one of the rioters knew. They could not possibly have hoped to know. It started literally, from nothing at all; and because men and women were jittery, and gave way to the combined emotions of anger and fear, there was merry Ned to pay.

Now you don't need to think very hard to draw the needed moral from all this. The mob spirit that can seize a few thousand people in one city is the same spirit that can and frequently does seize whole nations, when hatred and panic get together.

It sweeps dictators into power, causes mass executions, concentration camps, slugings and clubbings; it fills the air with bombing planes and the fields with infantrymen and sets cruisers loose on the sea lanes; it inflicts more misery and destruction on the earth than a generation can repair.

And all, as in Harlem—for what?

DYERSBURG, TENN.
STATE GAZETTE

APR 3 1935

NOTHING TO BE GAINED

Letting the law take its course often has been neglected in southern states, and other sections of the country as well for that matter, but it has been recognized more often than not and the decrease in mobs and lynchings has shown a growing consideration.

Now comes a course, if persistently pursued, that may result in tearing down what has been accomplished. The supreme court has reversed the decision of the lower court in the conviction of two of the negroes in the Scootsboro case because no negroes served on the juries that tried them.

The state of Alabama announces that it will try the negroes again and most likely after its own custom of having only white men on the jury. Certainly the supreme court, if the case reaches it again, will follow its previous ruling.

Such insistence probably in the end will find fewer cases left to the courts in the future and both the white and negro races will suffer as a result. The public is not likely to favor letting the law take its course when that course is not approved of and as the outcome an increase in the mob blemishes on states may climb.

The earlier now that the Scottsboro cases are brought to an end, the better it will be for all concerned in the future. For the doubt that was manifest in the case it has been carried on far too long and nothing can be gained that continues to fan the frames of resentment.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

MAR 26 1935

THE ANTI-LYNCH LAW

FREDERICK VANNUYS, senior United States Senator from Indiana, deserves the praise of every thinking American for his determined efforts in behalf of the Federal Anti-Lynching Bill.

Senator VanNuys has forced before the upper House of Congress his law to do away with the appalling number of lynchings which take place in the United States every year. Senator VanNuys is putting every ounce of power he can muster behind the measure.

He pointed out to the Senate Judiciary Committee the simple fact that last year when the measure was pending in the Senate, there were no lynchings during that period.

Senator VanNuys is convinced that mob rule can exist only when officers of the law lend tacit encouragement and his law would hold responsible the men in charge of the prisoner when a lynching occurs.

There is little doubt but that with the Federal Anti-Lynch law on the books, the number of lynchings in the United States would decrease to almost none.

It is high time that peace officers learned that they can not shut their eyes to the law and cater to the mob.

PORTSMOUTH, VA.
STAR

MAR 30 1935

MOB SPIRIT DANGERS

The human race has to cope with many enemies in its long struggle to work out a scheme for peaceful living, but the greatest enemy of all is the mob.

For a perfect picture of the way the mob acts, consider the riot that swept up and down the streets of New York's Harlem colored district the other day.

A colored boy tried to pinch a 10-cent knife from a store counter. A floor-walker collared him and the boy, naturally enough, set up a holler. An excitable woman saw and heard just enough to touch off her motor reactions, and she ran out into the street yelling that the boy had been killed.

Up and down the streets went the cry. Out of poolrooms, lunchrooms, and workshops came angry colored men, milling in the streets, yelling, looking for someone to fight, afraid, suspicious, and angry. A crowd of a thousand men and women swept into the store, turning things upside down, breaking things, yelling, hitting, fighting.

Police reserves came, by the hundreds. There were dozens of fights. Scores of men were cut, beaten, or slugged. More than a hundred were arrested. Thousands of dollars' damage was done to property.

And the juvenile knife-stealer who unintentionally started it all managed to jerk away from his captors during the melee and vanished, utterly unharmed.

You could search the world over without finding a better example than this of the blind, panicky insanity of the mob spirit. Here was a riot of major proportions, an ugly welter of fights that spread all across a populous section of a great city—and all for what?

Not one of the rioters knew. They could not possibly have hoped to know. It started, literally, from nothing at all; and because men and women were jittery, and gave way to the combined emotions of anger and fear, there was merry Ned to pay.

Now you dont need to think very hard to draw the needed moral from all this. The mob spirit that can seize a few thousand people in one city is the same spirit that can and frequently does seize whole nations, when hatred and panic get together.

It sweeps dictators into power, causes mass executions, concentration camps, sluggings and clubbings; it fills the air with bombing planes and the fields with infantrymen and 53 cruisers loose on the sea lanes; it inflicts more misery and destruction on the earth than a generation can repair.

And all, as in Harlem—for what?

CHILLICOTHE, MO.
CONSTITUTION

MAR 28 1935

SCHOOL YARD LYNCHING

Mississippi's school yards have witnessed none too much progress during the political regimes of men like Theodore Bilbo, now a senator from the Magnolia state. But it is retrogression indeed for education in Mississippi when a mob uses one of the state's school yards for a lynching.

What was the talk among the children as they came to school the next morning? And what was the talk among them as they gathered, first at a distance, for death is awing, and then closer about the tree from which the lynchers, 50 men of the neighborhood, had visited mob law vengeance upon a Negro suspected of killing a white man? And what did the teacher tell them if they had a lesson in civics the morning after the mass murder?

Perhaps the Costigan bill will receive now the legislative attention which President Roosevelt asked of congress in his annual message.

OTTAWA, ILL.
REPUBLICAN TIMES

APR 25 1935

LYNCHING'S WORST FEATURE.

[Greensboro (N. C.) Daily News.]

One bad feature of lynching—which it must be admitted pretty generally in the south picks on the Negro—is the sort of defense of the practice that is offered by members of the United States congress from South Carolina. Indeed, we are inclined to think this is the worst feature, because, believe it or not, there are scattered throughout the entire south a lot of mush-brained electors who seem to feel the same way about lynching as do Coley Blease and Cotton Ed Smith.

It was Senator Smith's turn this year to rise in the national legislative halls to oppose the anti-lynching bill. Mr. Blease is not at Washington this term, or he would have "to-helled-with-the-Constitution" long before Cotton Ed Smith got around to it.

It is the argument of such old-fashioned southern chivalves as Smith and Blease that there is one crime for which lynching is the only fit punishment. When a white woman has been insulted by a 'black brute," all that should be asked of her is to point her finger. (By the way, a presumably intelligent woman pointed her finger at a white man t'other day over at Kannapolis, but he proved he was at prayer-meeting at the time of the alleged assault.)

Which might be all right if the remedy for rape were simply that of hanging, shooting or burning the first convenient victim. We have never been able to believe it is. In the first place there is danger of mistakes—we have heard of rapists' victims making some mistakes; we have known mobs which did.

Passage of a federal anti-lynching law is not a pet project of ours—we haven't been able to make up our mind to vote for the federal child labor amendment as yet—but we are glad Cotton Ed didn't happen along at Scottsboro when the whole covey of Negro hoboes was arrested. Doubtless he'd have helped string them all up.

And then when one of the women in the case sought to recall her testimony as to the outrage, he'd have been out on a limb his ownself.

Honestly, we, who have never lived or moved and had being for appreciable time anywhere else save right down here in the midst of those who believe in the high hand as the savior of womanhood, have never met more than a half a dozen southern gentlemen to whom we would delegate the right to lynch.

None of these, we might add, was, had been, or expected to be right soon a member of congress.

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 13 1935

BISHOP ASKS LAW AGAINST LYNCHING

Chicago Prelate Speaks to A. M. E. Zion Group

Declaring that the American Negro is "still in a state of quasi slavery" Bishop W. J. Wallis of Chicago, Ill., in his annual address before the New England A. M. E. Zion Church Conference at the Belmont Street Church yesterday demanded that Congress pass a law against lynching.

"A country that can track down and find kidnapers can also track down and discover lynchers," he said. "Congress, which made kidnaping a federal offense, can make lynching a penitentiary offense."

The conference voted unanimously his return for another term. He has been bishop for seven years.

The program last night brought greetings by Mayor John C. Mahoney and Rev. Dr. George E. Heath of Wesley M. E. Church on behalf of the city and its churches.

J. Luther M. Stovall, J. Alexander W. Bosley, Mrs. Margaret Kennedy, Mrs. Bertha McWhorter, Robert Brevard, Jr., and Miss Mammie Lennon, were other speakers. Rev. E. H. Brown of Norwich, Conn., preached the sermon.

The convention continues with business sessions this morning. It will end Sunday afternoon.

Lynchings—1935

White Press, Northern

5286

Discussions

'WE DON'T LYNCH'

MASS. HOUSE RESOLVE CONDEMNING NAZI PERSECUTIONS BRINGS HEATED RETORT.

BERLIN—"It is a case of seeing a splinter in a neighbor's eye and no beam in your own. We do not hang Jews who attack women; we do not lynch men of another race; we do not indulge in shameful excesses such as characterize the strikes in the United States.

"To us, the Boston strictures appear clownish and not motivated by a sense of moral responsibility, but simply hollow bumptiousness.'

These were some of the verbal shafts which the Nazi newspaper ANGRIFF shot back in resenting the Massachusetts House of Representatives' resolution condemning the persecutions of Jews in Germany. They appeared in a front page editorial under the caption "Hypocritical Impudence".

The resolution which aroused the ire of the Nazis was adopted last Monday by the Massachusetts House without debate and on a voice vote. It had been offered by Representative Thomas Dorgan of Boston and Representative Albert E. Morris of Everett, protesting against religious persecution in Germany.

The resolution reads in part: "Whereas: It is reliably reported that certain inhabitants of Germany are being persecuted on account of their religious faith and nationality to an extent abhorrent to modern civilized Nations, therefore be it.

"Resolved: That the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts affirms its conviction and belief that freedom and equality of mankind, regardless of race, creed or color, is indispensable to the maintenance of any modern civilization, and views with alarm any violation of these sacred principles."

The Guardian Boston 8-14-35

Streicher Reminds America Of Lynching Disgrace

IT will do Americans no harm to read with care parts of the speech which Julius Streicher, leader of the fanatical anti-semitic wing of the nazis, delivered in Berlin on August 15. More than fifty thousand Berliners are reported to have listened while Streicher spoke—a wild, illogical harangue of which large parts, according to the correspondents, were unfit for circulation through the mails. Doubtless the well-drilled nazi press has by this time made the essential parts of the speech familiar to all the rest of Germany. And one point in it, at least, may be counted on to circle the globe. That was the juncture at which Streicher, turning on American critics of nazi offenses against Jews, shouted: "In America they get excited when in Berlin or anywhere else anything happens to Jews that is not pleasant. Whose business is it when we pass laws that will bring us quiet? Whose business is it when we clean our own houses? . . . We read almost every week of the lynching of an American Negro who wronged a white woman, but we merely say, 'It serves them right,' and do not worry about it. Still, as far as I know, no Jew has been beaten to death in Germany." Without bothering with the statistics in this declaration, which are open to argument both as they apply to America and to Germany, honesty compels a facing of the charge. Such a tu quoque as this has been inevitable from the start of American criticism of nazi brutality, and will inevitably follow any expression of criticism in this country directed against savagery abroad. Of course, there is some difference between the outburst of a lynching mob, and the deliberate fomentation of race hatred as a government policy, to be whipped up and extended by all the devices at the command of a government. Nevertheless, even a Streicher should remind Americans that they have no moral right to demand race justice of the nazis without demanding it—and working for it—at home.

The Christian Century 8-28-35

Is This America?

THE tar-and-feather party in Santa Rosa, California, in the course of which 300 vigilantes wrecked the house of a citizen and his family with tear-gas bombs in order to make him surrender, was supposed to be the spontaneous outburst of farmers against Communist agitators. There is no doubt that farmers took part in the affair, but a correspondent whom we trust writes that the mob was led and backed by bankers, a head of the federal reemployment bureau, motor cops, a member of the state legislature, American legionnaires, petty politicians, and members of the chamber of commerce; and a suit brought by one of the victims of the raid named among others the mayor of the town, who is a banker. The crime of the radicals was organizing strikes among crop-pickers. "Ninety per cent of the farmers in this community," writes our informant," are bankrupt and their crops are selling below the cost of harvest. Practically every rancher must borrow money from the bank or packer to meet his harvest payroll. The mob could count with certainty upon the approval of the local press, the protection of the police, and the inertia of the people. The raids took place under the nose of the sheriff, and it is rumored that the tear-gas bombs came out of his office." We quote briefly from an eyewitness's account of the raid published in the Oakland Tribune. The Nation

Green [one of the victims] was held until the occupants of the cars could get out and hide behind trees. . . . I was told that it was the home of Sol Nitzberg, one of the most active of the "reds." Then Green was told to go up to the door. . . . Green, instead of calling Nitzberg out, disappeared inside. There was a wild yell of rage from some of the waiting vigilantes, and a rush toward the house. Then I heard a window go up, and then came the blast of a shotgun. . . . "I'm shooting to kill!" Nitzberg yelled from time to time. He must have fired fifteen or twenty shots when I heard a commotion. Some of the vigilantes had gone away and got some tear-gas bombs. Now they crept as close to the house as they dared to go . . . and then someone tossed a bomb. . . . There was another yell from Nitzberg, and then another shot. Then there came the tinkling of glass from the other side of the house, where another bomb had gone through. One or two bombs hit the side of the house. And then came a cry from inside, in a woman's or a child's voice. The firing ceased. I heard the door open and Nitzberg and his wife and children and Green came out wiping their eyes. One of the children was crying. Several men closed in on them, grabbed Nitzberg and Green, and dragged them down to the road where the cars waited.

The attitude of the local press is clearly revealed by this quotation from the Santa Rosa Press Democrat: "Daybreak revealed no deaths from the wild orgy of mob action—but plenty of results that will herald to the world what Sonoma County means to do to Communist agitators." In Santa Rosa, on the night of August 21, 1935, a mob of vigilantes, with the connivance of officials sworn to support the Constitution, overthrew established government, instituted a reign of terror, and violated the most fundamental rights of citizens. Yet the attorney general of the state has refused to take action and the governor has barely noticed the affair. Is California a part of the United States or isn't it?

Sept 7th 1935 New York Call

Vol 128, No. 36622

PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

OCT 2 1935

WHOSE CONSTITUTION?

NEWS dispatches from Georgia, reporting that a Negro, arrested for drunkenness, was taken away from a sheriff and lynched by a mob, call to mind that Georgia is ruled by a governor who has gone much about the country in recent months telling the people how highly he respects the Constitution. Which also calls to mind that the Constitution, among other things, guarantees that no man shall be deprived of life without due process of law.

It will be interesting to note whether Governor Talmadge will be as vehement in deeds, as he is in words, in defense of the Constitution.

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

OCT 4 1935

Mirror of Opinion

The Jury Wasn't Sure

ELLWOOD HIGGINBOTHAM, the Mississippi Negro, who has been lynched within the shadow of the State University, was charged with killing a white man who had gone to his home "to have a talk with him." . . . The Negro had been arrested, had been tried before a white jury, with a white judge presiding and a white prosecutor representing the State of Mississippi—and yet the jury had so much difficulty reaching a verdict that it had already spent some 24 hours considering the evidence.

This is the vital fact because everyone knows that unless the jury had been in serious doubt as to its verdict—in brief, was gagging over the State's contention of cold-blooded murder—it would have convicted Higginbotham in a much shorter time. . . . When a jury reflects long, a reasonable question is raised as to whether the evidence against the prisoner was impressive.

Lynching the prisoner would have been indefensible if he had been as guilty as a Dillinger. But the solemn question raised by this latest example of the traditional Mississippi savagery is whether the mob killed a man whom the State's justice would have treated more leniently. In the circumstances it seems easily probable.—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

New York Evening Post

OCT 5 1935

ROBINSON PROBES C.C.N.Y. TEXTBOOK

Starts Inquiry Into Charges Lynching Is Condoned by Author

The City College student council is very concerned about the school's freshmen.

So concerned, in fact, that members of the council have petitioned President Frederick B. Robinson, asking him to remove from the curriculum an English textbook which they claim has a "degrading" influence on the "youngsters."

The council claims the book, titled "Models and Values — A Course of Reading for Students," treats lynching and hanging in a favorable light. It asserts that a passage in the book condones forms of punishment "abhorrent to our society."

Probe Is Promised

The book, used in first-year English classes, is edited by Walter C. Phillips, William G. Canoe and Frank P. Byers. It is published by the Oxford University Press.

The passage in particular which aroused the indignation of the students concerned a speech of witness to an "abhorrent death." The observer said his "tears were dried" because the person to be executed committed a similar crime himself.

President Robinson told the council that he would "look into the matter at once." He promised that he would inform the students of the results of his investigation.

PITTSBURG, KANS.
HEADLIGHT

NOV 7 1935

A TEST FOR TENNESSEE.

A test of the sincerity of Tennessee public officials and the general public in the matter of lynch law is about to be made.

A white woman accused a Negro of slapping her. She swore out a warrant for his arrest on a charge of assault and battery. The Negro was arrested. Two officers were taking him to jail. In the busiest section of a small town, five white men stopped the party and took charge of the prisoner. It was said they used the threat of guns on the officers. The mob of five took the Negro into the country four miles where they murdered him and threw his body into a thicket. Officers who gave chase as soon as they could were too late.

The five men who comprised the "mob" appeared at the jail and surrendered.

So there is nothing to prove on the lynchers. They gave themselves up and the facts are plain. Will Tennessee prosecute them for murder? Will the public demand vigorous prosecution if the officials appear to be backward? Or will this lynching take its place alongside most other lynchings so far as punishment of the mob members is concerned? In almost every instance where any attempts have been made to penalize mob murderers, the prosecution is not able to prove that accused persons have been members of the mob. The question rests on identification and juries are required to decide, if the cases ever proceed as far as juries, whether the accused were in the mobs. It is easy to show that there was a murder by lynching and that a number of persons committed the murder. Declaring officially that certain persons were members of the mob, however, is something else. But in this case, there is no dispute as to identity.

The offense the murdered Negro committed, allowing that he did commit it, was only a misdemeanor. The comparative triviality of the charge adds to the seriousness of the crime the mob committed and to the necessity for prompt and proper prosecution by Tennessee.

MADISON, WIS.
STATE JOURNAL

NOV 8 1935

South Must Change

BAXTER Bell, a Negro, slapped a white woman in White Bluff, Tennessee and was lynched by a mob for the offense.

Five of the leaders of the mob that took Bell from the sheriff of Cheatham county and after running him out in the country shot him have surrendered to the authorities. They consider they meted righteous justice to the Negro because of his alleged insult to the white race.

The charge of murder has been lodged against the men under arrest. The good name of Tennessee should compel a vigorous prosecution of the men who thought so lightly of human life than they would kill a man because he slapped a woman.

Lynchings under any circumstance are a deplorable blot on this country. The killing of a man, however, for an offense as trivial as assault and battery, the charge filed against the Negro, is an outrage that even the citizens of the southern states with their prejudices against the colored people and their desire to keep them in subjection cannot overlook.

Lynchings of persons charged with revolting crimes are not defensable but the killing of a man simply because in the heat of anger he committed a minor assault is beyond comprehension.

The south will never win the respect of the world through citizens taking the law into their own hands and punishing Negroes without even the semblance of a trial.

Such methods are merely bull-dozing attacks on the colored race in an attempt to keep it a peasant population.

Southern sentiment on the race question cannot but be viewed as unfair in the north as long as such incidents occur as the White Bluff lynching.

How far the prejudice is being carried can be seen when it is stated that Judge James E. Horton was defeated for reelection as circuit judge in Alabama because he followed the conclusions of a United States supreme court decision in the same case and ordered a new trial for Negroes whom the citizens of that locality are determined shall pay the death penalty for an alleged criminal assault on two white women despite two decisions of the United States supreme court, which although based on technical grounds, clearly indicate that the federal judges do not believe the Negroes guilty of the crime with which they are charged.

Judge Horton is now bein mentioned for an appointment to the federal circuit bench. It is to be hoped he will be appointed to the place as he has shown he is willing to accord justice even at a great cost to himself.

The Negro question will never be settled by lynching members of the colored race or defeating judges who dare interpret the law with justice regardless of race or color.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

NOV 9 1935

Justice in the South

To the Editor:

A news item I read in The Record of November 5 reports the lynching of a colored man in Tennessee for slapping a white woman's face.

Why should any man, white or black, in Tennessee or any other place, be lynched because he slapped someone? The persons who do the lynching probably do things behind closed doors that would make lynching too good for them.

After seeing "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang" and reading about all the lynchings, also an article about a man sentenced to life imprisonment because he stole 85 cents, I guess I'm skeptical about there being any justice in the South.

At least a person should have the formalities of a trial when he commits a wrong, even if it doesn't mean anything.

JUSTICE.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Northern.

5207

COLUMBIA, MO.
MISSOURIAN
MAR 1 1935

Killing Old Judge Lynch

LYNCHING is a horrible thing, because it demonstrates so clearly that we have not yet attained the degree of civilization which we so often profess. The usual means of controlling lynching through the states and their law enforcement agencies, have failed utterly. To stop this evil the federal government must take matters in its own hands.

To this end the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill is before the Senate Judiciary Committee. This bill provides federal punishment for lynchers. The proponents of the bill do not intend to build up the federal law enforcing agencies at the expense of the state. The bill provides that only in case local and state law enforcement break down completely in the matter of apprehending lynchers shall the federal government take a hand.

Incorporated in the bill is a proviso, giving local authorities ample opportunity to act in the matter. Then, if within thirty days, there has been no noticeable effort to clear up the matter locally, the federal government can step in and bring the matter into the jurisdiction of a federal court. This court will conduct hearings on the basis of the laws of the state concerned.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is not a stranger to Congress. It was reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee at the last session and had the support of the president. However it was never voted upon by either house.

There have been other lynching measures before Congress. The Dyer anti-lynching act of 1922 passed the House but was opposed by a group of southern senators who revived the rather frayed argument about too much federal intervention in a problem of the states.

The pending legislation is likely to be killed by opposition on similar grounds or from general indifference on the part of Congress. Certainly there is less of a popular demand for such action at the present time than there was a year ago, when the nation was shocked by the brutal mobbing of two kidnapers in California, a Negro at St. Joseph, a Negro in Maryland and three Negroes in Alabama. All of these occurred within a period of a few weeks. All were in widely separated sections of the country. Thus there was every opportunity to crystallize public opinion in favor of federal intervention in lynching cases.

The need of such a law is apparent. The utter breakdown of law-enforcing agencies in communities where racial feeling is acute stands as an eloquent argument for unprejudiced outside justice.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y.
UNION
FEB 23 1935

Senate Session At Vassar Overflowed By 'Lobbyists

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Feb. 22—Delegates from 25 colleges representing thirty states assembled today at Vassar College for a mock session of the Senate to discuss unemployment insurance and anti-lynching legislation and ratification of membership in the League of Nations. Vassar students impersonating lobbyists, some representing the American Federation of Labor, some the Communist party, some the United States Chamber of Commerce and some the American Legion.

The speaker at the session held tonight was Dr. W. Stull Holt, of Johns Hopkins University, who spoke on the foreign relations of the United States.

"The framers of the Constitution did not anticipate two factors which trously affected and sometimes disasterously affected the conduct of American foreign relations," Dr. Stol said. "There are, first, the contest between the Senate and the President over the treaty making power, and secondly partisan politics. Since the administration of George Washington the Senate in acting on treaties has repeatedly paid less attention to the merits of the particular foreign policy involved, than to its continual struggle with the President for control over foreign policy or to the chance of political profit by defeating the President's policy. This was clearly the case in the Senate's action on the Versailles Treaty."

After Dr. Holt had spoken the Finance Committee took up unemployment insurance; the Judiciary Committee, anti-lynching legislation, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the question of joining the League of Nations. The committees will continue their work tomorrow morning and the Senate will assemble for the first reading of bills. In the afternoon there will be a final session for the enactment of legislation.

There was a dinner for the delegates tonight at which Warden Eleanor C. Dodge pronounced a benediction in the style of Rev. Z. T. Phillips, Senate Chaplain. She also delivered an address of welcome.

"This model Senate," she said, "is entirely within the philosophy of the Vassar faculty. We believe this and similar activities will provide students with a more practical approach to an understanding of our political government and will enable them to return to their communities upon graduation to take an active part in the conduct of government."

A dormitory has been turned over to the visitors for the week end, where they are being chaperoned by Dr. Henry Noble MacCracken, president of the college, and Professor Charles Gordon Post, Jr., of the Vassar faculty.

CINCINNATI, O.
POST
MAR 14 1935

DISEASE AND REMEDY

ON Tuesday a Mississippi mob crossed the Tennessee line, captured Ab Young, a Negro accused of fatally shooting a white laborer, placed him in a truck and drove into a school yard. There they tied a rope around his neck, fastened the rope to a tree and drove the truck from under the praying victim.

This was the third lynching since Jan. 1, the other two being in Louisiana, a state that Senator Long says knows how to prevent such crimes without help from the federal government. It is the second interstate lynching within a year, the other being the unspeakably savage killing of Claude Neal in Florida last October. It is the 96th lynching in the past five years.

The lynch evil is a cankerous social disease. Congress has a remedy, if not a cure. It is the anti-lynching bill, making such mob murders federal offenses and holding counties financially liable for them.

On Tuesday the Senate Judiciary Committee put this measure squarely up to the Senate membership by voting unanimously to report it. Its authors, Senators Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, are determined to reach a vote early in the session to prevent a filibuster. Obstructive tactics by southern senators last session killed this same measure. By the same method the Dyer anti-lynching bill was killed in the Senate in 1920, after it had passed the House by a two to one vote.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is backed by organizations with membership of more than 40,000,000 citizens. President Roosevelt supported it by inference when he said in his message to Congress: "Crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security."

The humble graves of more than 5000 lynch mob victims, killed in the past 50 years testify that local communities are not coping with this evil. A federal law will not cure the disease outright, but it will remedy it. Southern senators will have much to answer for if they kill this measure again.

ONEONTA, N. Y.
STAR

MAR 9 1935

An Increase in Lynching

In spite of a reduction in lynchings during 1934 as compared with 1933, the number last year is almost double that for 1932, which set a new low record for the 12 years during which careful records have been kept by the Federal Council of Churches.

In 1934 40 states were free of lynchings, the 15 occurring during the year being in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas. A large number of lynchings have been prevented by determined officers of the law, while in other cases forces of the state have been unable to cope with a determined large mob. There still remain many states, however, where the possibility of lynching is strong and where reasonable precautions are not taken, indicating a failure on the part of law abiding citizens to provide suitable protection for those in the custody of the state.

No excuse can be advanced for mob rule, regardless of how henious a crime may be, but it is a fact that such an unsatisfactory showing during the year just past may be attributed to the high feeling aroused by the brutal, inhuman, and revolting crimes that this period saw. The savagery of the mobs as indicated in the torturing of their victims serves to bear out this explanation.

The race relations department of the Council of Churches in announcing the honor roll of states free of lynching during 1934 shows that Kentucky and Florida lost places which they gained during 1933, and that California, Maryland, Missouri, North Carolina and South Carolina won places on the roll although they had not been included for 1933. During the past 10 years 17 states have been on the lynching honor roll and then off, indicating the persistence of the evil in some states.

Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont have no recorded lynchings, Maine and New Jersey have had none since 1866, and New York has had 12 years without a lynching.

This was the third lynching since January 1, the other two being in Louisiana, a state that Sen. Long says knows how to prevent such crimes without help from the Federal Government. It is the second interstate lynching within a year the other being the unspeakably savage killing of Claude Neal in Florida last October. It is the 96th lynching in the past five years.

The lynch evil is a cankerous social disease. Congress has a remedy, if not a cure. It is the anti-lynching bill, making such mob murders Federal offenses and holding counties financially liable for them.

On Tuesday the Senate Judiciary Committee put this measure squarely up to the Senate membership by reporting it unanimously. Its authors, Sens. Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, are determined to reach a vote early in the session to prevent a filibuster. Obstructive tactics by southern senators last session killed this same measure. By the same method the Dyer anti-lynching bill was killed in the Senate in 1920, after it had passed the House by a two-to-one vote.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is backed by organizations with membership of more than 40,000,000 citizens. President Roosevelt supported it by inference when he said in his message to Congress: "Crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security."

The humble graves of more than 5000 lynch mob victims, killed in the past 50 years, testify that local communities are not coping with this evil. A Federal law will not cure the disease outright, but it will remedy it. Southern senators will have much to answer for if they kill this measure again.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

MAR 14 1935

DISEASE AND REMEDY.

ON TUESDAY a Mississippi mob crossed the Tennessee line, captured Ab Young, a Negro accused of fatally shooting a white laborer, placed him in a truck and drove into a school yard. There they tied a rope around his neck, fastened the rope to a tree and drove the truck from under the praying victim.

Sumter, S. C., Item
March 27, 1935

VERY LITTLE IS NEEDED TO ROUSE MOB SPIRIT

The human race has to cope with many enemies in its long struggle to work out a scheme for peaceful living, but the greatest enemy of all is the mob.

For a perfect picture of the way the mob acts, consider the riot that swept up and down the streets of New York's Harlem the other day.

A colored boy tried to pinch a 10-cent knife from a store counter. A floor-walker collared him and the boy, naturally enough, set up a holler. An excitable woman saw and heard just enough to touch off her motor reactions, and she ran out into the street yelling that the boy had been killed.

Up and down the streets went the cry. Out of poolrooms, lunchrooms, and workshops came angry men, milling in the streets, yelling, looking for someone to fight, afraid, suspicious, and angry. A crowd of a thousand men and women swept into the store, turning things upside down, breaking things, yelling, hitting, fighting.

Police reserves came, by the hundreds. There were dozens of fights. Scores of men were cut, beaten, or slugged. More than a hundred were arrested. Thousands of dollars' damage was done to property.

And the juvenile knife-stealer who unintentionally started it all managed to jerk away from his captors during the melee and vanished, utterly unharmed.

You could search the world over without finding a better example than this of the blind, panicky insanity of the mob spirit. Here was a riot of major proportions, an ugly welter of fights that spread all across a populous section of a great city—and all for what?

Not one of the rioters knew. They could not possibly have hoped to know. It started, literally, from nothing at all; and because men and women were jittery, and gave way to the combined emotions of anger and fear, there was merry Hell to pay.

Now you don't need to think very hard to draw the needed moral from all this. The mob spirit that can seize a few thousand people in one city is the same spirit that can and frequently does seize whole nations, when hatred and panic get together.

It sweeps dictators into power, causes mass executions, concentration camps, slugging and clubbings; it fills the air with bombing planes and the fields with infantrymen and sets cruisers loose on the sea lanes; it inflicts more misery and destruction on the earth than a generation can repair.

And all as in Harlem—for what?

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

APR 25 1935

He Calls Attention of Sen. Smith to a Couple of Lynchings

Editor, The News:

ON FEB. 24, a crowd of about 25 men, without any opposition, broke into the local jail at Marinquin, La., seized Anderson Ward, a Negro, and hanged him. Ward had previously been arrested for striking Dennis Brudnoe, a white man who had attempted to shoot him in a quarrel. Town officials returned a verdict of killing "by parties unknown."

Ab Young, another Negro, was hanged by a mob of 50 white men near Slayden, Miss., on March 12. Young, according to reports by officials, while drunk on March 9, mortally wounded Hardie Mackie, a white man. According to other sources, the quarrel was provoked with the intent of putting an end to the activity of Young, an organizer for the sharecroppers. Altho the local authorities had notice in advance, they did nothing to prevent the lynching. (These two cases are quoted from the March issue of the International Juridical Association Monthly Bulletin, 100 Fifth-av N. Y., P. 2.)

I call these two cases to the particular attention of Sen. Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina, for his comment, in view of his often repeated statement that lynchings in the South are "to protect the virtue of southern women." In these two cases, there are no women mentioned.

The opinion of many investigators is that the underlying motive for Negro lynching is economic. This fact is revealed in the case of Ab Young of Slayden, Miss., whose real crime was trying to organize the oppressed sharecroppers.

JUSTICE.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

5209

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
TIMES
NOV 18 1935

AFTER THE LYNCHING

Last week in Texas two negro boys, one aged fifteen, the other sixteen, accused of murdering a young girl, were being taken by the sheriff for trial in the juvenile court. Under the laws of Texas, if convicted, they would have been incarcerated in the state reformatory until they reached the age of twenty-one. A mob of seven hundred men and women, impatient with the orderly procedure of the courts and dissatisfied with the penalty invoked by the laws of their state in case the prisoners were found guilty, tore the two boys from the custody of the sheriff and lynched them.

The incident would have inspired no different comment than many similar incidents that adorn the annals of our nation, were it not for the remarks of two of the public officials within whose jurisdiction the lynchings occurred.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

So spoke the county attorney.

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollman could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravish.ng murderers last night."

Thus spoke the county judge.

Of a certain man who excused his conduct by saying it was dictated by his conscience, Theodore Roosevelt once said, "A man with a conscience like that ought to take it out and look at it."

A county judge or a county attorney with a sense of duty like that of those above-mentioned, ought to take it out and look at it. But these two worthies are no different from their fellow law officers of the sunny south. For the ability to truckle to the mob or argue that two wrongs make a right there is nothing to compare to a southern judge or prosecutor after a lynching.

HOBOKEN, N. J.
OBSERVER
NOV 26 1935

BORAH AND THE PRESIDENCY.

Senator William E. Borah has finally reached the point where he is willing to enter into an argument on the "assumption" that he is a candidate for the Republican nomination for President. At least, he accepts that angle of it as presented by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in a letter threatening him with reprisal for his opposition to anti-lynching legislation.

In rebuking the association for sending him that letter, Senator Borah kills more than one bird with the one stone. In the first place, he reiterates his unalterable stand for Constitutional processes and states that the anti-lynching measures in question "both were in contravention to the plain terms of the Federal Constitution."

Adding that he has often expressed "by word and act" his "horror of lynching," yet he cannot agree to any Federal action in the matter save by the proper means, and this he holds to be through an amendment to the Constitution. It must be said for Senator Borah that in matters such as this he never fails to speak courageously, be the political effect what it may.

Thus, he does not let the matter rest with his forthright statement to the colored people explaining why he voted against the proposed legislation. More significant still, he adds: "Should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being President of the United States, and such a bill should reach me, under my oath and in the light of my convictions, I would unhesitatingly veto it."

Equally significant is his accompanying statement that he will make a series of speeches in the East and Middle West before Congress meets in January, with the first a radio broadcast from Washington, December 7. This looks very much as if the "assumption" that he is a Barkis in respect to the nomination, and is "willing," is not altogether without foundation.

BOSTON, MASS
TRAVELER
NOV 25 1935

Candid Candidate

Asked by Negroes if, as President, he would sign the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, Senator Borah answered that he would veto it.

No negrophobe, Senator Borah, like all civilized persons, abhors lynchings. His stand is that Congress is stepping outside its constitutional authority in passing such a bill and for this reason he would veto it.

For the purposes of this discussion let us not go into whether the bill is constitutional. Who, these days, outside the nine old gentlemen of the supreme court, can give an opinion on such matters?

What is particularly interesting about the senator's answer is the answer. Here is a man who may be a candidate for the presidency. In advance he gives an honest and obviously disappointing answer to 12,000,000 American Negroes.

This, we say, is the most important, most encouraging incident of recent politics—a candidate daring to be unpleasantly truthful while a possible vote-seeker. Let us have more such candor.

Hereabouts, voters of both parties disagree frequently with Congressman George Holden Tinkham, but because he is always honest, both parties nominate him for Congress. Why aren't many more office seekers as straightforward?

CINCINNATI, O.
ENQUIRER
NOV 30 1935

A Bit Too Frank.

If Senator William E. Borah ever had a chance of winning the presidential nomination of his party—or better, the party which he occasionally supports—he reduced that chance considerably when he spoke bluntly against the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. For even 70 years after the Civil War Negro votes are an important asset to a candidate of the G. O. P. and the anti-lynching bill, however unwisely, has been made a major objective of various Negro welfare groups.

The Idaho Senator pointed out very plainly that he would continue to vote against such anti-lynching measures, in the belief that they are unconstitutional, in addition to being impractical and futile. If he should receive the "unexpected and great honor" of election to the presidency, Mr Borah added, he would veto such a measure on grounds of unconstitutionality.

Senator Borah is to be commended for his candor and his wisdom as well, particularly at a time when the presidency seems no wholly beond the pale of possibility. He is a bit too frank for his own political success. Every one of common sense and commoi decency condemns the whole insti tution of lynching as an ugly blo on American civilization. But tc do that is not to support a meas ure which has no prospect of util ity and no basis of constitution ality.

A Federal law to prevent lynch ing would be a grave invasion of the ordinary police power of the states. It would involve attempts to coerce whole populations. It could not serve its purpose save by the formation of a gigantic Federal police force, just as na tional prohibition was impractical. The agitation behind anti-lynching measures is doubtless sincere, but one may be permitted to suspect that their sponsorship in Congress is only too often a bid for Negro votes by men who know or ought to know that their proposals are not realistic.

LITERARY DIGEST
NEW YORK
NOV 23 1935

Lynchings Stir Southern Debate

Preacher Pleads for Law, County Attorney Condones Hanging of Two Negroes in Texas; Statute Called Inadequate

"Why don't you preach to your own people, who hang and burn black men in the streets?" was the blunt question an African chieftain put to an American missionary not long ago, as the missionary asked his permission to proselyte among members of his tribe.

"We don't know what the missionary said in reply," continues the Springfield (Mass.) Union (Rep.). "What answer could be given to such a question?"

Preaching to his own people, the Rev. C. G. Marmion, thirty-three - year - old Episcopalian Rector of St. John's Church at Columbus, Texas, tried to prevent the lynching of two young Negroes, accused of the criminal attack and murder of a white girl, in his home town last week.

Climbing on top of an automobile at the scene of the hanging, he shouted: "Let the law take its course." Boos, jeers, and cries of "Suppose it had been some of your women folks?" drowned out his ringing appeals that were stilled when a bold spirit called, "Get another rope."

The two Negroes, fifteen and sixteen years old, were on their way, chained neck to neck, to the county jail when the Sheriff's car was held up by a dozen men. Still chained together, they were hanged to a tree by a mob of 700, including several women. Near-by was the home of Geraldine Kollmann, nineteen, valedictorian of her high-school class, said to have been attacked and slain by the two Negroes. What made this double lynching national news were two statements by responsible legal authorities of Colorado County, Texas.

Said O. P. Moore, County Attorney:

"I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob: I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Had they been convicted in court, the Negroes, because of their youth, would have been committeed to a reformatory until they were twenty-one.

Said H. P. Hahn, County Judge:

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollmann could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers."

In Houston, eighty-six miles away, this editorial was printed:

"The Chronicle (Ind.-Dem.) can understand the feeling of Columbus and Colorado County citizens against the Negro boys who raped and murdered a fine and beloved young white girl of their county.

"Nevertheless, lynching is not the right course. For that matter, it believes that the majority of Colorado County citizens do not regard it as the right course. This majority owes it to itself, to Texas, and the South, to make itself articulate, just as similar majorities in all sections of the South do.

"This case will be seized on to shame the South. Every detail will be magnified; all the horrors dwelt upon: our entire civilization will be brought under attack.

"The Chronicle knows that the critics have no conception of the South's feeling toward the raping of its women: it knows they give no thought to our racial situation, or what may be done to eliminate this terrible evil. The proper way is by law, and adherence to law.

"It is to the honor of that Columbus minister that he could see this, and had the courage to speak his convictions."

And the Dallas Journal (Ind.) also lashes out against lynch-law with:

"The murder of two Negro boys at Columbus by vengeance-crazed citizens is evidence of savagery in Texas as truly as would be the burning of an Ethiopian criminal after he had been wrapped in linen and honey.

"To the extent of the practise of lynching in Texas, this State is uncivilized, and there is no use denying it."

Again the Piece of String—Reminder and Challenge!

—Duffy in the Baltimore Sun

SEATTLE, WASH.
STAR
OCT 31 1935

Lynching

Editor, The Star: I have to smile when I read the headlines in the papers. They seem childish, shouting that by having Hall in a secret jail lynching is prevented. Such actions surely don't speak highly of our law enforcement.

Our police force can handle any attempted lynching. Why, with all the gas and other death-dealing weapons that the officers are equipped with, they can easily stop any lynching.

If a few lynch mobs were treated to a dose of buckshot and tear gas the ardor of the mob would be cooled. Force and violence. What good does a gang of lynchers do? And usually such a mob chooses the darkest night to perform their actions. Lynching is an uncivilized act and should he done away with. R. WADE.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern

5199

Charlotte, N. C., News
October 24, 1935

Murder by Mistake.

Before Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida or North Carolina replace the latest lynching in Georgia with one of their own, let it be chronicled that here again was an instance where the wrong man was killed by a mob. It is not the first time this year—Californians committed a similar murder and in Burlington, North Carolina, it was avoided only by a lucky chance—and it is not at all unusual. Of the 21 lynchings in 1930, for example, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation reported that two victims were certainly innocent and eleven others possibly so.

But the unwritten law shielding members of a mob which lynches the right man applies with equal force and effect to mobs which make a regrettable mistake and kill an innocent person. Hence it is futile to expect the state of Georgia or the county in which the violence took place to look upon this murder in the light of murder and to make any attempt to bring the murderers to justice.

Greensboro, N. C., News
November 7, 1935

A NEW TECHNIQUE.

An entirely new technique in southern lynchings, or at least in their denouement, is revealed in Tennessee following seizure of a negro, accused of slapping a white woman, by a small band of armed men in broad daylight and in the business section of the town of White Bluff and his summary dispatch with a bullet allegedly fired from the revolver of one of the officers who had him in custody when the lynchers descended. The officer's gun, need it be explained, was taken along with his prisoner.

To that extent the seizure followed the accepted southern style. The new wrinkle was injected, however, when five men returned about 25 minutes after the seizure and surrendered to county officers. One of the deputies from whom the negro had been taken says that the men, after disarming him, promised: "We'll be back again in a few minutes and bring your gun." How they kept their word is attested by subsequent events, augmented by the deputy's further testimony that "they were all just laughing and seemed like they had enjoyed what they had done."

Transcending interest now centers upon what happens to these surrendered mobsters. Is there to be any deviation from the southern pattern of justice? Some commentary, however temporary, is offered by the sheriff's revelation that no charges have been placed against the quintet. They were to be taken to the county seat, and then—well, we shall see what we shall see. In practically all southern lynchings which come to mind, there has been avowed inability of officials to identify any of the mobsters. Here is an instance, however, where, laughing and joking, they voluntarily surrender to what may be distinct embarrassment for an officialdom which may or may not have wished them. The challenge is pre-eminently to southern justice, as exemplified by the courts in the border state of Tennessee. Is it possible that the quintet decided surrender was the easiest way out, that on the basis of what has gone before conviction on such an offense and under such conditions is unthinkable, that they can continue their way, laughing and joking, to acquittal at the hands of 12 men good and true, fellow citizens who feel the same way about it? At this distance and with the meager details at hand, there appears to be no sidestepping for the blind goddess.

While awaiting the ultimate results of this new technique, the interval may be utilized for further cogitation upon the fervent declaration of Dixie statesmen that no federal anti-lynching law is needed in their fair and favored section.

Nashville, Tenn. Banner
November 5, 1935

HUMAN LIFE CHEAP

The lynching that occurred near White Bluff yesterday morning was a direct and serious challenge of the law which its official representatives, public opinion and the press should promptly accept.

The Negro victim, according to all reports, had not criminally assaulted the white woman, whose relatives at the point of pistols, on a busy thoroughfare, overpowered the officers who were transferring him from the White Bluff jail to Charlotte, and, with full deliberation, and without molestation, proceeded to the vicinity of the town and shot him to death.

The Negro, it appears, had "insulted" the woman and struck her, shortly after she had left a bus, early Sunday night near her home in Cheatham County. Reporting the occurrence to White Bluff officers at once, he was arrested and jailed there.

The offense committed was flagrant, but it stopped much short of that form of criminal violence which has so swiftly and deeply inflamed public sensibilities that lynch law has often been invoked. The miscreant should have been punished at once, and to the utmost limit of the statutes of the State, which would have given him a long term behind the bars.

But those who took the law into their own hands went much too far. They have brought reproach upon the community and the State; and are themselves facing responsibility for the commission of a felony.

Life has become far too cheap in Tennessee. Courts are too often mocked. It is such occurrences as this which bring a serious realization to the people of Tennessee that human life must be valued higher, if law is to command any measure of real public respect.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
NOV 9 1935

A Tennessee Lynching

There have been more brutally-executed lynchings than that which occurred this week at White Bluff, Tenn., but rarely, if ever, one as brazen. The victim, a negro accused of slapping a white woman, was taken from a deputy sheriff and another official who were en route with their prisoner to the county jail.

The "mob" consisted of five armed men. They took the deputy's pistol, but assured him that they would "be back in a few minutes and bring your gun." The promise was kept. In less than half an hour they returned and surrendered to the official. "They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he says. "They told me they shot the negro with my gun." The sheriff placed no charged, but said they would be taken to the county seat for arraignment.

Only less shocking than the crime itself is the cheerful confidence of this quintet that the law which they boast of flouting will not punish them for it. In the history of lynching, to be sure, they have ample assurance for such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance to a lynching mob. Seldom is there even an effort afterward to identify its members, although in the case of the ringleaders at least that should be comparatively simple. Instances in which they have been brought to trial are still more infrequent. A conviction is almost unknown.

But no mob has had the audacity to do its barbarous, bloody deed and then deliver itself to the law in the attitude of "What are you going to do about it?" The country waits to see how Tennessee will meet an unprecedented challenge.

Miami, Fla., News
November 9, 1935

A Tennessee Lynching

There have been more brutally-executed lynchings than that which occurred this week at White Bluff, Tenn., but rarely, if ever, one as brazen. The victim, a negro accused of slapping a white woman, was taken from a deputy sheriff and another official who were en route with their prisoner to the county jail.

The "mob" consisted of five armed men. They took the deputy's pistol, but assured him that they would "be back in a few minutes and bring your gun." The promise was kept. In less than half an hour they returned and surrendered to the official. "They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he says. "They told me they shot the negro with my gun." The sheriff placed no charged, but said they would be taken to the county seat for arraignment.

Only less shocking than the crime itself is the cheerful confidence of this quintet that the law which they boast of flouting will not punish them for it. In the history of lynching, to be sure, they have ample assurance for such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance to a lynching mob. Seldom is there even an effort afterward to identify its members, although in the case of the ringleaders at least that should be comparatively simple. Instances in which they have been brought to trial are still more infrequent. A conviction is almost unknown.

But no mob has had the audacity to do its barbarous, bloody deed and then deliver itself to the law in the attitude of "What are you going to do about it?" The country waits to see how Tennessee will meet an unprecedented challenge.

Valdosta, Ga., Times
November 7, 1935

Wonder what's wrong in Tennessee? Five white men took a negro charged with assaulting another white man, from the officers and lynched him. That is perfectly in order, but the strange thing is that the lynchers surrendered themselves to the officers before the coroner's jury could return the usual verdict that the negro came to his death "at the hands of parties unknown."

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
NOV 7 1935

A NEW TECHIQUE.

A n entirely new chnique in ou.hl lynchings, at least in their denouement, is revealed in Tennessee following seizure of a negro, accused of slapping a white woman, by a small band of armed men in broad daylight and in the business section of the town of White Bluff and his summary dispatch with a bullet allegedly fired from the revolver of one of the officers who had him in custody when the lynchers descended. The officer's gun, need it be explained was taken along with his prisoner.

To that extent the seizure followed the accepted southern style. The new wrinkle was injected, however, when five men returned about 25 minutes after the seizure and surrendered to county officers. One of the deputies from whom the negro had been taken says that the men, after disarming him, promised: "We'll be back again in a few minutes and bring your gun." How they kept their word is attested by subsequent events, augmented by the deputy's further testimony that "they were all just laughing and seemed like they had enjoyed what they had done."

Transcending interest now centers upon what happens to these surrendered mobsters. Is there to be any deviation from the southern pattern of justice? Some commentary, however temporary, is offered by the sheriff's revelation that no charges have been placed against the quintet. They were to be taken to the county seat, and then—well, we shall see what we shall see. In practically all southern lynchings which come to mind there has been avowed inability of officials to identify any of the mobsters. Here is an instance, however, where, laughing and joking they voluntarily surrender to what may be distinct embarrassment for an officialdom which may or may not have wished them. The challenge is pre-eminently to southern justice, as exemplified by the courts in the border state of Tennessee. Is it possible that the quintet decided surrender was the easiest way out, that on the basis of what has gone before conviction on such an offense and under such conditions is unthinkable, that they can continue their way, laughing and joking, to acquittal at the hands of 12 men good and true, fellow citizens who feel the same way about it? At this distance and with the meager details at hand, there appears to be no sidestepping for the blind goddess.

While awaiting the ultimate results of this new technique, the interval may be utilized for further cogitation upon the fervent declaration of Dixie statesmen that no federal anti-lynching law is needed in their fair and favored section.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER
NOV 11 1935

THE USUAL CAUSE IS RARE.

The lynching of a negro in Tennessee for slapping a white woman adds another to the long list of examples of lynch law that are not prompted by "the usual cause." Legally the Tennessee negro was charged with assault and battery. He was not accused of criminal assault.

The comparatively recent lynching in North Carolina and numbers of others that have taken place in States farther south this year, with hardly an exception, were in consequence of other than the proverbial "usual cause."

Examine any authoritative statistics on lynching and it will be found that in the South as elsewhere only a comparatively small percentage are prompted by the crime known as criminal assault upon white women.

And yet it has been the custom, when answering denunciation of lynchings in the South, for some spokesmen of this section to argue in general terms that the victims were to blame because of their attacks upon white women and to assert rather defiantly that lynchings by Southern white men could never be stopped until criminal assaults upon their women by blacks ended.

Such arguments are out of date. Comparatively few lynchings in these times are inspired by wrath aroused by criminal assaults upon women. Some of them have been and continue to be inspired by grave crimes against white men, including murder, but numbers of them in late years have been the result of nothing more serious than misdemeanors.

The time has come when those who condone lynchings and cry out in defense of States where lynchings are frequent must find some other defense than the traditional "usual cause." Lynchings for "the usual cause" have become comparatively rare — and the apologists of lynching know it.

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C.
TELEGRAM
NOV 14 1935

MOB VIOLENCE CONTINUES

Mob violence apparently is enjoying a banner year in the United States, especially in the South, this year as every month brings news of fresh disorders where alleged criminals have been lynched as the citizens took the law in their own hands. Texas is the latest state to join the parade with the lynching of two youthful Negroes for the slaying of a young white woman. Jeering a minister who attempted to reason with them, the members of the mob hanged the hapless Negroes to an oak without benefit of trial and heedless of the clergy. Mississippi, we believe is leading in this rather bizarre distinction, while North Carolina must confess that she also is in the ranks.

Always there is almost the identical angle of where the mob caught up with the sheriff, removed the prisoner from him, and committed the dastardly deed. Then, the officer suddenly disappears from the picture. What becomes of him is seldom mentioned. We believe that some ambitious student anxious to earn a master's or a doctor's degree might write a thesis after he had made a thorough investigation upon the subject, "The Forgotten Sheriff at a Lynching," or some other suitable title. It is a pretty well known fact that the sheriff seldom is made to feel ashamed of his part in the grim drama. He usually is the silent, shall we say, partner, who merely delivers his prisoner to the mob then vanishes into thin air. Seldom do we hear of a sheriff who rushed away to appeal to the attorney general or the governor or any other officials, and the case is rare indeed where a sheriff has boldly challenged the right of the mob to relieve him of his prisoner.

Originally, every time a black was lynched it always was for committing or attempting to commit assault upon the white man's woman, but figures now will show that most lynchings committed in recent years have been for other reasons. Lack of confidence in the courts, together with a show of uncivilized emotions in the individual are the only reasons we see for explaining this abuse of law and order on the part of the citizenry. We believe an educational program portraying intensively the wrong involved in the taking of a person's life without first awaiting the court's decision is necessary to lift this country from the depths to which it has fallen.

Lake Worth, Fla., Leader
November 14, 1935

Lynching Is Called Will Of The People

COLUMBUS, Texas.—County Attorney O. P. Moore said yesterday he believed the lynching of two youthful negroes by a mob of 700 persons, including several women, on a farm near here last night, was "an expression of the will of the people."

Moore's statement came soon after Justice of the Peace E. C. Thrower said he would conduct a court of inquiry into the lynchings during the day.

The town was quiet. The mob seized Ernest Collins, 15, and Benny Mitchell, 16, who assertedly had confessed the attack and subsequent drowning of Miss Geraldine Kollman, high school honor graduate, and left them dangling from a live oak tree near the girl's home.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob," said Moore. "I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

County Judge H. P. Hahn, said, however:

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollman could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

At Austin Gov. James V. Allred said he did not know the facts but the though of "lynching was deplorable at any time."

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

5200

Mocksville, N. C., Record
August 21, 1935

Recalls Old Times.

Raleigh News and Observer.

"We have had some real sheriffs in Iredell county," recalled William W. Leinster. "I well remember one time, about 30 years ago, when we nearly had a lynching. It never occurred because of the resourcefulness of Sheriff W. A. Summers.

"A negro had raped a woman, killed her and thrown her body in a well," continued Mr Leinster. "I didn't know anything about the negro being caught, but that Sunday morning in Statesville I went downtown and saw a crowd of about 3,000 angry people milling about the jail.

"Presently, Sheriff Bill as we called him, arrived to lock up his prisoners. He was leading the negro by a rope tied around his middle, and he was carrying a pistol that looked to be a foot long.

"Seeing me, he said 'come here and take this rope' I grabbed the rope and led the negro behind the sheriff, who waved his gun at the crowd and said 'the first damned man that lays his hand on this nigger is gonna get killed.' The crowd fell back and we got through without any trouble.

"Fearing that the jail would not hold the prisoner Sheriff Bill decided to take him to Charlotte. On the day he was to be moved, a crowd gathered at the front of the jail. Sheriff Bill freed the negro and told him to walk down the street to the next corner, crawl through a hole in a board fence and get in a carriage that would be waiting for him there with guards. Deputies were stationed along the back street that the negro took, but because he was not shackled or guarded nobody suspected he was culprit. He got in the carriage, which was pulled by two fine horses, and was 20 miles away before the mob knew he was gone.

"In about 60 days he was tried and convicted, and shortly afterwards was hanged for his crime," said Mr. Leinster.

Beaufort, N. C., News
August 15, 1935

AN INEXCUSABLE LYNCHING

Going suddenly insane in the home of his sister in Franklin County Tuesday morning, Sweat Ward, a Negro, seized a rock and struck down his sister. Then rushting from the house he seized a club and struck down C. J. Stokes, a prominent farmer. The crazy Negro then took an axe and severed the head of the stricken farmer from his body body. A gruesome act.

A group of Negroes attracted to the scene caught and held the crazy Negro until white officers could arrive and take him into custody Sheriff Moore and a deputy, of Franklin County, later took the mad Negro into custody, handcuffed him, tied up his legs and started with him to Nashville. On the way to Nashville they were met by a small group of whites and Negroes who took the prisoner away from them, carried him to a church grove near the scene of his crime, hanged him to a tree and riddled his body with gunshot and pistol bullets.

The decapitation of a prominent white farmer by a heat-crazed Negro was a gruesome thing, but it does not equal in gruesomeness the act of a mob in possession of its mental facilities that lynched the irresponsible brute in cold blood and riddled his body with lead.

Governor Ehringhaus here has an opportunity to show such courage as he may possess by seeing to it that the members of this infamous lynching party are brought to justice. North Carolina has provided the machinery for killing its capital felons and that machinery works swiftly and effectively in the case of a Negro. The sheriff and his deputy whose dumbness or acquiessence was responsible for the lynching of that insane Negro should be booted out of office if they fail to identify and arrest every man in that brutal mob. Lynch law has no place in our civilization.—(Elizabeth City Independent.)

Nashville, N. C. Graphic
August 15, 1935

DISPOSING OF A LYNCHING

The attitude of the State and the final disposition of the Franklin county lynching is aptly summed up in the following article from the News and Observer column, "Under The Dome":

No one seriously expects anything to be done about the Franklin County lynching any more than was done about the Pender County lynching two years ago or any other lynching in this State. The State has been through its face-saving routine and Franklin County will have to pay for the services of a Superior Court judge for one day and a court stenographer for taking and transscribing scores of pages of evidence that shed no light on the question of who did the lynching. That, with the exception of a flood of unfavorable publicity, will be about the extent of the penalty on the county.

No sacred oath administered to a witness is going to draw from him even a hint of the identity of the mob members. Men who take the law into their hands and get away with it to the extent of committing a public murder probably would not be averse to making it very uncomfortable for anyone who squealed. Anyway, everyone reasonably suspected of knowing anything is suffering from complete blindness, deafness and forgetfulness so far as what happened about noon on July 30 near Louisburg is concerned.

Governor Ehringhaus was properly indignant in both the Franklin and Pender lynching cases. In Pender, Solicitor Woodus Kelllum investigated and nothing happened. In Franklin, Solicitor Bickett is investigating.

The solicitors could tell you, if they would, that the way to catch the lynchers is to plant outside detectives in the community to listen in when some of the folks get tanked up and blow-off about their lynching prowess. But that costs money, and besides, just picture a native grand jury returning true bills against their fellow citizens for engaging in a lynching.

A lot of people know who committed the lynchings, but not the Governor nor Solicitors. And the chances are. they won't. But that doesn't mean all North Carolinians condone the crime of lynching. A high percentage of the expressed indignation is genuine.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD

SEP 5 1935

Get the Lynchers!

On the 30th of last July some 25 unmasked mobmen, operating in broad daylight on a North Carolina highway, took from the sheriff of Franklin county and two deputies their prisoner, a crazed negro named Govan Ward, and lynched him. Circumstances clearly revealed that numerous persons must have seen the lynchers at, or going to or from, the scene of the crime. Certainly, the sheriff and his deputies had a close-up, face-to-face, view of the mobmen.

The state investigated, of course. But five weeks have elapsed since the crime and as yet the state's investigation has failed to reveal the identity of any of the mobmen, and no arrests have been made. Now comes the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, presenting to Governor Ehringhaus the names of nine persons, all white and as yet not made public, who, it asserts, participated in the Franklin lynching.

It is understood that the information the association now offers was obtained from a white "under-cover" man it hired and paid to reveal the truth. The Governor has officially acknowledged receipt of the information. If it is found to be trustworthy and pertinent it will, presumably, be used in further efforts to bring the mobmen to trial.

Perhaps some progress would have been made in the solution of this case by the state had its agents, Solicitor Bickett and Attorney General Seawell, put a competent sleuth on the trail of the lynchers. But it is possible, of course, that the unrequested information given by the association is inaccurate. Or, even if it is accurate, it may be no easy matter to convict the lynchers even with their identities revealed.

The people of North Carolina expect, and have every right and reason to expect, the state to accomplish something at least in the way of clearing up the Franklin lynching, which, ironically enough, occurred within only a few miles of work should bestir the state and the state capital. "White wash" cause it to revive and intensify its methods will not satisfy. In any event, the association's efforts to bring to justice the per-

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH

AUG 31 1935

The Blame for Lynchings

IT HAS been customary in the South from the very inception of one of its blackest evils to lay the blame for every lynching at the feet of the "poor whites." They are the people with brutal instincts and disregard for the orderly processes of law. The "best people" of the community not only hold themselves sternly aloof from lynchings but hate them with all the ardor of their souls.

Writing in the Baltimore Evening Sun, W. J. Cash deplores this practice of apology and urges that one of the gravest social problems which faces the South be met in a spirit of realism. And, to this end, he sees a hopeful sign in developments which followed the recent lynching of a crazy Negro in Franklin County, North Carolina. The victim was taken by 25 unmasked men in broad daylight from the sheriff and five of his deputies. At the resulting inquiry these officers were of no help in the effort to place responsibility for the crime. They could not recall the makes of the automobiles used by the mob, nor could they say whether the cars carried license plates. Thus this investigation ended in the same manner as the one which followed the more widely heralded lynching in Georgia of Leo M. Frank 20 years ago. Thus ends virtually every such inquiry.

The hopeful sign which Mr. Cash sees in this unfortunate affair in North Carolina is that there was no apology on the part of the leading newspapers of the State. They did not lay it at the feet of the "poor whites," but took the realistic view that the "good people," too, must share the shame of the mob murder. The ultra-conservative Charlotte Observer struck out fiercely in a series of editorials. Moreover, it printed a signed editorial article by a member of its staff in which he made some very blunt assertions and challenged the people of North Carolina to face the issue squarely.

It is doubtful if many of the so-called "best people" actually participate in the barbarous business of lynching. There are convincing indications, however, that they, or some of them, condone what is being done. In this attitude they become parties to the crime. Sheriffs and their deputies would hardly "go blind" on such occasions if they did not know they were doing the safe thing. These men are shrewd appraisers of community opinion. In the interest of their own political hides, they are likely to steer a popular course.

But the "best people" of the South can stamp out lynching if it is their will so to do. At the polls and in the courts they can hold recreant officers and guilty mobsters to strict accountability for their acts. This they have not been doing as a body. This they must do if they are to retain the good opinion of the world.

Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch
August 31, 1935

The Blame for Lynchings

IT HAS been customary in the South from the very inception of one of its blackest evils to lay the blame for every lynching at the feet of the "poor whites." They are the people with brutal instincts and disregard for the orderly processes of law. The "best people" of the community not only hold themselves sternly aloof from lynchings but hate them with all the ardor of their souls.

Writing in the Baltimore Evening Sun, W. J. Cash deplores this practice of apology and urges that one of the gravest social problems which faces the South be met in a spirit of realism. And, to this end, he sees a hopeful sign in developments which followed the recent lynching of a crazy Negro in Franklin County, North Carolina. The victim was taken by 25 unmasked men in broad daylight from the sheriff and five of his deputies. At the resulting inquiry these officers were of no help in the effort to place responsibility for the crime. They could not recall the makes of the automobiles used by the mob, nor could they say whether the cars carried license plates. Thus this investigation ended in the same manner as the one which followed the more widely heralded lynching in Georgia of Leo M. Frank 20 years ago. Thus ends virtually every such inquiry.

The hopeful sign which Mr. Cash sees in this unfortunate affair in North Carolina is that there was no apology on the part of the leading newspapers of the State. They did not lay it at the feet of the "poor whites," but took the realistic view that the "good people," too, must share the shame of the mob murder. The ultra-conservative Charlotte Observer struck out fiercely in a series of editorials. Moreover, it printed a signed editorial article by a member of its staff in which he made some very blunt assertions and challenged the people of North Carolina to face the issue squarely.

It is doubtful if many of the so-called "best people" actually participate in the barbarous business of lynching. There are convincing indications, however, that they, or some of them, condone what is being done. In this attitude they become parties to the crime. Sheriffs and their deputies would hardly "go blind" on such occasions if they did not know they were doing the safe thing. These men are shrewd appraisers of community opinion. In the interest of their own political hides, they are likely to steer a popular course.

But the "best people" of the South can stamp out lynching if it is their will so to do. At the polls and in the courts they can hold recreant officers and guilty mobsters to strict accountability for their acts. This they have not been doing as a body. This they must do if they are to retain the good opinion of the world.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
ENTERPRISE

AUG 29 1935

CALIFORNIA'S MOB SPIRIT

California's early Vigilantes quickly won their war against crime because the outlaws did not resist. A few "judicious" hangings convinced the badmen that the law-abiding citizens meant business, even if they did take the law into their own hands, and that order would be preserved at any cost. The 1935 Vigilantes are defied by communists.

The situation thus created is the inevitable result of extra-legal acts committed against persons who can and will object. There is quite a difference between cleaning out the criminals that infested San Francisco in the days of the California gold rush and trying to drive out of a community people who are not criminals, who, furthermore, are entitled to the protection of the law, if the American constitution means what it says. It is not yet a crime in the United States to be a radical. Nor is it a crime to be a real or alleged labor agitator.

The Vigilantes at Santa Rosa, California, last week tarred and feathered two men and thrashed three others whose views and conduct they found objectionable. These persons could not be punished under the law. Therefore, the night riders took the law into their own hands. Ordinarily, when a situation of this kind arises in an American community, the mob wins. This time there may be a different story to tell, if the communists who declare they accept the Vigilante challenge persist in that determination.

California, as revealed by racial clashes, riots, lynchings, prolonged labor troubles and as poisonous a brand of politics as there is anywhere in America, needs a course of training in pure Americanism which abhors mob violence in any form and still believes that what a man thinks is his own business.

CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS AND COURIER

SEP 20 1935

Lynchers of All Sorts

What fools are Southerners, some of them, especially those who lynch a negro charged with murder in Oxford, Mississippi. They are no worse than Californians, who have lynched three or four white men in the last year or two. Still, the Mississippians and the Californians are as dependable to maintain civilization as are those New Yorkers and others who a few years ago were trying to lynch the courts of Massachusetts because they convicted and condemned murderers and are now denouncing the courts of Alabama. These people who demand a federal anti-lynchnng law love the courts no more than they love the lynchers when the courts do not conform to their opinions.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR

SEP 19 1935

NOTE ON LYNCHING

The latest lynching—that of a Mississippi negro—is one of the least excusable that has dotted the records of American criminal annals.

The victim was taken from jail while a jury deliberated on his case.

The charge against him was heinous, that of slaying a white planter in cold blood.

Still the law was taking its course, and the accused was taking his chance of life before a white jury, with a white judge and white prosecutor. Certainly such odds that existed were not in his favor, and the lynchers should have been satisfied that if guilty he would pay for the crime.

We are reminded by this affair that a New Hanover sheriff once took precautions that commended him as a foe of mob violence and a diplomat as well.

The racial prejudice element was involved in a trial here, but the sheriff did not wish to rile the tempers of the spectators by parading armed soldiery in their midst, but neither did he wish to have his prisoner hurt.

The troops were mobilized, but kept in their armory several blocks distant, the sheriff arranging with the court to receive the verdict in private. This was done, and the guilty verdict returned assuaged the feelings of the crowd, and the soldiers were not needed.

A bit of foresight like this would have prevented the affair in Mississippi.

Lynchings- 1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4920

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
November 10, 1935

Hon. J. C. B. Ehringhaus,
Governor of North Carolina;
Hon. A. A. F. Seawell, Attorney General:
Mr. William Y. Bickett, Solicitor,
Seventh Judicial District.

Gentlemen:

The announcement that the lynching of a negro prisoner in Tennessee last Monday has been followed by the imprisonment of five alleged lynchers, under charges of murder, reminds me that no one has been charged with murder or anything else, or even arrested, in connection with the lynching of a ngero prisoner in Franklin county last summer, although several months have intervened.

To be sure, it was reported several weeks ago that a Franklin county grandjury was making some sort of an investigation, two or three months after the lynching was perpetrated. But so far as the public knows that is all that has been done about it since the brief hearing held by Judge Harris several days after the mob of 20 or 25 men in open daylight, undisguised, took the prisoner from the sheriff and deputies and lynched him. At that hearing the sheriff and his deputies testified they did not recognize a man in the mob nor get the number of any automobile used by the lynching party.

Could any one expect lynching to be stamped out in North Carolina or any other State by such apparent unconcern as all responsible authorities have exhibited in connection with the Franklin lynching? To an outsider it would appear that a lynching is regarded in North Carolina as of less gravity than petty bootlegging. Why is it?

GENERAL MECKLENBURG.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
December 3, 1935

THE STATES MUST ACT OR TAKE THE CONSEQUENCES

The Advertiser must call attention here to two significant editorials on a vital Southern question by representative Southern newspapers, The Charlotte Observer and The Charleston News and Courier.

These splendid newspapers are concerned, independently and without collusion, with the question, "What does the South intend to do about lynching?"

And also, "What shall we do about the Costigan-Wheeler bill which would give Federal courts jurisdiction over lynchings?"

The two papers approach these questions from different agles.

Let us quote first what The News and Courier has to say in a leading editorial:

> Senator Borah's answer to Walter White, Negro leader and author of the Costigan-Wagner bill, that the bill is unconstitutional and that if president he would veto it, places him as the foremost man, Democrat or Republican, in any party, outside of the South, defending the State right, the Southern right, of each State to manage its own affairs.
>
> While Mr. Borah does not say in this answer (it was necessary) that he would oppose a constitutional amendment his record as a State rights man is enough. He voted against the Costigan-Wagner bill. A few years ago, when he was in Augusta, Ga., he made a statement that was the clearest and plainest that any man in the front political rank has made in defense of the position upon which government by Southern white people rests.
>
> Surely it is a singular thing—this far Western senator come to be the foremost American not a Eoutherner upholding the faith of Hampton, Vest, Ben Hil, Zeb Vance, Lamar, Butler, Bayard, Cleveland, Bryan, Tillman, all the Democrats who protected the beleaguered South decade after decade from "force bills," Lodge bills, Foraker bills, by which the South was harassed and menaced.
>
> The Costigan-Wagner bill would not stop lynchings. It is not designed to stop them.
>
> It is part of the insidious campaign, along many fronts, the educational included, of the Northern Negroes to enfranchise the Southern Negroes, restore to them the lost power that they had in "Reconstruction times." This so intelligent a Negro as Walter White could hardly deny without stultifying himself. Probably he would not do that.
>
> So when the Costigan-Wagner bill was pressed in the Senate and was being postponed by a filibuster of Southern senators last Spring, when Borah was voting against it. What was the attitude of the national Democratic party and administration?
>
> The President, Mr. Roosevelt, could have stopped the bill by a word—which he did not utter. Newspaper correspondents, Pearson and Allen, published that he favored it. That has been privately denied. They published that Mrs. Roosevelt strongly favored the bill and was active for it. That has not been denied.
>
> Anyway we all know that the Democratic senators from Northern States supported the bill, that all or nearly all of them from the border States supported it.
>
> There stood the South deserted by all save Southern senators—and Borah.
>
> The national Democratic party has captured the bulk of the Northern Negro vote.
>
> It cannot hold that vote without capitulating to Negro demands, and Northern Negroes of course demand that the Negroes vote in the States of the "Deep South."
>
> Are they not contesting in the courts that Negroes be admitted to Democratic primaries—in Texas and Virginia?
>
> "But Borah is a Republican." So is Norris, and President Roosevelt declares that Norris should stay in the Senate.
>
> The News and Courier has recited the facts. Who are your Northern friends?

Who are our Northern friends? That question is not so pertinent as the question, Who are the friends of Southerners?

The Observer says:

> The acquittal of the five white men in Tennessee charged with murder in connection with the lynching of a Negro, who was not even accused of the "usual crime," was another in a long series of invitations to Congress to enact a Federal anti-lynching law.
>
> The five men admitted at the trial that they overpowered two officers and took their prisoner from them by force, hauled him away to a thicket several miles distant and shot him to death. Their defense was that they had not intended to lynch him but that one of them shot the Negro to death in self-defense when he started to pick up a rock. Also they pleaded as an extenuating circumstance that the Negro had made an insulting remark to the wife of one of the five men and when she resented it he slapped her. He was arrested and chagred with assault and battery.
>
> After hearing all the evidence, including the testimony of the officers, the jury "deliberated" for two nights and a day and brought in a verdict of not guilty. The judge expressed himself as "astounded," but he had no reason to be, if he had been keeping posted on the record of such cases. As a rule the evidence and the law do not count with juries in lynching cases any more than they count with a mob bent on committing a lynching.
>
> For some months now North Carolina has maintained a standing invitation to Congress to enact an anti-lynching law by its failure to punish or even to arrest any member of the mob of 20 or 25 men who in mid-day light took a Negro prisoner from the sheriff and his deputies in Franklin County and lynched him. At a brief formal hearing before Judge W. C. Harris, sitting as a committing magistrate, immediately after the lynching, the sheriff and the deputies swore they were unable to identify a single member of the mob or get the number of any one of th group of automobiles used by the lynching party. And that seems to have ended the State's interest in the case.
>
> Of course the absurdity of the testimony of the sheriff and his deputies in a rural county, like Franklin, with a population of barely 30,000—where everybody knows the sheriff and the sheriff knows everybody in the county—made no difference.
>
> These two recent cases of lynching—one in North Carolina and one in Tennessee—widely different in their aspects—illustrate the manner in which States generally deal with lynchers, in South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and elsewhere.
>
> And yet, when Congress convenes again and an anti-lynching bill is introduced to provide for more certain punishment of lynchers, the Senators and Representatives from all of these States will be expected to make a determined fight in opposition, with orations in defense of States' rights, maintaining that a Federal law is unnecessary because the several States "are amply able to deal with lynchers and are doing so."
>
> Certainly the matter of dealing with lynchers should be one for the States and not for the Federal Government, and should be left to the States—if they will deal with this crime of combined murder and anarchy.
>
> But, sooner or later, if the States will not deal with it—if they will not punish or arrest lynchers, or if State court juries persist in acquitting lynchers regardless of the evidence and the law—then the arguments against a Federal anti-lynching law will become generally recognized as absurd and ridiculous and the matter of dealing with lynchers will be taken over by the Federal Government.
>
> The Nation as a whole has some rights as well as the individual States in the matter of the disgrace of continued and frequent instances of lynch law and sooner or later will insist that the Federal Government take action to deal with lynchers if the States will not.
>
> Frequent lynchings with virtual immunity for the mob are more dangerous to the constitutional rights of the people of the States than a Federal anti-lynchings law would be.
>
> In the interest of States' rights the States should prove that they can deal effectively with lynchers.

Apparently The News and Courier had not seen The Observer's editorial at the time its own editorial was written.

The Advertiser, like The News and Courier and The Observer, prefers to see lynching remain a State rather than a Federal offense, and has said so in numerous articles; it has heretofore roundly condemned the Wheeler-Costigan bill.

But condemning the Wheeler-Costigan bill and receiving the condemnation of mankind are not quite the same agreeable experiences.

Either lynching must go or the right of the States to exclusive jurisdiction over lynchers must go, whether we will it or not!

T[illegible]boro, N. C., Wkly. Southerner
November 21, 1935

Will of the People

As far as newspapers are concerned, the average Southern lynching follows a well-defined pattern. The Negro of the case assaults a white woman. A group of people customarily referred to, as a "mob" swings the culprit to a tree. The sheriff says he is unable to identify any of the members of the "mob". The editor plays up stories about the affair on the front page and rehashes the same old stuff about the disintegration of the American people as reflected in their disrespect for lawful processes on the editorial page. The spirit of the "mob" is decried, the inability of the authorities to bring the lynchers to justice is lambasted and anyone who happens to voice the view that the lynchers were, after all, meting out justice has a journalistic bomb planted under him.

There is perhaps but one other occurrence which is treated by newspapers with more rigid adherence to a pattern, and that is the death of a citizen. So-and-so died of such-and-such at a certain time and funeral services will be held from his home or his church with burial following at this or that cemetery with Rev. So-and-So in charge. Then his career, the his survivors and finally the pall bearers. It is all just so.

In the case of the death notices such treatment is desirable. Originality is not needed or expected. But why lynchings should stick to a cut-and-dried formula is a journalistic enigma. Therefore this newspaper scorns to follow it and to express its real views, unhampered by custom, upon the country's latest lynching, which occurred in Texas when two young Negroes were hanged by a "mob" for the brutal murder of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, high school valedictorian, whom they confessed they criminally attacked and drowned.

Let it be admitted, to begin with, that it would have been better had the lynching not occurred and the law taken its course. That point settled, let it also be admitted that in some respects the mob served the ends of justice better than the law could have and that therefore the lynching is not wholly to be decried. A so-called lynching mob, be reminded, may not and frequently is not a bunch of wild, emotional, unreasoning hoodlums; it may be and often is a group of resolute, calm but determined citizens who refuse to tolerate the cruel murder of their women and the possible delay and laxity in administering punishment by lawful processes. As the county attorney said of the Texas affair, the lynching was the "will of the people." The law also, in a democracy, is the will of the people. Under this definition then, the lynching method and the statutory method become synonymous, with the former possessing the undisputable advantage of quickness, impressiveness and completeness without expense to the state.

This is not to be interpreted as a condonement of lynching. There are many factors which make it contain more of the wrong than of the right. But it is an attempt to shew that there is something, even though not much, to be said on the side of the lynchers. This newspaper does not approve lynching; at the same time, it refuses to follow a pattern which requires that it believe lynching contains no points in its favor whatever. There is, in fact, considerable to be said for it, even if not enough to justify it.

Greensboro, N. C., News
November 15, 1935

NOTE ON INTERFERENCE.

Tuesday representatives of the government argued before the Supreme court, in a test case for the Bankhead act, the federal right to deal with the purloining of cotton from a bonded warehouse. And the Bankhead act, along with the powers and the principles which it embodies, has had the enthusiastic backing of the southern delegation in Congress.

On the very night after that hearing, a Texas mob seized two negro youths, took them from a sheriff and his deputy and did them to death. Aside from the violence of the act itself, the circumstances under which it occurred are significant in the pattern which they follow. The negroes were charged with the sort of crime which is calculated to give the inspiration for lynchings, if it is not sacrilege to suggest that lynchings are inspired. It had been officially announced that they had confessed. Authorities were thoroughly familiar with the provisions of the law whereby they could not be tried for a capital offense but dealt with only as juveniles and the natural reaction which such provision would cause amongst an aroused citizenry. Yet, with all these considerations before him, the sheriff to all practical purpose invited violence by bringing the defendants, guarded by himself and only one deputy, back to the scene of their crime for arraignment.

After the mob had wrought its vengeance, the official attitude was further revealed. The sheriff does not think that an immediate investigation will be made. He recognized none among the estimated 700 involved and he has no clues; he "guesses" the grand jury will make an investigation when it meets in February. The county attorney hails the dual lynching as "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge avers that the circumstances "prevent me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the murderers last night." A clergyman who attempted to dissuade the mob was mocked and jeered at and desisted when suggestion was made from the crowd that "we get another rope."

Theft of cotton from bonded warehouses must be stopped, exercise of Washington's police power and jeopardy of the rights of sovereign states to the contrary notwithstanding. But federal interference with mob rule and the spirit which condones it, that shall not be. Nor, southern statesmen have reiterated, is it needed.

[redacted]

There is something new, after all. Just imagine five southerners taking a negro from officers in Tennessee and lynching him for slapping a white woman; then surrendering to officers before a coroner's jury could return the usual verdict that the victim came to his death at the hands of "parties unknown." Such a course violates one of the oldest traditions of the South.

Lynchings-1935
& Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4921

Nashville, Tenn.
Morning Tennessean
NOV 5 1935

A Crime Against the Law

The white woman who stopped in a negro drinking place on Highway No. 1, in Cheatham county, Sunday night, violated the rules which guide the conduct of friendly relationship between the races. A drunken negro customer in the place made insulting advances to her and then struck her and she was rescued by a white man, who was the only other white person present.

No mob was formed and the kindred of this woman apparently took no steps to give her personal vengeance. On the contrary, a warrant was sworn out, the negro was arrested and confined at White Bluff until Monday morning, when the officers took him and started with him to jail at Ashland City. Then came the mob in the persons of five men who took the prisoner from the custody of the law and carried him across the Cheatham county line to kill him and to stain that little county with the blot of the first lynching ever to occur in that county.

This mob, composed of the woman's husband and four other relatives, seems to have followed the prudent procedure so popular among our latter-day mobs, which is to wait until the officers have captured the victim and deprived him of the means of self-defense.

For whatever crime, this negro may have committed he has paid so far as is humanly possible for no man can pay a greater price than his own life, but in exacting this payment this mob has committed a crime against the state and the punishment for this crime confronts the people of Cheatham county and the officials whose duty it is to enforce the laws there.

The circumstances of this case are revolting from beginning to end. But while this mob was so prudent and thoughtful it could nurse its grievance with fortitude until the officers of the law had taken the risk of capturing the victim, the mob was bold enough against the law and the officers of the law. This mob has brazenly smeared the blot of a lynching on a county that has not heretofore suffered from that misfortune, it has nullified the law and treated the officers of law with contempt, but the solemn duty of dealing with this mob is now before the officials who administer the laws in that jurisdiction, and the result will show whether this is a precedent that may be safely followed, or one to be avoided in the future.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
November 11, 1935.

THE USUAL CAUSE IS RARE.

The lynching of a negro in Tennessee for slapping a white woman adds another to the long list of examples of lynch law that are not prompted by "the usual cause." Legally the Tennessee negro was charged with assault and battery. He was not accused of criminal assault.

The comparatively recent lynching in North Carolina and numbers of others that have taken place in States farther south this year, with hardly an exception, were in consequence of other than the proverbial "usual cause."

Examine any authoritative statistics on lynching and it will be found that in the South as elsewhere only a comparatively small percentage are prompted by the crime known as criminal assault upon white women.

And yet it has been the custom, when answering denunciation of lynchings in the South, for some spokesmen of this section to argue in general terms that the victims were to blame because of their attacks upon white women and to assert rather defiantly that lynchings by Southern white men could never be stopped until criminal assaults upon their women by blacks ended.

Such arguments are out of date. Comparatively few lynchings in these times are inspired by wrath aroused by criminal assaults upon women. Some of them have been and continue to be inspired by grave crimes against white men, including murder, but numbers of them in late years have been the result of nothing more serious than misdemeanors.

The time has come when those who condone lynchings and cry out in defense of States where lynchings are frequent must find some other defense than the traditional "usual cause." Lynchings for "the usual cause" have become comparatively rare — and the apologists of lynching know it.

Burns, Tenn., New Idea
November 7, 1935

Negro Mobbed

DOTSON BROTHERS AND COUSIN IN JAIL

Baxter Bell, negro, was taken from the custody of officers at White Bluff, Nov. 4 1935 and carried to a point near Robinson's store, on the Kingston Springs Road, and shot to death. The tragedy occurring about 9 o'clock Monday morning,

Bell, it is alledged had insulted Luther Dotson's wife Sunday night, at Ed Daniels, col. store just in the edge of Cheatam co and Luther Dotson, and brothers, Clyde, Jesse and James Dotson, and a cousin Allie Brown, are said to have taken Bell from the custody of officers Donnelly and Petty, at White Bluff, carried him to the point mentioned above and shot him, returning to White Bluff and surrendered to officers.

An inquest was held at the scene of the shoting and the jury decided that Bell met death by foul means.

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.
LEAF-CHRONICLE
NOV 5 1935

A Deplorable Lynching

The lynching of a Negro near White Bluff Monday was a crime despite the fact the group appeared to be motivated by "chivalry." The victim is accused of slapping a white woman. Of course such an act should not have gone unpunished and the man, Baxter Bell should have known that it was dangerous thing to do.

The woman took proper steps to punish the Negro by swearing out a warrant, charging assault and battery. Had the law been permitted to take its course there could be no doubt but what Baxter would have been punished severely.

Every time a mob lynches a man it is a reflection upon our judicial system. It is an echo of what should be a forgotten age—the age of vigilante committees. The lynching was a smear upon the fair name of Tennessee and adds another violence by mob for which our State is thoroughly ashamed.

SAN ANGELO, TEX.
TIMES
NOV 16 1935

San Sa

BALLINGER PUT TO ROUT EARLY BY ARMADILLOS

Winters Blizzards Defeat Goldthwaite Eagles By Score Of 50 To 6

BY KARL READ

BALLINGER, Nov. 15. —The San Saba Armadillos became 1935 champions of district 18-B in their last scheduled game by completely threshing the Ballinger Bobcats, 32 to 0, on the local field this afternoon.

Numbing the Bearcats early in the opening period by Perry, right end, blocking McMillan's punt across the goal line and covering it for a touchdown, the Armadillos featuring all backs, kept the Bearcats on the run thereafter. It was an elusive, fleety group of backs, combined with Ponton, left end, receiving passes, that completely broke the morale of the local lads, with the most sensational run being made by Williams, right halfback, who intercepted a pass on his own 10-yard line and raced 90 for a touchdown.

Bearcats In Enemy Territory

Nor, was there a let-up until the last quarter when the Bearcats regained composure and although possessing the ball most of the time in San Saba territory failed to cross the goal line.

Largely through the mighty line plunges of McMillan, triple-threater at fullback, the Bearcats threatened to score four times in the danger- ous 20-yard zone but each time were backed up field. Their first downs were eight compared to nine for the visitors.

After the encouraging first touchdown and conversion point through the blocked punt, the Armadillos scoring advanced the ball to the 15-yard line in a toss from McMillan to Korneck. Watkins plowed the Ballinger line for position on Ballinger's ten-yard line and a first down before the quarter ended. In three successive stabs at the line Watkins left only a foot to be covered by Whitt by the same route. Whitt failed in passing for an extra point.

Perry Makes Mad Dash

Then came the mad dash of Perry upon intercepting McMillan's pass to Korenek on the ten-yard line. A flock of Bearcats trailed him without avail. The Bearcats had just advanced the ball into scoring

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD

NOV 14 1935

More Lynch Crimes.

From Columbus, Tex., comes news of the lynching of two negro youths, and a dispatch from Ripley, W. Va., tells of the apparent lynching of a CCC camp foreman.

Officers investigatnig the latter case subsequently decided the foreman had committed suicide. But in the Texas case there was no doubt as to death cause. The two negroes, accused of attacking and murdering a young white girl, were taken from the officers and hanged by a mob of 700 persons, including some women and children. To make matters worse, if possible, the Texas crime is apparently condoned by the county officers whose business and whose sworn duty it is to uphold the law. The county attorney would not refer to the lynching group as a mob, and characterized the crime as "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge, while declaring he opposes lynching, said he does not condemn "those citizens who meted justice to the murderers." His reason for this, he said, is that the negroes, one 15 and the other 16 years of age, could not legally be executed in Texas. Therefore, the judge reasoned, the guilty ones—if, indeed, they were guilty—could not be "adequately punished" under Texas statutes as they now stand.

Civilization surely must have descended to a low ebb, if it exists at all, in the Columbus, Tex., community, if the expressions of these officers is representative of community sentiment there. The duty of the state of Texas is obvious. It should lose no time in apprehending and punishing the mobsters.

AUSTIN, TEX.
AMERICAN

NOV 15 1935

Is Mob Violence 'The Will of the People'

Two negro boys charged with foul crimes were lynched by a mob at Columbus. They were taken from armed officials and hanged to a live oak tree not far from the home of their victim of a double outrage. O. P. Moore, county attorney, said he would vigorously prosecute "any of the 700 persons, including women, who participated," but added, "I do not consider the persons who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people." This expression of the prosecutor is said to have drawn protest the state over "as official action lagged." Gov. James V. Allred said, "Lynching is deplorable at any time," and L. G. Phares, head of the department of public safety and Texas rangers added, "I don't believe lynchings are the will of the people and if they are, they certainly ought not to be."

Mob law is said to be the law of the jungle. It overrides the law of organized society. There isn't a chance on earth for a negro charged with the double crime of murder and rape to win a verdict of not guilty in a court of justice in the commonwealth of Texas. Mob law, racial prejudices are as dangerous as a dynamite bomb or as a lighted torch in a powder magazine. The mob who lynched the two negroes near Columbus may be prosecuted but it is safe to predict the leaders will never be convicted of mob violence in the county or adjoining counties which was the scene of the ghastly horror and which called for the condemnation of those who participated in the live oak tree hanging.

Every alleged criminal, regardless of age, color or condition in life is entitled to a fair trial in open court. Then if convicted by a jury of his peers, the punishment should fit the crime.

CUERO, TEX.
RECORD

NOV 14 1935

MOB LAW

To say that we are disappointed in the action of the people that comprised the mob that hung the two young negroes at Columbus last night, is putting it mildly. We had thought that the civilizing spirit had gained ascendency in this section of Texas to permit of the law to take its course and mete out punishment upon those guilty of offending the law. But it seems that somebody had lost faith in the falibility of the law and those in whom the people had entrusted execution of the law and the meting out of justice and in execution of the mandates of the law, and in expressing disappointment because of such conditions, others of the same mind were drawn together and in the discussion of those conditions fires were kindled that developed into uncontrolable conflagrations and fury and men did the thing which, under deliberate second thought, they would have hesitated to do and as a consequence they added another stain upon the escutcheon of civilization which, to say the least, will not make them more proud of the action of the element that let mob spirit predominate among them.

There may be no question about the guilt of the two young negroes that were thus summarily executed, but guilty or not guilty, their fate was sealed when they got into the clutches of the mob. But there is always a possibility of innocent victims falling a victim to the wiles of unscrupulous officers and many a confession has been wrung out of people who were wholly innocent of the crimes with which they were charged. When officers apply what they call the "third degree" and grill their victim for hours and hours, they can wring a confession out of most anybody except a hardened criminal, hence it has come to a point where many of these alleged confessions should be accepted with a grain of salt.

Another thing that is responsible for such acts as were perpetrated at Columbus last night is the measures to which some lawyers will resort to obtain an acquital of their clients regardless of the guilt or innocence. It has come to the point where many such trials are nothing short of a farce. More time and effort are spent upon technicalities in the law, in the charges, or in methods of proceedure in the case up to the time of the trial, than there is in an effort to prove the innocence or the guilt of the accused. This sort of proceedure becomes disgusting to the public and this is what many times incents the public to take the law into its own hands.—Yoakum Herald.

Raleigh, N. C. Observer
November 15, 1935

It Ought To Be True

"You can't trample the law underfoot and get away with it," Judge Clawson L. Williams told a Negro, guilty of a serious crime, in the New Hanover Superior Court. Everyone will applaud Judge Williams' statement and everyone would like to believe that it is true. But is it? In a county adjoining that in which Judge Williams spoke, two years have passed since a mob lynched a Negro without one of those guilty of the lynching having been punished for trampling the law. In a county adjoining the county in which the State Capital is located, the months go by without any suggestion that any member of a lynching mob there will ever be brought to trial for "trampling the law underfoot." And this week in Texas a county attorney, commenting on a lynching, declared: "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Judge Williams ought to be right, but he will not be right so long as the law is trampled underfoot by mobs of men and the law shows itself helpless, sometimes even, as in the Texas case, shows itself amenable to the trampling of many bloody feet across the body of the law.

Lynchings—1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4922

Birmingham, Ala. News
November 16, 1935

Determined Officers Can Prevent Lynchings

After a relatively good record for the first half of the year in the matter of lynchings, 1935 has become increasingly marred by outbreaks of mob violence. In the first six months of the year there were only four lynchings, and these took place in only two states, Mississippi and Louisiana. For a similar period, that is probably as low a number of lynchings as there is on record. In the first half of 1934 there were six lynchings, and for the same period of 1933 there were eight.

Since midyear, however, there have been several lynchings in various states. Happily, Alabama's record thus far in 1935 is free of such a blot.

In Texas two Negro boys, one 15 and the other 16 years old, were taken from officers by a large mob and lynched, after they were said to have confessed attacking and killing a 19-year-old girl. On Thursday a mob in Georgia tried to take from officers a Negro convicted of slaying a white man, but National Guardsmen frustrated the attempt.

These two cases illustrate one of the chief aspects of the lynching problem. In one case determined and courageous officers of the law fought off a mob and prevented a lynching. In the other, the officers, evidently less determined, did not prevent the mob from capturing the two victims. Perhaps the Texas officers were overpowered by great numbers and could not have prevented the mob from taking the prisoners. But if that was the case, it simply means that the authorities of the law did not take adequate precautions.

The crime of which the Texas Negroes were accused was a heinous one. But that does not excuse the lynchings. No crime justifies lynching, in a country where law is supposed to reign. The point was made, by legal authorities in Texas, that under the law these prisoners could not have been executed because of their youth. This point is advanced to condone the lynchings. In fact, the county attorney in whose county the lynchings took place said he considered the mob's action "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge, while saying he was strongly opposed to mob violence and in favor of orderly processes of the law, said the fact that the Negroes could not be "adequately punished" by law because of their ages prevented him from "condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers." That is not an enlightened attitude for a judge to adopt. Gov. Allred seems to have taken a more enlightened stand, saying that lynching was deplorable at any time.

In the Georgia case, the prisoner had been convicted of murder and sentenced to die on Dec. 12. Yet the mob did not wish to wait for less than a month for the man to be put to death. After hand-to-hand fighting, however, the National Guardsmen repulsed the members of the mob. Georgia is to be commended for thus upholding the law.

Unfortunately, there was a lynching in Georgia in connection with the same case. An entirely innocent Negro was put to death by a mob that was seeking the Negro convicted of the murder. This, of course, the officers could not prevent, because the victim was not in their custody. The incident affords a commentary on the unreasoning nature of mobs. Searching for one man, the Georgia mob put to death another who had no connection with the crime. But of course mobs do not reason, and they are not fair. That is why mob violence, whatever the provocation, cannot be tolerated in a civilized country.

In the great majority of cases, determined officers of the law can prevent mob violence. When our law-enforcement officials all realize that fact, and recognize their duty to protect any prisoner in their custody, we will see lynching disappear.

Durham, N. C. Herald
November 16, 1935

"WILL OF THE PEOPLE"

It is all right to pounce upon the Columbus, Texas, county attorney for branding the lynching of two Negro boys, one 15 and the other 16, as an expression of the will of the people and not the work of a lynching mob. And it is all right to yell against the sheriff for putting up little opposition when set upon by the mob. Still again, it is permissable to listen to and condemn the trial judge for denouncing mob violence but publicly refraining from denouncing a those who participated in the Columbus lynching.

But the only difference between the Columbus, Texas, lynching and the rest, including the one here at home in Franklin county, is that the Texas officials speak with more frankness. And somehow or other we prefer the frankness of the Texas brand to the tongue in cheek lament that usually clothes officialdom when mob violence supersedes the law.

The sheriff in the Texas case says he could not recognize a face in the mob of 700. That is what the sheriff of Franklin said when a mob took a half crazed Negro from him in wide open daylight. That is the usual story. And a perfunctory investigation is about as far as probes of mob lynchings usually get.

That being the case the calling of a mob lynching "an expression of the will of the people" is not the startling thing that it appears to be. Actually we have reacted to mob violence in that manner all along and if that is the way we are going to behave, why not go all the way and simply say, "when the people lose their sense of balance and commit murder, it is an expression of the will of the people."

Of course, accepting that thesis means breaking away from the fundamentals of law and order. It means placing the will of an emotional mind above the decree of many sober minds. It is equivalent to saying to the murderer, "if you killed some one who deserved to be killed or killed when the sentiment was on your side, you expressed the will of the people and deserve immunity from the law."

No one wants that sort of thing. The simple fact is that acts of lynching mobs do not represent the "will of the people" because when a mob gets started it knows no reason and the members in it have no will to express. After they do their devilment mobs scatter and members thereof realize their error. They do not count mob violence as expression of their will.

So after all the frankness of the Texas brethren is actually ignorance and cowardiceness. And that is what is behind mob lynchings.

Greensboro, N. C., News
November 21, 1935

ONLY ECHO ANSWERS.

Southern lynching has worked out new, but surely not unexpected, pattern in Tennessee. Five mobsters, after seizing a negro prisoner from officers and doing him to death, surrendered, submitted that their act was in self-defense, as their victim said he wouldn't take the whipping which they proposed to give him and stooped to pick up a rock as a combative weapon, and were accordingly awarded freedom by a jury of what was obviously their mob-minded peers.

How the situation will eventually work out, reflecting most seriously as it does upon southern justice, remains to be seen. With all due credit, let it be recorded that the court denounced the verdict and remanded the acquitted mobsters to jail on bench warrants which charged conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment. Conspiracy is recognized as one of the most difficult charges to prove; and there is little prospect that a jury, reflecting popular sentiment in its original verdict, can be found, especially in the same county, to bring in a conviction on this second count.

In event of another acquittal, which must be anticipated, the sheriff from whom the hapless victim was taken announces that the quintet will not be liberated but that he will file charges based "on the seizure of the negro from officers by armed force".

As justice, unable to mete out retribution, moves from one lesser charge to another, the Daily News finds itself again asking what constitutes kidnaping under the Lindbergh act or any other act, in Tennessee or any other state? Before the charge retrogresses to the simple misdemeanor of discharging firearms within the city—or was it the county?—limits, when and where do the urge and the authority for federal intervention in such cases have to come?

Charleston, S. C., Evening Post
November 15, 1935

Woman Protests Inquiry Demands

Austin, Tex., Nov. 15. (AP)—A white-haired woman, protesting demands for an investigation into the lynching of two negroes, shouted Thursday:

"Nothing in the world will save southern women from those brutes except lynching."

Unrecognized by the chairman, Mrs. J. R. White, of Coleman rose at the Texas Federation of Women's clubs convention and assailed demands for an inquiry by Governor James V. Allred into the hanging of two negroes accused of criminally assaulting and slaying a white girl at Columbus, Tex.

The demand was voiced by Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames, of Atlanta, Ga., executive director of the Association of Southern Women for Prevention of Lynching.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
November 14, 1935

The People's Will

Could this county attorney of Columbus, Tex., be correct when he says that the lynching of two Negroes by a mob of 700 persons represents "an expression of the will of the people?" And yet that is the excuse he offers for the action of this crowd that took two Negro youths and hanged them to a tree.

This county attorney should remember that the will of a people is not expressed in heat and passion. Mob rule is not to be confused with the deliberate judgment made possible by orderly court procedure. If "the will of the people" is to prevail in times of emotional excitement, then we may as well submit to anarchy.

It makes no difference what the offense of the Negroes was. There is never, in an organized society, any justification for condoning executions outside the law. These Negroes were denied a jury trial, as pledged by the Constitution of the United States and, it is a safe assumption, by the Constitution of Texas. The circumstances of the case cannot conceal the fact that the hanging was a violation of the law as clearly as the deed of which the Negroes were accused.

As a public official, it is likely that this county attorney was sworn to uphold the law. But instead he says that the hasty, ill-considered act of an inflamed mob is superior to the law. To what depths the nation has fallen when men in office hold such views!

Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch
November 15, 1935

"Will of the People"

P. P. MOORE, county attorney in Columbus, Texas, said of the lynching of two Negro boys who had assaulted and killed a high school girl, "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Nothing more cowardly has been said by a public official in our recollection. Lynching is an extralegal measure that cannot be regarded as anything but murder. Those who participate in it are guilty of murder. To say that murder in any case is the "will of the people" is to negate every statute that has been passed for the protection of human life; furthermore, it is to say that any mob, in a frenzy of the moment, is justified in destruction either of property or life because that is the way it feels at the time. Human experience in all fields shows the folly and the ruinousness of any such attitude. The mob that cries for a man's life at one moment may lift him to power the next; the mob that cheers its hero in one instant may lead him to the chopping block in the next.

Civilization cannot be governed by impulse or whim. Our statutes have grown out of the agonizing experience of the years, of the progress toward a more perfect and happier relationship between individuals who compose communities. There are imperfections in abundance in our criminal statutes and in our methods of administering them, but they still stand as the one great bulwark protecting the individual from the mob, the weak from the strong, the helpless from the predatory. To break down this bulwark in any case, no matter how great the provocation, is to revert to that savagery and that barbarous period the emergence from which is best attested by enlightened enactments to protect human life.

Talladega, Ala. Home
November 14, 1935

ACTION IN PAIR'S

LYNCHING LAGGING

COLUMBUS, Tex., Nov. 14.—Official action lagged last night against the howling, cursing mob which lynched two young negroes here Tuesday night.

County Attorney P. P. Moore termed the lynching "an expression of the will of the people." Sheriff Frank Hegmeyer asked that a court inquiry be withheld pending investigation.

The town was quiet, but from many parts of the state—including the capital—sounded bitter denunciation of the mob's action.

Snatched from officers at a river crossing, Ernest Collins, 15 and Benny Mitchell, 16 were hanged to a live oak tree near the farm home of Miss Geraldine Kollman, valedictorian of Columbus high school, whom they confessed they criminally attacked and drowned.

The county attorney said he would "vigorously prosecute" any of the 700 persons, including women, who participated, but added:

"I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

NASHVILLE, TENN.
EVENING TENNESSEAN
NOV 11 1935

NEGRO MINISTERS DEPLORE LYNCHING

Urge Governor McAlister to Express Strong Condemnation.

The Interdenominational Church Ministers' Alliance, composed of ministers of Nashville negro churches, this morning adopted a resolution deploring the recent lynching of a member of their race in Cheatham County, Tennessee, and directing the secretary of the organization, Arthur D. Williams, to prepare a letter to Gov. Hill McAlister, setting forth their position, and asking him to express himself in no uncertain terms against the deed.

The secretary was directed to embody in the letter a declaration of the earnest respect for law and order animating the ministerial body.

A committee was designated to present the communication to Governor McAlister, after it had been signed by all present at the meeting.

J. T. Patterson presided over the session. The Rev. T. C. Johnson, pastor of Clark Memorial M. E. Church, offered the resolution for the transmission of the letter.

The Interdenominational Alliance will meet on November 25 to elect officers.

Atlanta, Ga. Georgian
November 22, 1935

WOMEN SCORE GA. LYNCHINGS

Resolutions deploring two recent lynchings in Georgia were announced Friday by the Woman's Missionary Society, Atlanta district, M. E. Church, South.

The resolutions registered "unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances, specifically deploring lynchings during the last two months near Vienna and Moultrie.

"We urge upon officers and courts their sacred obligation to uphold the constitute processes of law, and upon all religious, educational and civic agencies the imperative duty to building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence," the resolutions said, in part.

TYLER, TEX.
COURIER TIMES
NOV 15 1935

Lynching Of Two Negroes Argued By Women's Club

AUSTIN, Nov. 14. (U.P.)—Official inquiry into the lynching of two Negro youths at Columbus, Texas, after the killing a white girl, was asked Thursday in an address before the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs by Mrs. Kessie Danie Ames, Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. Ames, formerly of Georgetown, Texas, is executive director of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching. She condemned County Attorney O. P. Moore's reported statement that the lynchings were "the will of the people." She had not learned that Moore denied the statement.

After Mrs. Ames' talk, Mrs. J. R. White, Coleman, stood up and cried: "Nothing in the world will protect womanhood from these brutes except lynchings."

The anti-lynching association director has based her argument on three points:

That by lynchings international influence is turned against the United States. That America is in no position to criticize brutalities in other countries when lynchings occur in this country. That American missionaries are handicapped in their attempts to teach Christianity.

Concerning Mrs. White's statement, Mrs. Ames said that white women are not involved in more than one out of 20 lynchings.

The federation's convention will end Friday.

Clifton Forge, Va., Review
November 18, 1935

THAT TEXAS LYNCHING.

There is little likelihood of any prosecution of the five hundred or more people who took part in the lynching of two colored boys in Texas last week, as we notice that the prosecuting attorney in the county where the tragedy was enacted made this statement: 'I do not call the citizens who executed these boys a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people." Prior to making use of the language quoted above, this official stated that he would vigorously prosecute those who participated, but just how he could get the consent of his mind to do this when he regarded the lynching the will of the people is beyond our comprehension. The two youths who were put to death were allegedly guilty of murdering a young white woman of high standing and it was said that if they were permitted to be tried in a court of jurisdiction that the only punishment that could be inflicted would be a term in a reformatory until they became of age, which would have meant a prison term of about four years.

The people who took the law in their own hands no doubt concluded that this penalty would not be severe enough, hence the decision to execute the colored boys without the ceremony of a court martial. Of course, they did wrong in committing murder, as charged, but as two wrongs do not make one right, we question the wisdom of lynching them without hearing any evidence as to their guilt. Every citizen is guaranteed the right of trial and it is safe to say that those who were members of the lynching party would have demanded this protection had they been charged with an offense. Based on what the prosecuting attorney said, this affair can now be regarded as a closed incident. Candidly, we hardly expect to seen any reference to it by either the newspapers or the men in authority where the lynching took place.

Lynchings - 1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4923

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER
NOV 18 1935

STRANGE SELF-DEFENSE.

The defense of those five men in Tennessee who took a negro prisoner from two officers and carried him away to his death is on a par with the testimony of the North Carolina sheriff and his deputies, who swore they could not identify a single man of the 20 or 25 who took a prisoner from them in broad daylight and lynched him, nor get the number of any of the several cars they used.

The Tennessee alleged lynchers on trial testified they shot and killed the unarmed prisoner in self defense when he started to pick up a rock, and that they had not intended to kill him but only to whip him when they took him from the officers.

If it were not so disgusting and irritating it would be amusing what yarns some people do tell when they get into a tight place in court.

Killing an unarmed negro prisoner in the hands of five armed white men in self defense! Can you beat it?

But the tale is no more absurd than many lynchers have told before and will tell in the future.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL
NOV 15 1935

Condoning A Lynching

THE county attorney at Columbus, Texas, where two negro boys were lynched this week following an attack on a white girl, has encountered some sharp disagreements with his opinion of the lynching. He is reported to have declared, "I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people." His statement that he is willing to prosecute any of the mob is considerably weakened by such an assertion.

The head of the state department of public safety remarked that "I don't believe lynchings are the will of the people, and if they are they certainly ought not to be." Public officials, particularly those charged with upholding law and prosecuting violations of law, are rashly derelict in their duty and are setting an extremely bad example when they extenuate mob violence in any manner. Pursued to its logical conclusion the statement attributed to the county attorney at Columbus is nothing less than that the public is hostile to law and in favor of anarchy. That, of course, is not true.

When Governor Rolph of California publicly commended the lynching of two white men at San Diego in 1933 he was roundly criticized throughout the country as an encourager of violence. That ought always to be the public reaction in such instances. Public officials are under the necessity of subordinating at all times their personal feelings to what they know to be the requirements of office.

ABILENE, TEX.
REPORTER
News
NOV 15 1935

An Affront to Law and Order.

The lynching of two negroes at Columbus this week was not "the will of the people," as the county attorney of that place is reported to have said.

Whether he said it or not, the will of the people is expressed in laws enacted by duly elected representatives of the people, placed on the statute books, and administered by the courts. Lynch law is an expression of the mob, not the people.

The negroes committed a heinous crime and deserved to be punished to the limit, but it was the prerogative and duty of the law to mete out that punishment. The life of the accused was forfeit anyhow; it was only the dignity of the law that was outraged by the lynchers.

As long as the law is functioning—as it inevitably would have in this particular case—lynching is unjustified in any case because it is an affront to law and order. The law cannot be upheld when it is given to the mob to administer.

[redacted]
NEWS TRIBUNE
NOV 28 1935

BORAH ON "ANTI-LYNCH" BILL

THE ill-advised agitation of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill by the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People has encountered a stiff jolt at the hands of Senator Borah in spite of the fact that he is a tentative candidate for the Republican presidential nomination and, therefore, might be expected to indulge in some pussyfooting if he is to live up to the traditions in such cases.

But Borah doesn't pussyfoot. He states flat-footedly and without reserve that were he to become President and were this so-called anti-lynch bill to come before him, he would veto it without hesitation. He insists, as so many others have done, that it is unconstitutional and the argument that "the negro voters hold the balance of power in some states," does not alter his position.

This is a courageous yet highly proper stand and will enhance the reputation of Borah for candor, regardless of any effect it may have upon the colored vote. The Costigan-Wagner bill is not only unconstitutional but it is unwise, unfair and merits the condemnation of all unprejudiced persons who believe in fair play.

The bill would permit the federal government to enter the states and take charge where lynching occurs and would serve as an indictment of all responsible officials in the territory involved. It would constitute one of the most flagrant violations of state rights on record and serve to revive all the bitterness of the reconstruction period. It would incite lawlessness rather than minimize it and produce no constructive result whatever.

The view of Borah is the correct view and it should obtain in this case.

[redacted]
BANNER HERALD
NOV 26 1935

WOMEN DEPLORE LYNCHINGS

The women of the Missionary Society of the Atlanta district of the Methodist Episcopal church last week adopted resolutions condemning two lynchings which occurred recently in this state, one at Vienna and one at Moultrie. These lynchings were not occasioned by the committal of the usual crime that invariably brings on lynchings, not only in this state, but in other states, but they were both alleged to be for minor infractions of the law.

We bow our heads in shame and contrition that such things can happen among us.

"Lynching in our opinion is never excusable, but in these two cases there was not even the pretense of an excuse."

However, the action of these good ladies was unusual, especially the ordering of the resolution adopted condemning the action of the mob in both instances. The resolution, in part, reads:

"We, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta district, M. E. church, South, in quarterly session, note with deep humiliation that two lynchings have disgraced our state in the last two months; one near Vienna, another near Moultrie. Mobs have defied our laws, discredited our civilization, and mocked our religion. Continuing, these most vehement condemnation of those citizens who committed the violation of the law in lynching two negroes. The negroes may not have been guilty, but their crimes did not warrant justification of their acts. Lynchings are of a diabolical character, with the possible exception of the crime of rape. Usually, in such cases, the unwritten law is applied and the guilty party or parties are made to pay the price of their crime by giving their lives as a toll for committing the unspeakable crime which is committed upon women.

Reviewing the Vienna and Moultrie cases, the resolution continued:

"Therefore, we register our unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances, our protest to officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob, and our shame for a Christian civilization so superficial as still to tolerate such savagery.

"We urge upon officers and courts their sacred obligation to uphold the constituted processes of law, and upon all religious, educational and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence."

As women are the principals in rape cases, the extracts reproduced in the foregoing teems with condemnation of lynchings irrespective of sex. While no one can condone mob violence, yet when rape is committed, the enforcement of the unwritten law may be justified, certainly, lynchings should not be resorted to for other crimes, but court procedure should be taken and such cases tried in a sane and orderly manner.

Elkin, N. C. Tribune
November 21, 1935

Nothing Will Be Done About It

Two negro boys who had confessed to criminal assault upon a high school girl in Columbus, Texas, were snatched from officers and hanged to a tree near the victim's farm home. Seven hundred persons are said to have participated in the lynching.

The lynching was termed "an expression of the will of the people," by the county attorney who said that he did not consider the citizens who executed the negroes a "mob," yet he said that he would "vigorously prosecute" any of the seven hundred who participated in the affair. But will he? With that sort of attitude it is not reasonable to expect that anything will be done about this Texas lynching. Not so you can tell it.

These negroes were in the hands of the law and headed toward a quick retribution, and as provoking as this crime was, "the will of the people" could have awaited the outcome which was as certain as death itself.

Evidently to this prosecuting attorney, sworn obligation does not count when it is obvious that it opposes any considerable number of voters. He is of that type of official to whom nothing is criminal if enough people are concerned in it. He could just as well have saved his breath in declaring that he would "prosecute," because the word has an empty and hollow meaning in his case.

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.
TIMES
NOV 17 1935

AN AFFRONT TO LAW AND ORDER

The lynching of two negroes at Columbus last week was not "the will of the people," as the county attorney of that place is reported to have said.

Whether he said it or not, the will of the people is expressed in laws enacted by duly elected representatives of the people, placed on the statute books, and administered by the courts. Lynch law is an expression of the mob, not the people.

The negroes committed a heinous crime and deserved to be punished to the limit, but it was the prerogative and duty of the law to mete out that punishment. The life of the accused was forfeited anyhow; it was only the dignity of the law that was outraged by the lynchers.

As long as the law is functioning—as it inevitably would have in this particular case—lynching is unjustified in any case because it is an affront to law and order. The law cannot be upheld when it is given to the mob to administer.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 8 1935

Lynching Study Group Named By State Bar

It Will Study Methods of Preventing Lynching During Year

RALEIGH, Dec. 7.—(AP)—Roy L. Deal of Winston-Salem, a former superior court judge, will head a special committee of the North Carolina Bar association to study the subject of prevention of lynching during the next year and offer recommendation to the next bar convention.

The lynching study committee was named today by J. M. Broughton of Raleigh, president of the bar association, along with other regular and special committees, completing the set-up of the organization.

Prof. James H. Chadbourn, Jr., of Chapel Hill, who has made a particular study of lynchings and who has done extensive magazine writing on the subject, will serve as secretary of this committee. Other members will be: J. Wilson of Elizabeth City, George C. Green of Weldon, Robert M. Gantt of Durham and Walter H. Woodson of Salisbury.

C. R. Whrton of Greensboro was named by Broughton as chairman of a special committee to study and make recommendations concerning summary judgment law with a view of proposing legislation to shorten civil litigation and avoid frequent delays that result from frivolous or dilatory pleading. A resolution calling for the study was passed at the last association convention.

Albert Coates of Chapel Hill will head a committee on criminal law and its enforcement, a comparison group to that headed by Whraton.

The committee on revision of the corporation law of North Carolina will be composed of Prof. M. S. Breckenridge of Chapel Hill, chairman; John H. Anderson, Jr., of Raleigh; Ozmer L. Henry of Lumberton, Kempt B. Battle of Rocky Mount, and Charles A. Hines of Greensboro.

William B. McGuire of Charlotte will head the special committee on the junior bar, the first in the history of the association. Other members will be: Edward L. Cannon of Durham, M. A. James of Asheville, W. J. Hooks of Kenly, E. D. Kuykendall, Jr., of Greensboro, W. J. Adams, Jr., of Rocky Mount, and R. S. Averitt of Winston-Salem.

Junior Bar associations already have been organized in a number of cities of the state, including Durham, Winston-Salem, Asheville Charlotte, Smithfield and Raleigh.

The special committee on American citizenship will be: Oscar Leach of Raleigh, chairman; T. L. Johnston, of Asheville, Charles P. Green of Louisburg, Judge Marshall T. Spears of Durham John W. Aiken of Raleigh, R. S. Pruette of Wadesboro, and D. C. Barnes of Murfreesboro.

J. Y. Jordan, Jr., of Asheville will head the committee on unauthorized practice of law, which has the following other members: Joseph L. Carlton of Raleigh, Fred P. Parker, Jr., of Goldsboro, Roy L. Deal of Winston-Salem, and Carroll W. Weathers of Raleigh.

Jordan's committee will study the proposed passage of legislation designed to prevent individuals who have not been licensed and corporations who cannot be licensed from engaging in law practice.

Chairman of other special committees named by Broughton are: James G. W. MacLamroch of Greensboro, justices of the peace, S. Bradway of Durham, legal aid; H. C. Horack of Durham, cooperation with the American Law Institute; R. H. Sykes of Durham, selection of judgts; Edward L. Cannon of Durham, cooperation between attorneys and banks.

Chairmen of general or standing committees for the year will be: W. F. Taylor of Goldsboro, admission to membership; L. R. Varner of Lumberton, judiciary; Will S. Smith of Raleigh, legislation and law reform; Justin Miller of Durham, uniform state laws; Ben F. Parham of Oxford, legal education and admission to the bar; Justice Michael Schenck of Raleigh, courts and court procedure; Andrew Joyner, Jr., of Greensboro, memorials; Joseph B. Cheshire, Jr., of Raleigh, grievances; G. H. Hastings of Winston-Salem, legal ethics and professional conduct.

The executive committee of the association is composed of President Broughton, Henry M. London, secretary of the association, ex officio; E. Earle Rives of Greensboro, chairman; Fred I. Sutton of Winston, B. M. Covington of Wakesboro, Nat S. Crews of Winston-Salem, F. E. Winslow of Rocky Mount, and Allston Stubbs of Durham.

Lynchings-1935

Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4924

TARBORO, N. C.
SOUTHERNER

NOV 14 1935

Will of the People

As far as newspapers are concerned, the average Southern lynching follows a well-defined pattern. The Negro of the case assaults a white woman. A group of people customarily referred to as a "mob" swings the culprit to a tree. The sheriff says he is unable to identify any of the members of the "mob". The editor plays up stories about the affair on the front page and rehashes the same old stuff about the disintegration of the American people as reflected in their disrespect for lawful processes on the editorial page. The spirit of the "mob" is decried, the inability of the authorities to bring the lynchers to justice is lambasted and anyone who happens to voice the view that the lynchers were, after all, meting out justice has a journalistic bomb planted under him.

There is perhaps but one other occurrence which is treated by newspapers with more rigid adherence to a pattern, and that is the death of a citizen. So-and-so died of such-and-such at a certain time and funeral services will be held from his home or his church with burial following at this or that cemetery with Rev So-and-So in charge. Then his career, the his survivors and finally the pall bearers. It is all just so.

In the case of the death notices such treatment is desirable. Originality is not needed or expected. But why lynchings should stick to a cut-and-dried formula is a journalistic enigma. Therefore this newspaper aborts to follow it and to express its real views, unhampered by custom, upon the country's latest lynching, which occurred in Texas when two young Negroes were hanged by a "mob" for the brutal murder of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, high school valedictorian, whom they confessed they criminally attacked and drowned.

Let it be admitted, to begin with, that it would have been better had the lynching not occurred and the law taken its course. That point settled, let it also be admitted that in some respects the mob served the ends of justice better than the law could have and that therefore the lynching is not wholly to be decried. A so-called lynching mob, be reminded, may not and frequently is not a bunch of wild emotional, unreasoning hoodlums; it may be and often is a group of resolute, calm but determined citizens who refuse to tolerate the cruel murder of their women and the possible delay and laxity in administering punishment by lawful processes. As the county attorney said of the Texas affair, the lynching was the "will of the people." The law also, in a democracy, is the will of the people. Under this definition then, the lynching method and the statutory method become synonymous, with the former possessing the undisputable advantage of quickness, impressiveness and completeness without expense to the state.

This is not to be interpreted as a condonement of lynching. There are many factors which make it contain more of the wrong than of the right. But it is an attempt to show that there is something, even though not much, to be said on the side of the lynchers. This newspaper does not approve lynching; at the same time, it refuses to follow a pattern which requires that it believe lynching contains no points in its favor whatever. There is, in fact, considerable to be said for it, even if not enough to justify it.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.
EXPRESS

NOV 16 1935

LYNCHING PREVENTED—THE NEW ORDER IN GEORGIA

Presenting a sharp, significant contrast to the recent mob violence in Colorado County, (Texas), Georgia authorities have just demonstrated how a lynching threat should be handled.

After a negro, charged with murdering a white man, had been arrested in Florida, and while angry groups bent upon lynching were seeking him, the officers lodged the prisoner in a county jail "somewhere in South Georgia." Then as the trial-date approached, the sheriff called for and obtained a National Guard escort to bring the accused from Albany to Moultrie. The one-day trial was held under State troops' protection; the negro was convicted and sentenced to the electric chair and December 10 was fixed as the execution-date.

Not satisfied with even that demonstration of speedy justice, however, the mob attempted to wrest the prisoner from the troops as they took him from the courthouse to State's prison. The soldiers beat the attackers back with rifle-butts and finally were compelled to use tear-gas; but they took the prisoner safely to his cell, for legal execution.

The improvement in the country-wide lynching record in recent years must be credited largely to courageous, resourceful thwarting of the mob by sheriff or Governor, sometimes with State troops to aid. For several years past, the Commission on Interracial Co-operation — with headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia—has bestowed gold medals upon sheriffs and other officers for extraordinary courage and resourcefulness in resisting mob violence.

Several Texas officers have earned that honor. One example is Sheriff Harrington's action in averting a lynching in Grimes County last year.

The State Department of Public Safety should investigate the Texas lynching and bring the perpetrators to bar. Should the State officials do nothing about it—the usual course in such circumstances—as Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta (a native Texan) lately told them, it would appear that they are "either helpless or don't care."

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

NOV 29 1935

BORAH AND LYNCHING

MORAL courage is transcendent bravery. In a politician it is a most striking and rare exhibition of civic virtue. When a political candidate for the presidency takes a stand under threat of political reprisal on the part of a minority, he merits the highest commendation of every citizen who admires courage of conviction in those honored with the power of office.

It is quite generally conceded that Senator Borah will be an aspirant for nomination at the hands of his party. Convinced of the probability of his leading the Republican party in the coming elections, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People attempted to put the Idaho senator "on the spot" by rather impertinently sounding his views on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

With accustomed frankness, Borah informed the colored association he had opposed the anti-lynching bill as an invasion of state rights and unconstitutional, adding, if honored with the presidency he would veto such legislation.

The colored association, after pointing out to the senator that he had the dubious honor of having been "twice the executioner" of the bill, rather arrogantly demanded of him whether he were proud of his handiwork.

Then, to force home its point, the association threatened political reprisal by reminding the senator of the negro voting strength in certain border and Northern states. It is not astonishing Borah's reply dubbed the query of the colored association as a "corrupt and shameless question."

The South joins with Senator Borah in his expression of horror of lynching. It knows, too, that race riots recently have occurred more frequently north than south of the line. It deplores both as contrary to proper procedure. The South cares no more for mob violence than any other section of the nation.

But it understands its problems and demands its police powers remain intact from federal interference under provisions of the constitution. It understands fully the type of mentality which dictated the character of the letter received from the colored association by Senator Borah.

The bluntness of Borah's answer will be admired by citizens generally who have long deplored the weakness of political office-holders when faced by threats of organized minorities.

As a presidential possibility, Borah looms larger for his outspoken statement of position to the impertinence of the National Association for Advancement of Colored Peonle.

GREENWOOD, S. C.
INDEX JOURNAL

NOV 27 1935

ENDORSED

This statement from The New nd Courier is endorsed:

Senator Borah's answer to Walter White, negro leader and author of the Costigan-Wagner bill, that the bill is unconstitutional and that if President he would veto it, places him as the foremost man, Democrat or Republican, in any party, outside of the South, defending the State right, the Southern right, of each State to manage its own affairs.

While Mr. Borah does not say in this answer (it was not necessary) that he would oppose a constitutional amendment his record as a State rights man is enough. He voted against the Costigan-Wagner bill. A few years ago, when he was in Augusta, Ga., he made a statement that was the clearest and plainest that any man in the front political rank has made in defense of the position upon which government by Southern white people rests.

This statement of facts is also important and should be pondered:

The President, Mr. Roosevelt, could have stopped the bill by a word—which he did not utter. Newspaper correspondents, Pearson and Allen, published that he favored it. That has been privately denied. They published that Mrs. Roosevelt strongly favored the bill and was active for it. That has not been denied.

Anyway we all know that the Democratic senators from Northern States supported the bill, that all or nearly all of them from the border States supported.

There stood the South deserted by all save Southern senators —and Borah.

Get this straight: Lynching is without excuse. The South knows lynching is without excuse. The South does not undertake to defend lynching. The South wants law and order and protection for the humblest citizen regardless of his color.

But when the State is asked to give up its authority over its citizens to the Federal government in all cases where so many as three men make an attack on another then the South or any other section as for that matter would better call a halt,

If the Wagner-Costigan bill becomes law, States might as well give up their Statehood. Their end has come.

GREEN BAY, WIS.
PRESS GAZETTE

NOV 27 1935

BORAH LOOKS UP.

Walter White, Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, aimed an arrow at Senator Borah last week but advanced the senator's candidacy for the presidency by demonstrating that he is a man of character and not a weakling.

Mr. White, with his Association, alarmed at the increase in lynchings in this country, sought through congress a law to lay liability in heavy damages upon the people of every state where mob violence terminated in death. It seemed to Mr. White, and to many others, the only practical way of compelling the South to furnish protection to black men accused of crime. It would be a mighty effective way of stopping lynchings, possibly the only practical plan that could be devised. But Mr. White and his Association were not using the correct procedure to obtain the desired end.

Senator Borah, when the matter came before the senate, declared that it was in violation of the constitution. There appears to be no shadow of doubt but what the senator is right. The congress of the United States is invested nowhere with authority to create a liability for damages for a wrong committed within a state, much less to create a liability upon the part of that state. So majestic were considered the rights of the states when the Union was formed that no privilege was granted to an individual to sue a state although one state may sue another.

The Association for the Advancement of Colored Men would have advanced much further had it accepted Senator Borah's advice that no right such as it wished could be created without an amendment to the constitution.

But now, blindly and recklessly, it is trying to arouse "the 12 million American negroes," whom it assumes to represent, against a man whose only offense was that he was honest. The Association appears to think that every candidate for president must needs be a weakling, someone who will cajole and palaver it, and then lead it into and lose it in a swamp.

Senator Borah's reply was significant:

"I shall vote against such measures as long as I am a member of the senate, and should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being president of the United States and such a bill should reach me, under my oath and in the light of my convictions, I would unhesitatingly veto it."

Senator Borah apparently is reviving the oldfashioned notion that those who swore to support the constitution should support the constitution.

WINSTON SALEM, N.C.
JOURNAL

DEC 6 1935

The South and Lynching

The interracial problems of the Southern states must be solved by Southerners if they are to be solved properly or at all. The white man and the Negro—working hand in hand with each other in the same locality and environment and dealing one with the other in understanding, justice, and equity—can extirpate the evils of lynching, race prejudice, and other malevolent influencs which hinder the progress of the South.

This thought is inspired by an open letter which James E. Shephard, president of the North Carolina College for Negroes, at Durham, has written to the several governors of the Southern states.

In this epistle, remarkable for its temperate tone, its candor and appreciation of of the realities embraced in the Southern lynching drama, Dr. Shephard declares that no Negro born and reared in the South relishes the idea of running to Washington for remedies that lie at home. No federal anti-lynching legislation is necessary if the governors of the Southern states will take a firm, resolute stand against this atrocity. Sufficient laws already exist by which lynching can be driven out of the country, provided they are properly enforced.

He proposes that this question be discussed at a conference of governors such as is held every year, with the thought of having these state executives devise ways of bringing home to their constituents the essential treason which lies in every act of surrender to the mob.

At the same time, Dr. Shephard intimates, the white man of the South can do much to eradicate the cause of lynching by investing more equitable sums in Negro education. As the colored man becomes better educated, as also in the case of whites, he moves farther and farther away from crime.

In the last paragraph of his letter, Dr. Shephard draws a conclusion which must appeal to the sound sense of the thinking Southern mind in referring to the attitude of the intelligent Negro of the South toward the racial problem:

"We desire that our own neighbors and We must work out our destiny and salvafriends enforce the law and if our South- tion in the South by mutual confidence and ern governors will take a stand against respect each for the rights of the others." lynching, and protect prisoners at any cost—this dreadful evil will soon be eradicated from American life and there will be no need of a federal anti-lynching law on the statute books—to needlessly add to unnecessary statutes and legislation which even the federal government is powerless to enforce, nor even has the desire to do so. It is in this spirit I appeal to you.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4925

Foley, Ala., Onlooker
January 31, 1935

CRIME OF LYNCHING

An Alabama negro, elected to Congress from Illinois on the Democratic ticket, whose recent visit to this state was featured with front page write-ups in Birmingham daily newspapers has introduced a bill in the House to "assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every state the equal protection of the laws," and especially to "punish" the crime of lynching.

Lynching may be a crime. But we believe the people of the South, and the North as well, would give more hearty support to anti-lynching laws introduced by white men instead of black ones. Not that the color has anything to do with the bill introduced, but if it is intended to receive support necessary it should have originated from another section. Most especially in view of the recent outrageous autrocities committed which have preceeded lynch acts.

Lake Charles, La. Press
January 25, 1935

Prevented Lynching

For some years Tuskegee Institute has kept an accurate record of lynchings in the United States. Knowledge of the facts surrounding lynching is considered an important part of any intelligent effort to check this lawless American custom.

The record for 1934 has one particularly encouraging feature, in addition to the fact that there were only 15 lynchings as compared with 28 in 1933. The cheering fact is that so many lynchings were prevented. On 74 different occasions angry mobs gathered for the purpose of lynching somebody. And each time force or strategy on the part of public officials dispersed or held the mob in check until the danger was past. It has been the lack of a determined stand on the part of officers of the law which permitted lynching to become so common.

Madisonville, Ky. Messenger
February 1, 1935

THERE WAS NO LYNCHING

At Bradford, Ala., a Negro accused of an attack on a miner's wife was surrounded by 200 armed miners and a lynching seemed certain. But, relates an Associated Press dispatch: "W. C. Chase, mine superintendent, and C. E. Patterson, commissary cashier, persuaded the crowd to surrender the Negro to officers."

Chase and Patterson were only two and apparently the mob had a majority of 198. But the two had great allies, to wit, courage and common sense, and these qualities held the balance of power. The incident at Bradford is merely a new illustration of a truth long known to observers of such things—the truth that two brave and intelligent men are usually enough to prevent a lynching.

Which leads to the inevitable deduction that when lynchings do occur it is because of the lack, on the spot, of even two bold men with brains.

ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR

FEB 2 1935

On Preventing Lynchings

Two Southern newspapers recently have given timely and thoughtful discussions of the lynching problem and of possible measures to prevent mob violence. The Birmingham Age-Herald emphasizes the need of some action by the Southern states to curb lynchings and forestall legislation by Congress that might be prejudicial to the South, and The Louisville Courier-Journal likewise comments on the responsibility resting upon state authorities after describing an incident that took place in Alabama in which a lynching was narrowly averted.

The Age-Herald says:

"Last Monday Senator Costigan directed attention to the bill which he and Senator Wagner are sponsoring, and had read into the record the contents of the measure which he said is substantially the same that received the approval of the judiciary committee at the last session of Congress. That proposal did not come up for action in the Senate, largely because Southern Senators were opposed to its consideration. It is highly questionable that they will be able to make themselves equally felt this time. The Claude Neal lynching has given a special momentum to sentiment for federal legislation in the premises. That means that the affair is most likely to be fought out on the floor of the Senate.

"Southern Senators can be relied upon to leave nothing undone to prevent enactment. But as matters stand, they are up against an ominous situation. The tide is running against them, and will continue to do so to an overwhelming extent, unless the Legislatures of this section take steps to strengthen their own laws on the score of lynching. A very clear obligation rests on our General Assembly to scrutinize the Alabama statutes for the purpose of implementing them as much as possible. We have anti-lynching laws, which in the hands of an aggressive Governor, or under the pressure of a determined public opinion, can serve as a deterent. The trouble is that we cannot usually be sure of having either force at work

"Governor Graves has shown his courage in this respect, during his first administration. He can be expected to toe the mark again, whenever the occasion arises. But that assurance does not make less desirable such additions or amendments to existing statutes as shall operate to drive home to all concerned the serious consequences of a lynching bee. There are too many loopholes in the arrangement we have. There is lacking that immediacy between a mob's action and the penalties therefor which ought to exist as a warning to would-be lynchers and the communities in which lynchings take place. We ought to have, as a state law, pretty much what the Costigan-Wagner bill provides, by way of establishing accountability and meting out punishment.

"How much better off would our representatives and Senators be, if they could cite this step in the direction of state and local responsibility! At this hour, when so much is being done or planned at Montgomery to advance the social well-being of the state and to make government an effective agency, a modern anti-lynching statute would be thoroughly in order. It would be the best answer we can contrive to the criticisms hurled at Alabama on the score of race relations. It would help us to gain that position in the eyes of the country which for one reason or another we have lost—to our very painful disadvantage."

The Courier-Journal editorial follows:

"In Alabama the other day a frenzied mob clamored for the lives of three men, believed to be guilty of a robbery and murder at a filling station in the little Florida town of Laurel Hill. Members of the mob were convinced that they had sufficient evidence against the men to make no mistake in requiring their lives in return for those they were supposed to have taken. The law was too slow for these aroused citizens. They wanted to take justice and vengeance in their own hands.

"By a combination of good luck and the integrity of certain peace officers the men were spirited away from the place where the mob milled about, crying for blood. Once safe in Montgomery the suspects were able to establish their absolute innocence and lack of connection with the Laurel Hill crime. Two ex-convicts, out on parole confessed soon after the robbery and murder, and the case was cleared up. The men and women of the Alabama community had barely missed putting three innocent human beings to death in the most hideous and degrading fashion.

"Such outbursts of lynch fever can be curbed if the responsible authorities want to curb them. Senator Costigan of Colorado recently pointed out that the threat of a punitive federal law on lynching during the last session of Congress had a marked effect on the lynch record of the nation. 'For the five and one-half months in which the Congress was in session,' he declares, 'lynchings virtually ceased in this country. Then promptly following the adjournment of Congress which did not enact the considered legislation, the stream of lawlessness again began to flow at the rate of approximately one lynching a week, until the whole country was saturated with its revolting recitals.'

"So much for the argument of the 'inevitability' of lynching in some American communities. And so much, in the case of the men sought by the frantic Alabama mob, for the argument that lynching of suspects is ever justified."

Lynching Exhibit Will Be Opened

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—(AP)—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People announced tonight the art exhibit on lynching will be held after all.

The exhibit, called "An Art Commentary on Lynching," was first scheduled for the Jacque Seligmann Galleries. The galleries later cancelled it.

It will be held beginning Feb. 16, at the Arthur U. Newton Galleries, the Association announced.

The Seligmann Galleries, the Association said, authorized the statement that "political, economic and social pressure had been brought to bear" in causing the cancellation.

Walter White, secretary of the Association, said numerous firms offered their galleries after the announcement yesterday of the cancellation.

The exhibit is sponsored by a committee of persons prominent socially, industrially and in arts and letters.

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
FEB 13 1935

To Stop Lynchings

Since 1882 there have been 5,068 lynchings in the United States. The crime is no longer committed as frequently as it was a decade or two ago, but as long as it is permitted at all we do not escape the shameful blot. There were 28 lynchings in 1933; last year the number dropped to 16. There is more than a suspicion that the drop was occasioned by the threat of the anti-lynching bill then before congress, for it would hold counties financially liable for mob violence within their own boundaries. While that measure was pending there were no lynchings. When it was evident that congress was not inclined to act they began again.

A courageous Tennessee sheriff showed recently how lynchings could be stopped without the necessity of such a law. He held his prisoners even at the cost of the lives of several members of the mob who were shot down when they attempted to storm the jail. But such instances are rare. Usually the mob encounters little resistance to its lawless purpose. Nine of the victims last year were taken from peace officers. Once a lynching has been accomplished, rarely, if ever, are the perpetrators brought to judgment, let alone punished.

A federal measure ending this virtual immunity to justice would put a powerful check on the mob spirit. Sociological studies have established a definite relation between ignorance and poverty and lynchings. The evil should be attacked at this source. Meanwhile, the anti-lynching bill, once more before congress, should be enacted without further delay.

EDUCATION CITED AS LYNCHING CURE

Telegraph

Dr. Overton Blames Pro-Lynching for Failure to Enforce Laws

3-1-35
Macon Ga.

The cure for lynching, in final analysis, lies in sociological and psychological education rather than in legislation, Dr. Elvin Overton of the Mercer university law faculty declared last night in an address before the Macon Lawyers' club in Christ church parish house.

Dr. Overton quoted papers and statistics on the lynching problem to show that a pro-lynching sentiment in the public and frequently in law-enforcement officers, including the judiciary, is largely responsible for failure of present anti-lynching laws and blocking the enactment of more stringent ones.

He asserted that probably the most effective punitive measure against lynching occurs is fined heavily. This measure is proving succesful in South Carolina, he said. Among prevention masures, he said, probably the most effective would be a combination of mandatory change change of venue with a special term of court for trial in certain types of cases in which the lynching possibility is involved.

Definitions Vary

Dr. Overton outlined numerous legal definitions of "lynching," which vary in certain states to such an extent that restraining legislation is hindered, if not practically blocked. All legislation aimed at reducing lynchings should be designed to 'take the human element out of the trial," Dr. Overton said.

While he asserted that legislation 'may help," he declared that education sociologically and psychologically toward elimination of pro-lynching sentiment will do more to solve the problem.

Lanier Anderson, president of the Lawyers' club, and Furman Smith discussed the problem with Dr. Overton informally. Mr. Smith took issue with the idea that public sentiment is generally pro-lynching and that this sentiment is the cause for difficulty in convicting lynchers.

W. A. Bootle, dean of the Mercer law school, introduced Dr. Overton.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
EVE. TENNESSEAN
FEB 19 1935

The Law Enthroned.

After the tragic events in Shelbyville last December, Tennessee has reason to be proud of the manner in which the law was substituted for the mob in Nashville yesterday.

No disorder of any kind marred the trial of the negro boy charged with a grave offense. Under such conditions the full testimony was revealed before the jury, which required only eight minutes to return a verdict imposing the supreme penalty of death in the electric chair.

Represented by competent counsel, the negro was granted his legal rights to be heard. There was no gathering of inflamed citizens, no lives lost in seeking to enthrone Judge Lynch instead of the established law, and no burning of the courthouse.

Nashville and Davidson County waste no sympathy on this brutal attacker, but they should be proud to have set an example for proper law enforcement. Presence of the state guard was a mere precaution against violence, and there is not one scintilla of evidence that the negro failed to get a fair trial. There can be no doubt that the state will exact the penalty for his crime.

From the first Governor McAlister has taken a firm stand to uphold the law, and of all his official actions there is none that has demonstrated finer courage or a better understanding of duty. When states like Tennessee and Mississippi, which has also employed its state guard to protect the law, take their stand against mob violence, there is reason to hope that the fight to abolish this long-standing evil is being won.

Clarksdale, Miss. Register
February 14, 1935

A CONTRAST

We again yield to temptation to contrast conditions in Mississippi with those in Louisiana.

Troops were called out in Mississippi for one day to protect the Coyner negro during his trial at Cleveland. Martial law, however, was not declared in that county, nor was it thought necessary. The troops did not supersede the local civil authorities, but merely aided them.

Baton Rouge, Louisiana's capital, has been under martial law two weeks and nobody knows when civil law will be reinstated. Dictator Long hasn't decided, that parish still being somewhat rebellious.

Very few Mississippians even know what martial law means, what constitutional rights it suspends, or the extent to which it abolishes local government and authority.

We hope that few Mississippians ever will know, at least from personal experience. There's no visible prospect that they will.

Mississippi is still Mississippi and the people thereof, thank God, are still their own rulers, through their own elected judges and officials.—Jackson Clarion-Ledger.

VALDOSTA, GA
TIMES
NOV 7 1935

Wonder what's wrong in Tennessee? Five white men took a negro charged with assaulting another white man, from the officers and lynched him. That is perfectly in order, but the strange thing is that the lynchers surrendered themselves to the officers before the coroner's jury could return the usual verdict that the negro came to his death "at the hands of parties unknown."

Lynchings - 1935
Discussions

White Press, Southern

4926

Athens, Ga., Banner-Herald
August 6, 1935

LYNCHINGS ON THE INCREASE

Only five lynchings occurred in the United States during the first six months of 1935. However, there seems to be an outbreak of the lynching spirit prevailing all over the country since the month of July was ushered in. Several lynchings occurred in that month, but they were not all in the south. Other sections of the country were represented in this criminal outbreak.

The press of the country was congratulating the people on the disappearance of the crime, but the recent outbreaks has placed the percentage of lynchings in the higher bracket of former years. There may be a reason for it—the heat has been unbearable, but in our belief the wave of lynchings was prompted from the character of crimes committed.

While not all of the lynchings were prompted from the crime of rape, yet in a majority of the cases, it was rape that brought on the lynchings.

It is seldom that a lynching occurs, except for this crime. It is true that in California last week, a lynching was held on account of the murder of a policeman, but in the south, lynchings seldom occur unless someone commits the dastardly crime of rape.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

JUL 24 1935

Next to Prevention Is Cure

Florida's state attorney pledges that there will be no whitewashing in the investigation ordered by the governor into the lynching of a Negro at Fort Lauderdale last week. He is, he says, "going to the bottom" of it.

Well, if he does he will have rendered his state a great and lasting service, something like that rendered at Shelbyville, Tennessee, last year, when national guardsmen stood off first with bayonets and then with guns a mob bent on lynching a prisoner.

We recall no lynching, even no attempted lynching, in Tennessee since the state showed that it meant business.

Concord, N. C., Observer & Star
August 4, 1935

ACT OF BARBARITY

The lynching of a negro by a mob in Franklin county last Tuesday was a revolting act of barbarity and causes the law-abiding citizenry of the State to hang their heads in shame.

Every member of that cannibalistic mob should be brought to trial, for each is guilty, under the law, of murder.

But will this be the case? We commend the Governor of the State for his decision to "do all possible to bring to trial the responsible parties" but he is more or less helpless. It is a situation that develops upon the shoulders of Franklin county's law enforcement officers and law-abiding citizens. They can, if they will, bring to justice the guilty.

The atrocious incident is a blow of the worst kind to the State at large, for it is the State who receives credit for the shameful act. It smacks of cannibalism in a commonwealth that we take pride in believing enlightened and civilized.

Lynch law can never be condoned. And it is up to the people of North Carolina and the rest of the South where lynchings are known to occur to bring pressure to bear and stop such savagery. And there is only one way to do it—enforce the law to the letter in every case. Such action would put an end to these murderous acts.

Does this speak well of our state: The body of the murdered negro was left hanging for more than two hours, while a large crowd gathered, women and children among them. "Young girls were present in numbers," says a Raleigh newspaper account, "some bringing knitting and proceeding with their stitches as they discussed the crime." And it is also related that the crowd expressed itself as approving the act.

The killing of a prominent white man by the negro is shocking. But wouldn't it have been far better for the law to have dealt with this killer than for the mob? The situation is made all the more reprehensible by the fact that the negro was declared mentally unbalanced.

Franklin county, all North Carolina looks to you to bring to justice those who had a part in the shameful lynching and thus repair the great damage which has been done to our administration of justice.

High Point, N. C. Enterprise
August 4, 1935

(By W. A. BIVINS)

ARE WE FAIR TO THE NEGRO?

The status of the Negro race in the South has improved considerably. Due to the work of such leaders of the race as Booker T. Washington, Moton, and others, the Negro has been taught self-respect, and to be more worthy of respect by the whites. His education is not being neglected and he is being given a chance to show his worth in useful trades and professions. Where his record is not a catalogue of crimes and misdemeanors he stands a fair chance before the courts — that is, if he ever gets before the courts.

After all this is said we may still wonder if we are being altogether fair to the Negro. A Negro professional man recently told me that he regarded that trial of certain whites at Charlotte for alleged cruelty and criminal neglect of convicts of his race as a miscarriage of justice; and he looked upon the lynching of that crazed Negro near Louisburg last week as an unspeakable horror. In that many whites thought as he did he felt that there should be some one bold enough to speaks out in public and create such a sentiment that race discrimination should no longer exist. He felt that justice under the American constitution was supposed to be meted out to all men, regardless of race, color, condition or creed, and that it did not presuppose social equality.

We have considered the Negro in two days: First, as a joke; second, as the white man's burden. On the jocular side we have said that God must have laughed when he made the Negro, knowing as He did the colored man's propensity for fun, minstrelsy, and extreme emotionalism. And a certain preacher has said that probably a few negroes would get to Heaven, since he thought that the Lord would need certain janitors, cooks, and washer-women, of course, to look after the white robes. On the "burden" side we have recignized that the Negro since slavery has imitated our own weaknesses. But rarely for nameless crimes committed by whites among whites is mob violence resorted to; when a Negro works his fiendish purpose upon a member of the Caucasian race lynching too often follows, and investigations usually prove to be a farce. Social sins committed by whites among the negroes seldom find their way to the courts, for the Negro, both for economic and social reasons, feels that he can find no justice where the whites are so largely in the majority. But still we can say that the picture is not entirely dark. Lynching is on the wane, and becoming more sporadic. The Negro is making for himself a place in the sun. Negro spirituals, and addresses by sane members of the race are heard by people of all races from public platforms and over the radio. Tuskeegee Institute, down in Alabama, is sending forth graduates able to work with brain and brawn, and to add to our store of both literary and scientific knowledge. Such improvement invites both fairness and justice from the whites. When once we reach the point that the color line is no longer considered a joke nor a burden we shall indeed have arrived somewhere.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
AUG 1 1935

Like African Cannibals

THE outbreak of savagery in North Carolina, one of the few lynchings to occur in that State in the past decade, gives the Nazis another opportunity to advise this country to mind its own business, and to cleanse its own doorstep. Certainly it was a revolting piece of barbarity, and there can be no possible extenuation of it.

Whereas dispatches sent out by the Associated Press late Tuesday night from Louisburg, N. C., quoted SHERIFF MOORE, in whose custody the prisoner was when he was seized, as saying that there were Negroes in the mob, it is curious that the sheriff failed to mention this important matter during the first few hours that he was being questioned concerning the lynching.

The Raleigh News and Observer rushed a staff man to the scene, and published an exhaustive account. SHERIFF MOORE apparently forgot all about the Negro participants when CHARLES J. PARKER of the News and Observer asked him if he recognized any who took part. Although the mob was unmasked, and although it took the prisoner away from MOORE at noon on the main highway, the sheriff simply said he didn't know any of those in the crowd. Similarly, when the Associated Press sent its first dispatch to morning papers many hours after the crime, it had not been informed by SHERIFF MOORE that there were Negroes in the mob, for its dispatch in the early edition of the Greensboro Daily News contains no hint from him that such was the case. But sometime later he "remembered," and the country has now been advised that the mob was composed of both whites and Negroes.

The body of the murdered man was left hanging for more than two hours, while a large crowd gathered, women and girls among them. "Young girls were present in numbers," says the Raleigh paper's account, "some bringing knitting and proceeding with their stitches as they discussed the crime." It is related that the crowd "expressed itself freely in approbation of the act, at least one woman approaching close to the bleeding body and observing, 'They done exactly right.'" One of the man's toes was cut off by a souvenir hunter

All this sounds as if it might have happened in the Borneo jungle, instead of in the supposedly enlightened United States of America. How much longer is this country to undergo the disgrace of being the only "civilized" country where such things occur?

True, a formal inquiry into the lynching will be conducted in the Franklin County Courthouse, beginning today. Since a coroner's jury, impaneled at the scene, returned a verdict, after five minutes' deliberation behind a tree, that the Negro came to his death at the hands of persons unknown, we are not especially optimistic as to probable results of this investigation. The sheriff and his deputies didn't even bother to take down the license numbers of the cars which carried the mob, such an expenditure of effort having apparently been quite beyond their powers.

All we can say is, if this sort of thing continues, it is apt to mean the ultimate enactment of a Federal antilynching bill. The rest of the country will be unwilling to sit quiet indefinitely and allow the entire United States to be brought into disrepute by gangs of Southern whites whose orgies are as shocking and barbarous as those of African cannibals.

Raleigh, N. C. Observer
August 6, 1935

Law Or Anarchy

Franklin County started a gruesome procession last week. Since Govan Ward was strung up last Tuesday, in two other states three other men have been lynched by angry mobs. In every case those mobs struck at the system of justice which is the only security of us all. And yet though they may represent only mid-Summer madness of mobs, the sober thoughtful citizen may wonder from their actions if something more than brutality may not lie behind these lynchings.

For the sake of the security of our justice those guilty of lynching should be identified and punished. But there should be effort also to impress the people with confidence that if they leave the punishment of the criminal where it belongs, in the hands of the officers of the law, the criminal will be caught and promptly and properly punished. In a letter last week to The News and Observer, R. P. Knox, of Louisburg, stated that the crime of Ward which preceded the lynching was the fourth brutal crime committed in Franklin within the past year, and the three earlier crimes, in which two women were attacked and a child killed, remain unavenged by the law and "the fiends who perpetrated these dastardly crimes are still free fiends in our midst." Commenting on Mr. Knox's letter a gentleman from Halifax County reports the escape from punishment there of two killers on the ground that they were insane.

Officers who without resistance let mobs take their prisoners away from them are entitled to condemnation. But the duty of officers, from deputies to judges, to prevent lynching does not begin when the mob starts clamoring at the door of the jail. In North Carolina and in the United States we need not only officers brave enough to defend justice from mobs but also officers energetic and intelligent and incorruptible enough to so enforce the law that every citizen will be confident that the law will punish justly and swiftly all crime that occurs. There is need, too, for insistence upon the strictest proof in every case where there is plea of insanity and for law that will make it possible to shut up forever, if they cannot be destroyed as mad dogs are destroyed, those insane or idiotic killers who do succeed in evading punishment by plea of lack of mental responsibility.

There is never any excuse for lynching. But where officers fail to sternly enforce the law and swiftly punish crime, there should be no surprise if such failure grows to the shaming failure of mob law violation. When men take the law into their own hands because they think the law has failed, they merely complete that failure. They add new crime to old crime, and others too often join them after lynchings in a conspiracy of silence to prevent punishment which adds a new failure of the law to old ones.

We must have a government of law or a government of anarchy, and those who now assist the failure of law by their silence in the apprehension of lynchers will also, by demonstrating the futility of law enforcement in such a case, assist in the future failure of the law in

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD

JUL 19 1935

People In Glass Houses.

Mississippi had two more lynchings the other day, thus gaining the distinction of having had two-thirds of all the lynchings which have occurred so far this year in the United States. Of the total, six, two occurred in Louisiana and Mississippi was the scene of the remaining four.

How easy it would be, and what a temptation it is, to point the finger of scorn, to unloose maledictions upon, and to hurl stones at, our sister states. Yet, in the act of doing so, we are restrained by the thought of an ancient adage: "People who live in glass houses must not throw stones."

A picture which has been much in the news of late, and much in the minds of many North Carolinians, restrains, and reminds of the old axiom. The picture is as horrible as it is revolting. It is that of two young Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, negroes, Woodrow Wilson (Willie) Shropshire and Robert Barnes, footless ex-convicts being wheeled into the Superior courtroom at Charlotte as "Exhibit A" in the trial of Mecklenburg chain gang officials who, the state charges, tortured and neglected these two negroes while they were in solitary confinement.

"Willie" and Robert, the state contends, had to have their feet amputated because of the cruel and inhuman treatment accorded them while they were chained, standing, to cell bars in a hell hole at the Mecklenburg camp.

"Willie" Shropshire, testifying at the trial of Prison Camp "Boss" Little, Guard Rape and the prison doctor, McLaughlin, swore, in part:

> We were stood up in front of the bars. Our arms were stuck through the bars and our hands were handcuffed on the outside. We could not pull our hands back through the bars to untie our shoes or do anything.
>
> When we were put up each morning, they took a biscuit, cut it half-in-two, gave me one-half and Robert the other half. They gave us about a half an inch of water out of a tin pint cup. They gave us another half a biscuit apiece at night and a small drink of water. That's all we got.
>
> We screamed and cried all day for something to eat, for some fire and some water and for them to take us down. We told them our feet were freezing, but they never done anything about it.
>
> I told Captain Little about it and begged him to get a doctor. He told me my feet would be all right and the doctor would be out in a few days. He said to me, "Why did you come up here anyhow to drink up all our good water? I didn't send for you. Why didn't you stay at home?"

Do you believe that?

The defendants under oath absolutely deny it.

It is for a jury to say whether the chain gang boss, guard and doctor are guilty or innocent.

Irrespective of what the verdict may be, it will be difficult to banish the picture of those footless negroes. And the thought will remain, or at least it will remain with the Record, that the state, admittedly, has in the name of prison punishment indulged in acts that were patently wrongful, cruel and inhumane.

We shall hurl no stones at Mississippi and Louisiana today. There mobsters ran amuck. Here, it appears, the state itself is on trial.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
NOV 18 1935

The Self-Defense of Five Against One.

The strange lynching over in Tennessee last week which was followed by the stranger surrender of the five participants and their immediate trial has produced still one more strange feature. It is a plea of self-defense. These five men had taken a negro away from two officers of the law and had driven him out into the country intending, they said, to whip him but not to kill him. The car was stopped about five miles from town.

"Get out," said Luther Dotson, "we are going to give you a whipping."

"You ain't going to whip me," the negro is sworn to have replied and to have reached for a rock that lay on the roadside. Dotson fired, killing the negro.

If white supremacy has reached such a state that five white men, of daring and strength proven by their having wrested a prisoner from two white officers, cannot defend themselves against one unarmed black man without having to shoot him, then white supremacy is hardly worth maintaining. Let the jury take that into consideration.—Charlotte News.

Lynchings-1935
Discussion.

White Press, Southern.

4927

Ft. Payne, Ala., Journal
May 22, 1935

LYNCHING DECREASE

The south has cause to rejoice hat their senators were successful n filibustering the Sostigan-Wagner anti-lynching out of considera-ion for this session at least.

All right-thinking individuals op-ose mob violence in any form. Lynching is murder. It violates the aw of God and man.

We agree with Senator Byrnes who declared on the senate floor hat he believed the enactment of he anti-lynching bill would in-rease rather than decrease lynch-ngs.

Lynchings have declined from 231 n 1892 to a total of only 15 in 1934 while that is 15 lynchings too many yet the trend is definitely away rom them and officers of the law re doing more effective work than ver in preventing mob action. This means that the viewpoint of he people on lynchings is chang-ng and that the day will come when lynching will be as dead as dueling, which at one time had such a hold upon the people.

The passage of an anti-lynching bill would undoubtedly delay the fine progress being made toward wiping out entirely the evil of lynching.— Vicksburg Post-Herald

Jacksonville, Fla. Journal
May 18, 1935

Democratic Women To Discuss Lynching

What Southern women will do to prevent lynchings will be discussed before members of the Duval County Democratic Women's organization at 10:30 a. m. Thursday at the Mayflower hotel, Mrs. H. Willis McFadden, director, said today.

The Aim and Program of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching will be the topic of Mrs. W. P. Cornell, chairman of the association's Florida council.

Jean Henderson, state governor of the Pilot's club, business and professional women's organization, will make a report on crime.

She is chairman of a committee of the Democratic women for investigation of crime conditions.

The meeting will be the last one to be held by the organization until the early fall, Mrs. McFadden said today.

Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch
May 20, 1935

Virginia Lynching Ban Held Effective Bar to 'Barbarism'

Virginia is through with lynching "unless some officer goes to sleep at his post," according to L. R. Reynolds, director of the Virginia Commission on Interracial Co-operation, which will hold its sixteenth annual Statewide conference at St. Paul's Church tomorrow.

The State has the legal machinery and is developing a public sentiment which can outlaw lynching as a "relic of barbarism," Mr. Reynolds said yesterday after issuing an invitation to the public to attend morning, afternoon and evening sessions of the conference.

"Virginia is making encouraging progress in recognizing and discharging her obligation to her Negro people," he continued. "It would be a disservice for one who is supposed to know the facts to give the impression that Virginia, or any other section of the country, has met this obligation in full."

Dr. M. Ashby Jones, widely known Baptist minister of Atlanta, will be the principal speaker at the meeting in the church tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. On the same program will be Dr. Isaac Fisher, editor of "The Southern Workman," a Hampton Institute publication. Lieutenant-Governor James H. Price will preside in the absence from town of Governor Peery, and the Hampton quartet and the Sabbath Glee Club of Richmond will sing.

The conference will open with a morning session at 70 o'clock, to be followed by an afternoon session at 3 o'clock, both in the parish house of the church and both to be devoted chiefly to round table discussions of various interracial problems.

Dr. R. E. Blackwell, president of Randolph-Macon College, will preside during the day sessions. In the morning, William Shands Meacham will speak on "Making the Press a Constructive Force in Race Relations," and there will be round tables on rural rehabilitation, home subsistence prospects, tenancy and related topics. Howard Harlan, Dean R. B. Pinchbeck of the University of Richmond, and H. M. McMannaway of Staunton are scheduled to speak briefly. There will be an art exhibit by Dr. W. A. Cooper of Charlotte, N. C.

To Consider Adult Education

W. D. Gresham of the State Department of Education and J. A. Oliver of the Negro Organization Society will speak on "Progres in Transportation of Negro School Children" in the afternoon, while the round-table discussions will deal with adult educational programs and nursery schools. Reports of special inter-racial projects conducted through the churches, young people's forums, schools and colleges will be made.

Dr. Jones, former pastor of Leigh Street Baptist Church and well known here, is a son of the late Dr. J. William Jones, chaplain on "Stonewall" Jackson's staff. He was one of the founders of the inter-racial movement in the South 16 years ago and now is honorary president of the commission.

Dr. Fisher, a disciple of the late Booker T. Washington, also was one of the founders. For two years he was a traveling fellow in research in race relations for the Guggenheim Foundation of New York, and for nine years was principal of the State College for Negroes in Arkansas. He is an essayist of distinction and has won more than forty national contests.

Tallahassee, Fla. Democrat
June 17, 1935

Women Are Wrong About Lynching Law.

Members of the federation of women's clubs, returning from the Detroit convention revealed that the entire delegation from Florida supported birth control and anti-lynching resolutions.

We cheerfully concede that the first proposition is peculiarly within the woman's field and we have no comment to make on the stand taken by federation members.

But we regret the necessity of disagreeing with the federation on the anti-lynching bill.

The Daily Democrat has maintained a firm position for law and order and against extra legal methods of inflicting punishment upon those who offend society.

Our stand against lynching is no less firm than that of the federation of women's clubs.

But we are in sharp disagreement on the remedy suggested in a bill pending before congress and which was endorsed by the federation. This bill would penalize the taxpayers of the county where each lynching took place.

It requires but a little thought to realize that such a penalty would be unfair and would fail to serve the purpose.

In the first place the membership of mobs is seldom drawn heavily from property taxpayers. Those who pay no property taxes would not be hindered by the penalty. In the second place, it is seldom possible to determine who took part in a lynching or where it was held. An example is the recent unfortunate incident in Marianna. The victim was taken from an Alabama jail and left in the Marianna court yard. Where was the victim lynched and by whom? Does anyone know?

Should the taxpayers of Jackson county be penalized for an act which may have been committed in Alabama? Or should the taxpayers of some Alabama county be penalized for an act in which their own residents had no part?

LYNCHBURG, VA.
NEWS
NOV 15 1935

THE BLACKEST OF THEM ALL

Two Negroes are lynched in Texas by a mob of seven hundred persons including several women.

Usually when that happens the authorities express strong disapproval sometimes indignation, and promise to do everything in their power to bring the culprits to justice. They seldom do, but that's another story On this case, however, the authorities, at least one of them, condone the lynching. It was not a mob, but the people, says the county attorney It was not a lynching, but an execution. The lynching was "an expression of the will of the people," and that being the case he is not going to do anything about it.

What he means is that he is not going to place his job in jeopardy by discharging his duty. Public officials have proved themselves cheap politicians before but there has never been one as cheap as this man, He is false to his oath, false to manhood. The lynchers are murderers, but he is worse. He is a hypocritical defender of murderers, an apologist for their crime, and a party to it.

Columbia, S. C. Record
June 17, 1935

LYNCHING AND INNOCENCE.

It is no province of laymen to sit in judgment on the decisions of the supreme court as they relate to the law, the law being what the supreme court says it is. And, in the light of the heretofore declared law on the subject, the justness of the decision, overturning the directed verdict in the case of Mary Green v. Greenville couty and requiring a new trial at which the issue may be submitted to a jury, is not to be questioned; it is not the important issue, except perhaps to Mary Green, herself, widow of George Green, unoffending negro who was killed in his house by a Greenville mob on the night of November 16, 1933.

But it is important that no narrow definition of what constitutes a lynching within the meaning of the state statute penalizing a county for the breakdown of orderly legal processes shall be permanently adopted. The purpose of the statute, allowing the estate of a mob victim to recover $2,000 damages from the county, is to bring home to the law-abiding citizens of the county their responsibility for the maintenance of law and order in all cases of mob violence, thereby tending to discourage any resort to mob law, not merely in certain cases.

In the instance of the slaying of George Green there is some doubt under the definitions of lynching adopted whether Green was accused of crime and whether therefore he was "lynched" or merely murdered by the robed and hooded mob. The testimony was, as the supreme court points out, susceptible of two inferences, "(1) was George Green killed by a mob by reason of his having been charged with or suspected of some crime?, (2) was he killed (by a mob) on account of the bitter feeling aroused against him growing out of his refusal to vacate the premises occupied by him." If there was any accusation of crime then it was a lynching, but if not then simply murder and no penalty upon the county.

The distinction is of course a distinction without a difference to the mob victim; in either case he is dead and if the statute is to serve its purpose of discouraging resort to mob violence no distinction should be made. It is ironic if nothing worse to penalize a county for the lynching of a person accused of murder, for example,—as Green, the victim in Greenville, was not—and to refuse damages for the lynching of a labor organizer—which Green was not—accused of nothing more heinous than a belief in the federal and state constitutions. And there is always county responsibility in any case of mob violence, whether there be some supposed law violation involved or not. The victim may be innocent, the county or state never. The slaying of Green was not the first instance of resort to mob law in Greenville county, not the first instance of the attempt by mobs to make their own law and punish for it in Greenville. And Green it seems likely, would never have been slain—whether it be lynching or murder—if Greenville county had not acquiesced in these preceding demonstrations of the mob spirit—aimed at hotel bell boys accused of selling liquor and at labor organizers accused of being communists.

But as the law now stands it isn't a lynching unless some crime is charged against the victim, lynching being, as the court declared in the case of Kirkland v. Allendale county, "merely a descriptive phrase which 'is universally understood to signify the illegal infliction of punishment by a combination of persons for an alleged crime.'"

And this definition, which is neither new, nor even a South Carolina invention, though adequate enough for some purposes falls short of essential justice if the intent and purpose of the state constitution, Article VI, Section 6, are to be carried out, the important thing being not the $2,000 in exemplary damages but the maintenance of law and order. For it ignores what every student of mobs and their ways knows—mobs are none too careful in their selection of victims and are as likely as not to pick a perfectly innocent person, accused of no crime greater than having some idea or belief differing from the ideas or beliefs of the mob. It penalizes a good reputation.

Perhaps the trouble is with the constitution which itself limits the recovery of damages merely to those cases "of lynching where death ensues" when it should have made provision for the penalty in all cases of mob violence. If so the constitution should be amended to remedy the oversight. There is, incidentally, another curious result of phraseology in that Article VI, Section 6; it provides for the ouster of officers who through "negligence, permission or connivance" permit the lynching of "any prisoner lawfully in the charge, custody or control of any officer," which seems to indicate that an officer would not be liable to lose his office for conniving even at the lynching of a person illegally or unlawfully taken into charge, custody or control.

There can be no temporizing with mobs if the states are to maintain jurisdiction. Either South Carolina will, without drawing its definitions too finely, do what it may to prevent mob violence and to punish mob members or it will eventually see the federal government step in to attempt to do what South Carolina ought to have been able to do better.

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

JUL 24 1935

As TRIBUNE READERS See It.

TAMPAN'S PREDICTION VERIFIED IN FORT LAUDERDALE LYNCHING

L. L. White, of Tampa, offers one reason for the Fort Lauderdale lynching:

"Three years ago, I was working in Pompano, Fla., when an aged, palsied, practically helpless merchant was waylaid on his way home at night and clubbed to death for a few dollars.

"Four negroes, each about 20, confessed the crime and proved their confession by telling where the money and the bloody clubs used in the killing were hidden. This confession was made to a mob who promptly turned the killers over to Broward county authorities.

"They were convicted with no more than the usual delay—then came the usual appeals, writs of error, and bunk, and finally, I believe, the International Labor Defense League butted in. I do not know if these vicious beasts are still enjoying country life at Raiford or if they have ever paid the penalty. If so, it was more than two years before justice caught up with her job.

"I predicted then that if there should be another serious crime in Broward county within five years it would be settled without benefit of law or lawyers. And so, a lynching at Fort Lauderdale.

"An honest investigation must go back to the Pompano murder and the delays, reprieves, pardons and general failure of the law to mete out punishment promptly. I would suggest to the Governor's investigators that they find out why the mob refrained from stringing up a shyster lawyer or two. It will happen sometime."

ORLANDO, FLA.
SENTINEL
JUL 21 1935

The Lauderdale Lynching

THOSE OFFICERS WHO surrendered the Ft. Lauderdale negro to a crowd of lynchers Friday evidently did not have the courage to defend their prisoner.

Criminal assault has been considered an offense punishable by lynching in the south, but an attack with only penknife wounds, hardly calls for such drastic action.

When an officer takes charge of a prisoner, he is in duty bound to give him protection, be he guilty or innocent. The law says he is to have a fair and impartial trial.

If a mob knows an officer means to hold his prisoner, it will seldom go to the extreme of having men killed, that a prisoner may be lynched.

Attorneys are partly responsible for mobs taking the law into their own hands. Delays of court trials and tricks pulled by smart lawyers, in all too many cases permit guilty persons to escape punishment.

If the courts would speed up justice, permitting no loop holes thru which culprits might slip, lynchings would diminish.

The affair at Ft. Lauderdale will remain a blot against the good name of Florida. For the investigation, if there is one, will, as they always have been, be a mere sham.

Lynchings—1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4928

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
POST

MAR 14 1935

Boorish Humor

The prosecuting attorney of Marshall County, Mississippi, refuses to call a special session of the Grand Jury to investigate the hanging of a Negro prisoner because "authorities are not sure whether it was a lynching or a suicide."

Officers were notified two hours before the man was killed that a lynching party was on its way to the jail.

Mississippi white men who listen, tongue in cheek, to a burlesque appeal for law and order may have little concern for the life of a humble Negro.

But aside from the moral and legal aspects of a condoned lynching, it is dangerous to allow public officers to mock the law.

If public officials are allowed to wink at lawlessness in the form of mob violence, they will wink at it when it is of more direct danger to all classes of the population.

Officials who made the suicide quip thought they were getting off a fine piece of wit. As a matter of fact they were making themselves stupidly offensive to all thoughtful citizens.

This was the third lynching since Jan 1, the other two being in Louisiana. It is the second interstate lynching within a year, the first being the unspeakably savage killing of Claude Neal in Florida last October. It is the ninety-sixth lynching in the past five years.

* * *

The lynch evil is a cankerous social disease, but Congress has a remedy, if not a cure. It is the anti-lynching bill which would make such mob murders Federal offenses and hold counties financially liable for them.

On Tuesday the Senate judiciary committee put this measure squarely up to the Senate membership by voting unanimously to report it. Its authors, Senators Costigan of Colorado and Wagner of New York, are determined to reach a vote early in the sessions to prevent a filibuster. Obstructive tactics by Southern senators last session killed this same measure. By the same method the Dyer anti-lynching bill was killed in the Senate in 1920, after it had passed the House by a two-to-one vote.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is backed by organizations with membership of more than 40,000,000 persons, many of whom are citizens of Alabama and other states in the deepest South. President Roosevelt supported it by inference when he said in his message to Congress: "Crimes of organized banditry, cold-blooded shooting, lynching and kidnaping have threatened our security."

The graves of more than 5000 mob victims, killed in the past 50 years, testify that local communities are not coping with this evil. A Federal law will not cure the disease outright, but it will remedy it. Southern senators will have much to answer for if they kill this measure again. The attitude of the thinking Southerner was not reflected yesterday in the Mississippi prosecutor's silly "suicide" statement.

Birmingham, Ala., Labor Advocate
May 4, 1935

LYNCHING IS MURDER

When the people of the U. S. A. come to the conclusion that lynching is murder and cannot be justified on any grounds, there will be fewer instances of this atrocious form of mob violence.

If there be one thing more than another which is distinctly a blot upon our American civilization it is the unspeakable crime of lynching.

When a number of irresponsible persons are allowed to band themselves together to usurp the functions of our courts of justice and temporarily supercede the officers of the courts by presuming to punish individuals supposedly or actually guilty of crimes without first submitting the case to judge or jury as guaranteed by the constitution of the United States, then they are striking a solar plexus blow at the very foundation of law and order. They are guilty of anarchy.

Every outburst of lynch-mob violence is a blow at right and justice and an outrageous defiance of all regularly constituted government. To allow Judge Lynch and his highbinders to continue their shameful and shocking outrages is to endanger the whole fabric of our government and our civilization.

If the victims of the mob are guilty of crimes, great or small, the courts are there, ready, willing and equipped to mete out due punishment for their crimes according to law.

The mob spirit is contrary to good government and a menace to the security of every man, woman, and child in the country. Lynching is murder, "there you have it plump and plain," and should be punished accordingly. No decent, right-thinking, fair-minded man or woman can excuse or condone murder. Everybody think it over!

LYNCHING OPPOSED BY DIXIE BAPTISTS

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 17.—(AP)—Unalterable opposition to lynchings was expressed by the Southern Baptist convention here today in the adoption of the annual report of the social service commission.

The report, offered by Chairman A. J. Barton, of Wilmington, N. C., also condemned moving pictures depicting crime or vice in an "alluring manner," war, and liquor traffic in all forms and reaffirmed "our devotion to the fundamental New Testament doctrine and fundamental principle of the American government—the separation of church and state."

The convention will late today to hold its 1936 meeting at St. Louis, opening on May 20.

Dr. John A. Huff, of New Orleans, was chosen to deliver the annual convention sermon.

The plea of a 42-year-old North Carolina preacher and author, for an investigation of the alleged "abrogation of elemental human rights" among industrial and rural laborers created a sensation at the convention here today.

Action on the recommendation of Dr. E. M. Poteat Jr., of Raleigh, for 13 years a missionary in China and former teacher of ethics and philosophy in the University of Shanghai, for a bureau of social research to gather unbiased information concerning alleged violence in the east Arkansas share cropper country and in other labor disputes, was postponed until next year.

"Human rights have been distorted," Dr. Poteat said. "A man told me that there are in Memphis 20 families—exiles from across the river in Arkansas, as a result of violence and abuse because they—as share croppers—sought to organize to protect their rights."

Rules Against Agency.

Dr. M. E. Dodd, of Shreveport, La., retiring president, ruled that under the laws of the convention, such an agency could not be authorized at this year's session, since it would require the raising and spending of additional funds, and did not carry with it a recommendation from any board authorized to perform such financial functions.

The committee, headed by Dr. Poteat, was enlarged to include a member from each state in the convention territory. It will continue its study and report again next year with recommendations upon which the next convention will have to act.

Nothing To Be Done.

Many delegates, including Dr. A. J. Barton, of Wilmington, N. C., head of the convention's social service commission, pointed out that while they were in sympathy with much of Dr. Poteat's recommendations, because of the rules of the church and the question of funds, nothing could be done at this time.

Other members, however, openly attacked the objectives of the bureau and discussion at times grew spirited.

Later in the day, the convention adopted the report of Dr. Barton's social service commission, expressing unalterable opposition to lynching, motion pictures which depict crime or vice in an alluring manner, opposition to war and reaffirmed "our unhesitating condemnation and our determined opposition to the beverage-liquor traffic in all forms."

Impassiond Plea.

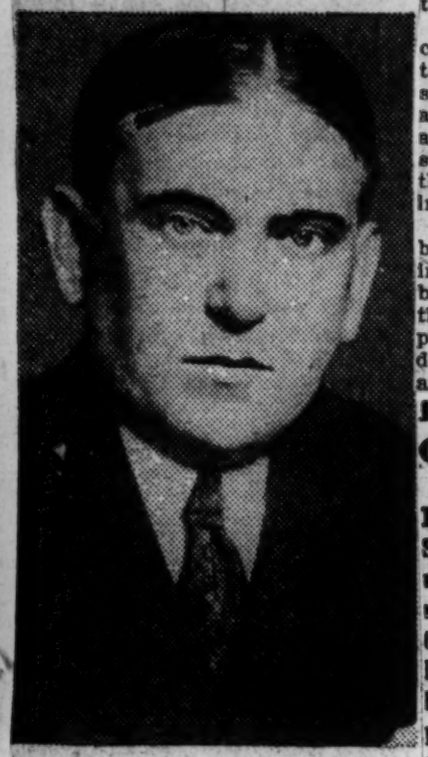
Dr. Poteat, in an impassioned plea for the adoption of his report, said that if the reports are true "two-thirds of the abused probably are Baptists. If they are Baptists, I am interested in knowing whether these things are true. A research agency should find out."

He pointed to reports that workers in textile mills have been fired upon, and that union laborers have been molested and mistreated.

"The bureau could learn these things and report to the bureau, information untainted by propaganda. There have been complaints of the railroading of suspects, complaints of the Scottsboro, Ala., case, complaints of every conceivable injustice done in the name of profit. These complaints touch every point of our Baptist belief—the question of personal and religious freedom—and every human right."

Speech Praised.

Dr. John Jeter Hurt, president of Union University, Jackson, Tenn., complimented Dr. Poteat's "brilliant mind," and the delivery of his speech but raised the point of order that action could not be taken.



Dr. J. J. Wicker, of Fork Union, Va., got to his feet to say:

"It looks like there's a grudge in this country against any man who's got 50 cents. Millions of dollars worth of property has been destroyed by people who won't work and won't let others work."

He added that such a bureau "ought not to be made up of a personnel of

"It was stated at the time I was appointed to the NRA job that it was for the transition period of NRA

Mencken Assails Mob Atrocities; U. S. Law Asked

HENRY L. MENCKEN

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14. (AP)—An excoriation of lynching in the pungent phrases of H. L. Mencken and other witnesses today caused a federal measure against the crime to gather momentum which promised the approval of a senate judiciary sub-committee.

Chairman Van Nuys (D., Ind.) predicted his group would report the Wagner Costigan bill after Mencken, Baltimore writer, said no civilized government could "condone such atrocities." Senator Wagner (D., N. Y.) asserted that lynchings constitute "almost every type of infamy that blot the record of civilization."

Wagner and Senator Costigan (D., Colo.) are co-authors of the bill.

Rewritten from the form proposed last year, the measure prescribes severe penalties for lynchers, officers who conspire with mobs or fail to protect prisoners from riotous assemblages, and counties where such lawlessness occurs.

No Opposition Heard

No opposition witnesses appeared at the one-day hearing and Van Nuys said the measure probably would be recommended to the full committee soon with possibly some slight changes in phraseology.

Senator Dieterich (D., Ills.) criticized the county-liability clause as making it possible to subject Chicago to damages "to indemnify gangland" when a gangster was taken for a ride. Costigan then suggested a modification to make counties liable only where they did not exercise "due diligence" to protect a mob victim.

"Lynching is a flagrant violation not of one but of many constitutional rights," Costigan said. "It is open anarchy."

Mrs. O'Day Is Heard

Wagner said the "record of the past five years is stained with the life blood of 95 unjudged victims largely because local authority failed to prevent and failed to punish."

With a small group of Negro educators and spectators in the committee room nodding approval, Representative Caroline O'Day (D., N. Y.), a native of Savannah, Ga., told of a visit to South Africa, where she said the impression prevailed that the United States "condoned lynching."

She said a Hindu had written a book on lynching and racketeering in the United States which was a best seller in India. Mencken said the government must make every possible effort to put lynchings down, or "it must suffer the scorn and contempt of christendom."

H. L. Mencken's Comment On The Anti-Lynching Bill

The other day Henry L. Mencken, the Baltimore critic of life in these United States, was asked to give his views on the anti-lynching bill which is now under consideration in Washington. The subcommittee of the Senate did well to call Mr. Mencken to the stand, for the state of Maryland last Fall gave a startling exhibit of the political effects of lynching. It has been said by competent observers that the defeat of Albert Ritchie, in his race for the governorship, was attributable, to a definite extent, to the votes which were massed against him as a result of his vigorous denunciation of the mob violence which had taken place in the Eastern Shore section of Maryland.

The Baltimore Sun, a paper with which Mr. Mencken has been associated in various capacities for many years, exerted every ounce of its force in an effort to have the mob leaders punished in the Maryland affair. Gov. Ritchie, it will be recalled, did everything in his power to uphold the dignity of the law in the difficult case. The Baltimore newspaper, apparently sensing the real state of affairs on the Eastern Shore, conducted a strenuous campaign calculated to save Mr. Ritchie from the political revenge of those whom he had "outraged" by insisting that they have respect for the constituted government. But the only reward which Mr. Ritchie received for his courageous stand was the realization that votes from the Eastern Shore precincts had proved sufficient to swing the balance against him at the election.

Before the subcommittee of the Senate Mr. Mencken declared that the United States either must "make every possible effort" to stop lynchings "or suffer the scorn and contempt of Christendom." That is a good reason, all right. It deserves the attention of the country. But, after all, there are things worse than "the scorn and contempt of Christendom." One of these things is the willingness of a large number of voters to remove from office a man who has shown a determination to uphold the integrity of the laws and the rules of civilization. It is true, as Senator Costigan has said, that lynching constitutes "open anarchy." And it is undeniable that political reprisals upon officials who attempt to do their duty represent an affront which is serious in the extreme.

Atlanta, Ga. Constitution
June 2, 1935

General Federation Holds 45th Conclave In Detroit, Michigan

General federation's forty-fifth convention will be held in Detroit on June 4-12, inclusive, and controversial subjects to be discussed include birth control, lynching, dictatorships, universal fingerprinting, fascism and communism. It is believed that eight resolutions will be presented for action. One will reiterate the federation's indorsement of America's entrance into the World Court.

The birth control resolution asks indorsement of "the principal of federal legislation for the dissemination of scientifically regulated birth control information."

An anti-lynching resolution that the federations of Virginia and Louisiana will present asserts opposition to lynching. Another indorsement to be asked is "for a nation-wide campaign for universal fingerprinting as a protective measure for every citizen of the United States."

Some 5,000 delegates and alternates are expected to attend the conclave, and Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, at the helm of the organization for three years, completes her term in June. The contest for the presidency is being waged between Dr. Peirce and her opponent, Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson, of Tulsa, Okla.

Georgia clubwomen attending the convention will be Mrs. H. B. Ritchie, state president; Mrs. J. W. Gholston, director; Mrs. A. B. Conger, second vice president; Mrs. Lena Felker Lewis, Monroe, and Mrs. R. H. Waugh, of Albany, delegates from state at large; Mrs. Harry Brown and Miss Caryl Brown, of Athens.

A Michigan products dinner will be tendered the members of the board Monday evening, June 3. On Tuesday evening the convention will open. This first session will be marked by addresses of welcome from the governor of the state, the mayor of the city of Detroit and women's club leaders, with a response by Mrs. Poole. Later there will be presented a pageant featuring foreign women's groups of Detroit with choruses and dances.

The daily sessions will be interspersed with numerous luncheons, teas and dinners. A pilgrimage to historic Greenfield is announced for one day and on Saturday, June 8, there will be an all-day boat trip. On Sunday memorial services will be held to honor the memory Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, a past president of the general federation; Mrs. Joshua Hodgins, a past trustee; Mrs. L. V. Hubbard, past secretary for foreign and territorial clubs, and others who have passed away during the past year.

A farewell dinner to Mrs. Poole is scheduled for the evening before the closing day of the convention. A colorful feature of the gathering will be a pageant, "The Frontiers of These United States," which will be presented the evening of June 10. This will introduce groups of various sections of the country portraying the early days of their localities.

CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS AND COURIER
AUG 2 1935

Communists and Lynchers Allies

The taunt of Mussolini's newspaper that the American negroes had better concern themselves with the American lynchers before championing the cause of the Ethiopians has point.

There is no answer to it, and especially it shames the white South. Three negroes have been lynched, in Mississippi and North Carolina, in the last two weeks. That the Italians, with their "Camorra," "Mafia" and other secret societies, long ago made lynching a fine art has nothing to do with the case—lynching is a disgrace to the white South.

Why do our people confess that they are incapable of governing by law? Why do any of them say that they cannot "protect womanhood" without saying, "To hell with the Constitution"?

The truth is that lynching endangers womanhood, manhood, children. It is defiance and destruction of law, and, when life is taken by the mob for one cause, it will be taken for other causes. Property will be taken and destroyed too.

The Communists proclaim that Communism is spreading among American negroes (the spreading is confined to Northern cities for the most part), and in no possible way can Communism be encouraged so effectively as by lynching.

The Communists work to destroy the law to undermine and blow it up, to prove that the existing system of law is a failure. That is the aim of the lynchers.

The white lynchers and the black Communists are comrades and allies, fighting on the same front whether they know it or not

NASHVILLE, TENN.
BANNER
NOV 12 1935

Negro Church Group To See Governor On Lynch Action

Members of the Nashville Negro Inter-Church Alliance meeting in special session at the Negro Y. M. C. A. Monday morning appointed a committee of seven to call on Gov. Hill McAlister this week voicing the organization's disapproval of the lynching of Baxter Bell, White Bluff, Tenn., Negro, and asking the Governor to lend his support in its investigation.

The alliance also adopted a resolution condemning the opening of theaters and dance halls on Sunday night and appointed a committee to investigate the matter.

Lynchings - 1935
6

White Press, Southern.

4929

Discussions.

Nashville, Tenn.
Morning Tennessean

NOV 20 1935

Triumph For Law.

The cause of law and order in Cheatham County was greatly strengthened by the action of Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney in issuing bench warrants for the five men who took Baxter Bell, a negro prisoner from officers at White Bluff two weeks ago and killed him.

After the murder trial jury, which had deliberated over the week-end and reported Monday it was unable to agree on a verdict, Judge Courtney ordered the defendants held for a grand jury investigation on a charge of conspiracy to inflict punishment, and the five men, who had escaped punishment on a limsy plea of self-defense, were held without bond. The case is to be laid before the grand jury at the February term, and in the meanwhile the men face charges in Dickson County of carrying a pistol, rescuing a prisoner from officers and highway robbery or seizing a pistol and blackjack from the officers.

Judge Courtney's refusal to let these men go free will support those citizens of Cheatham County who do not want the Bell lynching, the first in that county's history, to be a precedent.

The negro was accused of insulting and slapping Mrs. Luther Dotson, wife of one of the defendants, while she was drinking beer in a negro store, and testimony was given at the trial that Dotson had manufactured liquor and that negroes had bought it from him and his wife.

There are laws to cover the offense Baxter Bell is alleged to have committed against Mrs. Dotson, and but for the intervention of her husband and his four kinsmen the courts would, no doubt, have dealt to him the punishment which he deserved under the law.

Judge Courtney was, of course, surprised that a Cheatham County jury would fail to find a verdict of guilty in a case where guilt was so apparent, but he met the situation with courage and a sense of social responsibility, preventing a miscarriage of justice which, if permitted to occur, might have had far more serious consequences in the future.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR

NOV 26 1935

THE FRANKNESS OF BORAH

With characteristic frankness, Senator William E. Borah has informed a national negro organization that "Should I have the unexpected honor of being elected President" he will promptly veto any such legislation as the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill. He declares such legislation would be contrary to the Constitution.

For once we are in agreement with Mr. Borah. The proposed law is of course aimed at the preventing of lynchings where the racial element is involved, but overlooks the fact that if applied in constitutional manner to the entire country, as would be necessary if passed by Congress, it would include a dozen varieties of crimes not usually considered as lynchings but which fall into that category nonetheless.

We do not imagine Mr. Borah entertains any serious idea of receiving the "unexpected honor" he mentions, but his definite stand on the question is refreshing.

Left to their own devices and ungoaded by such crusades as have attended the anti-lynch drive, the various states will work out the lynching problem to the general satisfaction of the world. Already there is reason to be encouraged at the vigorous stands taken by numerous Southern States, particularly North Carolina.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

DEC 1 1935

SAVE STATES' RIGHTS BY EXERCISING THEM.

The acquittal of the five white men in Tennessee charged with murder in connection with the lynching of a negro, who was not even accused of the "usual crime," was another in a long series of invitations to Congress to enact a Federal anti-lynching law.

The five men admitted at the trial that they overpowered two officers and took their prisoner from them by force, hauled him away to a thicket several miles distant and shot him to death. Their defense was that they had not intended to lynch him but that one of them shot the negro to death in self defense when he started to pick up a rock. Also they pleaded as an extenuating circumstance that the negro had made an insulting remark to the wife of one of the five men and when she resented it he slapped her. He was arrested and charged with assault and battery.

After hearing all the evidence, including the testimony of the officers, the jury "deliberated" for two nights and a day and brought in a verdict of not guilty. The judge expressed himself as "astounded," but he had no reason to be, if he had been keeping posted on the record of such cases. As a rule the evidence and the law do not count with juries in lynching cases any more than they count with a mob bent on committing a lynching.

For some months now North Carolina has maintained a standing invitation to Congress to enact an anti-lynching law by its failure to punish or even to arrest any member of the mob of 20 or 25 men who in mid-day light took a negro prisoner from the sheriff and his deputies in Franklin county and lynched him. At a brief formal hearing before Judge W. C. Harris, sitting as a committing magistrate, immediately after the lynching, the sheriff and the deputies swore they were unable to identify a single member of the mob or get the number of any one of the group of automobiles used by the lynching party. And that seems to have ended the State's interest in the case.

Of course the absurdity of the testimony of the sheriff and his deputies in a rural county like Franklin, with a population of barely 30,000—where everybody knows the sheriff and the sheriff knows everybody in the county—made no difference.

These two recent cases of lynching—one in North Carolina and one in Tennessee—widely different in their aspects—illustrate the manner in which States generally deal with lynchers, in South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and elsewhere.

And yet, when Congress convenes again and an anti-lynching bill is introduced to provide for more certain punishment of lynchers, the Senators and Representatives from all of these States will be expected to make a determined fight in opposition, with orations in defense of States' rights, maintaining that a Federal law is unnecessary because the several States "are amply able to deal with lynchers and are doing so."

Certainly the matter of dealing with lynchers should be one for the States and not for the Federal government, and should be left to the States—if they will deal with this crime of combined murder and anarchy.

But, sooner or later, if the States will not deal with it—if they will not punish or arrest lynchers, or if State court juries persist in acquitting lynchers regardless of the evidence and the law—then the arguments against a Federal anti-lynching law will become generally recognized as absurd and ridiculous and the matter of dealing with lynchers will be taken over by the Federal government.

The Nation as a whole has some rights as well as the individual States in the matter of the disgrace of continued and frequent instances of lynch law and sooner or later will insist that the Federal government take action to deal with lynchers if the States will not.

Frequent lynchings with virtual immunity for the mob are more dangerous to the constitutional rights of the people of the States than a Federal anti-lynchings law would be.

In the interest of States' rights the States should prove that they can deal effectively with lynchers.

Atlanta, Ga. Constitution
December 8, 1935

Holds Court Reforms Will End Lynching

Editor Constitution: There are unquestionably many fairminded justly disposed men in every class and profession and unfortunately some of the other kind also in every class and profession, but it is indeed encouraging when a convention of lawyers meet and the better element are men enough to condemn the evils of their own profession and are ready to ostracize those of their own profession who go into our courts (expected to render justice only) to win their cases regardless of justice.

We know that even a criminal has the right to be tried in a court of justice, but it does not seem to us that this means that a smart shyster lawyer should be allowed to go into court to try and sometimes succeed in turning loose a criminal client to further menace the public and encourge others in criminality.

We believe that if this evil practice now condemned by this convention of lawyers and by all other fairminded citizens can be stopped it will do more to stop lynch law than any possible effort to deal directly with the lynchers to punish them.

Judge Lynch has some excuse for his existence and actions, when told to leave these matters entirel to the courts and when he does he finds sometimes that between the delays and the perversions of justice by smart shyster lawyers, justice is not done.

We are not advocating lynch law—it is a dreadful thing—but condemning it will not get rid of it. Lynchings often would not occur, we believe, but for the fear that the courts will not bring the results deserved by criminals.

Lynching, as stated, is a dreadful thing, but all lynchers are not bad men, and we believe what this convention of lawyers are undertaking to do (stop the evils allowed in our courts) will go further toward stopping lynching than anything else that can be done and that it will also get the support of all good citizens who really desire to be law abiding in all their conduct, but heartily disapprove some things allowed in the courts.

E. A. BARNETT,
Washington, Ga.

Greensboro, N. C., News
December 5, 1935

Dr. Shepard Asks Governors To Fight Spread of Lynching

Durham Negro Educator Says If Southern Governors Will Take Stand to Protect Prisoners There Will Be No Need of Anti-Lynching Law.

In a letter sent Monday to the governor of each of the southern states Dr. James E. Shepard, president of North Carolina College for Negroes, Durham, summarizes the attitude of his race, as he sees it, in regard to the federal Anti-Lynching law, as follows:

"We desire that our own neighbors and friends enforce the law, and that our southern governors will take a stand against lynching and protect prisoners at any cost, this dreadful evil will soon be eradicated from American life and there will be no need of a federal anti-lynching law on the statute books to needlessly add to unnecessary statutes and legislation which even the federal government is powerless to enforce, nor even has the desire to do so. It is in this spirit I appeal to you. We must work out our destiny and salvation in the south by mutual confidence and respect each for the rights of the other."

Praises Bickett's Regime.

As an introduction to the letter President Shepard refers to the administration of the late Gov. Thomas Walter Bickett, of North Carolina, as a time of exceptionally good feeling between the races of the state and recalls that he once counselled a large group of negroes to carry their grievances to the white man. It is in the spirit of the utterance that the letter to the state executives is written, he states.

"I deplore crime," he says. "I stand fully for the majesty of the law. Crime should be punished to the fullest extent of the law whether committed by a negro or any other man. The courts should in every way be supreme. The courts are in every case dominated and controlled by the members of the white race. With this fact as a promise there can never be any excuse for a lynching," the college president asserts.

"No negro born and reared in the south as I was relishes this running to Washington for remedies that lie at home. It is in the nature of a confession, if indeed not a proclamation of no faith in the local government under which he lives," he continues.

Stating that a high official a few days ago unblushingly proclaimed that public sentiment supported a lynching which had occurred in his state and, feeling that way about it, did not so much as make a gesture of protest or of enforcement of the law against lynching, President Shepard charges that within a few days negroes were lynched in Tennessee, not for any capital offense or felony of any kind committed by them, but because they refused to submit to beatings. "Thus we observe that insubordination of negroes about to be beaten by brutes, without any pretext of law, is to be added to the causes for lynchings in our southern states," he declares.

Denounces Violations.

Denouncing public officers who violate their public trust by countenancing crimes because they believe that sentiment among their constituencies supports the violations, the letter appeals to each governor as the leader of public sentiment in his state to arouse the public to an understanding of the peril to society in the increasing of such crimes. The negro college president expresses the belief that a conference of governors, such as held every year, could do an immense amount of good, especially if these executives dedicated themselves to the task of teaching their constituents the essential treason that lies in every act of surrender to a mob. These governors would erect for themselves monuments in the hearts and memories of an oppressed people, more enduring than stone or bronze, he declares.

Pointing out that negro population in state prisons has decreased as educational opportunities for negroes increased, he states that more investment of state funds in negro education would be putting first things first.

Suffolk, Va., News-Herald
December 4, 1935

URGE AGGRESSIVE ANTI-LYNCH STAND

Negro Educator Calls On Governor For Support

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 4.—(AP)—In a letter which was sent to Governor Peery and other southern governors, Dr. James E. Shepard, president of North Carolina College for Negroes, today asked that they take an aggressive stand against lynching and for the protection of prisoners from mobs.

"I appeal to you as the leader of public sentiment in your state to arouse the public to an understanding of the peril to society in the increasing of these crimes against mob rule have been written by white men and they have sworn to uphold them."

SUFFOLK, VA.
NEWS HERALD
NOV 2 1935

GRETNA JAIL HOLDS MYSTERY

IT WAS reported in a news dispatch under a New Orleans date line that two Negroes, charged with attacking white women, had been shot to death in their cell by officers in the Gretna jail across the Mississippi river yesterday. The prisoners were purported to have shot and wounded the officers with a pistol that had been smuggled to them.

The bodies of the Negroes were said to have been riddled by bullets after a leaden missile had grazed the cheek of the sheriff and another had lodged in the arm of his deputy. It is rather difficult to figure out why prisoners locked in a cell should attack armed officers on the outside, knowing that to do so meant certain death.

Another element of mystery is added to the tragic event by a previous report to the effect that the prisoners already had been lynched. Because of contradictory reports and discrepancies there are sufficient grounds to doubt if the Negroes were shot in self-defense by the sheriff and his deputy. The incident should be made the subject of rigid investigation in the interest of common justice. No one not present knows what grim tragedy may have been enacted at Gretna.

Rocky Mount, N. C., Telegram
December 6, 1935

What Others Say

A SOUTHERN NEGRO'S VIEW OF ANTI-LYNCHING LEGISLATION

In the midst of the discussion of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, which will come up in the next congress, the voice of the southern Negro has been strangely silent. Northern congressmen, urged on by such organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, have as a rule espoused this bill, while southern members have opposed it with equal vigor on the grounds that it is an enroachment on states' rights.

Now, however, a southern Negro leader has ventured to speak. He is alarmed, of course, at the number of lynchings which take place, but he prefers that the evil be eradicated by the individual states, rather than by the federal government. He is Dr. James E. Ehepard, president of the North Carolina college for Negroes. In a letter addressed to the governor of each southern state, Dr. Shepard sets forth his views, and from this letter, we quote two significant paragraphs:

"I deplore crime. I stand fully for the majesty of the law. Crime should be punished to the fullest extent of the law, whether committed by a Negro or any other man. The courts should in every way be supreme. The courts are in every way dominated and controlled by members of the white race. With this fact as a premise, there can never be any excuse for lynching. . . .

"We desire that our own neighbors and friends enforce the law, and that our southern governors will take a stand against lynching, and protect prisoners at any cost, this dreadful evil will soon be eradicated from American life, and there will be no need of a federal anti-lynching law on the statute books—to needlessly add to unnecessary statutes and legislation which even the federal government is powerless to enforce, nor even has the desire to do so. It is in this spirit I appeal to you. We must work out our own destiny and salvation in the South by mutual confidence and respect each for the rights of the other."

These sentiments we believe, represent the feelings of the entire south.

A pertinent point that framers of anti-lynching legislation overlook is the fact that with a federal law on the statute books, many offenses not commonly associated with lynching, but which nevertheless come under the broader meaning of the word might be taken from the jurisdiction of the individual state and turned over to the federal government. In short, it would be a step toward converting the state courts, not only of the south, but of the north as well, into mere police tribunals—Wilmington Star.

Lynchings - 1935
& Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4930

RALEIGH, N. C.
NEWS OBSERVER

NOV 15 1935

It Ought To Be True

"You can't trample the law underfoot and get away with it," Judge Clawson L. Williams told a Negro, guilty of a serious crime, in the New Hanover Superior Court. Everyone will applaud Judge Williams' statement and everyone would like to believe that it is true. But is it? In a county adjoining that in which Judge Williams spoke, two years have passed since a mob lynched a Negro without one of those guilty of the lynching having been punished for trampling the law. In a county adjoining the county in which the State Capital is located, the months go by without any suggestion that any member of a lynching mob there will ever be brought to trial for "trampling the law underfoot." And this week in Texas a county attorney, commenting on a lynching, declared: "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Judge Williams ought to be right, but he will not be right so long as the law is trampled underfoot by mobs of men and the law shows itself helpless, sometimes even, as in the Texas case, shows itself amenable to the trampling of many bloody feet across the body of the law.

Statesville, N. C. Daily
November 20, 1935

AMUSING YET SERIOUS.

A Tennessee negro, alleged to have insulted a white woman, was taken from officers by the husband of the woman, and four relatives. Half an hour later he was found dead of a bullet-punctured lung.

Last week, only two weeks after the killing, the five men were brought to trial. They admitted the killing, but pleaded self-defense. The jury heard the evidence, pretended to believe their story and Monday brought in a verdict of not guilty. The presiding judge said he was "astounded" at their verdict, and immediately issued a bench warrant charging "conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment," which upon conviction carries a penalty of two to ten years.

These fellows told the court they had intended to whip the negro, but when he retch for a rock the husband shot him because of "fear" for his own life—and twelve supposedly intelligent men pretended to believe them.

It is a story that is quickly told, but it will take decades to live it down.

One unarmed negro, in the presence of five men, is a dangerous character when he reaches for a rock, therefore he ought to be exterminated pronto, and a handy blunderbus, previously provided, plus an itchy trigger-finger, did the work. But twelve good men and true said it was all o. k. with them and thus branded Cheatham county, Tennessee, "as a dumping ground for lawlessness," just as the judge said.

Maybe the officers were powerless to hold their prisoner in the "attack" of five men, and then again maybe not. Backed by the law and supposedly armed, if there were no collusion, they could have saved this blot on their community. From this distance it seems that the judge failed to shoot his whole wad, when he held only the five men on other charges.

Twelve men, selected in the usual way, bringing in such a verdict as that, reflects a sentiment that is all too prevalent in the South when a negro is involved. Those five men must have been sure of their ground when they advanced the silly plea of self-defense—but they overlooked the judge.

Brought to book on the lesser charge, in the same county, you don't even need to play a hunch to bet that they won't be convicted—and win without hedging.

Sarasota, Fla., Herald
November 17, 1935

RADICALS TO BLAME

The deplorable lynchings occurring in the south within the past month or two are not condoned by the people who have unalterable beliefs in law and order, and who believe in the perpetrator of a crime paying the penalty for his act through the properly constituted courts.

However, the people of the south are noting with no little amazement and alarm that radicals of other sections of the country are rushing to the defense of perpetrators of crimes in the south, and are employing every means, irrespective of the serious nature of the crime, to defend and free those charged with taking the life of a white man or woman or committing a serious crime upon a white woman.

The radicals had better let the people of the south handle their own crime problems, or the deplorable lynchings instead of decreasing, will be on the increase. Men of the black race charged with a crime in which capital punishment is the maximum are given proper defense, the courts appointing capable attorneys in the event the criminal is without the means to engage a lawyer. In such instances proper defense is presented the jury and the accused is given the benefit of every legal doubt. There are few, if any instances, where a man white or black paid the extreme penalty for a crime without having his conviction reviewed by the supreme court, at least that is the rule in Florida. There may have been one or two exceptions.

The radicals are going to find that their attempts are not going to meet with the approval of the southern people who are more capable of handling the negro problem than are the radicals. They may find their actions so reprehensible to the people of the south that lynchings abhorred by the majority of southerners will increase instead of diminish.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
November 17, 1935

Foolish Southerners

Public officers, who happen also to be public fools, have excused the lynching of two negro boys, sixteen and fifteen years old, who assaulted and murdered a white girl in Texas, on the ground that the laws of Texas provide no adequate punishment for their crime, which is to say that the Texans, having demonstrated incapacity to make laws adequate to prevent and punish crime, are compelled to reject law and become criminals themselves.

This miserable affair in Texas will supply the Northern Democrats and Republicans in the congress (under the prodding of the Northern negro organizations) with "reasons" to press for the passage of the Costigan-Wagner (Costigan and Wagner are Roosevelt Democrats and New Dealers) of anti-lynching bill.

Southern ruffians and dolts, lynchers, are constantly supplying "Democrats" like Wagner, spokesman for and ally of the Harlem negro vote, with argument for the bill, and it may be passed.

If it become a law it will not stop lynching. It will not check lynching in the South.

Trial in a federal court would not frighten the ruffian Texans who lynch and their imbecile office-holders who approve it. It would more likely cause more lynchings, arouse the ruffian elements of the South to greater brutality, hinder and halt the efforts of those Southerners who have striven seventy years to prevent lynching and have made great progress toward the suppression of the shameful and utterly useless practice.

The Costigan-Wagner bill is in fact a bill to kindle the lynching passions of Southern negro-haters.

Durham, N. C. Herald
November 20, 1935

SELF-DEFENSE (?)

It makes a ridiculous story of course, but when you get down to bedrock there is about as much substance to the self-defense plea five Ashland City, Tenn., lynchers successfully maintained before a jury as there is in any number of mob lynching stories that have never so much as reached a trial jury.

In the Ashland City instance, four brothers and one companion snatched a 45-year-old Negro from the hands of officers, carried him into the woods, filled his body with bullet holes and when caught answered a charge of murder with a plea of self-defense. They merely intended, they say, to give the Negro a flogging but when they started to carry out their intention he picked up a rock and to protect themselves they pulled triggers.

The story is absurd. But the jury accepted it and after all is it much out of line with the customary way of handling mob lynching cases? Right here in North Carolina, we practice pretty much the same thing. In Pender county a mob of several hundred took a wounded prisoner from the sheriff and two or three deputies, pumped his body full of bullets and wound up by tossing the lifeless form on the courthouse lawn. The sheriff had an attack of blindness, could not recognize a single member of the mob and the governor is yet waiting for the solicitor to file a report requested more than a year ago. In Franklin county, the Pender incident was re-enacted in broad open daylight. Again the sheriff was a victim of blindness and to this day nothing has come of the penetrating probe that started with such a show of outward determination.

Kinston, N. C., Free Press
November 14, 1935

The county judge at Columbus, Texas, where two Negro youths were killed by a mob because of their brutal crime of attack and murder of a white girl, is quoted in press dispatches as saying: "I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollman could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages, prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night." The question is did the mob members take that into consideration? Would the lynching not have occurred had the victims been twice as old?

Charlotte, N. C., News
Novemebr 12, 1935

Novelty Compounded.

It was a strange kind of mob which lynched a Negro near White Bluff, Tennessee, last week. For one thing, there were only five members of the mob. For another, only one shot was fired to end the victim's life, nor was there any torturing of him before death or dismemberment afterward. No, this small mob quietly seized the Negro, killed him and then, to cap the climax, marched into town and surrendered to the sheriff.

The sheriff, so astonished was he, hardly knew under what charge to hold the men. He was not long in finding out, however, and neither was the county grand jury long in indicting the five for murder in the first degree. Even more strangely still, the trial will begin at once.

The one more amazing circumstance necessary to make this the strangest chapter of lynching in the South would be for the trial jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, making it necessary for the judge to sentence these men to die as other men have died for murder. Our guess ordinarily would be that the jury would do no such thing, but this whole affair has been so completely out of the ordinary that it is hard to tell what to expect next.

Greensboro, N. C., News
November 16, 1935

Shears and Paste

Novelty Compounded.

It was a strange kind of mob which lynched a negro near White Bluff, Tenn., last week. For one thing, there were only five members of the mob. For another, only one shot was fired to end the victim's lift, nor was there any torturing of him before death or dismemberment afterward. No, this small mob quietly seized the negro, killed him and then, to cap the climax, marched into town and surrendered to the sheriff.

The sheriff, so astonished was he, hardly knew under what charge to hold the men. He was not long in finding out, however, and neither was the county grand jury long in indicting the five for murder in the first degree. Even more strangely still, the trial will begin at once.

The one more amazing circumstance necessary to make this the strangest chapter of lynching in the south would be for the trial jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, making it necessary for the judge to sentence these men to die as other men have died for murder. Our guess ordinarily would be that the jury would do no such thing, but this whole affair has been so completely out of the ordinary that it is hard to tell what to expect next.
—Charlotte News.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
NOV 18 1935

"You can't trample the law underfoot and get away with it," Judge Clawson L. Williams tells a New Hanover negro offender in sentencing him a score or so of years in prison. You're right, he can't; but if he had been a mob of white men over in the adjoining county of Pender with a negro to lynch, we'd say he could and did.

Kingsport, Tenn. Times
November 20, 1935

WEAK LAWS TO BLAME

Mob lynchings are deplorable at any and all times. Just as deplorable, however, are our weak and inadequate laws which are direct incentives to lynchings.

Illustrative of this is the recent sickening tragedy at Columbus, Texas. On October 19 two young negro fiends, Ernest Collins, 15, and Benny Mitchell, 16, criminally assaulted a beautiful 19-year-old white girl then brutally murdered her and threw her body into a creek. Later after being arrested and questioned they admitted the crime.

Now of course the lives of these fiends should have been forfeited. Nothing else would offer a sufficient warning to any others who might lead themselves to committing a similar crime. For the protection of society in general and in particular for the protection of women and girls nothing else but death could suffice.

Yet under the Texas law the maximum penalty which could have been meted out to these inhuman killers was confinement in a reformatory until they were 21 years old!

In brief they committed the most diabolical crime that it is possible for human beings to commit. They were and always would have been more dangerous to the community than mad dogs. While they were alive no woman could have been safe—no parent of a young girl could have been at ease. Yet the great Goddess of Justice decreed that their maximum sentence could be but a few not-unpleasant years in a reformatory where they would have been comfortably taken care of—then to be let loose again upon a trembling public.

Are we to be surprised that the the people of the community determined to take the matter into their own hands? Last week a mob of some 700 people calmly proceeded to take the killers away from the officers and hang them to a convenient tree.

Significant are the statements of the county attorney and county judge following the lynching. The county attorney stated that, "I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action as expressive of the will of the people." The county judge remarked: "I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law. The fact that the negroes who so brutally murdered Miss (Geraldine) Kollman could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

We repeate that we, too, are unable to condone mob violence. But we would add that laws which are too pitifully weak and inadequate to protect our women from brutal fiends are an even greater danger to civilization than mob lynchings.

Orangeburg, S. C., Democrat
November 28, 1935

Borah Speaks Plainly.

Senator Borah, Progressive Republican of Idaho, is considered a consistent defender of the American Constitution. Recently, he has been mentioned as a possible presidential candidate of the Republican Party.

With this fact in mind Walter White, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, warned Senator Borah of the Negro voting power in light of my convictions, I would unhesitatsome states and inquired about his views ingly veto it. . . .
on a Federal anti-lynching law. "I do not enter a d
The Idaho Senator, who had opposed the judgment is the utter Wagener-Costigan anti-lynching bill in Con- ures aside from the gress (a measure introduced by two Demo- Neither do I take crats) replied without hesitation. Senator I have often expres Borah justified his opposition because the my horror of lynch proposed bill was unconstitutional and said: that if the federal
"That being my view then and now, I shall the subject it can vote against such measures as long as I am ment to the constitu a member of the senate, and should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being president of the United States and such a bill should reach me, under my oath and in the

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4931

Windsor, N. C., Advance
November 22, 1935

"THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE"

It is not surprising that the United States suffers from mob violence. The surprising thing is that the American people, in view of the open defiance of the law by some of their officials and some of their Best People, enjoy as much security as they do.

In Texas two Negro boys have just been lynched by a mob of 700, including several women. The county attorney is quoted as saying that he considers this action "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge is reported to feel that he cannot condemn "those citizens who meted justice" to the Negroes, on the ground that "they could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages." They were too young to be legally executed, but not too young to be murdered.

If these official comments expressed an isolated view they would be shocking enough; they represent an opinion widely held and not infrequently expressed in the United States. The substance of this opinion is that we will obey the law only so long as it coincides with our desires and interests. When we can't get what we want, or can't get it quickly enough, by legal means, we'll take it anyhow.

This view was expressed two years ago by the late James Rolph, Jr., as Governor of California, after two white men charged with kidnaping and slaying a San Jose man had been hanged by a mob. Referring to "those fine, patriotic San Jose citizens who knew how to handle such a situation," the Governor proclaimed that "if anyone is arrested for the good job I'll pardon them all."

It was really the same state of mind that actuated the violators of the prohibition law. It is the same state of mind that leads dictators of whatever color to kill their enemies in order to hold power. It is the same state of mind that causes some employers to hire private armies or incite vigilantes to crush their workers. Indeed it is the same state of mind that brings wars.

It is a state of mind which, if not controlled, will bring also an end of all orderly government.—Christian Science Monitor.

Rome, Ga. News-Tribune
November 22, 1935

LYNCHING IN SELF DEFENSE

WHEN a jury at Ashland City, Tenn., acquitted five men who had taken a negro from officers of the law and shot him to death, the presiding judge gave the members a tongue lashing and caused fresh charges to be made against the prisoners. The warrants issued upon their acquittal charge conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment, and the five were remanded to jail for trial.

Of interest is the fact that the defendants were acquitted upon a plea of self-defense, which appears to be something new in the court of Judge Lynch. The accused admitted taking the prisoner and killing him but maintained that he, the prisoner, "reached for a rock" after being made captive, and that the fatal shot was fired in defense of their lives. And the jury accepted it!

The negro who was lynched in this fashion and whose lynchers escaped in the first trial upon the amazing self-defense claim, was not charged with the offense that is usual in cases of lynching, but with striking a white woman, and there is no evidence whatever that he would not have been fully and promptly punished through due process of law. Yet he was taken from an officer and shot to death.

It is crimes like this and trials like this that tend to bring into contempt all the processes of law and the trial judge in this case acted with commendable promptness and firmness in insisting that some form of punishment be meted out.

Contempt for law is a cankerous growth that threatens all the machinery that mankind has erected for the protection of society and it must be suppressed with greater vigor if disastrous consequences are to be avoided.

Wartburg, Tenn., News
November 21, 1935

Negro lynching has become so popular that it is quite a sport. It originated in the southern states of Alabama and Georgia, but its popularity has now spread to Tennessee. It was formerly an evening sport and attracted a large number of participants and aspirants to the fray. Now the popular time for the sport is the early afternoon, and the rules have been so remodeled that four or five may play the game.

Dothan, Ala. Eagle
November 15, 1935

THE JOB HOLDER MENTALITY

Two Negro boys were lynched in Texas Tuesday night by a howling mob which included a number of women; the Negro boys offense was reprehensible; they had, so their reputed confessions ran, outraged and murdered a young white girl.

But hardly more reprehensible than either the original crime or the subsequent manifestation of the barbarism of the self-proclaimed "superior race" is the attitude of O. P. Moore, county attorney at Columbus, Texas.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people," said he.

The county attorney under our enlightened system of government depends on the votes of his neighbors for his job. Undoubtedly most of his voting strength of his county was in the mob. For no matter what Moore proclaims with one on election day, the fact remains it was a mob.

Scarcely less astounding is the attitude of the county judge, Judge H. P. Hahn, who said

"I am strongly opposed to mob violence and favor orderly process of the law.

"The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered Miss Kollman could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

The Birmingham Age-Herald asks the pointed question:

"Could this county attorney be correct?"

Says the Age-Herald:

"Could this county attorney of Columbus, Tex., be correct when he says that the lynching of two Negroes by a mob of 700 persons represents 'an expression of the will of the people. And yet that is the excuse he offers for the action of this crowd that took two Negro youths and hanged them to a tree.

"This county attorney should remember that the will of a people is not expressed in heat and passion. Mob rule is not to be confused with the deliberate judgment made possible by orderly court procedure. If 'the will of the people' is to prevail in times of emotional excitement, then we may as well submit to anarchy.

"It makes no difference what the offense of the Negroes was. There is never, in an organized society, any justification for condoning executions outside the law. These Negroes were denied a jury trial, as pledged by the Constitution of the United States and, it is a safe assumption, by the Constitution of Texas. The circumstances of the case cannot conceal the fact that the hanging was a violation of the law as clearly as the deed of which the Negroes were accused.

"As a public official, it is likely that this county attorney was sworn to uphold the law. But instead he says that the hasty, ill-considered act of an inflamed mob is superior to the law. To what depths the nation has fallen when men in office hold such views!

Election day must be close around for these two sworn upholders of law, justice and public order!

York, S. C. Enquirer
November 19, 1935

Altho he had been sentenced to die December 10, for the murder of a white man, a mob wanted to lynch John Henry Sloan, a negro, at Moultrie, Ga., anyway. So the mob went after John Henry at the Moultrie, Ga., jail last Thursday. Governor Talmadge sent national guardsmen to protect him. The guardsmen carried John Henry away to a safe place.

Tallapoosa, Ga., Journal
November 21, 1935

Lynching Held As People's Will By Prosecutor

Columbus, Texas—County Attorney O. P. Moore said he believed the lynching of two youthful negroes by a mob of 700 persons, including several women on a farm near here was an expression of the will of the people.

Moore's statement came soon after Justice of the Peace E. C. Thrower said he would conduct a court of inquiry into the lynchings.

The town was quiet. The mob seized Ernest Collins, 15 and Benny Mitchell 16, who assertedly had confessed the criminal attack and subsequent drowning of Biss Geraldine Kollmann, high school honor graduate, from officers and left them dangling from a live oak tree near the girl's home.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob" said Moore. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Charlotte, N. C., News
November 19, 1935

Anticlimax.

The lynching and its aftermath over in Tennessee last week, which progressed from one strange circumstance to another, had for its ending a scene with not even novelty in its favor. Just the opposite, the climax of the piece was distressingly trite.

Act I, you will recall, was the lynching, which oddly enough was accomplished without torture or dismemberment and with only one shot. In Act II there was the surrender of five men who confessed to the deed. Act III brought forth the trial and the plea of the five to manslaughter in self-defense against one unarmed Negro.

Act IV saw the jury file in and report. Not Guilty, was the verdict.

There was a mild epilogue to this farce, delivered by the judge upon the bench. Said he to the jurors: "I am astounded at your verdict."

Weldon, N. C. News
November 21, 1935

"THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE"

It is not surprising that the United States suffers from mob violence. The surprising thing is that the American people, in view of the open defiance of the law by some of their officials and some of their Best People, enjoy as much security as they do.

In Texas two Negro boys have just been lynched by a mob of 700, including several women. The county attorney is quoted as saying that he considers this action "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge is reported to feel that he cannot condemn "those citizens who meted justice" to the Negroes, on the ground that "they could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages." They were too young to be legally executed, but not too young to be murdered.

If these official comments expressed an isolated view they would be shocking enough; they represent an opinion widely held and not infrequently expressed in the United States. The substance of this opinion is that we will obey the law only so long as it coincides with our desires and interests. When we can't get what we want, or can't get it quickly enough, by legal means, we'll take it anyhow.

This view was expressed two years ago by the late James Rolph, Jr., as Governor of California, after two white men charged with kidnaping and slaying a San Jose man had been hanged by a mob. Referring to "those fine, patriotic San Jose citizens who knew how to handle such a situation," the Governor proclaimed that "if anyone is arrested for the good job I'll pardon them all."

It was really the same state of mind that actuated the violators of the prohibition law. It is the same state of mind that leads dictators of whatever color to kill their enemies in order to hold power. It is the same state of mind that causes some employers to hire private armies or incite vigilantes to crush their workers. Indeed it is the same state of mind that brings wars.

It is a state of mind which, if not controlled, will bring also an end of all orderly government.—Christian Science Monitor.

New Orleans, La., Times-Picayune
November 27, 1935

Borah Meets an Issue

SENATOR BORAH of Idaho is among those most "prominently mentioned" in connection with the Republican presidential nomination next year. Though he has not thrown his hat into the ring, his potential candidacy makes him the target of interrogatory from groups interested in specific measures or policies with which the next administration must deal. One of these, the "Society for the Advancement of Colored People," recalled that the Idaho senator has opposed its federal antilynching bill. So it "demanded to know" what he would do as president if the bill should pass Congress and be submitted for his approval. The society claimed to be speaking for the negro voters whose ballots might determine the election result "in a number of pivotal states."

Mr. Borah gave them their answer promptly, and in the open. He made it so plain and so strong that there can be no mistaking its meaning. "When this legislation came before Congress in 1922," he said, "as a member of the judiciary committee, I was appointed chairman of a subcommittee to pass upon the constitutionality and feasibility of the measure. I spent much time in considering it. I read the debates which had taken place in the House and many briefs. I finally spoke and voted against the measure because then I entertained, and now entertain, no doubt whatever that these measures both were in contravention to the plain terms of the federal constitution. That being my view then and now, I shall vote against such measures as long as I am a member of the Senate and should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being president of the United States and such a bill should reach me, under my oath and in the light of my convictions, I would unhesitatingly veto it. Whatever may happen in the future politics of this country, so far as my position on the question presented by these measures is concerned, it will not be changed or even modified."

This straightforward and unqualified answer may not please the society which asked for it, but its courage and candor will be applauded by Americans in vast majority whether their views of the raised issue agree with Senator Borah's or not. Fearlessness and honesty are not by any means extinct in American politics, but unhappily they are rarer than they should be and demonstrations like this win admiration and commendation the country over.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

NOV 30 1935

TALKS LIKE HE MIGHT BE A DEMOCRAT.

MR. BORAH is behaving mightily like a Democrat. And talking that way.

He told WALTER WHITE, the negro who is supposed to have authored the WAGNER-COSTIGAN anti-lynching bill which Southern Senators talked to death in the last Congress, that the measure is unconstitutional and that if Congress should pass it, and he were President, he would veto it.

That's the position taken by Southern Senators in their fight against it—they hung on like grim death to the principle of States' Rights in this matter, even though, perhaps, some of them were not quite so stubborn for the principle in other equations.

It is gratifying to hear the Senator talk so emphatically in this tone.

We had about concluded that the venerable doctrine of the right of a State to regulate its own affairs, as the Constitution definitely and specifically provided, had no defenders outside of the South, and none too many even in this area.

But Senator BORAH raises his voice when he states his position on this principle and he is from away out yonder in Idaho.

What a support such a declaration should be for the States' Rights party, the Democratic in these days when Federalism is running wild!

The Federalism of ALEXANDER HAMILTON crushing and putting to rout the democracy of JEFFERSON!

Heartening, indeed, this emphatic assertion from a Senator who is neither a Jeffersonian nor a Southerner, but who believes that the structure of the Constitution on this point is to be reverenced instead of prostituted.

Let us hope that Senators WAGNER and COSTIGAN who put their heads together and introduced this bill, both of them Democrats and, therefore, bound as such by the principle of States' Rights, hear this fellow-Senator of the Republican party, the party that traditionally has stood for the abrogation of such rights and the enthronement of strong, centralized Federal government.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions-

White Press, Southern.

4932

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
DEC 22 1935

THE SOUTH TODAY

By John Temple Graves, II

The Lynch Mind: A Snapshot.

(Copyright, 1935, for The News.)

Editor's Note: John Temple Graves, II, conducts a widely read daily column in the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald. He has been editor of two southern papers, author of numerous books, contributor to many magazines, and this year was awarded a doctor's degree by the University of the South for "distinguished contributions to the field of journalism." He saw service in France in 1918, served on the American peace commission in Paris in 1919, was economist for the federal trade commission in Washington, and was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia. Dr. Graves is the son of a distinguished southern journalist and the great-grandson of the eldest brother of John C. Calhoun. By way of versatility he holds the Middle Atlantic States tennis championship for 1934.

During the war of the American Revolution a Virginia justice of the peace developed a nice technique with the Tories. He would suspend them by their thumbs until they were persuaded to shout "Liberty forever!" The gentleman's name was Charles Lynch, and even though his patients all survived this extra-legal treatment, the name was given thereafter to a practice by which nearly 5,000 Americans, most of them Southern Negroes, have been put to death without benefit of law in the last fifty years. The simpler and better name for these premeditated killings, of course, is murder. The term "lynching," although undoubtedly less offensive to practitioners, is an understatement—and an injustice to the memory of Charles Lynch.

Wide Range of Letters.

With all that is being said and done, or at least, attempted, against lynch law, it seems strange that there should be so few studies of the lynch mind—photographs taken from life. Almost any Southern editorial writer who has taken a stand against mob murder is likely to have a drawerful of more or less revealing letters from people who believe in lynching, letters of abuse, epithet, protest, argument, philosophy. In the course of ten years as an editorialist in Florida and Alabama, conducting a daily editorial column on the first page under his own name, this writer has had his share of such letters; and because they have come to him as to an individual they have been, perhaps, more intimate and enlightening than letters addressed formally to a newspaper's editorial page. Their contents may offer little of argumentative worth, but they have a certain news value and an indisputable clinical interest.

Some people will tell you that the lyncher has no mind, that he is a moron. But it can be stated on the best of evidence that thousands of very good readers and writers in the South today believe in lynching as a stern necessity under certain circumstances, even though they may be unwilling to take part in an actual lynching themselves. Without them and the prestige which their comparatively "educated" support gives the institution, actual lynchers might be much more careful. For one letter from the moron who scrawls on coarse ruled paper that you are a "low down yellow-livered nigger-lover" and calls you unprintable names in a spelling all his own, there are dozens of letters from perfectly intelligent people who write to debate the thing with you, sometimes sorrowfully, sometimes angrily, sometimes with complete dispassion.

Never to be forgotten, for example, is the obviously genuine regret with which a certain graduate of the University of Virginia offered his conclusion that the white and Negro races will never be able to live successfully side by side in the South—or the perfect calm with which he suggested by way of solution "a general massacre." Comparable in philosophical ferocity is the rule laid down by a Birmingham physician in a letter insisting that a certain Negro defendant should be hanged whether he was guilty or not. "The important thing," he wrote, "is that whenever a white woman is raped by a Negro there should be an example and a spectacle of punishment. If possible, get the right Negro and string him up. String up one or two of his nearest relatives at the same time. And if the right one can't be found, take some other Negro."

A major point with lynch sympathizers is that those who are not in favor of lynching have never been faced personally with the situation which incites it. "If we had sat quietly (sic) on our royal," asserts one correspondent "while the niggers were killing our white women and alibing and getting by, we would never had been recognized." He wrote: "If those women who were attacked were some of your own friends or relatives, I wonder if you would be for handling them so nice and gentle?"

Communist Influence.

Interference of the Communist International Labor Defense is mentioned in many letters as a cause of lynchings. A Georgia author wrote that the only way to end present-day lynchings and racial disorders in the South was to "discover the agitators—they happen to be Communists and labor organizations—punish them; their action is treasonable." But that the Communists themselves feel that their coming, far from aggravating the lynch impulse, has cowed it, is suggested in a letter from the secretary of an international labor defense district organization:

"The ILD has forced the Southern lynchers to now assume the defensive. They are no more the arrogant fellows they were in 1931. In 1931 a Scottsboro paper openly made lynch threats against any Negro who aspired to jury service in the South. The Jackson County Sentinel editorially stated: 'A Negro juror in Jackson County would be a curiosity, and sometimes curiosities are embalmed, you know. Today we witness Tom Knight (attorney general of Alabama) telling the Supreme Court of the United States that Negroes are not systematically excluded from Alabama juries because of their race."

The conviction that lynching parties are composed of men grimly and calmly performing a social duty in the spirit of early American vigilantes is common to many of the correspondents. "I do not think the mob is composed of the blood-thirsty anarchists which you intimate," wrote a Florida school teacher, "any more than our Confederate grandfathers were such, because they united secretly to free this fair land from the dominion of the carpet-baggers and scalawags. Rather are they composed of men who have lost confidence in the agencies that have been duly constituted to effect justice. And with no small reason."

Defenders of Lynch Law.

A superior knowledge of the Negro race is the claim with which a number of letter-writers set themselves up as defenders of lynch law. "How much do you know of Negro psychology?" scoffed a Tennessee merchant. "Do you know anything of the Negro you are thrown with but what he wants you to think? Do you appreciate that the vindication of the 'majesty of the law' is Greek or Hebrew to him? The law is something to be used in his favor by his friends and against him by his enemies. He will put you and your newspaper among those that think 'them boys didn't do nothing wrong' and he will not admit it to you but you could never make him believe that they (the Scottsboro defendants) rode in a car at night with any strange women without having intercourse with them, and range you with those who think opportunity justification."

But the most frequently employed and impressive point made in defense (or explanation) of lynching is the ineffectualness of the law, the technicalities employed to delay and often to defeat the doing of justice. "Those (Scottsboro) Negro boys were convicted and sentenced by an Alabama judge and jury and should have been dead and forgotten long ago," writes a Georgia merchant. "That they are still living is the fault of our laws. If you are crusading for law and order, then for God's sake start with the law.—Get the laws fixed so that when a man is fairly convicted by a jury of his peers let him suffer the penalty imposed without further bother and expense. How in the name of decency is Alabama to keep her women from being raped by black devils when they have such examples of the inadequacy of our existing laws?" In this writer's mind, obviously, there is no question of the fairness of the Scottsboro trials, nor any concern for it.

Organizations Active.

It is only within recent years, of course, that organizations like the International Labor Defense and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have interfered to offer to Negro defendants in certain cases in the South the services of resourceful attorneys, and thus to protract trials and legal processes. Whether this "interference" tends to defeat justice or to procure it, the fact that it is a comparatively recent development means that the lynch argument based upon it is also recent.

These selected letters are typical of the variations in intelligence, education and point of view of those who write to Southern newspapers in defense of lynch law. There are many, if not more, letters expressing uncompromising hostility to mob murder and the lynch philosophy. The number of Southerners who believe that lynching is a disgraceful, corruptive and wholly unnecessary practice rivals today the number of those who do not. The expressions of their belief have neither news value nor clinical interest, as they are identical with those of civilized people the world over, but the picture attempted here would be incomplete without a reference to them. In Birmingham last year, for example, when a third-rate politician called facetiously for "bigger and better lynchings" and suggested that "rope is too high and one bullet placed in the correct position will do the work at much less cost," he found himself sixteenth in a field of sixteen in a race for the state legislature. It is symptoms of this sort that give hope to Southerners who are earnestly striving to do away with the crime of lynching.

NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

DEC 20 1935

John Temple Graves Writes On Lynching

"It can be stated on the best o evidence that thousands of very good readers and writers in the South believe in lynching as a stern necessity under certain circumstances," advises John Temple Graves, II, in his survey of lynching which will appear in Saturday's Ledger-Dispatch. Without the prestige which the comparatively educated support of these people gives the institution, Dr. Graves thinks the actual lynchers might be much more careful.

These and other conclusions on lynching, one of the South's greatest problems, are reached by Graves in his inspiring contribution to "The South Today," regular Saturday feature in the Ledger-Dispatch. They are the result of years of contact with the problem during which Dr. Graves has conducted, under his own name, a column on the front page of a great southern newspaper. In this capacity he has had his share of letters from every type of newspaper reader, and because they have come to him as an individual, they have been more intimate and enlightening than letters addressed formally to a newspaper's editorial page.

Out of this wealth of correspondence, from doctors, lawyers, businessmen, housewives, teachers, and people in every walk of life, Dr. Graves has constructed a clinical survey of the lynch mind, which is highly enlightening and tremendously interesting and readable.

"The Lynch Mind: A Snapshot," by John Temple Graves II, will be the title of the second article of "The South Today," and will be found in the Ledger-Dispatch next Saturday.

Lynchings - 1935

White Press, Southern.

4933

Discussions.

Concord, N. C. Tribune
November 23, 1935

WHY LYNCHINGS AREN'T HALTED.

The news dispatches tell that seven hundred people joined in the lynching of two negro boys who confessed to criminal assault upon a high school girl in Columbus, Texas, and drowning her. The boys were snatched from officers at a river crossing and hanged to a tree near the farm home of the victim.

The county attorney termed the lynching "an expression of the will of the people" and said he did not consider the citizens who executed the negroes a mob.

Naturally under such circumstances it is not reasonable to presume that the enforcement officer was sincere in his threat to "vigorously" prosecute any of the seven hundred persons including women, who participated in the deplorable affair.

The negroes were in the hands of the law when the mob seized them and there's little doubt as to what their fate would have been in any court, yet it was, "the will of the people" to execute them, so another blot is recorded against Texas and against the South.

In this particular instance the county attorney admitted what usually is camouflaged That the mob represents the sentiment of the community.

That's the chief reason no mob members are ever convicted. And lack of conviction gives sustained life to mob rule.

It all goes back to "the will of the people," not only in this admitted case but in all other where officers claim they can't find mob members or evidence upon which to prepare warrants.

Seneca, S. C., Journal
November 28, 1935

BORAH SPEAKS BLUNTLY

Asked by the Association for the Advancement of Colored People what he would do about the federal anti-lynching law if he were president, Senator William E. Borah replied that if it were laid on his desk he would veto it because he believed such a law would be illegal.

Kingsland, Ga., S. E. Georgian
November 23, 1935

Lynchings In Georgia Deplored By Women

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 26—The Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta District of the M. E. Church, South, made public resolutions deeply deploring the two recent lynchings in Georgia and asserting that in neither of these cases was there even the pretense of excuse for mob violence. One of the mob's victims, they asserted, was not accused of any offense whatever and the other was accused only of drunkenness and of effecting his escape from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol. Registering "unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances," the Society voiced its protest against "officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob," and urged "upon all religious, educational, and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence." The Society commended county and state officials who in other recent cases have averted threatened lynchings by calling out the troops. The resolutions follow:

"We, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta District, M. E. Church, South, in quarterly session, note with deep humiliation that two lynchings have disgraced our state in the last two months; one near Vienna, another near Moultrie. Mobs have defied our laws, discredited our civilization, and mocked our religion. We bow our heads in shame and contrition that such things can happen among us.

"Lynching in our opinion is never excusable, but in these two cases there was not even the pretense of an excuse. Lewis Harris, lynched on September 27 near Vienna, was accused only of drunkenness and of escaping from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol. When he was rearrested, the same officer, apparently without resistance, handed him over to a mob to be shot to death. Bo Brinson, lynched near Moultrie on October 16th, was not accused of any offense whatever. Searching for another Negro, a mob entered Brinson's house. When he objected, they shot him to death in his own home. So far none of the participants in either lynching has been apprehended.

"Therefore, we register our unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances, our protest to officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob, and our shame for a Christian civilization so superficial as still to tolerate such savagery.

"We urge upon officers and courts their sacred obligation to uphold the constituted processes of law, and upon all religious, educational, and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence.

"We are glad to commend the county and state officials who in recent cases have called out the organized power of the state to protect persons in the custody of the law and to vindicate the authority of the courts."

GREENVILLE, S. C.
NEWS

NOV 21 1935

"SELF-DEFENSE"

Five white men at Ashland, Tennessee were acquitted by a jury on a charge of murder for the shooting of a negro who had insulted the wife of one of the defendants.

The negro youth, it appears, had slapped the woman and had thereafter been shortly taken into costudy for trial and punishment. But the husband and kinsmen successfully intimidated officers and got possession of the negro, whom they subsequently shot to death.

Their story was that they only intended to take the negro out and administer a whipping, but that he did not fall in with that idea and picked up some rocks to defend himself. And therefore the defendants claim that they shot him to death in self-defense. It is rather strange that five white men, fully armed, would be in such fear of an unarmed negro youth in their custody as to have to kill him in self-defense because of such threatening gestures as he might make. But that was their story and the jury accepted it.

However the presiding judge had a different idea. He excoriated the jury for returning such an "astounding verdict" and immediately issued bench warrants charging the same defendants with conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment. It may be that a subsequent jury will likewise free these defendants, but at any rate the action is gratifying indication of a judge's determination to censure a verdict which very evidently impressed him as calling for some strong remarks from the bench.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

NOV 19 1935

THEY COME CLEAR.

The five Tennessee white men who laughingly surrendered to the sheriff after they had lynched a negro alleged to have slapped the wife of one of their number are, it is true, being put to the inconvenience of a court trial; but they had scant cause for worry.

The explanation one of them thought up was just the sort of funny story calculated to appeal to a jury composed of their peers. They took the negro out with no idea of killing him, they say; but just wanted to whip him. When he said he would not be whipped, and stooped down to pick up a rock, why of course they shot him—in self-defense.

The only thing that prevents our chuckling some over the joke on the colored boy is that we've heard even funnier stories along the same line.

There was that one, if you remember, about Dock Rogers, the Pender negro, who tripped in a plowline on the courthouse lawn and strangled himself to death while trying to bum a ride with some white folks who were out frolicking with a truck.

Or was that the explanation former Solicitor Woodus Kellum accepted for the report he was ordered to make but seems not to have made as yet to Governor Ehringhaus?

SAN ANGELO, TEX.
STANDARD

NOV 4 1935

THE LAW'S COURSE

The lynch toll of this year stands at 19 today.

Sordid picture in this latest wave of human beings give vent to their else they may regret, may deplore with sober words, but it appears there's little if not by deed. Mob action ought may do about it so long as this occurs. The picture is never to be the public will so long as there is a better and a legal way throughout the years. Good citizens to mob murder, who desecrates their oath of office by word of mouth assaulted her was as sordid. The picture has not changed much joins the mob, who gives state sanction to mob murder, who desecrates t, may deplore with sober his oath of office by word of mouth e it appears there's little if not by deed. Mob action ought may do about it so long as this occurs. The picture is never to be the public will so long beings give vent to their as there is a better and a legal way reasonably where crimes to express it. his occur. The picture is tened any by the state the county attorney that reted this as the will of two negro boys slew a white girl and he interpreted a mob of 700 sullen Texans who feelings unreasoned jeered an Episcopal rector as he such as this occurred pleaded to let the law take its not brightened course. The original crime wherement of the c

CISCO, TEX.
NEWS

NOV 18 1935

Is Mob Violence 'Will of the People?'

Two negro boys charged with foul crimes were lynched by a mob at Columbus. They were taken from armed officials and hanged to a live oak tree not far from the home of their victim of a double outrage. O. P. Moore, county attorney, said he would vigorously prosecute "any of the 700 persons, including women, who participated," but added, "I do not consider the persons who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people." This expression of the prosecutor is said to have drawn protest the state over "as official action lagged." Gov. James V. Allred said, "Lynching is deplorable at any time," and L. G. Phares, head of the department of public safety and Texas rangers added, "I don't believe lynchings are the will of the people and if they are, they certainly ought not to be."

Mob law is said to be the law of the jungle. It overrides the law of organized society. There isn't a chance on earth for a negro charged with the double crime of murder and rape to win a verdict of not guilty in a court of justice in the commonwealth of Texas. Mob law, racial prejudices are as dangerous as a dynamite bomb or as a lighted torch in a powder magazine. The mob who lynched the two negroes near Columbus may be prosecuted but it is safe to predict the leaders will never be convicted of mob violence in the county or adjoining counties which was the scene of the ghastly horror and which called for the condemnation of those who participated in the live oak tree hanging.

Every alleged criminal, regardless of age, color or condition in life is entitled to a fair trial in open court. Then if convicted by a jury of his peers, the punishment should fit the crime.

DENTON, TEX.
RECORD CHRONICLE

NOV 15 1935

"THE PEOPLE'S WILL"

Two negro boys, 15 and 16 years old, were lynched this week in East Texas as they were being brought to trial for the brutal assault and murder of a young white girl. The mob wasn't masked and the leaders were well known.

The Sheriff said he was sorry the mob took the law into its own hands, and the District Attorney planned no action, saying that he considered the lynching to be "an expression of the will of the people." The general attitude of those charged with enforcing the law was that the lynching was too bad but that it was necessary under the conditions and the people who took part in their mob crime couldn't be blamed.

"The will of the people" is a new name for mob-bing. The prospect that the two negro youths could not receive more than a few years in the reformatory for their crime due to their age apparently caused many otherwise law-abiding citizens to take justice into their own hands.

The law has wisely set age limits to protect impetuous youths from the full consequences of their crimes, placing the age of discretion at 16, but occasionally it happens, as in this case, that the nature of a crime requires a man's punishment. When the law fails to provide adequate punishment, it is not surprising, however regretted it may be, that citizens take the law into their own hands and deal out summary justice.

Greenville, S. C. News
November 27, 1935

ENDORSED

This statement from The News and Courier is endorsed:

Senator Borah's answer to Walter White, negro leader and author of the Costigan-Wagner bill, that the bill is unconstitutional and that if President he would veto it, places him as the foremost man, Democrat or Republican, in any party, outside of the South, defending the State right, the Southern right of each State to manage its own affairs.

While Mr. Borah does not say in this answer (it was not necessary) that he would oppose a constitutional amendment his record as a State rights man is enough. He voted against the Costigan-Wagner bill. A few years ago, when he was in Augusta, Ga., he made a statement that was the clearest and plainest that any man in the front political rank has made in defense of the position upon which government by Southern white people rests.

This statement of facts is also important and should be pondered:

The President, Mr. Roosevelt, could have stopped the bill by a word—which he did not utter. Newspaper correspondents, Pearson and Allen, published that he favored it. That has been privately denied. They published that Mrs. Roosevelt strongly favored the bill and was active for it. That has not been denied.

Anyway we all know that the Democratic senators from Northern States supported the bill, that all or nearly all of them from the border States supported.

There stood the South deserted by all save Southern senators—and Borah.

Get this straight: Lynching is without excuse. The South knows lynching is without excuse. The South does not undertake to defend lynching. The South wants law and order and protection for the humblest citizen regardless of his color.

But when the State is asked to give up its authority over its citizens to the Federal government in all cases where so many as three men make an attack on another then the South or any other section as for that matter would better call a halt.

If the Wagner-Costigan bill becomes law, States might as well give up their Statehood. Their end has come.

[illegible], N. C. Citizen
November 25, 1935

BORAH'S STRAIGHT TALK

Senator Borah has dealt with what he describes as the "corrupt and shameless" attack upon him by Walter White's Society for the Advancement of Colored People in the manner it deserved.

White, assuming that Mr. Borah wants to be the Republican candidate for President next year, sought to bully him into changing his position on the anti-Lynchings measures, notably the Dyer bill and the Costigan-Wagner bill, by threatening him with the opposition of 12,000,000 "negro voters," according to the United Press report.

There are not, of course, 12,000,000 negro voters. There are only about that many negroes in the United States. White, however, in his letter to Senator Borah, seems to have claimed that the negro voters hold the balance of power in a number of States—Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Ohio being named. He may be right as to that. We do not know.

Senator Borah does not trifle with such questions. He answers White bluntly that he opposed the anti-lynching bills because he was convinced, after the fullest study, that they were unconstitutional. He does not deny that his opposition had much to do with blocking the passage of these bills. It did have much to do with blocking them. He says unequivocally that if he were President and such a bill should reach him, under his oath and in the light of his convictions, he would unhesitatingly veto it.

That is straight talk. It is the kind of talk for which Senator Borah is famous. It is the kind of talk which has put him on the front pages of the newspapers of America oftener probably than any other public man of this generation who was outside the White House. It is the kind of talk which accounts for the hold he has on the imagination of the American people regardless of whether they agree or disagree with the views which he expresses.

OSKALOOSA, IA.
HERALD

DEC 5 1935

LYNCHING ALWAYS WRONG.

A public official who openly condones mob violence is in effect becoming a party to defiance of the law he is sworn to uphold. Few have been so irresponsible as to assume that attitude or display any such serious disregard of official duty. There is recalled the instance of Governor Rolph of California, who sought to defend a lynching in that state about two years ago, and of Cole Blease of South Carolina, who repeatedly sanctioned mob action.

Along with these worthies must now be placed County Attorney O. P. Moore of Columbus, Tex., who asserts that the lynching of two Negro youths near that place was "an expression of the will of the people." In that the county attorney becomes the spokesman for himself and the mob. Despite the heinous crime for which the boys were lawlessly put to death, the mob action could not have been the expression of even a sizable minority of Texas people. The real sentiment of the state is reflected in the declaration of Governor Allred that, regardless of the facts in this case, lynching is "deplorable at any time."—Kansas City Star.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4934

TEMPLE, TEX.
TELEGRAM
NOV 16 1935

Is Lynching The Way?

THE COUNTY attorney at Columbus, Texas, where two negroes were taken and lynched this week, called the act "the will of the people" and official action lagged as bitter protests poured in to his office.

The negroes were taken from officers and strung up to trees near the scene where they admitted an attack on and murder of a white girl.

Their crime was heinous, savage, brutal. They deserved no better than they received. But is lynching the means for meting out justice?

A mob is inhuman. It is an entity bent on destruction. Nothing can hold it in leash. It does not think. It DOES. It is ruled by passion. It is uncontrollable.

And, although its ends are well meant, and probably right, we, as a civilized nation should frown on the rashness of mob action.

True, sometimes the courts grind slowly and fail to mete out the punishment the culprit deserves. But should we take up the torch of justice ourselves.

The matter of mob action has ever been the topic of serious and heated controversy. Its defenders claim the right to take up where the courts fail.

But the very UNTHINKING of a mob condemns its motives. A mob could easily make a mistake, unknowingly and innocently. Perhaps the courts make mistakes, but at least their procedure is calm, unprejudiced.

Even a criminal has a right in court to a chance. He is given that right in law to plead his own cause. Even though the courts fail, sometimes, it is not for mobs to take the matter in hand. That sort of thing hearkens back to the darker ages of man.

GREENVILLE, TEX.
HERALD
NOV 15 1935

THIS OFFICIAL SHOULD RESIGN

Two Negroes were lynched by infuriated citizens at Columbus, Texas, the other night. They were taken away from the sheriff and his deputies, who were en route from Houston to Columbus. The Negroes were to be tried for a revolting crime, the commission of which they are alleged to have confessed. But that did not justify a group of citizens in taking the law into their own hands.

And in the wake of the affair the County Attorney, whose sworn duty it is to enforce the law and see that justice is meted out in the courtroom and not in the woods in the dark of night, is quoted as saying that the lynchings represented "an expression of the will of the people." He ought either to resign or be removed from office. There were enough people in the Columbus community to organize a mob, but it is incredible to think that the mob's action reflects the opinion of a majority of the citizens of that community. The Herald believes there is not a county in Texas, the majority of the citizens of which do not believe in permitting every criminal, no matter how dastardly his crime, the right of a trial by jury.

We had one lynching in Greenville. The Herald doesn't believe there will ever be another — for the very simple reason that the lynching constituted one of the most shameful chapters of Greenville history. The officials who are lagging in their investigation of the Columbus mob should be removed from office. The time will come when they will be in dispute with their fellow citizens.

Athens, Ga., Banner-Herald
November 26, 1935

WOMEN DEPLORE LYNCHINGS

The women of the Missionary Society of the Atlanta district of the Methodist Episcopal church last week adopted resolutions condemning two lynchings which occurred recently in this state, one at Vienna and one at Moultrie. These lynchings were not occasioned by the committal of the usual crime that invariably brings on lynchings, not only in this state, but in other states, but they were both alleged to be for minor infractions of the law.

However, the action of these good ladies was unusual, especially the ordering of the resolution adopted condemning the action of the mob in both instances. The resolution, in part, reads:

"We, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta district, M. E. church, South, in quarterly session, note with deep humiliation that two lynchings have disgraced our state in the last two months; one near Vienna, another near Moultrie. Mobs have defied our laws, discredited our civilization, and mocked our religion. We bow our heads in shame and contrition that such things can happen among us.

"Lynching in our opinion is never excusable, but in these two cases there was not even the pretense of an excuse."

Continuing, these ladies registered a most vehement condemnation of the action of those citizens who committed the violation of the law in lynching two negroes. The negroes may not have been guilty, but the enormity of their crimes did not warrant justification of their acts. Lynchings are of a diabolical character, with the possible exception of the crime of rape. Usually, in such cases, the unwritten law is applied and the guilty party or parties are made to pay the price of their crime by giving their lives as a toll for committing the unspeakable crime which is committed upon women.

Reviewing the Vienna and Moultrie cases, the resolution continued:

"Therefore, we register our unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances, our protest to officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob, and our shame for a Christian civilization so superficial as still to tolerate such savagery.

"We urge upon officers and courts their sacred obligation to uphold the constituted processes of law, and upon all religious, educational and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence."

As women are the principals in rape cases, the extracts reproduced in the foregoing teems with condemnation of lynchings irrespective of sex. While no one can condone mob violence, yet when rape is committed, the enforcement of the unwritten law may be justified, certainly, lynchings should not be resorted to for other crimes, but court procedure should be taken and such cases tried in a sane and orderly manner.

Tuscaloosa, Ala., News
November 28, 1935

BORAH ON THE ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

THE ill-advised agitation of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill by the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People has encountered a stiff jolt at the hands of Senator Borah in spite of the fact that he is a tentative candidate for the Republican presidential nomination and, therefore, might be expected to indulge in some pussyfooting if he is to live up to the traditions in such cases.

But Borah doesn't pussyfoot. He states flat-footedly and without reserve that were he to become President and were this so-called anti-lynch bill to come before him, he would veto it without hesitation. He insists, as so many others have done, that it is unconstitutional and the argument that "the negro voters hold the balance of power in some states," does not alter his position.

This is a courageous yet highly proper stand and will enhance the reputation of Borah for candor, regardless of any effect it may have upon the colored vote. The Costigan-Wagner bill is not only unconstitutional but it is unwise, unfair and merits the condemnation of all unprejudiced persons who believe in fair play.

The bill would permit the federal government to enter the states and take charge where lynchings occur and would serve as an incident of all responsible officials in the territory involved. It would constitute one of the most flagrant violations of state rights on record and serve to revive all the bitterness of the reconstruction period. It would incite lawlessness rather than minimize it and produce no constructive result whatever.

The view of Borah is the correct view and it should obtain in this case.

Rome, Ga. News-Tribune
November 28, 1935

BORAH ON "ANTI-LYNCH" BILL

THE ill-advised agitation of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill by the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People has encountered a stiff jolt at the hands of Senator Borah in spite of the fact that he is a tentative candidate for the Republican presidential nomination and, therefore, might be expected to indulge in some pussyfooting if he is to live up to the traditions in such cases.

But Borah doesn't pussyfoot. He states flat-footedly and without reserve that were he to become President and were this so-called anti-lynch bill to come before him, he would veto it without hesitation. He insists, as so many others have done, that it is unconstitutional and the argument that "the negro voters hold the balance of power in some states," does not alter his position.

This is a courageous yet highly proper stand and will enhance the reputation of Borah for candor, regardless of any effect it may have upon the colored vote. The Costigan-Wagner bill is not only unconstitutional but it is unwise, unfair and merits the condemnation of all unprejudiced persons who believe in fair play.

The bill would permit the federal government to enter the states and take charge where lynching occurs and would serve as an indictment of all responsible officials in the territory involved. It would constitute one of the most flagrant violations of state rights on record and serve to revive all the bitterness of the reconstruction period. It would incite lawlessness rather than minimize it and produce no constructive result whatever.

The view of Borah is the correct view and it should obtain in this case.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS SENTINEL
NOV 19 1935

Blow At Lawlessness

THERE'S a Circuit Judge in Cheatham County who has furnished an example others on the bench would do well to follow. He has struck a telling blow at lawlessness.

After conducting the trial of five men held in the recent lynching of a Negro at Ashland City, Tenn., and after hearing the jury's verdict of acquittal, Circuit Judge Wirt Courtney said to the jurors:

"I am astounded at your verdict. By your action you will make Cheatham County the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future."

Judge Courtney has tried to prevent that very thing by having the five men re-arrested on charges of conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment.

It is because local authorities are usually impotent to punish lynchers that a national anti-lynching law is necessary.

Each such act of lawlessness brings that much closer the enactment of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill by Congress.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD
NOV 19 1935

PRESS COMMENT
Opinions of other Editors

The Self-Defense of Five Against One.

The strange lynching over in Tennessee last week which was followed by the stranger surrender of the five participants and their immediate trial has produced still one more strange feature. It is a plea of self-defense. These five men had taken a negro away from two officers of the law and had driven him out into the country intending, they said, to whip him but not to kill him. The car was stopped about five miles from town.

"Get out," said Luther Dotson, "we are going to give you a whipping."

"You ain't going to whip me," the negro is sworn to have replied and to have reached for a rock that lay on the roadside. Dotson fired, killing the negro.

If white supremacy has reached such a state that five white men, of daring and strength proven by their having wrested a prisoner from two white officers, cannot defend themselves against one unarmed black man without having to shoot him, then white supremacy is hardly worth maintaining. Let the jury take that into consideration.—Charlotte News

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
NOV 21 1935

ONLY ECHO ANSWERS.

Southern lynching has worked out a new, but surely not unexpected, pattern in Tennessee. Five mobsters, after seizing a negro prisoner from officers and doing him to death, surrendered, submitted that their act was in self-defense, as their victim said he wouldn't take the whipping which they proposed to give him and stooped to pick up a rock as a combative weapon, and were accordingly awarded freedom by a jury of what was obviously their mob-minded peers.

How the situation will eventually work out, reflecting most seriously as it does upon southern justice, remains to be seen. With all due credit, let it be recorded that the court denounced the verdict and remanded the acquitted mobsters to jail on bench warrants which charged conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment. Conspiracy is recognized as one of the most difficult charges to prove; and there is little prospect that a jury, reflecting popular sentiment in its original verdict, can be found, especially in the same county, to bring in a conviction on this second count.

In event of another acquittal, which must be anticipated, the sheriff from whom the hapless victim was taken announces that the quintet will not be liberated but that he will file charges based "on the seizure of the negro from officers by armed force".

As justice, unable to mete out retribution, moves from one lesser charge to another, the Daily News finds itself again asking what constitutes kidnaping under the Lindbergh act or any other act, in Tennessee or any other state? Before the charge retrogresses to the simple misdemeanor of discharging firearms within the city—or was it the county?—limits, when and where do the urge and the authority for federal intervention in such cases have to come?

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
RECORD
NOV 28 1935

NO MORE LYNCHING!

Authorities of the State and of Fresno county should take note in time of the threats now reported to be current in Fresno of mob action against the slayer of Mary Stammer. California has been disgraced by three lynchings in two years—at San Jose in November, 1933, when the kidnapers of Brooke Hart were victims of mob vengeance, and at Yreka in August, last, when the reputed killer of a police officer was hanged without a trial. Before that the State's record was clear for thirteen years, the last previous California lynching having taken place in 1920.

It should be kept clear from now on. The penalties of California law, when they are applied, are severe enough to deal with any crime, and police and courts are generally up to their job of marshaling evidence and obtaining conviction where its justified. There is no reason to suppose that justice will slip up in the Fresno case, or that a deserved penalty will not be inflicted.

Every arrested person has a right to a fair trial and the opportunity to prove his innocence if he can. The more horrible the crime, the better right an accused has to demonstrate that he is not guilty, if he is not. Mob rule in no case provides such an opportunity.

Fresno has been warned by the mutterings of the mob. It must protect its good name.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4935

Louisburg, N. C. Times
August 23, 1935

THE FRANKLIN COUNTY MOB

No action has been taken against the Franklin County mob which lynched a crazy negro three weeks ago.

And this despite the fact that hundreds of people in Franklin County undoubtedly know the identity of many members of the mob. They probably consider themselves honor bound not to give any information to the officers.

All of which helps to make the case against Franklin County more damaging. As matters now stand, Franklin has the unenviable distinction of being at the bottom of the entire list of one hundred counties so far as the quality of its citizenship is concerned. And it will maintain that distinction until something is done to punish the men who were guilty of that horrible crime.—The State.

The bottom in all constructive things is usually a very necessary and useful position, without which nothing is very safe. It is that element which is seriously lacking in the criticisms of sensationalists and others who evidently think it perfectly all right to juggle the laws and governmental functions about at will and the public should dance with delight. All citizens regret a lynching. They regret more the conditions that cause lynchings. And they regret a great more the brutal action of some fiend who attempts to ruin life and break up homes in a peaceful, god fearing community of good citizens. Upon the same theory that the critics condemn Franklin County for the commission of an act, that evidently is given no notice of in other sections, the people so criticised feel justified in condemning them as encouraging and abetting with their acts, the crimes which caused the lynchings.

Franklin County has no reason to be ashamed of its past. Its history has proven its patriotism, its loyalty, generosity and cooperation with and to government and party and its willingness to be law abiding, when the law will serve. Franklin County has not been extended the same patriotism, loyalty, generosity, and cooperation from outside its borders.

To be at the bottom isn't quite the disgrace Editor Goersch would have all believe, especially when it involves the defense of the homes and lives of a community against fiends whom the law can hardly reach.

Man Claims Part In Mob Violence Of 35 Years Ago

8-19-35

Beaufort, Aug. 17.—(AP)—Carteret county officers today disclosed receipt of a letter from Cortez, Fla., signed "A. F. Taylor" in which the writer said he participated in a lynching here 35 years ago.

Asserting that he had become religious and was being troubled by his conscience, the writer said he was willing to return here if officers wanted him. However, they decided it was useless to accept his offer.

The lynching referred to was the only one in the history of this county. A negro, Louis Patrick, was shot and hanged after the slaying of Elijah Weeks, a merchant.

The Florida letter writer said he was a lookout for the mob but did not witness the lynching.

Birmingham, Ala., Labor Advocate
August 17, 1935

THE LYNCHING EVIL

Evidently, the lynching evil cannot be successfully controlled by the states. Within the last few weeks North Carolina, California and Mississippi went into the spotlight—each of those states had a lynching to its credit.

Possibly, the California mob still remembers the lavish praise heaped on the San Jose mob for its double murder by the late Governor Rolph—who knows? This California mob the other week—a mob of well-dressed citizens—hanged to a pine tree near Yreka a young white man suspected of murder. The victim of this well dressed band of murderers was only "suspected" of murder. Yet they took him and hanged him to a tree.

This deplorable outrage was a deliberate insult to the courts and a wanton defiance of all orderly and lawfully constituted government.

The Federal anti-lynching law as proposed in the Costigan-Wagner bill should be passed without any further delay.

No one can defend the crime of lynching—it is murder—and all those guilty of this abominable crime should be punished according to law, whether they are members of a well dressed mob or just plain hoodlums.

Senator Costigan in discussing his bill said "The lynch evil is national, not local. It is not being controlled by the states and demands national legislation as was the case with kidnaping."

There should be no place for Judge Lynch and his outlaws in this country. Lynching is murder.

Waycross, Ga., Journal-Herald
September 9, 1935

Lynchings

During the first six months of 1935 there were four lynchings, two in Louisiana and two in Mississippi.

This compared with six lynchings for the first half of 1934 and eight lynchings for the first half of 1933.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TRIBUNE
SEP 3 1935

Rain-Routed

A DRENCHING rain routs a mob howling about a Jersey jail for a Negro accused of murder. Perhaps New Jersey doesn't breed mobs that "can take it." But it's more likely that an earnest soul-searching rain would be too much for the average mob in any section of the Country. The mob-spirit is unstable stuff. The slightest jolt is likely to disintegrate it into harmless vaporings of prejudice and into commonsense. The wet Jerseyites still mumbled vindictive nonsense, but commonsense dictated their action—they scampered off to shelter.

The incident proves again—and needlessly—that intelligent, honest, and resourceful, peace officers are by no means powerless to frustrate lynching. We remarked some time ago that tear-gas would set most mobsters to thinking of less ghastly personal concerns than murder. A short section of fire-hose, with an artist at the nozzle, probably would be just as effective as rain from Heaven to preserve a community's self-respect.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD

SEP 26 1935

Demonstration in Murder.

At Oxford, Miss., while a Mississippi jury was con sidering the evidence against him, Ellwood Higgin botham, negro accused of killing a white farmer was taken from the jail and lynched by a mob.

If Higginbotham was guilty why couldn't 12 Mis sissippi white men be trusted to find him guilty

And if he wasn't guilty then of course he shoul not have been hanged.

The lynching therefore, contrary to precedent serves a useful purpose. It makes clear, even to those who have a way of dodging this issue, that lynching is not a device for enforcing the law. Oxford's lynchers took Higginbotham from the jail and the court because they did not want the law enforced.

Mendenhall, Miss. News
September 19, 1935

LYNCHING

In our own State of Mississippi, up at the little city of Oxford, while a jury debated the fate of a negro named Higgenbotham, confessed slayer of a white planter, an irate mob formed Monday night and after overpowering the jailer and securing the keys to the negro's cell, carried the killer to a nearby wood and put to practice a method which although illegal, has been carried on many times in this state, by stretching that negro's neck one notch further than it was supposed to go.

The crime for which the negro was on trial, was heinous in every detail, just cold-blood murder, so to speak, and there are not twelve men out of ten thousand who would have prescribed any save the death penalty as his just dues, however, there are lots of people so confirmed in their belief that lynching is the best means to curb crime that nothing else will satisfy their passion for speedy justice. A mob of this kind has never been known to be convicted for their offense; rarely are they ever brought to court, but since our land is provided with courts held for the purpose of determining the fate even to the guiltiest criminal, it seems that it would be a better procedure to let the law have its way.

By all means, a confessed murder deserves capital punishment, and if it were possible for a person to die two deaths instead of one, the Higgenbotham negro should have had the third degree, but a dead negro dangling from the end of a rope at the wee hours of the morning would certainly produce a ghastly spectacle—and we might add that the persons participating in the killing could sleep a little more soundly if they did not have the weight of the crime upon their conscience.

NEWS
Mendenhall, Miss.
SEP 19 1935

LYNCHING

In our own State of Mississippi, up at the little city of Oxford, while a jury debated the fate of a negro named Higgenbotham, confessed slayer of a white planter, an irate mob formed Monday night and after overpowering the jailer and securing the keys to the negro's cell, carried the killer to a nearby wood and put to practice a method which although illegal, has been carried on many times in this state, by stretching that negro's neck one notch further than it was supposed to go.

The crime for which the negro was on trial, was heinous in every detail, just cold-blood murder, so to speak, and there are not twelve men out of ten thousand who would have prescribed any save the death penalty as his just dues, however, there are lots of people so confirmed in their belief that lynching is the best means to curb crime that nothing else will satisfy their passion for speedy justice. A mob of this kind has never been known to be convicted for their offense; rarely are they ever brought to court, but since our land is provided with courts held for the purpose of determining the fate even to the guiltiest criminal, it seems that it would be a better procedure to let the law have its way.

By all means, a confessed murder deserves capital punishment, and if it were possible for a person to die two deaths instead of one, the Higgenbotham negro should have had the third degree, but a dead negro dangling from the end of a rope at the wee hours of the morning would certainly produce a ghastly spectacle—and we might add that the persons participating in the killing could sleep a little more soundly if they did not have the weight of the crime upon their conscience.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT

NOV 6 1935

The Jungle Code In Tennessee

If what happened in Tennessee, in the killing of a Negro man named Baxter Bell, had happened in the Congo, or in inner Arabia, or of certain parts of, say, Albania, or virtually anywhere on earth 500 years ago, it would have seemed entirely normal. Private vengeance must be as old as the human race. You kill one of my family, and my family thereupon assumes that it must kill you, or at least one of your family. That concept of behavior existed for centuries. It comes to life again in Tennessee.

There are two differences. In Tennessee the Negro man was charged not with murder but with slapping a white woman as she alighted from a bus. A deputy sheriff says the prisoner admitted doing so, and offered no other explanation except that "I don't know why I done it—I was just drunk." He was locked up, charged with assault and battery.

The other difference is that Tennessee long ago formally set aside the theory of private vengeance and established a system of law. The punishment of the guilty was taken out of private hands and made the duty of the State—and of nobody else. Everybody knows that, including Luther Dotson, Jimmie Dotson, Clyde Dotson, Jesse Dotson and Allie Brown. They were the five who took the prisoner from officers and came back a short while later—"laughing"—to report that they had killed him and were now giving themselves up.

We said everybody knows that the State has ruled out private vegeance. But whether that knowledge means anything in this instance, remains to be seen. The four Dotsons and Allie Brown were, at last accounts, still in jail. But they did not seem to be worrying. And so far as the dispatches indicate, nobody else is worrying. For the Dotsons also probably know, as most other people have learned, that a Southern State can revert to the barbarism of the Congo, or of inner Arabia, or of certain parts of, say, Albania, or of virtually the entire human race 500 years ago, and think none the less of itself for doing so.

Lynchings—1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4936

Term 'Lynching' Was Derived From Virginia Justice's Method Of Handling Tories, Says Editor

Letters to Newspapers, Pro and Con on Subject, Not All From Illiterate Individuals, He Says.

By John Temple Graves II.

Editor's Note: John Temple Graves II conducts a widely read daily column in the Birmingahm (Ala.) Age-Herald. He has been editor of two southern papers, author of numerous papers, author of numerous books, contributor to many magazines, and this year was awarded a doctor's degree by the University of the South for "distinguished contributions to the field of journalism." He saw service in France in 1918, served on the American peace commission in Paris in 1919, was economist for the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, and was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia. Dr. Graves is the son of a distinguished southern journalist and the great-grandson of the eldest brother of John C. Calhoun. By way of versatility, he holds the middle Atlantic states tennis championship for 1934.

This is the second of a series of articles by southern writers on "The South Today." These articles will not necessarily reflect the position of The Constitution on the problems discussed.

During the war of the American Revolution a Virginia justice of the peace developed a nice technique with the Tories. He would suspend them by their thumbs until they were persuaded to shout "liberty forever!" The gentleman's name was Charles Lynch, and even though his patients all survived this extra-legal treatment, the name was given thereafter to a practice by which nearly 5,000 Americans, most of them southern negroes, have been put to death without benefit of law in the last 50 years. The simpler and better name for these premeditated killings, of course, is murder. The term "lynching," although undoubtedly less offensive to practitioners, is an understatement—and an injustice to the memory of Charles Lynch.

Wide Range of Letters.

With all that is being said and done, or at least, attempted, against lynch law, it seems strange that there should be so few studies of the lynch mind—photographs taken from life. Almost any southern editorial writer who has taken a stand against mob murder is likely to have a drawerful of more or less revealing letters from people who believe in lynching; letters of abuse, epithet, protest, argument, philosophy.

In the course of ten years as an editorialist in Florida and Alabama, conducting a daily editorial column on the first page under his own name, this writer has had his share of such letters; and because they have come to him as to an individual they have been, perhaps, more intimate and enlightening than letters addressed formally to a newspaper's editorial page. Their contents may offer little of argumentative worth, but they have a certain news value and as indisputable clinical interest.

Some people will tell you that the lyncher has no mind, that he is a moron. But it can be stated on the best of evidence that thousands of very good readers and writers in the south today believe in lynching as a stern necessity under certain circumstances, even though they may be unwilling to take part in an actual lynching themselves.

Without them and the prestige which their comparatively "educated" supporte gives the institution, actual lynchers might be much more careful. For one letter from the moron who scrawls on coarse ruled paper that you are a "low down yellow-livered nigger-lover" and calls you unprintable names in a spelling all his own, there are dozens of letters from perfectly intelligent people who write to debate the thing with you, sometimes sorrowfully, sometimes angrily, sometimes with complete dispassion.

Lynch Psychology.

Never to be forgotten, for example, is the obviously genuine regret with which a certain graduate of the University of Virginia offered his conclusion that the white and negro races will never be able to live successfully side by side in the south—or the perfect calm with which he suggested as way of solution "a general massacre." Comparable in philosophical ferocity is the rule laid down by a Birmingham physician in a letter insisting that a certain negro defendant should be hanged whether he was guilty or not. "The important thing," he wrote, "is that whenever a white woman is raped by a negro there should be an example and a spectacle of punisument. If possible, get the right negro and string him up. String up one or two of his nearest relatives at the same time. And if the right one can't be found take some other negro."

A major point with lynch sympathizers is that those who are not in favor of lynching have never been faced personally with the situation which incites it. "If we had sat quietly (sic) on our royal," asserts one correspondent, "while the niggers were killing our white women and alibing and getting by, we would never had been recognized." He wrote: "If those women who were attacked were some of your own friends or relatives, I wonder if you would be for handling them so nice and gentle?"

Communist Influence.

Interference of the communist international labor defense is mentioned in many letters as a cause of lynchings. A Georgia author wrote that the only way to end present-day lynchings and racial disorders in the south was to "discover the agitators—they happen to be communists and labor organizations—punish them; their action is treasonable." But that the communists themselves feel that their coming, far from aggravating the lynch impulse, has cowed it, is suggested in a letter from the secretary of an international labor defense district organization:

"The I. L. D. has forced the southern lynchers to now assume the defensive. They are no more the arrogant fellows they were in 1931. In 1931 a Scottsboro paper openly made lynch threats against any negro who aspired to jury service in the south. The Jackson County Sentinal editorially stated: 'A negro juror in Jackson county would be a curiosity, and sometimes curiosities are embalmed. you know.' Today we witness Tom Knight (attorney-general of Alabama) telling the supreme court of the United States that negroes are not systematically excluded from Alabama juries because of their race."

The conviction that lynching parties are composed of men grimly and calmly performing a social duty in the spirit of early American vigilantes is common to many of the correspondents. "I do not think the mob is composed of the blood-thirsty anarchists which you intimate," wrote a Florida school teacher, "any more than our Confederate grandfathers were such, because they united secretly to free this fair land from the dominion of the carpet-baggers and scalawags. Rather are they composed of men who have lost confidence in the agencies that have been duly constituted to effect justice. And with no small reason."

Defenders of Lynch Law.

A superior knowledge of the negro race is the claim with which a number of letter-writers set themselves up as defenders of lynch law. "How much do you know of negro psychology?" scoffed a Tennessee merchant. "Do you know anything of the negro you are thrown with but what he wants you to think? Do you appreciate that the vindication of the 'majesty of the law' is Greek or Hebrew to him? The law is something to be used in his favor by his friends and against him by his enemies. He will put you and your newspaper among those that think 'them boys didn't do nothing wrong' and he will not admit it to you but you could never make him believe that they (the Scottsboro defendants) rode in a car at night with any strange women without having intercourse with them, and range you with those who think opportunity justification."

But the most frequently employed and impressive point made in defense (or explanation) of lynching is the ineffectualness of the law, the technicalities employed to delay and often to defeat the doing of justice. "Those (Scottsboro) negro boys were convicted and sentenced by an Alabama judge and jury and should have been dead and forgotten long ago," writes a Georgia merchant. "That they are still living is the fault of our laws. If you are crusading for law and order, then for God's sake start with the law. Get the laws fixed so that when a man is fairly convicted by a jury of his peers let him suffer the penalty imposed without further bother and expense. How in the name of decency is Alabama to keep her women from being raped by black devils when they have such examples of the inadequacy of our existing laws?" In this writer's mind, obviously, there is no question of the fairness of the Scottsboro trials, nor any concern for it.

Organizations Active.

It is only within recent years, of course, that organizations like the International Labor Defense and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have interfered to offer to negro defendants in certain cases in the south the services of resourceful attorneys, and thus to protract trials and legal processes. Whether this "interference" tends to defeat justice or to procure it, the fact that it is a comparaive recent development means that the lynch argument based upon it is also recent.

These selected letters are typical of the variations in intelligence, education and point of view of those who write to southern newspapers in defense of lynch law. There are many, if not more, letters expressing uncompromising hostility to mob murder and the lynch philosophy. The number of southerners who believe that lynching is a disgraceful, corruptive and wholly unnecessary practice rivals today the number of those who do not. The expressions of their belief have neither news value nor clinical interest, as they are identical with those of civilized people the world over, but the picture attempted here would be incomplete without a reference to them. In Birmingham last year, for example, when a third-rate politician called facetiously for "bigger and better lynchings" and suggested that "rope is too high and one bullet placed in the correct position will do the work at much less cost," he found himself sixteenth in a field of 16 in a race for the state legislature. It is symptoms of this sort that give hope to southerners who are earnestly striving to do away with the crime of lynching.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 9 1935

New Light on Lynching

WE should like to direct attention to the striking article which appears on this page from the pen of JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d, one of the series which THE TIMES-DISPATCH is publishing every Sunday on "The South Today."

MR. GRAVES explodes the widely cherished delusion that lynching is condoned only by semi-illiterate and moronic Southerners. He shows by quoting letters which have come to him over a period of years that a large percentage of "upper-class" Southerners also approve of lynching.

We confess that this comes as a shock to us. We had not imagined that literate and otherwise well-disposed persons could countenance such barbarities.

It is no longer possible to say, then, that the stigma of being the only "civilized" region in the world where such things occur, has been affixed to the South by its uneducated and economically underprivileged whites. But discouraging as is the evidence which MR. GRAVES presents, it at least enables those of us who are determined to wipe out this manifestation of savagery to know just what are the obstacles to the achievement of that desideratum.

JOURNAL
Wilmington
NOV 23 1935

As Other Editors See It

A TENNESSEE LYNCHING

(Dayton Ohio News, Nov. 7, 1935)

There have been more brutally executed lynching than that which occured this week at White Bluff, Tenn., but rarely if ever one as brazen. The victim, a Negro accused of slapping a white woman, was taken from a deputy sheriff and another official who were en route with their prisoner to the county jail.

The "mob" consisted of five armed men. They took the deputy's pistol but assured him that they would "be back in a few minutes and bring your gun." The promise was kept. In less than half an hour they returned and surrendered to the official. "They were all just laughing and seemed like they enjoyed what they had done," he says. "They told me they shot the Negro with my gun." the sheriff placed no charge but said that they would be taken to the country sent for arraingement.

Only less shocking than the crime itself is the cheerful confidence of this quintet that the law which they boast of flouting will not punish them for it. In the history of lynching, to be sure, they have ample assurance for such a belief. Officials in most cases offer little resistance to a lynching mob. Seldom is there even an effort afterward to identify its members, although in the case of the ringleaders at least that should be comparatively simple. Instances in which they have been brought to trial are still more infrequent. A conviction is almost unknown.

But no mob has had the audacity to do its barbarous, bloody deed and then deliver itself to the law in the attitude of "What are you going to do about it?" The country waits to see how Tennessee will meet an unprecedented challenge.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
DEC 31 1935

If the States Do Not.

The word from Washington is that the proponents of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill are planning a new drive for the measure's enactment, the impetus for which they expect to get from a senate investigation of the 14 or 19 lynchings—the number is disputed—since last May.

For some years now The Record has been pointing out to those advocates of state rights that every unpunished lynching is an argument for the enactment of some kind of a federal anti-lynching law. No unbiased student of law enforcement methods and systems believes, of course, that the mere enactment of a federal law against lynching will prohibit lynching, but some such law will be tried if the states, which might have made lynching unsafe long since, do not do something about it.

Lynchings - 1935

Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4937

Birmingham, Ala., Labor Advocate
November 16, 1935

LYNCHING IS MURDER

Judge Lynch is still with us, and in the last few days very much with us. A double lynching in Texas and one in West Virginia and an attempted lynching in Georgia all within the last few days is proof that the enemies of law and order are ever on the alert to flout the courts of justice and defy the lawfully constituted authorities of the country by taking the law into their own hands. Until those "members of the mob" whose favorite pastime is lynching are sternly dealt with as murderers—lynching will never cease in the South.

But when public officials sworn to uphold the law look upon lynch-murder as something to be condoned or even in some cases commended, as "an expression of the will of the people," then things are indeed in a bad way.

No matter what offense the victims of the lynchers may have committed it is never any excuse especially in an organized society to allow the "hoodlums" to take the law into their own hand and usurp the functions of the officers of the law and nullify the constitution and stultify the courts.

There is only one way to deal effectively with the lawless mobsters. They must be relentlessly hunted down, captured and punished according to law, just the same as the common murderers are. No decent man or woman could ever condone murder or be on friendly terms with those who band themselves together to commit murder.

Lynching is plain murder—premeditated and planned, and all those who assist at a lynching are equally guilty.

cky Mount, N. C., Telegram
November 14, 1935

MOB VIOLENCE CONTINUES

Mob violence apparently is enjoying a banner year in the United States, especially in the South, this year as every month brings news of fresh disorders where alleged criminals have been lynched as the citizens took the law in their own hands. Texas is the latest state to join the parade with the lynching of two youthful Negroes for the slaying of a young white woman. Jeering a minister who attempted to reason with them, the members of the mob hanged the hapless Negroes to an oak without benefit of trial and heedless of the clergy. Mississippi, we believe is leading in this rather bizarre distinction, while North Carolina must confess that she also is in the ranks.

Always there is almost the identical angle of where the mob caught up with the sheriff, removed the prisoner from him, and committed the dastardly deed. Then, the officer suddenly disappears from the picture. What becomes of him is seldom mentioned. We believe that some ambitious student anxious to earn a master's or a doctor's degree might write a thesis after he had made a thorough investigation upon the subject, "The Forgotten Sheriff at a Lynching," or some other suitable title. It is a pretty well known fact that the sheriff seldom is made to feel ashamed of his part in the grim drama. He usually is the silent, shall we say, partner, who merely delivers his prisoner to the mob then vanishes into thin air. Seldom do we hear of a sheriff who rushed away to appeal to the attorney general or the governor or any other officials, and the case is rare indeed where a sheriff has boldly challenged the right of the mob to relieve him of his prisoner.

Originally, every time a black was lynched it always was for committing or attempting to commit assault upon the white man's woman, but figures now will show that most lynchings committed in recent years have been for other reasons. Lack of confidence in the courts, together with a show of uncivilized emotions in the individual are the only reasons we see for explaining this abuse of law and order on the part of the citizenry. We believe an educational program portraying intensively the wrong involved in the taking of a person's life without first awaiting the court's decision is necessary to lift this country from the depths to which it has fallen.

Brunswick, Ga., News
November 29, 1935

[illegible] DEPLORE LYNCHINGS

T 88

The women of the Missionary Society of the Atlanta district of the Methodist Episcopal church last week adopted resolutions condemning two lynchings which occurred recently in this state, one at Vienna and one at Moultrie. These lynchings were not occasioned by the committal of the usual crime that invariably brings on lynchings, not only in this state, but in other states, but they were both alleged to be for minor infractions of the law.

However, the action of these good ladies was unusual especially the ordering of the resolution adopted condemning the action of the mob in both instances. The resolution, in part, reads:

"We, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta district, M. E. church, south, in quarterly session, note with deep humiliation that two lynchings have disgraced our state in the last two months; one near Vienna, another near Moultrie. Mobs have defied our laws, discredited our civilization, and mocked our religion. We bow our heads in shame and contrition that such things can happen among us.

"Lynching in our opinion is never excusable, but in these two cases there was not even the pretense of an excuse."

Continuing, these ladies registered a most vehement condemnation of the action of those citizens who committed the violation of the law in lynching two negroes. The negroes may not have been guilty, but the enormity of their crimes did not warrant justification of their acts. Lynchings are of a diabolical character, with the possible exception of the crime of rape. Usually, in such cases, the unwritten law is applied and the guilty party or parties are made to pay the price of their crime by giving their lives as a toll for committing the unseakable crime which is committed upon women.

Reviewing the Vienna and Moultrie cases, the resolution continued:

"Therefore, we register our unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances, our protest to officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob, and our shame for a Christian civilization so superficial as still to tolerate such savagery.

"We urge upon officers and courts their sacred obligation to uphold the constituted processes of law, and upon all religious, educational and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence."

Atlanta, Ga. Constitution
November 23, 1935

MISSIONARY SOCIETY DEPLORES LYNCHINGS

Resolutions deploring the two recent lynchings in Georgia, stating that in neither case "was there even the pretense of an excuse," were adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta district, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in quarterly session here.

The session was held Wednesday but not made public until yesterday.

One of the mob victims, the resolution said, was not accused of any offense whatever and the other was accused only of drunkenness and of effecting his escape from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol.

The society protestetd against "officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob," and registered "unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances."

It urged "upon all religious, educational and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence."

Atlanta, Ga. Constitution
November 24, 1935

Borah Would Kill Anti-Lynch Bill If He Occupied the White House

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—(AP)—Senator Borah bluntly asserted today that should he receive the "unexpected and great honor" of being president, he would veto as unconstitutional such legislation as the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

His stand was given in a letter to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It replied to one sounding his views, as a presidential possibility, toward the anti-lynching bill he has opposed in the senate.

The Idaho republican's quick response to the challenge, and his wording of it, furthered the growing belief in Washington that he will get into the presidential race. But it was unusually outspoken for a presidential possibility.

Constitution Cited.

Walter White, signing the association's letter as its secretary, said he was writing "on behalf of 12,000,000 American negroes and of many white Americans who are deeply concerned with the alarming increase in lynchings in the United States." He warned that negro votes hold the balance of power in many pivotal states.

Borah replied he had opposed the Costigan-Wagner measure because he had no doubt it violated the constitution, and added:

"That being my view then and now, I shall vote against such measures as long as I am a member of the senate, and should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being president of the United States and such a bill should reach me, under my oath and in the light of my convictions, I would unhesitatingly veto it. . . .

"I do not enter a discussion of what in my judgment is the utter futility of these measures aside from the constitutional question. Neither do I take time to again express, as I have often expressed it by word and act, my horror of lynching, further than to say that if the federal government is to deal with the subject, it can only do so by an amendment to the constitution of the United States."

Borah Accepts Assumption.

Borah did not suggest that he would not be a candidate. In fact he said he would let the association's assumption "that I am a candidate for the presidency" stand "for the purpose of this letter."

Earlier the Borah movement received further impetus when Representative Lemke, republican, North Dakota, who supported President Roosevelt in 1932, said the Idaho senator was "the only candidate so far prominently mentioned who could get the support of the farmers of the west for the republican nomination."

Lemke's statement, capping an hour's conference with Borah, was regarded significantly. So was an announcement that the senator would open a drive for liberalizing the republican party in a nation-wide radio broadcast December 7.

This will be the first of a series of speeches by Borah in the eastern and middle-western states before the opening of congress in January. His friends expect him to challenge the established leadership of the party in these addresses.

The Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in its letter to Borah, said he held "the somewhat dubious honor of having been the executioner of two distinctly hopeful opportunities" for stamping out lynching.

NAACP Position.

Citing a number of lynchings within recent months, the letter asked:

"Do you feel proud of your handywork, Senator Borah?"

Then citing the power of negro votes in some of the border and northern states, the letter added:

"There are many Americans, Senator Borah, who no longer believe in the sincerity of members of the senate who forget states' rights when such issues as prohibition are being discussed but who wrap about themselves the mantle of 'constitutionality' when the lives of human beings are taken by lawless mobs."

Borah made public the association's letter together with his reply in which he said he confined himself "to a simple answer to what I consider a corrupt and shameless question."

Expressing his views on the unconstitutionality of such measures as the Costigan-Warner bill, Borah said: "Whatever may happen in the future politics of this country, so far as my position on the question presented by these measures is concerned, it will not be changed or even modified."

Statesville, N. C. Daily
November 25, 1935

DOESN'T PUSSYFOOT.

In reply to a letter from officials of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People written for the purpose of sounding his views, as a presidential possibility, toward the anti-lynching bill he had strenuously opposed in the senate. Frequently and seriously mentioned as a contender for the Republican nomination for the presidency, it is not improbable that some of his political foes put the colored boys up to this method of sapping his strength.

But Borah is not given to sidestepping just because it happens to be expedient. With characteristic frankness he says that he had opposed the Costigan-Wagner measure because he had no doubt it violated the constitution and added: "This being my view then and now, I shall vote against such measure as long as I am a member of the senate, and should the unexpected and great honor come to me of being President of the United States and such a bill should reach me, under my oath and in the light of my convictions, I would unhesitatingly veto it. I do not enter a discussion of what in my judgment is the utter futility of these measures aside from the constitutional question. Neither do I take time to again express, as I have often expressed it by word and act, my horror of lynching, further than to say that if the federal government is to deal with the subject, it can only do so by an amendment to the constitution of the United States."

Measured by the same yardstick usually employed by presidential candidates, this prompt and decisive re-utterance of his position by Mr. Borah would indicate that he is not seriously considering the race for the presidency, because it would alienate a considerable bloc of Republican votes. Or could it be that he just plain don't give a dang?

In his opposition to the anti-lynching bill Senator Borah stands with some mighty good Democratic company. Our own Senator Bailey helped to kill it in the senate, declaring that the South was sufficient unto itself in looking after this little matter. Recent happenings would indicate that Senator Bailey was wrong if "sufficiency" is construed in the broadest meaning of the word. If the provisions of the Costigan-Wagner bill were in force recent whitewashing in this and other states would have been changed to a blood-red in the South's fashion sheet section that covers the style of dealing negro criminals of the baser sort.

But that is another story and one that does not enter into the question of presidential possibilities.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
TIMES
NOV 25 1935

Borah's Political Courage

REPLYING to the challenge and warning of Walter White, Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Senator Borah declares his opinions on federal anti-lynching legislation with refreshing candor and extraordinary courage.

White wrote to the Senator as spokesman, he claimed, for American Negroes who in some close states may hold the balance of political power. Certainly, if Senator Borah should be a candidate for the Republican nomination, his past votes and his present declarations on anti-lynching laws would lose him votes in some Eastern and border states where Negro voters would perhaps be the decisive factor in his camapaign.

Borah does not hesitate. Abhorring lynching, he nevertheless tells White that this proposed extension of federal power by Congressional enactment is not only futile but unconstitutional.

Assuming for the purposes of his letter that he is a candidate for the Presidency, the Senator ignores the intimated opposition of the colored people, plainly saying that if such a bill were presented to him as President he would veto it.

Some commentators lately have suggested that Senator Borah, who may be considering a race for the nomination, is making flirtatious advances to the Townsend followers. Yet whatever Borah's views are on the Townsend program or any other economic or social program, he is still the outspoken Borah who has won and held the admiration of the American people by his political courage and independence.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions

White Press, Southern

4938

Kinston, N. C., Free Press
November 14, 1935

A Sheriff Disqualifies Himself

THE state of Texas reports the lynching of two 16-year-old Negro boys, alleged to have confessed to a heinous crime.

There is no brief for the culprits if they were guilty of the crime. Nothing was "too good" for them. But lynching and mob law is unlawful in this country. It is demoralizing and dangerous. It menaces the security and stability of society.

The law provides adequate punishment and the machinery for meting it out to those whose conduct is as reprehensible as the two young fiends of Texas evidently was. They were in the hands of constituted authorities and were en route to make their appearance before a regularly constituted court. There is absolutely no doubt that the death penalty would have been meted out to them if the evidence had warranted it.

At the time the two boys were taken by the mob they were in custody of a sheriff and a deputy. The sheriff is quoted as saying, after he had failed so dismally in complying with his oath of office in protecting his prisoner:

"I don't plan any arrests. The men were masked. Their automobiles had licenses from other counties. I didn't recognize any of them. The grand jury will meet in February and may investigate the lynching then."

The sheriff thus disqualifies himself, and whether the authorities of his county in the Lone Star State are ever able to identify and punish members of the mob, they should lose no time in removing him. He is unfit by his own declaration and attitude to occupy the important place.

Statesville, N. C. Daily
November 15, 1935

"THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE".

The news dispatches tell that sever hundred people joined in the lynching of two negro boys who confessed to criminal assault upon a high school girl in Columbus, Texas, and drowning her. The boys were snatched from officers at a river crossing and hanged to a tree near the farm home of the victim.

The county attorney termed the lynching "an expression of the will of the people" and said he did not consider the citizens who executed the negroes a mob. With that sort of attitude it is not reasonable to expect him to be sincere and aggressive in carrying out his threat to "vigorously" prosecute any of the seven hundred persons, including women, who participated in the deplorable affair.

As provoking as this crime may have been, for which the two negroes were lynched, the fact remains that they were in the hands of the law and headed most certainly toward a quick retribution. "The will of the people" could well have awaited the outcome which was as certain as death itself, and thus the South would have been spared another blot on its name—but mobs are unmindful of blots.

But this county attorney is the type of official to whom nothing is criminal if enough people are concerned in it; whose sworn obligation does not count when there is disapproval on the part of any considerable number of voters, and he could have saved his breath in declaring that he would "prosecute," because already it is written in the stars that nothing will be done about it.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

NOV 12 1935

Novelty Compounded.

It was a strange kind of mob which lynched a Negro near White Bluff, Tennessee, last week. For one thing, there were only five members of the mob. For another, only one shot was fired to end the victim's life, nor was there any torturing of him before death or dismemberment afterward. No, this small mob quietly seized the Negro, killed him and then, to cap the climax, marched into town and surrendered to the sheriff.

The sheriff, so astonished was he, hardly knew under what charge to hold the men. He was not long in finding out, however, and neither was the county grand jury long in indicting the five for murder in the first degree. Even more strangely still, the trial will begin at once.

The one more amazing circumstance necessary to make this the strangest chapter of lynching in the South would be for the trial jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, making it necessary for the judge to sentence these men to die as other men have died for murder. Our guess ordinarily would be that the jury would do no such thing, but this whole affair has been so completely out of the ordinary that it is hard to tell what to expect next.

Raleigh, N. C. Observer
November 16, 1935

OCCASIONAL DUE PROCESS.

Asheville Times.

A county judge and a county attorney of Columbus, Texas, faced with the moral emergency of a terrible crime by two Negro youths and a terrible vengeance by the mob which hanged them, seem not to hesitate over statements which will almost certainly be repeated, sooner or later, in Congress by the advocates of Federal police power for intrastate crimes.

The lynching was "an expression of the will of the people," said County Attorney P. P. Moore.

County Judge H. P. Hahn was somewhat more judicial. He strongly opposes mob violence in general, he explained; but the fact that the youths who assaulted and then drowned Geraldine Knollman, valedictorian of Columbus high school, are under legal age for capital punishment prevented him from condemning the citizens who "meted out justice" to the murderers.

It is not hard to understand the natural and human reaction to such a crime as this. It presents unusual elements of provocation for violence. But, as Judge Hahn and County Attorney Moore well know, you can't have legal and orderly justice just for occasional use. You either have law supreme or mob violence supreme in any crisis arising in a community.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS

NOV 16 1935

Shears and Paste

Novelty Compounded.

It was a strange kind of mob which lynched a negro near White Bluff, Tenn., last week. For one thing, there were only five members of the mob. For another, only one shot was fired to end the victim's lift, nor was there any torturing of him before death or dismemberment afterward. No, this small mob quietly seized the negro, killed him and then, to cap the climax, marched into town and surrendered to the sheriff.

The sheriff, so astonished was he, hardly knew under what charge to hold the men. He was not long in finding out, however, and neither was the county grand jury long in indicting the five for murder in the first degree. Even more strangely still, the trial will begin at once.

The one more amazing circumstance necessary to make this the strangest chapter of lynching in the south would be for the trial jury to bring in a verdict of guilty, making it necessary for the judge to sentence these men to die as other men have died for murder. Our guess ordinarily would be that the jury would do no such thing, but this whole affair has been so completely out of the ordinary that it is hard to tell what to expect next. —Charlotte News.

Durham, N'a. Eagle
November 16, 1935

THE EPITOME

The mob never lynches merely its victim. It lynches law, order, justice, and decency as well.

The mob at Moultrie, Ga., killed an innocent Negro after a white man had been slain. Not content with this, the mob tried to take the guilty Negro from National Guardsmen after the prisoner had been convicted and sentenced to die in the chair.

Which is the epitome of stupidity.

Tarboro, N. C. Southerner
November 14, 1935

Will of the People

As far as newspapers are concerned, the average Southern lynching follows a well-defined pattern. The Negro of the case assaults a white woman. A group of people customarily referred to as a "mob" swings the culprit to a tree. The sheriff says he is unable to identify any of the members of the "mob". The editor plays up stories about the affair on the front page and rehashes the same old stuff about the disintegration of the American people as reflected in their disrespect for lawful processes on the editorial page. The spirit of the "mob" is decried, the inability of the authorities to bring the lynchers to justice is lambasted and anyone who happens to voice the view that the lynchers were, after all, meting out justice has a journalistic bomb planted under him.

There is perhaps but one other occurrence which is treated by newspapers with more rigid adherence to a pattern, and that is the death of a citizen. So-and-so died of such-and-such at a certain time and funeral services will be held from his home or his church with burial following at this or that cemetery with Rev. So-and-So in charge. Then his career, the his survivors and finally the pall bearers. It is all just so.

In the case of the death notices such treatment is desirable. Originality is not needed or expected. But why lynchings should stick to a cut-and-dried formula is a journalistic enigma. Therefore this newspaper seems to follow it and to express its real views, unhampered by custom, upon the country's latest lynching, which occurred in Texas when two young Negroes were hanged by a "mob" for the brutal murder of Miss Geraldine Kollmann, high school valedictorian, whom they confessed they criminally attacked and drowned.

Let it be admitted, to begin with, that it would have been better had the lynching not occurred and the law taken its course. That point settled, let it also be admitted that in some respects the mob served the ends of justice better than the law could have, and that therefore the lynching is not wholly to be decried. A so-called lynching mob, be reminded, may not and frequently is not a bunch of wild, emotional, unreasoning hoodlums; it may be and often is a group of resolute, calm but determined citizens who refuse to tolerate the cruel murder of their women and the possible delay and laxity in administering punishment by lawful processes. As the county attorney said of the Texas affair, the lynching was the "will of the people." The law also, in a democracy, is the will of the people. Under this definition then, the lynching method and the statutory method become synonymous, with the former possessing the undisputable advantage of quickness impressiveness and completeness without expense to the state.

This is not to be interpreted as a condonement of lynching. There are many factors which make it contain more of the wrong than of the right. But it is an attempt to show that there is something, even though not much, to be said on the side of the lynchers. This newspaper does not approve lynching; at the same time, it refuses to follow a pattern which requires that it believe lynching contains no points in its favor whatever. There is, in fact, considerable to be said for it, even if not enough to justify it.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
TIMES
NOV 14 1935

Occasional Due Process

A COUNTY judge and a county attorney of Columbus, Texas, faced with the moral emergency of a terrible crime by two Negro youths and a terrible vengeance by the mob which hanged them, seem not to hesitate over statements which will almost certainly be repeated, sooner or later, in Congress by the advocates of federal police power for intrastate crimes.

The lynching was "an expression of the will of the people," said County Attorney P. P. Moore.

County Judge H. P. Hahn was somewhat more judicial. He strongly opposes mob violence in general, he explained; but the fact that the youths who assaulted and then drowned Geraldine Knollman, valedictorian of Columbus High School, are under legal age for capital punishment prevented him from condemning the citizens who "meted out justice" to the murderers.

It is not hard to understand the natural and human reaction to such a crime as this. It presents unusual elements of provocation for violence. But, as Judge Hahn and County Attorney Moore well know, you can't have legal and orderly justice just for occasional use. You either have law supreme or mob violence supreme in any crisis arising in a community.

Savannah, Ga., News
November 28, 1935

Lynch Law is Barbaric

Hancock county, Georgia, has adorned itself with a lustrous diadem by demonstrating that the "law-abiding spirit" still prevails there and that lynch law is uncivilized and unnecessary in the administration of justice. A negro, charged with the slaying of a policeman at Sparta on November 17, has been convicted and sentenced to die December 20. That is speedy enough justice to satisfy any who are swayed by reason rather than blind lust for vengeance.

It speaks well for the beneficent influence which the 83-year-old jurist, who presided at the trial, holds among the people of the Ocmulgee Superior Court circuit which he has served for two decades, that perfect order prevailed throughout the trial. The wisdom of long years of experience is embodied in Judge Park's comments: "This is the only way to preserve the laws of the land — to let the courts handle the work for which they were established. Orderly procedure makes for better law enforcement. It has a salutary effect on the nation as a whole."

He has rightly set forth the doctrine that lynch law breeds disrespect for law. It has a demoralizing effect on any community in which it occurs. Hancock county has set an example which other counties may well emulate. Confidence in the calm judgment of his friends and neighbors was displayed by the aged jurist when he said to an Atlanta news man: "Tell the Governor for me that no national guardsmen will be needed here."

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4939

"LAW AND LYNCHING

To The Commercial Appeal:

In picking up a copy of "Pulse of the Nation," the other day, I read a reference on page 9 to your editorial "Law and Lynching" of Dec. 23. It is the clearest statement of the sort I have ever seen and tells the truth as it exists in the south, but as it is not understood in the north. I think the editor had in mind using your article as a glaring example of something or other, but I read it with much appreciation and admiration. I think you did a good job.

Sincerely,

E. M. ALLEN.

New York, N. Y.

THE VARIOUS "ISMS"

TO The Commercial Appeal:

The underlying cause of a world transition from nationalism to internationalism is the increase of speed of communication, resulting in a world shrinking into a neighborhood of a family of nations, practically living under one roof, and a horrible war of modern death dealing machinery would destroy the world, civilization, and subjugate mankind to barbarism.

The restless world is driving England and America in each other's arms to compose an Anglo-Saxon union in defense of a common cause to deal with the military aggrandizement of Japan over China and the Pacific Ocean.

The American possibility of following a purely nationalistic policy in view of our heavy investments in Canada, Europe and South America amounting to over 14 billion dollars would be out of question and preposterous, for the American horsepower is measured by the yardstick of a foreign purchasing power, and a national production based on home consumption only would spell economic disaster for America.

The American moral guidance entrance into a world tribunal of nations acting as a world police court will resurrect in the near future under a higher plane of civilization in defiance to the iconoclasm of our potato Senator Borah, communistic showmanship of Father Coughlin the ballyhoo of Huey Long, Hearst Arthur Brisbane and the pithy, epigrammatic spirit of provincialism of Will Rogers.

M. KEPPEL.

Marianna, Ark.

Hattiesburg, Miss. American
March 13, 1935

LYNCH LAW

NEGRO DIES ON OAK TREE

(By Associated Press)

SLAYDEN, Miss., Mar. 13.—An officer who found the body of a 29-year-old negro swinging from the limb of a tree two miles east of here late yesterday, was summoned to tell his story at an inquest here today.

The negro, Ab Young, a tenant farmer, sought in connection with the shooting to death Saturday of Hardy Mackie, 45-year-old state highway employe, was seized near Rossville, Tenn., across the Mississippi line, earlier in the afternoon and rushed here, where he was lynched by a mob of 50 men.

He went to his death after singing a hymn. He was allowed to pray before the noose was adjusted around his neck. The other end of the rope was tied to a tall oak tree.

On Top of Car

His captors placed him atop an automobile and drove off, leaving the negro dangling in the air.

Prosecuting Attorney E. C. Wright of Holly Springs, who called the inquest, said that a verdict that the negro came to his death at the hands of "parties unknown" was likely.

The inquest, he said, while routine, might develop information that will forward his investigation.

"We will present our case to the grand jury in August after we have made a thorough investigation into this affair," Wright said. "We have some good officers working on the matter. Naturally, those who participated in the affair are not talking. Nobody we interviewed admitted knowing whether it was a suicide or a hanging."

Wright said Deputy Sheriff Joe Fitch found the body swinging from a tree, and that he would tell of his discovery at the inquest.

The prosecuting attorney said he and officers rushed to Slayden from Holly Springs when informed the mob had the negro.

Didn't See Negro

"We didn't see the negro who apparently was hidden away," Wright said. "We did talk to Hill Mackie, brother of the slain man, and other responsible and law-abiding citizens, and Mr. Mackie said he would talk to the men in an effort to persuade them to give up the negro to the officers, asking us to seek speedy trial.

"We went to Mount Pleasant to telephone, as there is no telephone in Slayden, and got in touch with the acting district attorney, and asked that Judge Taylor McElroy, communicate with us at once.

"Before we heard from Judge McElroy, we learned that the negro was dead. He had never been in the hands of officers."

The hanging occurred around 1:10 p. m.

Members of the mob, occupying four or five automobiles passed through Mount Pleasant with their captive earlier in the day. They told people sitting around a garage that the negro would be "lynched at sundown".

Shot Without Warning

Mackie, a native of Marshall county, had returned from Holly Springs Saturday night when he stopped his automobile in front of a Slayden store.

Young, officers said, had been drinking, and was shooting across the road. Mackie warned him to stop shooting, the officers said, and shouted, "you will kill somebody!"

The negro, they said, turned and fired in the direction of the highway employe, who fell mortally wounded.

The negro fled under a hail of bullets. He had been at large until yesterday.

Huntsville, Ala., Times
March 25, 1935

What Mob Can Do

The human race has to cope with many enemies in its long struggle to work out a scheme for peaceful living, but the greatest enemy of all is the mob.

For a perfect picture of the way the mob acts, consider the riot that swept up and down the streets of New York's Harlem the other day.

A negro boy tried to steal a 10 cent knife from a store counter A floor-walker collared him and the boy, naturally enough, set up a yell.

An excitable woman saw and heard just enough to touch off her motor reactions, and she ran out into the street, yelling that the boy had been killed.

Up and down the streets went the cry. Out of poolrooms, lunchrooms, and workshops came angry men, milling in the streets, yelling, looking for someone to fight, afraid, suspicious, and angry.

A crowd of a thousand men and women swept into the store, turning things upside down, breaking things, yelling, hitting, fighting.

Police reserves came, by the hundreds. There were dozens of fights. Scores of men were cut, beaten, or slugged. More than a hundred were arrested. Thousands of dollars' damage was done to property.

Yet the juvenile knife-stealer, who unintentionally started it all, managed to jerk away from his captors during the melee and vanished, utterly unharmed.

One could search the world over without finding a better example than this of the blind, panicky insanity of the mob spirit.

Here was a riot of major proportions, an ugly welter of fights that spread all across a populous section of a great city—and all for what?

Not one of the rioters knew. It started, literally, from nothing at all; and because men and women were jittery, and gave way to the combined emotions of anger and fear, there was the piper to pay.

The mob spirit that can seize a few thousand people in one city is the same spirit that can and frequently does seize whole nations, when hatred and panic get together.

It sweeps dictators into power, causes mass executions, concentration camps, sluggings and clubbings.

It fills the air with bombing planes and the fields with infantrymen and sets cruisers loose on the sea lanes.

It inflicts more misery and destruction on the earth than a generation can repair.

And all, as in Harlem—for what?

Pensacola, Fla. Journal
March 26, 1935

THE MOB SPIRIT

The human race has to cope with many enemies in its long struggle to work out a scheme for peaceful living, but the greatest enemy of all is the mob.

For a perfect picture of the way the mob acts, consider the riot that swept up and down the streets of New York's Harlem the other day.

A colored boy tried to pinch a 10-cent knife from a store counter. A floor-walker collared him and the boy, naturally enough, set up a holler. An excitable woman saw and heard just enough to touch off her motor reactions, and she ran out into the street yelling that the boy

Spartanburg, S. C., Herald
September 30, 1935

A Georgia Lynching

Georgia adds its name to the lynching list of 1935. A Dooly county mob took a negro, who had been arrested for drunkenness, from the sheriff who was removing him to Fitzgerald for safekeeping and he was discovered next morning hanging to the limb of a tree.

It can hardly be believed that men could become so violent as to execute a fellow being against whom there was no criminal charge. For that matter, it can hardly be believed that men would take any man charged with a crime from the hands of authorities and kill him without a trial.

Dooly county and Georgia will have a difficult task in explaining this cruel and fiendish miscarriage of justice.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY DEPLORES LYNCHINGS

Resolutions deploring the two recent lynchings in Georgia stating that in neither case "was there even the pretense of an excuse," were adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta district, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in quarterly session here. 11-23-35

The session was held Wednesday but not made public until yesterday.

One of the mob victims, the resolution said, was not accused of any offense whatever, and the other was accused only of drunkenness and of effecting his escape from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol.

The society protestetd against "officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob," and registered "unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances."

It urged "upon all religious, educational and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence."

had been killed.

Up and down the streets went the cry. Out of pool-rooms, lunchrooms and workshops came angry men, milling in the streets, yelling, looking for someone to fight afraid, suspicious and angry. A crowd of a thousand men and women swept into the store, turning thing upside down, breaking things, yelling, hitting, fighting.

Police reserves came by the hundreds. There were dozens of fights. Scores of men were cut, beaten or slugged. More than a hundred were arrested. Thousands of dollars' damage was done to property.

And the juvenile knife-stealer who unintentionally started it all managed to jerk away from his captors during the melee and vanished, utterly unharmed.

You could search the world over without finding a better example than this of the blind, panicky insanity of the mob spirit. Here was a riot of major proportions, an ugly welter of fights that spread all across a populous section of a great city—and all for what?

Not one of the rioters knew. They could not possibly have hoped to know. It started, literally, from nothing at all; and because men and women were jittery, and gave way to the combined emotions of anger and fear, there was merry Ned to pay.

Now you don't need to think very hard to draw the needed moral from all this. The mob spirit that can seize a few thousand people in one city is the same spirit that can and frequently does seize whole nations, when hatred and panic get together.

It sweeps dictators into power, causes mass executions, concentration camps, sluggings and clubbings; it fills the air with bombing planes and the fields with infantrymen and sets cruisers loose on the sea lanes; it inflicts more misery and destruction on the earth than a generation can repair.

And all, as in Harlem—for what?

WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR

APR 27 1935

Editorial Comment From Other Angles

THE LYNCHING PROBLEM

(New York Herald Tribune)

Of all the forms of lawlessness that have disgraced America in the eyes of the civilized world that of lynching is undoubtedly the most abominable. It is so for the simple reason that other comparable crimes are either the work of demented or depraved individuals or of gangs without the pale of organized society, while your lynching mob usually includes a fair proportion of citizens of the kind normally regarded as respectable. It is their betrayal of the state and of their own decency that gives the final hideous touch to the atrocious business.

Little wonder, therefore, that from time to time congress has had to face the proposal to put an end to the evil through federal action. Just now the senate is in the throes of a passionate debate over the Costigan-Wagner bill. This measure would make it a federal offense, heavily punishable, for local peace officers to refuse or fail to protect prisoners in their custody from mob violence. It would also provide for financial damages to the relatives of victims against the counties or cities or both, in which lynchings are perpetrated, the damages to be collected in a federal court. In the main it follows the lines of the Dyer anti-lynching bill, which had congress in a similar ferment thirteen years ago.

Its opponents have called it unconstitutional but mistakenly, we believe. Since the Fourteenth Amendment forbids any state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, excellent authority has held that congress has the right to pass legislation penalizing failure to give such protection. Neither with the bill's objectives nor with its constitutionality can there be serious quarrel. Nor need we join our Southern statesmen in shedding bitter tears over its implied insult to the South. As Senator Costigan has observed: "Lynching has been practiced in every part of the nation. The evil is in no sense to be regarded as sectional."

However, the bill does raise a fundamental question of governmental policy. In the first place, a lynching is almost invariably a purely local crime. In this respect it differs radically from kidnaping, bank burglary, highway robbery and the like, with their attendant murders, whose perpetrators skip from jurisdiction to juisdiction. There is not the same excuse to include it in the fast-growing list of offenses to be dealt with by the federal authorities. In the second place, it is an evil that is on the wane. In 1892, there were 255 lynchings; last year there were 15. The curve, though it may waver a bit from year to year, has shown a marked downward tendency for nearly half a century, indicating very clearly the growing popular revulsion against the crime as well as the effectiveness of local statutes.

Given the enormous diversity of customs and conditions in this country, one may always doubt the wisdom of calling upon the federal government to solve a local problem. Lynching is a local problem, however widespread may be its practice, and, unless the figures lie, it is being solved locally. The process may take longer than the short cut of federal nterference, but in the end it is bound to be the more wholesome and effective.

ABILENE, TEX.
NEWS

APR 25 1935

Lynching

When the people of a community uprise to take the law in their own hands, becoming judge and jury and executioner in one, they are embarking on a dangerous and intolerably brutal course that will return later to smite the conscience. The states have failed completely, both north and south, to curb that horrible expression of primitive passion—lynching. Why, therefore, shouldn't Uncle Sam, who has demonstrated his strength in controlling crime, go after the lynchers whenever and wherever they raise their ugly heads?

For which reason another "states rights" hue and cry having a strangely hollow sound is that raised this week in the United States senate over the Costigan-agner bill to make lynching a federal offense. Certain senators (southern, we are sorry to say) profess such alarm over the bill's prospects of passage that they propose to squeeze it to death by deliberately delaying consideration of other measures of legislation ahead of it.

It is tactics of that sort that make the average citizen look with distrust on lawmaking bodies.

SAVANNAH, GA.
PRESS

APR 18 1935

PROBLEM FOR STATES.

The Evening Press agrees with Senator Walter F. George that the matter of the punishment of those guilty of the crime of lynching should be left to the state in which such offenses occur. Local juries should fix the penalty for such a crime.

There is now pending in the United States Senate the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, which has very drastic provisions for the penalizing of counties where lynchings take place and where the participants in such lynchings are not punished.

Senator Walter F. George before leaving Washington on Tuesday was pronounced in the belief that the measure should not pass the Senate and that if it should become a law that the courts would declare it unconstitutional. We accept the view of the Senator in this respect as being sound. He has given much thought to it and his legal mind carries the conviction that the law if passed would not be upheld by the courts. In the Senate on Tuesday Senator George, asserting he had risked his political and physical life to protect men from mob violence, denounced the bill as unconstitutional, said the South had made marvelous progress in coping with lynching and assured the Senate that the proposed federal law would actually retard the anti-lynching movement.

This is a matter the states are well equipped to handle. Lynchings are not as numerous as they have been in former years. A federal law framed to prevent them would effect no cure; men who form mobs with a view to lynchings are not bound by statutes, either state-wide or national in scope.

The states are much better prepared to handle this important question of their own volition and in their own way than is the federal government.

States like New York, Illinois, California and others we might mention, we are quite certain do not want any federal interference with the control of the matter

Lynchings-1935
6
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4940

NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH
DEC 21 1935

THE SOUTH TODAY

The Lynch Mind: A Snapshot

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES II

(Copyright 1935, by Sout hern Newspaper Syndicate)

Editor's Note: John Temple Graves, II, conducts a widely read daily column in the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald. He has been author of numerous books, contributor to many magazines, and this year was awarded a doctor's degree by the University of the South for "distinguished contributions to the field of journalism." He saw service in France in 1918, served on the American peace commission in Paris in 1919, was economist for the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, and was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia. Dr. Graves is the son of a distinguished Southern journalist and the great grandson of the eldest brother of John C. Calhoun. By way of versatility he holds the Middle Atlantic States tennis championship for 1934.

GRAVES

During the War of the American Revolution a Virginia justice of the peace developed a nice technique with the Tories. He would suspend them by their thumbs until they were persuaded to shout "Liberty forever!" The gentleman's name was Charles Lynch, and even though his patient's all survived this extra-legal treatment, the name was given thereafter to a practice by which nearly 5,000 Americans, most of them Southern Negroes, have been put to death without benefit of law in the last fifty years. The simpler and better name for these premediated killings, of course, is murder. The term "lynching," although undoubtedly less offensive to practitioners, is an understatement—and an injustice to the memory of Charles Lynch.

Wide Range Of Letters

With all that is being said and done, or at least, attempted, against lynch law, it seems strange that there should be so few studies of the lynch mind—photographs taken from life. Almost any Southern editorial writer who has taken a stand against mob murder is likely to have a drawerful of more or less revealing letters from people who believe in lynching; letters of abuse, epithet, protest, argument, philosophy. In the course of ten years as an editorialist in Florida and Alabama, conducting a daily editorial column on the first page under his own name, this writer has had his share of such letters; and because they have come to him as to an individual they have been, perhaps, more intimate and enlightening than letters addressed formally to a newspaper's editorial page. Their contents may offer little of argumentative worth, but they have a certain news value and an indisputable clinical interest.

Some people will tell you that the lyncher has no mind, that he is a moron. But it can be stated on the best of evidence that thousands of very good readers and writers in the south today believe in lynching as a stern necessity under certain circumstances, even though they may be unwilling to take part in an actual lynching themselves. Without them and the prestige which their comparatively "educated" support gives the institution, actual lynchers might be much more careful. For one letter from the moron who scrowls on coarse ruled paper that you are a "low down yellow-livered nigger-lover" and calls you unprintable names in a spelling all his own, there are dozens of letters from perfectly intelligent people who write to debate the thing with you, sometimes sorrowfully, sometimes angrily, sometimes with complete dispassion.

Never to be forgotten, for example, is the obviously genuine regret with which a certain graduate of the University of Virginia offered his conclusion that the white and Negro races will never be able to live successfully side by side in the south—or the perfect calm with which he suggested by way of solution "a general massacre." Comparable in philosophical ferocity is the rule laid down by a Birmingham physician in a letter insisting that a certain Negro defendant should be hanged whether he was guilty or not. "The important thing," he wrote, "is that whenever a white woman is raped by a Negro there should be an example and a spectacle of punishment. If possible, get the right Negro and string him up. String up one or two of his nearest relatives at the same time. And if the right one can't be found, take some other Negro."

A major point with lynch sympathizers is that those who are not in favor of lynching have never been faced personally with the situation which incites it. "If we had sat quietly (sic) on our royal," asserts one correspondent "while the niggers were killing our white women and alibing and getting by we would never had been recognized." He wrote: "If those women who were attacked were some of your own friends or relatives, I wonder if you would be for handling them so nice and gentle."

Communist Influence

Interference of the Communist International Labor Defense is mentioned in many letters as a cause of lynchings. A Georgia author wrote that the only way to end present day lynchings and racial disorders in the South was to "discover the agitators—they happen to be Communists and labor organizations—punish them; their action is treasonable." But that the Communists themselves feel that their coming, far from aggravating the lynch impulse, has cowed it, is suggested in a letter from the secretary of an international labor defense district organization:

"The ILD has forced the Southern lynchers to now assume the defensive. They are no more the arrogant fellows they were in 1931. In 1931 a Scottsboro paper openly made lynch threats against any Negro who aspired to jury service in the South. The Jackson County Sentinal editorially stated: 'A Negro juror in Jackson County would be a curiosity, and sometimes curiosities are embalmed, you know.' Today we witness Tom Knight (attorney general of Alabama) telling the Supreme Court of the United States that Negroes are not systematically excluded from Alabama juries because of their race."

The conviction that lynching parties are composed of men grimly and calmly performing a social duty in the spirit of early American vigilantes is common to many of the correspondents. "I do not think the mob is composed of the blood-thirsty anarchists which you intimate," wrote a Florida school teacher, "any more than our Confederate grandfathers were such because they united secretly to free this fair land from the dominion of the carpet-baggers and scalawags. Rather are they composed of men who have lost confidence in the agencies that have been duly constituted to effect justice. And with no small reason."

Defenders Of Lynch Law

A superior knowledge of the Negro race is the claim with which a number of letter-writers set themselves up as defenders of lynch law. "How much do you know of Negro psychology?" scoffed a Tennessee merchant. "Do you know anything of the Negro you are thrown with but what he wants you to think? Do you appreciate that the vindication of the 'majesty of the law' is Greek or Hebrew to him? The law is something to be used in his favor by his friends and against him by his enemies. He will put you and your newspaper among those that think them boys didn't do nothing wrong' and he will not admit it to you but you could never make him believe that they (the Scottsboro defendants) rode in a car at night with any strange women without having intercourse with them, and range you with those who think opportunity justification."

But the most frequently employed and impressive point made in defense (or explanation) of lynching is the ineffectualness of the law, the technicalities employed to delay and often to defeat the doing of justice. "Those (Scottsboro) Negro boys were convicted and sentenced by an Alabama judge and jury and should have been dead and forgotten long ago," writes a Georgia merchant. "That they are still living is the fault of our laws. If you are crusading for law and order, then for God's sake start with the law. Get the laws fixed so that when a man is fairly convicted by a jury of his peers let him suffer the penalty imposed without further bother and expense. How in the name of decency is Alabama to keep her women from being raped by black devils when they have such examples of the inadequacy of our existing laws?" In this writer's mind, obviously, there is no question of the fairness of the Scottsboro trials, nor any concern for it.

Organizations Active

It is only within recent years, of course, that organizations lige the International Labor Defense and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have interfered to offer to Negro defendants in certain cases in the South the services of resourceful attorneys, and thus to protract trials and legal processes. Whether this "interference" tends to defeat justice or to procure it, the fact that it is a comparatively recent development means that the lynch argument based upon it is also recent.

These selected letters are typical of the variations in intelligence, education and point of view of those who write to Southern newspapers in defense of lynch law. There are many, if not more, letters expressing uncompromising hostility to mob murder and the lynch philosophy. The number of Southerners who believe that lynching is a disgraceful, corruptive and wholly unnecessary practice rivaltoday the number of those who do not. The expressions of their belief have neither news value nor clinical interest, as they are identical with those of civilized people the world over, but the picture attempted here would be incomplete without a reference to them. In Birmingham last year, for example, when a third-rate politician called facetiously for "bigger and better lynchings" and suggested that "rope is too high and one bullet placed in the correct position will do the work at much less cost," he found himself sixteenth in a field of sixteen in a race for the State Legislature. It is symptoms of this sort that give hope to Southerners who are earnestly striving to do away with the crime of lynching.

Richmond, Va., Times-Dispatch
December 30, 1935

The South Disgraced Again

IN THE past 45 years, more than 5,000 persons have been lynched in the United States, and there have been convictions of the guilty parties in less than one-half of 1 per cent of the cases.

This orgy of crime continued during 1935, when 20 more persons were done to death in this fashion, 19 of them in the South and the other in California, according to figures just released by Tuskegee Institute. Since there were 15 lynchings in 1934, the total for the year now drawing to a close represents an increase of five. There were 28 in 1933, and 8 in 1932.

While it is obvious to all that lynchings have decreased greatly since the turn of the century, there has been no well-defined trend since 1923, when the total was 33. During the past dozen years the number has oscillated between that figure and 1932's all-time low of eight. From 1885 through 1901, the lowest for any year was 96, and the highest was 231. As recently as 1919 there were 80.

Since there has been no clearly defined trend in late years, we see no reason to think that lynching is about to become extinct, much as its extinction is to be desired. So long as conditions remain as they are, it seems reasonable to suppose that there will be a certain number of these ghastly crimes each year.

A few episodes from the twelvemonth now closing are illuminating as to the state of public opinion in the South, where almost all lynchings occur. Take the case of GOVAN WARD, for example, who was put to death in broad daylight by a mob on the streets of Louisburg, N. C., last July. A white North Carolinian obtained the names of nine of the lynchers and furnished them to the authorities, but no action was taken against them.

Consider also the brutal killing of two Negro boys, aged 15 and 16, by a mob in Colorado County, Texas, last month. The County Attorney blatantly announced that lynchings conform to "the will of the people," and indicated that neither he nor any of the other local officials had any intention of doing anything about it. During the same month, members of a mob at White Bluff, Tenn., took the sheriff's gun away from him, shot their victim to death, and calmly returned it to the official, who was said to have remarked, "they seem to be having a good time."

Even worse than the participation of adults in such orgies is their effect upon the minds of little children. A Negro lynched at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was left hanging to a tree by the mob, and a photograph shows 10 little white girls, ranging in age from 4 to 11 years, standing under the tree and gazing up at the corpse.

We are frank to say that we are almost ashamed to be identified with a section of the country where such things occur with such frequency.

What is to be done about it? The proposed WAGNER-COSTIGAN antilynching bill is regarded by many authorities as unconstitutional, although its advocates contend that it is validated by the Fourteenth Amendment authorizing Congress to enact legislation to prevent any citizen from being deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

If the WAGNER-COSTIGAN bill is constitutional, we shall not be surprised to see it, or something like it, enacted by Congress in the coming years. Aside from its dubious constitutionality, the measure has other defects, but if lynchings continue at the present rate in Dixie, we think the South will get its due with the enactment of a law taking the prosecution of lynchers out of the hands of the local authorities, and placing it in the hands of Federal agencies.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions

White Press, Southern

4941

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.
DEMOCRAT
JUL 21 1935

Lynch Law
Is Invoked Again

The lynching near Fort Lauderdale Friday at least demonstrated that mob violence is not confined to north Florida.

Mobs go into action in thinly populated sections and less frequently in cities to take the law into their own hands when a group of men becomes aroused by a crime. There have been several lynchings in Florida in the last decade or so. Not all the victims have been negroes and not all the crimes thus punished have been of the same order.

An outstanding case was that at Tampa when national guardsmen fought off a large mob intent on lynching a white "axe slayer." It is noteworthy that even in that large city and with the aid of the national guard, a lynching was averted only after several persons had been killed. This might be recalled in mitigation of the impotence of law enforcement officers in small towns and in the country who have failed to prevent extra-legal execution of justice.

Lynch law is inadvisable for two reasons; It encourages a disrespect and disregard for law and, since it is hasty, it sometimes punishes the innocent.

In this country lynch law is the survival of a necessary frontier institution: Enforcement of personal and property rights through vigilante committees and the klan of reconstruction days.

Unquestionably, law abiding citizens should work to eliminate the vestiges of an outworn institution that now is a handicap. In attacking the problem due consideration should be given to the necessity for rigid enforcement of law through constituted agencies.

And it would be helpful for the bar to adopt the policies approved at the national convention and eliminate the practice of lawyers working to free guilty criminals through technical loop holes.

The powerful primitive instincts aroused in the mob should be first understood and then opposed with the certainty of legal punishment of the guilty.

Tarboro, N. C., Wkly. Southerner
July 18, 1935

Mississippi and Ethiopia

Ethiopia has a predominantly large Negro population. So does Mississippi.

In Mississippi, a gang of infuriated white men the other day took two Negroes away from a sheriff and killed them. They call that lynching.

In Ethiopia, an Italian army is preparing to take not two Negroes and kill them, but hundreds and thousands of Negroes. They call that bringing civilization to the people of darkness.

What is the difference between what happened in Mississippi and what apparently will happen in Ethiopia? In many ways, there is no difference. Both present a picture of an age old custom: members of a more highly developed race doing as they please with members of an intellectually inferior race.

One difference, however, is this: those who exercised this legacy from their forefathers in Mississippi were genuinely engaged by what they considered the unpardonable sin. As unwarranted as the lynchings may have been, one has to give the mob credit for having honest motives. The likely forthcoming slaughter in Ethiopia cannot be explained on any such grounds. It will be cold-blooded, premeditated. It will be inspired only by such an unjustified motive as desire for territorial expansion.

Whereas the lynched Negroes of Mississippi committed an act against society, Ethiopians, as a whole people, have done nothing worse to Italy than possess land and resources which Italy would like to have.

But such is the inconsistency of that human process called thinking that what happened in Mississippi is called mob murder and what may happen in Ethiopia will be called empire building. The former receives the whole-hearted condemnation of the world, the latter receives international consent, if not in so many words, at least by lack of actual effort to prevent it through a League of Nations supposedly endowed with the power to prevent it.

'LEAVE LYNCHERS' IS DAILY'S REPLY

Hands Off Mob, Says Louisiana Paper, Or We'll Lynch More

Cleveland Press
Cleveland Ohio.

VILLE PLATTE, La., Aug. 1—(Special)—One of the strangest things yet to come out of Louisiana, even since the advent of Hooey Long, made its appearance here yesterday when Ville Platte Gazette threatened editorially that "Any legal procedure in the Adam Joseph lynch case in an attempt to punish the mob, will cause the speedy removal of the hides of all other blacks hereabouts".

The unique declaration came after Joseph, who barely escaped with his life after a mob tried to lynch him several days ago, put the prosecution of seven known members of the mob into the hands of the International Labor Defense in New Orleans. The paper's promise of hide removal elicited especial attention from the Negro population of Ville Platte because of its close total to that of the whites, about forty percent, and most of them armed and highly independent farmers.

Senator Long has thus far been silent on the punishment of the would-be lynchers, although he had promised in his usual loud manner that he could deal with all lynchers in his state. This statement was made during the hearings on an anti-lynch bill.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
RECORD

JUL 31 1935

King Lynch In Franklin.

In Franklin county, North Carolina, yesterday a band of some 25 men, including both whites and negroes, unmasked, in broad daylight and on a frequently traveled highway, took a violently insane negro prisoner, Govan Ward, from Sheriff John P. Moore, of Franklin, and two deputies, and lynched him near the spot where three hours earlier he had slain a white farmer.

The negro had run amuck with an axe. He had been subdued, handcuffed and was being taken to prison. But certain citizens of Franklin know or obviously think they know just how to deal with insane persons; namely, put them to death by torture and make a community circus of the proceedings.

Today's Raleigh News and Observer carries a picture of the Franklin mob's victim with the following lines under it:

> Suspended from a scrub oak with a cotton ploughline, his hands still handcuffed, his tattered, bloodsoaked clothes gaping, Govan "Sweat" Ward, 25-year-old Franklin county negro, was seen by hundreds of spectators yesterday as his body hung for more than two hours in a patch of woods about a mile from the Louisburg-Henderson highway near Wellon's mill. The negro's right little toe was cut off by a souvenir hunter, and blood dripped from the wound until officers cut the body down. Women and girls were among the spectators who approached close to the body, pulling aside its ragged covering to inspect the wounds, before national guardsmen from Henderson formed a cordon about the victim of the mob keeping the morbidly curious back.

The same newspaper carries a picture of Sheriff Moore and below it are these lines:

> Swinging the cotton ploughline used to string up the mob victim, Franklin county's sheriff, John P. Moore, who took office less than 24 hours prior to the tragedy, is seen walking away from the scene of the lynching. Sheriff Moore said he recognized none of the 25 or more unmasked men who took the negro victim away from him and two deputies in broad daylight, nor did any of the officers note the license numbers on the mob members' cars. After losing his prisoner, the sheriff returned five miles to Louisburg and organized a force of 30 men to search for the mob, but the negro's corpse, swaying from a scrub oak, was the sight that greeted officers when they next saw him.

Coroner R. A. Bobbit, of Franklin, impanelled a jury at the scene of the lynching and within five minutes an open verdict was returned setting forth that the negro met his death at the hands of "persons unknown to us."

If this case is permitted to end with such a verdict North Carolina may as well admit it thoroughly approves of the Franklin way of ridding society of "crazy niggers;" and further, the people of this state may as well conclude our present government is impotent and join in lusty chorusing: Lynch is King: Long live King Lynch!

Commercial Dispatch
COLUMBUS, MISS.
JUL 22 1935

Voice of the People

ANSWER TO LYNCH CRITICS

Columbus, Miss.,
July 20, 1935.

Editor Commercial Dispatch:

We, true ladies of the South, are law-abiding citizens, but when it comes to a negro attacking one of our Southern ladies, we certainly do approve of lynching—the quicker, and the quieter, where there is positive proof, as in this case, it can be done too soon. We ladies highly appreciate the protection of our Southern gentlemen, for without them, we would be helpless indeed, as such crimes as this have grown more numerous in the last few years. The Southern people are the negroes' best friends, as all the decent negroes realize, and I am glad to say I have heard many of our respected negroes express their approval, and even joy that such negroes that get out of their place, and turn to wild beasts ought all be killed and as soon as possible.

We hope that this Association in Jackson has never had anything like this happen to one of their families—it has never happened to any of the writer's family, but she nevertheless can sympathize with the poor, helpless, dear Southern women who have had it to go through with, and we are most thankful and appreciative of our gentlemen, who know when to take our protection into their own hands.

The writer's father and grandfather have been slave owners, and loved and knew how to treat the negroes, and also keep them in their place.

She is a Daughter of the Confederacy and true to the Order.

MARY BLEWETT OTTLEY.

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C.
TELEGRAM
JUL 31 1935

BLOOD AND ROPES

Lying before us as we write is a piece of rope. It is a small, plaited rope such as is sometimes used by farmers to steer their mules and horses before the plow or to guide their missions around the farm at other tasks. Such a rope also is used to fasten to the metal bucket, which has replaced the old oaken bucket, but which still brings up cool, refreshing water from the indispensable well. In the city, we have seen such a specimen of rope used by the police to keep back crowds when they tried to surge into the street or to congregate around a forbidden object. Boy Scouts also used a similar type of rope in learning to tie and tying a series of useful knots.

But this particular rope is smeared with blood—human blood, the blood of a murderer, who in turn himself was murdered. His life was sought, demanded, and taken only a few hours after he himself had sought, demanded, and taken the life of a fellow human being. From casual observation and without knowing the facts, the blood upon the rope which now lies before us, might have been the blood of the white man as well as his Negro assailant. The blood in either case would have come from similarly constructed bodies, the life of one having been taken by a single man in a lonely spot and the life of the other supposedly taken by many also in a remote location.

Who gave either party the right to demand and take the life of a human being? No one. Who deserved to die? Legally, no group is empowered under such circumstances to be judge, jury, and executioner; morally, they may point to the scriptural passage concerning, "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," as the deed is committed and instead of one murderer the State has many.

Sane-minded people are saying that lynching under such cirmcumstances as prevailed in North Carolina yesterday, when the citizens of a community rose up and did themselves what the courts in all probability would have done, are doing the "right thing;" those who lean toward the humane or socialistic side will say the lynching was inhuman, brutal, and uncalled for; radicals will say it was not done quickly enough.

Perhaps citizens who take the law into their own hands occasionally should not be condemned too severely in view of the fact that they have not the proper respect for the courts and their jurisdiction; perhaps they have lost faith in the courts and fear that justice is not being done; or perhaps it is the barbaric, prehistoric, cave-man tendencies cropping out. Then, too, one must look at the numerous escapees, approximately 600 in the State last year, from North Carolina's prison units. That is a record which no one is boasting of and which prison officials wish they could forget. The Negro in question may have been insane or he may not have been insane. He may have been placed in one of the state institutions for life, and may have escaped in a month. Lynching is one thing when one views it from a distance, but it turns to something entirely different when it takes place right at one's door. We know it is not right for a mob to take the life of any person and we know the members are not acting civilized. Yet, we sometimes are prone to pause and wonder what would be the ultimate effect if our courts had caused to be built up arond them a wall—a wall of feeling on the part of the people that all guilty persons would be justly punished and that quickly and without fear or favor.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
JUL 31 1935

A Lynching By Total Strangers.

Mississippi, Louisiana, Mississippi, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida — into this miserable company, listed in the order of their lynchings during this year of our Lord 1935, was propelled yesterday the commonwealth North Carolina. Twenty or so men in Franklin county, adjacent to that in which is the state government, with its courts, its schools, its asylums for the insane and other indications of civilization, these twenty or so men furnished the propulsion. As surely as though they had dusted it with soot, they blackened the good name of North Carolina.

But that discussion of the affair is rhetorical. What is needed now is a descent into the strictly practical. Here were the sheriff of Franklin county and two of his deputies, with their prisoner. Confronting them were the 20 or more men, unmasked, traveling in three or four automobiles which bore license plates. Yet the sheriff or neither of his henchmen, good politicians all, recognized a soul, nor thought to take the number of a car. "I wish we had," said the sheriff. The coroner, however, was palpably glad that he hadn't. It would have made it embarrassing for him to have empaneled a jury and to have returned a verdict, while the Negro's body was still hanging from the tree, his killers hardly returned to their homes, that death came at the "hands of persons unknown to us." Twenty persons unknown to politicians in a county of 29,456 people? That many unknowns could not be gathered together except with diligence.

As late as last night, no communication had come to the governor from the officers of the law in Franklin county. During the time the mob was forming and before it was decided to take the prisoner to a safer place, not one call for help went from Franklin to Wake, next door. A company of national guardsmen and a squad of state patrolmen had arrived in Franklin county, at the scene of the lynching just committed, before the sheriff was recovered from his astonishment at being approached by a mob not a person of which he knew by sight. Thereupon, the sheriff went all the way back to Louisburg, deputized 20 citizens of the county and sent them out in all directions "to head off" the mob he had just left. This sheriff eschewed the seine. He preferred the dragnet.

North Carolina has had lynchings before, as late as 1933, in Pender county. They have been in lessening frequency, due partly to the refining influences which encompass us and partly to the wit of officers of the law, who know what to do when feeling begins to run strong in a community. But if North Carolina really chooses to discourage lynching so that it will die out altogether, this occasion in Franklin county, and the ease with which men who took the law into their own hands, not to mention those who let it be taken, could be identified and punished, is its opportunity.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4942

Letters To The Editor

LAW AND LYNCHING

To The Commercial Appeal:

Your editorial on Law and Lynching is a step in the right direction, and I want to commend you for writing the best article I have ever read on this subject, not because I agree with your views, but your simple, sensible line of reasoning shows familiarity with your subject and courage to express the facts.

Most people have learned long ago that you cannot legislate virtue into people. There is a priciple which cannot fail to keep a man in everlasting ignorance—that principle is "condemnation without investigation."

If more of our northern publicity writers would spend their time studying their subject, I believe they would spend less time discussing unenforcable laws and condemning their fellow men.

With best wishes for a year of Health, Happiness and Prosperity, I am, sincerely,

E. CLOVIS HINDS.

Memphis, Tenn.

LYNCHING AND LAW

To The Commercial Appeal:

I would like to be allowed the privilege of adding a word of commendation to your editorial in Sunday, Dec. 23, Commercial Appeal on "Lynching and Law."

I have also read Mr. J. D. Kennedy's letter replying thereto, and there is scarcely further comment that could be made that could so ably cover the situation. However, I'd like to congratulate you on your splendid editorial.

I am certainly not in favor of lynchings, but as long as there's clemency to the extent of commutation there's no assurance of the merited punishment being fully executed without delay. The children of Tennessee are not safe when fiends are at large such as the one who cost the lives of four honest citizens because they were upholding an idealism of decency and through orders that were given and obeyed by men who had the authority to issue them had their lives snuffed out.

The crime so atrociously alleged may be eliminated by instilling fear in minds so depraved by the assurance of quick and certain death.

MRS. ZULA JOHNSON.

Union City, Tenn.

SHELBYVILLE AFFAIR

To The Commercial Appeal:

I want to congratulate you on the editorial on the Shelbyville attempt to get the negro that attacked the 14-year-old white girl and the killing of the white men. I only wish that more papers would have the nerve to speak out as you did in your piece. I only hope that if anyone is outraged, it will be to some kin of the weak-kneed fathers who are so against mobs and lynching. Placards should be put on anyone lynched for this crime, so that everyone that has the same notion will see it and stop and think.

JOHN H. MERIWETHER, SR.

Jackson, Tenn.

LAW AND LYNCHING

To The Commercial Appeal:

I want to add my humble thanks to the feeling many more important people wil. have in reading your "Lynch Law" story. I am sure that it will do good, I know it was a mighty fine job of writing, and I believe it ought to be run in a box on the front page every time the deplorable necessity for lynching arises.

C. C. JACKSON.

Memphis, Tenn.

LAW AND LYNCHING

To The Commercial Appeal:

Your editorial on "Law and Lynching" is plain, true and well stated.

Regardless of fines, assessments or removal from office of officials when the one crime is committed the only problem before the community is to get the right one. Stop the crime and lynchings will stop.

W. L. M'ELROY.

Columbus, Miss.

LAW AND LYNCHING

To The Commercial Appeal:

I am glad that one man, George Morris, had the courage to discuss "mob law" intelligently in his article on Dec. 23. As the negro said, "Them am my sentiments exactly." The men composing mobs are too often the substantial citizens who have little faith in the outcome of the trial if the culprit is brought before a court or so-called court of justice. They are the ones who must pay the bills for the keep and long drawn out trials in our incompetent court system.

The criminal in committing the crime for which he is often the victim of mob violence has no sympathy for his victim, neither does he have any respect for society. When these crimes are committed, if there were any assurance that quick punishment in proportion to the crime would be given the criminal, we would have no mob punishment. Let those who are so ready to condemn mob law exert their energy in preventing the crimes that incite ordinarily peaceful citizens to fervent anger and there will be fewer mobs. Instead of hailing the culprit as a martyr when he is brought to account for his crime, we should have some sympathy for the victim. In committing the crime, the rapist forfeits his life to society. And when the courts fail to exact sufficient toll, citizens themselves do it. Under the present system of handling criminals, the courts deserve very little respect, and they have very little respect. This is hard to say, and it should not be so, but it is true. Give the people assurance that justice will be done, restore due respect for the courts, and mob law will cease overnight.

Very truly yours,

JAMES R. KILLEBREW.

Lexington, Miss.

LAW AND LYNCHING

To The Commercial Appeal:

Under the caption "Law and Lynching," The Commercial Appeal prints another judicial sentiment that takes a fling at the law, as follows: "The so-called majesty of the law is not always the inspiring spectacle it is supposed to be." Technicalities, loopholes, pardons, etc., were summoned to justify this criticism of the law.

In his defensive comments upon lynching, the editor writes: "Men are transformed into mobs of mad men, but undeniably the sight of a lifeless body, bullet-ridden, swinging from the limb of a tree, carries a lesson with it to some who could not be reached any other way."

Ignoring the fact that this is an alleged attack, circumstantial evidence, etc., I would like to point out the swift justice meted the three perpetrators of a similar crime in the Hernando courts. The men were apprehended and the evidence was sufficient, resulting in their hanging without a single technicality or loophole so far as the process of the law was concerned.

Mississippi citizens had the intelligence to respect the guardsmen, to not walk unarmed into an army, nor to destroy what it would take years to rebuild. The schools and education pointed out by the editor did little credit to common sense.

The negroes, as well as any other group, have no regard for rapists for they are not safe living among decent people, but since we are taxed for a system of rules big enough to cope with any crime committed, why not use the system for which we pay burdensome taxes?

Lynching as too revengeful and barbarous to be conducive to a desirable civilization. It has no place in the Golden Rule and contributes nothing to progress.

I know nothing of the merits involved in the Shelbyville affair, but I do know that needless blood was spilled and useful lives sacrificed through the enraged revenge of a fury mob blind to reason. That of itself is proof that lynching does not wipe out a wrong with the same results as law, nor is it a reflection of civilized order and dignified wisdom.

CLIFTON SATTERFIELD.

Memphis, Tenn.

Mindless Mobs

A few days before Christmas, Tramme Steele, Laurel Hill, Fla., filling station operator, was murdered by bandits.

Two white men and a Negro were placed under arrest. Somebody mentioned the possibility of a lynching.

Murmuring which began to be heard around the jail in which the three suspects were held increased in volume as they spread around the countryside.

As excitement grew the mob spirit took hold and the three prisoners were rushed to Montgomery for safekeeping.

No one stopped to consider the fact that the officers might have made a mistake.

Yesterday afternoon Sheriff Tom Gannt of Andalusia announced the confession of two paroled Kilby convicts which absolved the three men whose names narrowly missed being listed among the victims of mob madness.

The mob spirit is that of a mindless maniac—a constant threat against orderly society. While it exists no man is safe and no home is secure.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald

January 5, 1935

EXPLAINING LYNCHING

To the Editor The Age-Herald:

I am unflinchingly opposed to lynching as a means of dealing with a criminal. Two wrongs do not make a right. But it seems to me that, in your editorials in regard to mob violence, you are "boxing as one that beateth the air" both in your diagnosis of the source of the mob spirit and in the threatened intervention of the federal government to suppress it.

The mob spirit is not born of racial hatred. You irritate a peaceable race relationship by such insinuations. Unfortunately, the victim is usually a Negro. But not because he is a Negro. Rather because he has committed an infamous crime. And were the criminal of another race or faith or tongue, he would not be spared.

Nor do I think that the mob is composed of the bloodthirsty anarchists which you intimate. Any more than our Confederate grandfathers were such because they secretly united to free this fair land from the dominion of the carpetbaggers and scalawags. Rather are they composed of men who have lost confidence in the agencies that have been duly constituted to effect justice. And with no small reason!

Federal interference will be an instance of the clay replying against the potter. The federal government was established by citizens in rebellion against tyranny and oppression, and especially against the invasion of our homes. And will it legislate against the power that gave it birth? Will the great, great grandsons of the American Revolution respect a statute which leaves the sanctity of their womanhood at the mercy of an unscrupulous brute?

The ruling power under any form of government is public sentiment. Mob sentiment is to a certain extent public sentiment. In fact, it is often supported by a stronger sentiment than its numerical strength might indicate.

It is easier to diagnose many times than to effect a cure. Nor do I profess to have that secret panacea. But if this diagnosis is correct, the logical thing to do would be to remove those obstacles to the swift and certain administration of justice by the duly constituted authorities. Again, easier said than done. It has been suggested that we have some remedial legislation doing away with our foolish exchequer rule of evidence and permitting the courts to try cases on their respective merits. This would certainly remove what must be the hampering dread of technical error and the consequent lamentable frustration of the purpose of the law.

If you will be as vigilant and relentless in editorials setting forth the bitter fruit of the miscarriage of justice and deploring delay as you have been in berating the mob, and your resourceful cartoonist will furnish the supplemental drawings of the shyster lawyer and his practices, you will aid in creating an atmosphere conducive to the effective functioning of our courts. It is just as important that the criminal be dealt with speedily as it is that the penalty shall be in proportion to his offense. Eccl. 8:11. "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore, the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." As long as this sow of delay is permitted to wallow in the spring, the stream of justice will flow with mud.

Whatever the remedy, and however it is to be effected, as soon as the authorities make the law a terror to that which is evil, you will see a material decrease in mob violence, you will find that our citizens of every race can live peaceably together and that they love and support good government.

FRANK H. M'ELROY.

Troy, Ala.
Jan. 3, 1935

Anderson, S. C., Independent Trib.
January 6, 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects, lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as nigh as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been retshed.

INDEPENDENT
Lewisburg
JAN 4 1935

ECHO OF LYNCHING

Thelma Mullins has resigned as administratrix of the estate of George Banks and has requested that Sam Lopinski of Charleston be named as administrator of Banks' estate. She is the sister of Banks, a negro, who, with Tom Jackson, also a negro, was taken from jail here in a surprise visit by unknown persons early on the morning of Dec. 10, 1931, and lynched on a telephone pole on Wilson's hill west of Lewisburg. Banks and Jackson were under indictment for the murder of Constable Joe H. Myles and Jack Brown, who were shot to death at Leslie on the night of Nov. 22, 1931. The county under a state law was held liable to the amount of $5000 for the death of each of the negroes, to be paid to their heirs. The Mullins woman in her resignation sets up that no funds or estate of any amount had come into her hands as administratrix.

Letters to the Editor

IN OPPOSITION

To The Commercial Appeal:

Congratulations on hitting on such an effective way of discouraging opposition to Mr. George Morris' views on lynching. A little quip printed over such letters works wonders in seeing to it that nobody else dares disagree with you.

However, there is just one little point I wish to call your attention to: The defenders of lynching are not confined to Mr. George Morris and southern reactionaries. There are as many, and more advocates and defenders of lynching in the north and west as there are in the south. Letters to northern newspapers after the San Jose incident disclosed that. Probably the most notorious defender of lynching is Westbrook Pegler, ex-Chicago sports writer and a constant scoffer at the south and everything it stands for.

Defenders of lynching are nothing new. The argument is centuries old, but what is significant and what is amazing is that The Commercial Appeal, thanks to Mr. George Morris, is the first public utility of any kind, north or south, east or west, to openly defend lynch law, directly or indirectly.

As a student of southern history, I happen to know that the intelligent element in the south, as distinguished from the reactionary, has always denounced lynching. This was true before the Civil War, and is true today. Governor McAlister nobly carries on that tradition. And backing him to the limit would be found the law enforcement officials of the city of Memphis.

At the attorney generals' crime conference in Washington three weeks ago I had the privilege of standing within 20 feet of the president of the United States as he denounced those who would resort to mob violence.

Of course, possibly the president and governor are wrong. Perhaps they should have taken their cue from Mr. George Morris.

Possibly even Mr. Morris would volunteer to personally examine the guilt or innocence of anyone before turning them over to a mob!

HUGH RUSSELL FRASER.

Editor's Note—This controversy in the Letters to the Editor column has been fully aired, opportunity having been given for expression of opinion on both sides. No more letters on the subject will be printed.

Macon, Ga. News
January 3, 1935

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE LYNCH

From The Washington Post:

Two dead, half-a-dozen wounded and the destruction of a $150,000 courthouse. Such was the price paid for the prevention of a lynching in Shelbyville, Tenn. That price, if it helps to stop this cowardly and barbarious practice, is not necessarily exorbitant.

National guardsmen successfully whisked away a Negro accused of attacking a young white girl and stood their ground when a rapacious mob, robbed of its prey, rushed the courthouse. Tear gas not availing, bayonets and finally bullets were called into action with the above horrible results. Late reports indicate that the blood-letting has greatly calmed the temper of the community.

The sordid episode again calls attention to the sentiments expressed by the Organization of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, which claims to represent a membership of a million. That association will be remembered as the group which last year declared the lynchers have no commission to protect the virtue and honor of its members, thereby repudiating the traditional plea of extenuation and condemning its hypocrisy.

These women, who may be taken as representative of the finest citizenry of the South, are on record as condemning the lack of equal educational opportunity for Negroes and urging action to eliminate constant inter-racial friction. Lynching, the association describes, as "the logical result" of racial oppression, coupled with the exploitation and intimidation of a weaker element for economic gain.

Whether or not such valid generalizations apply to the Shelbyville case is not reported. It may be assumed they were at least contributory. The important point is that 500 temporarily deranged men were there prevented from taking the law into their own savage hands. The impeachment of Judge Lynch and the maintenance of constitutional procedure, at whatever cost to rioters, is a welcome conntrast to the customary course of lynchings.

Lexington, S. C. Dispatch-News
January 17, 1935

MOBS WOULD NOT FEAR FEDERAL LAW

Dr. Will W. Alexander, director of the commission on interracial co-operation, Sunday in Atlanta again held the threat of a federal anti-lynching law up before the south because of a recent Louisiana lynching.

Just what Mr. Alexander hopes to accomplish by these threats, we do not know. He can't expect to convince two or three town or county officers that they can stop a mob of scores when that mob has made up its mind to lynch some one. He is certainly not appealing to the fear complex of the mobs, for mobs do not have such a complex. Southern officers, as a rule, will protect their prisoners in any reasonable circumstances, but when fifty or a hundred armed men get the drop on two or three officers, what does Mr. Alexander expect them to do? Does he expect them to arrest the mob and lock them up, or to shoot the bunch out of hand?

And suppose there is a federal anti-lynching law passed. Will that stop lynchings? If Uncle Sam was able to find and arrest the alleged lynchers, does Mr. Alexander suppose enough witnesses could be found as a rule to testify against them to secure a conviction?

We doubt that the federal government would be any more successful in enforcing an anti-lynching law than it was in enforcing the prohibition law. Certainly the men who do the lynching in the south would not respect a federal law any more than they do the state laws, and lynching would continue, unless steps were taken to cure this evil in the right way.

The only remedy for the lynching evil is to build up a respect for the laws and the courts of the state. Lawyers who delay the work of the courts, juries who fail to convict, judges who are too light in passing sentences when it comes within their province; and governors who turn vicious criminals loose on society after being convicted and imprisoned, must bear the larger part of the blame of lynchings.

But in certain cases in the south, with all these evils remedied, there would still be lynchings, which no law that can be passed would stop.

So Mr. Alexander might as well stop worrying over the possibility of a federal anti-lynching law, for it will come sooner or later.

INTERRACIAL HEAD ASSAILS LYNCHING BY LOUISIANA MOB

Mob action, such as the lynching of a negro in Louisiana last week "would seem to make it imperative the federal government take positive and vigorous steps to protect the lives of its citizens," Dr. Will W Alexander, director of the commission on interracial co-operation, said Sunday.

Alexander, heading a group of southern men and women interested in better relationship between the races, said:

"The occurrence of these occurrences and the refusal of local authorities either to protect their prisoners or to punish lynchers would seem to make it imperative that the federal government take positive and vigorous steps to protect the lives of its citizens."

Jerome Wilson, 30-year-old negro was shot to death in a jail cell at Franklinton, La., by a group of men and his body dragged away and left on the side of the road. The negro had been convicted of slaying Deputy Sheriff DeLos C. Wood during a general gun fight between officers and negroes at Wilson's home July 22. The Louisiana supreme court granted him a new trial.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions

White Press, Southern

4943

Lumberton, N. C. Robersonian
August 5, 1935

NO TANGIBLE EVIDENCE

As was to be expected, judicial inquiry into the lynching in Franklin county drew a blank Thursday and Judge Harris recessed the hearing indefinitely. Judge Harris said there was no evidence on which to hold any one. Solicitor Bickett said the investigation would be pushed and the matter will be reopened at the proper time.

Chances are that evidence sufficient to hold any person will never be obtained. Atrocious as was this crime against law and order in the ruthless slaying of an insane negro by a mob, reporters who arrived upon the scene while the body of the negro was still hanging from a tree and souvenir-hunters were busy, one of them cutting off a big toe for his trophy, heard no condemnation of the crime. The demented wretch chopped off the head of a prominent farmer and carried it with him in his mad hunt for other victims. The provocation was great, but there can be no excuse for a mob taking the law into its own hands and each member of it is guilty of murder; but getting citizens who deplore the outrage and shame to the county and the state to identify members of the mob is well-nigh impossible in such cases, even after the excitement has had time to die down.

It is past belief that some members of the lynching mob were not recognized by some officers and law-abiding citizens who deplore the crime, and it is devoutly to be hoped that after a cooling-off time evidence may be obtained sufficient to punish the mob murderers and vindicate the good name of the state.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
August 2, 1935

Communists and Lynchers Allies

The taunt of Mussolini's newspaper that the American negroes had better concern themselves with the American lynchers before championing the cause of the Ethiopians has point.

There is no answer to it, and especially it shames the white South. Three negroes have been lynched, in Mississippi and North Carolina, in the last two weeks. That the Italians, with their "Camorra," "Mafia" and other secret societies, long ago made lynching a fine art has nothing to do with the case—lynching is a disgrace to the white South.

Why do our people confess that they are incapable of governing by law? Why do any of them say that they cannot "protect womanhood" without saying, "To hell with the Constitution"?

The truth is that lynching endangers womanhood, manhood, children. It is defiance and destruction of law, and, when life is taken by the mob for one cause, it will be taken for other causes. Property will be taken and destroyed too.

The Communists proclaim that Communism is spreading among American negroes (the spreading is confined to Northern cities for the most part), and in no possible way can Communism be encouraged so effectively as by lynching.

The Communists work to destroy the law to undermine and blow it up, to prove that the existing system of law is a failure. That is the aim of the lynchers.

The white lynchers and the black Communists are comrades and allies, fighting on the same front whether they know it or not.

Concord, N. C. Tribune
August 3, 1935

AS WAS TO HAVE BEEN EXPECTED.

The judicial inquiry into the lynching of a negro in Franklin county so far has brought the expected result: Nothing.

Following his first session as a committing magistrate, Judge Harris said that not sufficient evidence to hold any one had been presented.

That's because the public doesn't want any one indicted.

Between 25 and 50 persons were in the mob which killed the negro, yet the State so far has been unable to find any one who recognized any one else in the mob.

That, of course, is just a lot of hokum. There are plenty of people who know members of the mob but they won't talk; and that means the State will likely continue to face a stone wall in its investigation.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TRIBUNE
JUL 24 1935

Tools For Lynch-Mobs

THE National Association for the Advancement of Colored People thanks us for suggesting, two months ago, that Southern sheriffs who may have occasion to cope with lynch-mobs equip themselves and their deputies with teargas bombs. The idea seemed good to us then; it seems good now. Alas for the futility of humane intentions! Mississippians recently entertained themselves with two lynchings, and envious Floridians a few days later found a Negro suspect with whose death they halved Mississippi's margin. In none of these rural festivities did teargas figure.

Perhaps gas-bombs are not to the taste of Southern sheriffs. If they are not, then we don't care to press the point. The gist of our argument was that in this age of marvelous gadgets for defense and offense, peace officers have a wide range of highly effective weapons against mob-emergencies. For example, one machine-gun skillfully employed would deter any mob of ordinary proportions.

Of course all this presupposes an honest determination to uphold the law. If, on the contrary, the intention is to surrender prisoners to mobs after saving the face of sheriffs and their aids, then the present order of things is suited to the purpose.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TRIBUNE
JUL 26 1935

Again, Lynching

MOBS have no respect for statistics, no matter how flattering. A sharp decline in lynching, mightily nourishing to the self-respect of the citizens of all Southern States, was recently reported. Within a week of the good news, Mississippi mobs performed upon two victims. Last Friday a Florida mob overpowered a sheriff and four aids, and strung a Negro up.

A political observer writes from Washington that President Roosevelt has displeased large groups in the South by his demand for strengthening of the Federal government in its dealings with the States. The Southerners, he remarks, are as ardent as of old in their championship of State Rights. Certainly a lot of them opposed the Costigan anti-lynching bill, counter to enlightened opinion in their own communities.

So a few of the Florida and Mississippi mobsters who are now washing their hands may be counted upon to vote against Mr. Roosevelt on the score of State Rights, if they can find an opposing candidate to their taste. What none of them seems to realize is that every time they lynch a man, they strengthen the conviction outside the South that State governments in these parts either will not or cannot exercise some of the rights of self-government which they most loudly demand to retain. They work more effectively for centralization of government than the most fanatical bureaucrat in Washington.

Daytona Beach, Fla. News
July 28, 1935

WEEKEND VIEWPOINTS

Investigation of another Florida lynching drags through a week at Fort Lauderdale and nobody found to blame. Touched off with a note of high dudgeon by the governor it got under way with another eloquent pronouncement by the Lauderdale prosecutor. These gentlemen quite truly pointed out how the fair name of Florida had been besmirched and, with courageous defiance of contradiction, avowed the stain should be wiped away and the culprits brought to justice.

If memory errs not, one or the other of them went so far as to promise that "no stone shall be left unturned." But after the opening burst of eloquence the inquiry rapidly fizzled away into silence. The coroner's jury declared the lynchers were "unknown." The grand jury questioned 30 witnesses in a 2-day special session, whereupon its probe collapsed. Its statement was that it had found it "impossible to return a true bill." Just how thoroughly it did its stone-turning is a secret buried in the sacred privacy of the grand jury room.

Thus to "parties unknown" is ascribed another mob crime. Cowardly mob leaders are always difficult to identify—even though eloquent investigators might conceivably have an honest desire to identify them. Lynchings will not cease until the individual realizes that his sense of justice, his respect for the good name of his community, his state and his country, are blunted when he joins up with a blood-thirsty mob.

And speaking of lynchings consider another eloquent viewer-with-alarm, Senator King of Utah, who rose up on his hind legs in Washington the other day and, in a burst of holy indignation, declared he would have the United States consider severing diplomatic relations with Germany because of nazi oppression of Jews and Catholics. What would the indignant senator say if Germany were to recall her ambassador to Washington because we allow mob-executions to go unpunished?

Some of the tactics of the powers that now rule Germany also point back to barbarism, but is it the business of the United States to go to war about it? Our country, noble as it is, has yet many a sizable beam in its own eye ripe for removal, and has a tremendous job on its hands tending properly to its own business. Moreover, it seems perfectly clear to the thoughtful person that the Hitlerites in their asinine appeals to race prejudice and their insensate attempts to throttle the church are but digging their own graves.

And now in recent days we find Italy through its fascist-controlled press bringing an international type of race prejudice into the inbroglio over Ethiopia. The cry is that Japan seeks to get her fingers into the Ethiopian pie and join the yellow and black races in a struggle against the whites for the control of east Africa.

Only the end of the rainy season in Haile Selassie's beleaguered empire, and the actual beginnings of the struggle for suzerainty over the last free nation in Africa, can tell just how national sympathies will line up, just how many powers will leap into the fight, but at present there would appear to be slight ground for expecting Japan to be active in the set-to. She has her hands full establishing herself as overlord of eastern Asia and holding off the Russian bear. Moreover, despite the large bites of China she has gobbled down, there still remains about eleven-twelfths of that vast and helpless land to be swallowed and digested. And this should keep Nippon busy for several decades to come.

Albemarle, N. C. Press
August 6, 1935

LYNCHING PARTIES

Far be it from us to condone the lynching of any person, black or white, for we have always noticed that when a group of citizens take the law in their own hands and take the life of a man who commits some dastardly crime, the evidence would lead us to believe that the law would eventually do the same thing, that is, in states where they have capital punishment. However, we are not certain that a blanket condemnation of all lynching parties is in order, for the very simple reason that the thing has never "come close enough home". No man is qualified to say what is best unless he has had a sister or wife ravished by a black beast, or a child or parent killed by a blood-thirsty criminal. And for that reason, so long as men are human, they will continue to wreak vengeance on criminals of this type. And again, it will be well nigh impossible to convict any members of a mob.

Last week down in the eastern part of the state, a negro crazed by a narcotic, attacked a man and his sister, and then cut off the head of a prominent farmer. The sheriff and his deputies, with the negro, were stopped by a band of unmasked white men, and the negro was taken away from them and lynched. Governor Ehringhaus condemned members of the mob, and ordered a judge to make an investigation. The sheriff and his deputies went on the stand and stated that they did not know a single man in the mob. They may have sworn to the truth, but we doubt seriously whether there is another county in the state where a band of 20 or 30 men could gather together, and the sheriff and any two of his deputies could not identify a single one of them. The judge wound up his investigation with the statement that there was "no evidence on which to hold anyone".

A mob is a dangerous thing for it cannot be controlled, and lynchings should be condemned. However, God pity the day when we become a nation unable to express righteous indignation, either through the law or with a lynching party.

Greensboro, N. C., News
August 3, 1935

The Racial Anomaly At Louisburg.

When negroes join a mob bent on lynching a negro, the lynching story from the south has a new lead. The novelty of the situation explains the lead of the story that came out of Louisburg, North Carolina, where a mob lynched a feeble-minded negro who had murdered a white farmer. "An angry mob of negroes and white men," begins the lead of the Louisburg story, "today lynched Govan Ward, 25-year-old mentally deficient negro for the axe-slaying of a white farmer." But the conclusion that this was a negro lynching is not to be drawn from the Associated Press story. How far the investigation of the circumstances surrounding this North Carolina lynching will go and what facts it will develop, we cannot say. If it ever gets to the question of the constituency of the mob, however, it is a safe prediction that it will be found that the whites outnumbered the blacks by three to one. All that is known about the history of lynching in the south and the racial conflict, makes that a conservative prophecy. Lynching itself has intensified the race consciousness and the class consciousness of the negro. All that is known of human psychology, also, refutes the notion that negroes voluntarily joined a mob bent upon a lynching. They were compelled to do so, not by force, but a sense of expediency. When murder is in the wind and the mob is traveling with it, it is expedient to get on the winning side. Innocent negroes have been known to suffer when a murder like that at Louisburg was committed and a mob was riding.

There is no danger of negro savagery complicating lynching in the south when the negro joins the mob. He does so only in order to protect himself. There has never been a lynching committed by a negro mob, or one committed in which the negro took the initiative. It is distressing news when negroes join a lynching party but it does not add a new disgrace to the crime. It is the same old disgrace.

In such a crime as furnished the mob its stimulus at Louisburg, a murder committed by a mentally deficient negro, the state must bear a share of the responsibility, this time for the preliminary circumstances. State and local governments are under an obligation to discover and remove from society, mentally deficient persons who are likely to develop maniacal tendencies. So the orderly processes of government, as well as its inability to stand the stresses and strains to which it is subject when the mob forms, bear a share of the guilt in the Louisburg case.—Danville Register.

ATHENS, GA.
BANNER HERALD
JUL 24 1935

CRIMINAL ASSAULTS INCREASE

From statistics compiled by Tuskeegee Institute, it is shown that criminal assault cases in the South have been on the decline for the past several years. In practically every instance, such crimes have been committed by negroes. Few, if any, have been chargeable to white men. However the condition is different in the north—that is in Chicago, Detroit and other western cities. Of recent years what is termed the "better element" of young men have been arrested, tried and convicted on the charge of criminal assault. Quite recently in Lansing, Michigan, a 17-year-old white girl testified that three young men, students from Michigan State College, had assaulted her. One of the young men plead guilty to the charge. All three were convicted, but the punishment imposed was extremely light. A dozen or more such crimes have been committed in that section of the country in recent years. While the guilty parties have been convicted and sent to the penitentiary for a few years, in practically every instance these criminals have peen paroled after serving a short time of their sentences.

The practice has grown so common that it has aroused the indignation of the respectable class of people in that section of the country. The Sioux City (Iowa) Journal in commenting on the condition says: "The north has criticized the south's treatment of offenders. But the north has not been able to discourage increase in the crime. The north has been too lenient while insisting that the south has been too severe. It is of interest to note however, that this particular crime is decreasing in the south while steadily increasing in the north. There must be a reason for this."

There is a reason, and the sooner the officers and the courts recognize the gravity of the crime and impose drastic sentences on such criminals and the pardoning powers cease to exercise their right of clemency, the sooner will the crime be abated.

Lynchings-1935

Discussions

White Press, Southern.

4944

UNFORTUNATE SHELBYVILLE

The tragic toll to be expected when passion and prejudice leads to rioting is illustrated in the death of three persons, the burning of the courthouse, and the reflection upon the good name of an outstanding community that resulted from the recent attempt of an enraged mob to seize a negro being held by the authorities in Shelbyville, Tenn.

Shelbyville is one of the oldest and most substantial towns of Tennessee. Its inhabitants are as fine people as are to be found in any American community. But their beautiful courthouse is in ashes, with valuable records destroyed, and the good name of the community has been besmirched by the acts of a mob led by drunken rowdies, many of them not inhabitants of the town, that attempted to defy the forces of law and order.

Public sentiment in this fine southern town is reflected by the Bedford Times, published at Shelbyville, in the statement that—

Bedford county is emerging from the throes of a frightful and soul-harrowing tragedy. Our heads were bowed in grief for days. The misfortune which befell us came unexpectedly—without warning—the shock was depressing.

Bedford countians are not lawbreakers, as the entire world has been made to believe. No higher type of men and women live anywhere—they are heads of Christian homes, rear their children in the Christian faith, respect the laws of the land, and defend their country when in peril. They are not perfect—they are subject to the frailties of humanity—but their weaknesses are not of the heart, they are not vicious.

In defending the action of the militia in firing into the mob at Shelbyville, the Nashville Tennessean points out that "it was the sovereign law of the state that was assaulted by the mob, and it was the sovereignty of the law that was being upheld there by Sheriff Gant, the governor and the state guard. It was the law of the state being defended against 'lynch law.' it was the government of the state protecting a county against the rule of the mob."

Some unthinking critics in other sections have condemned the entire population of Shelbyville for the regrettable rioting and its heavy toll in life and property. No fair person will fail to realize the injustice of such criticism, nor to sympathize with the fine people of this community in the shadow thrown over them by the acts of liquor and passion-inflamed rowdies.

Athens, Ga., Banner-Herald
January 6, 1935

LYNCHING IN 1934

Even in its most favorable aspects, lynching is not a pleasant subject for discussion, serving as it does to remind us of the thin line that separates the natures of human beings from those of the beasts.

However, there is a measure of gratification in the knowledge that not more than fifteen persons were lynched in the year that has just passed. This is important news because it represents progress.

There have been years in which as nigh as 231 men were executed by mobs, often inflamed by drinking orgies, and for many years the average ranged between a hundred and two hundred.

Of late, however, the trend has been definitely downward and, in consequence, there arises in hopeful minds a renewed confidence that this evil will ultimately be eliminated from our national life. We cannot with reason lay claim to the attainment of a high state of civilization until that objective has been retshed.

MACON, GA.
NEWS
JAN 3 1935

Gist of the Press

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE LYNCH

From The Washington Post:

Two dead, half-a-dozen wounded and the destruction of a $150,000 courthouse. Such was the price paid for the prevention of a lynching in Shelbyville, Tenn. That price, if it helps to stop this cowardly and barbarious practice, is not necessarily exorbitant.

National guardsmen successfully whisked away a Negro accused of attacking a young white girl and stood their ground when a rapacious mob, robbed of its prey, rushed the courthouse. Tear gas not availing, bayonets and finally bullets were called into action with the above horrible results. Late reports indicate that the blood-letting has greatly calmed the temper of the community.

The sordid episode again calls attention to the sentiments expressed by the Organization of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, which claims to represent a membership of a million. That association will be remembered as the group which last year declared the lynchers have no commission to protect the virtue and honor of its members, thereby repudiating the traditional plea of extenuation and condemning its hypocrisy.

These women, who may be taken as representative of the finest citizenry of the South, are on record as condemning the lack of equal educational opportunity for Negroes and urging action to eliminate constant inter-racial friction. Lynching, the association describes, as "the logical result" of racial oppression, coupled with the exploitation and intimidation of a weaker element for economic gain.

Whether or not such valid generalizations apply to the Shelbyville case is not reported. It may be assumed they were at least contributory. The important point is that 500 temporarily deranged men were there prevented from taking the law into their own savage hands. The impeachment of Judge Lynch and the maintenance of constitutional procedure, at whatever cost to rioters, is a welcome conntrast to the customary course of lynchings.

CLIFTON FORGE, VA.
REVIEW
JAN 3 1935

THE LYNCHING RECORD.

The lynching record in the United States during 1934 was an enviable one, in that the total of deaths by this means was held to the minimum. And there is cause for rejoicing over the fact that not a single lynching occurred in Virginia, though unfortunate that of those executed without a trial in a court of competent jurisdiction all of them were in the South. To be sure there have been evidences of serious lawless outbreaks in the North, West and East, but the officers were able to cope with the situation and prevent further trouble. We have never been in sympathy with mob spirit, yet it is proper to say that the South should not be condemned in caustic language by reason of the lynchings, when it is a known fact that there is more crime in the other parts of America than in Dixie. According to the Bristol Herald-Courier, there would have been sixty-six lynchings last year instead of fifteen, the correct number, had the officers failed to do their full duty. We have no way of knowing how this information was obtained, but if true, the officials deserve highest commendation. In discussing this particular subject our contemporary made the following comment in a late issue:

"Twenty-eight persons were lynched in 1933. That there were only one more than half as many lynchings in 1934 is heartening to the law-abiding public. Heartening also is the fact that fifty-one attempted lynchings were prevented, although it is discouraging to know they were attempted. Had all the mobs succeeded in their purpose there would have been sixty-six lynchings.

"The most notable instance of the prevention of a lynching this year was that which occurred recently at Shelbyville, Tenn., where a mob attempted to seize a colored man who was on trial on a charge of attacking a white girl. In clashes with National Guardsmen who had been ordered to the scene four members of the mob were killed and many wounded, and Tennessee redeemed its good name.

"The most disgraceful record for the year was made in Mississippi, where six persons were lynched. There were two lynchings in Florida, two in Louisiana, and one each in Tennessee, Texas, Alabama, Kentucky and Georgia. As already said, eight of these mob victims were in the hands of the law when seized. Doubtless these eight lynchings could have been prevented as easily as were the fifty-one attempted outrages of the kind that failed. It is gratifying that there were fewer lynchings in 1934 than in 1933, but there should have been none. Mob lawlessness must be stamped out."

Greensboro, N. C., News
January 13, 1935

LYNCHING EVIL TO BE DISCUSSED TUESDAY

Local Branch of Association For Advancement of Colored People to Meet At St. James'.

The Greensboro branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will hold its first meeting of the year Tuesday evening, January 15, at 8 o'clock, in St. James' Presbyterian church, North Forbis street.

"Your Responsibility in Eucouraging the Passage of the Costigan-Wagner Anti-Lynching Bill," will be the theme of the meeting. The Methodist Episcopal church, South, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Nashville (Tenn.) Pastors association, Dr. J J. Tigert, president of the University of Florida, and many other leaders and organizations in various parts of the country have already urged the passage of this bill.

Members of both races who are interested in eliminating the lynching evil are invited to attend the session, it was stated.

High Point, N. C. Enterprise
January 12, 1935

ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

TOM Bost, one of North Carolina's best-known newspapermen, preaches in the current issue of Carl Goerch's weekly magazine, "The State," that capital punishment inspires lynchings and cheapens generally the value placed on human life.

The Raleigh correspondent delivers his peroration in no uncertain terms:

"Whether the demand for public execution of criminals comes reputedly from deity or from devil, whether from Russia or from Rowan, from heaven or from hell, from holy hoboes or from Hottentots, from the streets of the New Jerusalem or from the Sodom of perdition, it is savagery pure and simple and all that it can possibly do is to acquaint decent people with the impulses of barbarians."

We feel inclined to adopt Mr Bost's tactics of weekly sermonizing, and to deliver a little homily of our own with the above quotation as a text.

The infallibility of our scriptural basis is pretty well established by the fact that its writer has personally witnesses 7 hangings, 2 lynchings, and 142 executions.

The pertinence of our topic is evident in the question of a lethal gas chamber to replace the state's worn-out electric chair, in the large volume of editorial comment now appearing on the subject, and in the rising tide of popular sentiment against capital punishment.

The point of our discourse lies in the field of morals, rather than in the realm of laws. There appears to be no moral justification for capital punishment.

A moral precept, it will be argued, is a relative thing. Granted. But men must live by the best standards of their home, even though a subsequent generation rise up to call them deluded. Capital punishment has continued the official policy of the state because men regarded it as morally just until very recently. But now a veteran newspaperman calls it savagery pure and simple.

The application of it is easy: Capital punishment does not deter criminals, and it does not properly respect human life.

The growing number of executions at Raleigh proves that the mere threat of an electric chair is not enough to solve the crime problem.

The endorsement by the commonwealth of wilful, deliberate destruction of life, either as a punitive or protective measure, does not encourage the individual citizen to hold human life inviolate. Killing attracts killing, as surely as trade draws trade.

We cannot prove the truth of our contention by the multiplication table or any other demonstrable facts. We leave it in the realm of morals — a misty realm from which, nevertheless, come the motives of men and nations.

Wilmington, N. C. Morning Star
January 9, 1935

DANGEROUS TO LAW

AFTER more than a year's delay South Carolina has finally got around to the business of clearing up a lynching by the simple expedient of declaring a man who allegedly confessed he was the leader of four in the killing of a negro, not guilty. Three others indicted with him were previously dismissed.

Far be it from us to instruct our South Carolina neighbors on the conduct of their own affairs, but we do cling to the idea that a human life is something not to be taken at will, and that a lynching is no less a lynching when a small group wreaks vengeance for personal reasons than when a sizeable mob goes on the warpath in the heat of passion or prejudice.

We believe we understand the psychology behind the Ninety-Six acquittal, appreciating the natural hesitancy of the Nordic to punish a brother for a crime where a negro was the victim, particularly when the negro was shown to be the aggressor. Still, the covering over of homicides, regardless of race or creed, is something that tends to break down the fabric of law enforcement and leave dangerous loopholes which may mean the injuring of any or all of us.

However, the South Carolina chapter is closed and there is no reopening it.

SPARTANBURG, S. C.
JOURNAL

JAN 3 1935

Fewer Lynchings

It is encouraging to those who are really concerned in law being respected and enforced that there were fewer lynchings in 1934 than in 1933—the drop being sharp. In 1933 there were 33 lynchings, while in 1934 there were only 15. It was in 1932 that the low record was set—eight.

Wherever there is onel lynching recorded it is just one too many. There can be no justification, whatever the provocation, for an uncontrolled mob to usurp the authority and functions of the courts and law officials and take the life of a criminal or suspect, without orderly, fair, impartial trial.

Lynching bills are being framed and will be pressed for passage at the approaching session of the 74th Congress. What good results would be obtained by such legislation is certainly open to debate; for it would invite conflict between Federal and state and local authorities. To prevent confusion and friction arising therefrom the one safe plan is for the states to assert themselves to stamp out this foul indefensible assault up on their sovereignty and dignity by stamping out lynching and mob law and rule, and protecting suspects and prisoners from the itching, grasping hands of a cowardly mob bent not only on taking human life illegally but in assaulting law and constituted authority.

Knoxville, Tenn., News-Sentinel
January 17, 1935

Just Another Lynching

DOWN in Washington Parish, Louisiana, a mob entered the jail cell of Jerome Wilson, a Negro, and shot him to death.

It was just another lynching to add to the odious list of more than 5000 in the past half-century. Not even unique was the possibility of this victim's innocence. A deputy sheriff had been killed in a shooting affray at Wilson's house. Wilson was arrested, convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged. But the Louisiana Supreme Court had just granted him a new trial.

A federal anti-lyching law would make communities like Washington Parish hesitate. Under the proposed law now pending in Congress, the county would have been held financially liable for the young Negro's death.

Congress should pass this law before other such lynchings smirch the records.

Talladega Ala
Journal
Jan-10-1935

Three Innocent Men Escape Lynching

Two Andulsia youths confessed to Sheriff Tom Gannt today that they committed a murder for which a mob threatened to lynch three innocent men recently.

The two, Rubin Pittman, 19, and Galvin Soles, 22, told Sheriff Gannt they killed Trammel Steele in a filling station robbery at Laurel Hill, Fla., last Dec. 20.

Both are paroled convicts from Kilby Prison.

Confessions of Pittman and Soles absolved three other suspects who were held for safekeeping at Montgomery. A mob had threatened them following capture here. They were Tobe Adams, Tookie Meeks and Ed Davis, the latter a Negro.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4945

LYNCHBURG, VA.
NEWS
JAN 6 1935

PROTEST NOT ENOUGH.

The Bedford County Times, which is published in Shelbyville, Tennessee, the scene of the latest mob outbreak, declares that the representative people of that community had no part in the disgraceful affair and do not condone it. It calls upon the others newspapers of Tennessee to join in assuring people of other states that the community is not in sympathy with the hoodlums who participated in the burning of the courthouse after the men they sought had been taken away. It does not wish the community to suffer what the work of the least representative people.

The assurance is being given by the newspapers of the state. Indeed, it is hardly necessary to give it, for usually it is the worst element that takes part in lynching orgies. Yet, it is incumbent upon the people of Shelbyville and of Bedford county to do more than assure the outside world that the "best people" were not in sympathy with the mob. It is incumbent upon them to assure the outside world that these people are bitterly resentful and strongly hostile to any who may have taken part in the rioting. It is incumbent upon them to assure the outside world not only that they are not sympathetic but are humiliated and angry. They can do this by bringing to justice the men who participated. They can do this by seeing to it that a large number of those who had a hand in the uprising against law feel the full weight of the law they defied, that jail for arson is their fate.

It can, of course, be done—if the people of Shelbyville wish it to be done. The mob was out in the open. Members of it were recognized by many. Not all, perhaps, are known, but many of them are—by somebody. If these members are not arrested, tried and convicted, when guilty, it will be because the people of Shelbyville are too indifferent, because, though they are not sympathetic, they are not determined to wipe out the disgrace that has afflicted their town.

Too often, we hear that the "best people" of a community where a lynching occurs were not participants and were not in sympathy. That isn't enough. Until something more is done to show lack of sympathy, until something is done to show more than a lack of sympathy, the whole community must share some of the responsibility. The real reason that lynching is prevalent in a civilized community is that the civilized persons are too often content with disapproval that is expressed in words only.

The people of Shelbyville and community are no worse than the people of other communities in which the mob has over-ridden the law. The result of the investigation and of the efforts to punish the criminals will show whether they are or are not better than the people of most such communities. If it shows them to be better, they need have no fear that the outside world will know of it. The fact will be published in every newspaper throughout the country, and Shelbyville and Bedford county and all Tennessee will be held up as an example for other communities to follow. Of far more importance is the fact that hereafter Tennessee will be freer than most of her sister states from mob violence.

Just Another Lynching

Down in Washington Parish, Louisiana, a mob entered the jail cell of Jerome Wilson, a Negro, and shot him to death.

It was just another lynching to add to the odious list of more than 5000 in the past half-century. Not even unique was the possibility of this victim's innocence. A deputy sheriff had been killed in a shooting affray at Wilson's home. Wilson was arrested, convicted of murder and sentenced to be hanged. But the Louisiana Supreme Court had just granted him a new trial.

A Federal anti-lynching law would make communities like Washington Parish hesitate. Under the proposed law now pending in Congress, the county would have been held financially liable for the young Negro's death.

Congress should pass this law before other such lynchings smirch the records.

[redacted]
JAN 4 1935

A REMARKABLE RECORD

Editor McIntosh, in his personal column in the Albany Herald, states that Dougherty county has never had a lynching, a remarkable record and one of credit to the citizenship of that county.

While there have been few lynchings in Georgia during recent years, in the past at some time or other, there has been a lynching in practically every county in the state. Lynchings usually are caused from the committal of the crime of rape, persons rarely ever being lynched in this section of the country for other crimes.

In calling attention to the record of Dougherty county, Editor McIntosh says:

"Dougherty county has never had a lynching, and I am not sure that there is another county in this section of the state of which that can be said. A number of men charged with capital offenses have been tried and convicted in the county; and there is an impressive list of legal executions, but never yet have officers of the law failed to protect a prisoner menaced by a mob. Indeed, it is probably no more than fair to say that there has never been imminent danger of a lynching in Dougherty county. This community has preferred to uphold the courts, permitting the law to take its orderly course."

Winston Salem, N. C.
SENTINEL
JAN 3 1935

Warning From Another Quarter

Learning that a mob planned a march on a Virginia jail to deliver and lynch a prisoner therein, Governor Pollard promptly warns all and sundry that when the cavalcade reaches the jail it will be confronted by a sufficient number of soldiers and peace officers to prevent any lynching and to protect the honor of the state.

This is logical and commendable action coming from a responsible authority. When mobs are given to understand that the state means business, that it is prepared to act firmly and with promptness to prevent an outrage against the law, the chances are that it will disperse.

Sometime ago in Florida, a mob gave notice in advance that it intended to lynch a certain Negro, and while the forces of the law sat back, apparently powerless or indifferent, the hoodlums carried out their threat. The warning of Governor Pollard is in direct contrast. Here is a warning from another quarter—the right quarter, that Virginia means to resist with all its power any effort to flout the law and scorn the due processes of the courts. Warning of this kind might well be issued by authorities in every Southern state, letting would-be mobsters know well in advance that the state will not regard attempts at lynching with indifference, but will in every possible instance act to prevent the overt act, even at the expense of human life, if necessary.

CHARLESTON, S. C.
NEWS AND COURIER
DEC 21 1934

Why Rebuild the Court House?

The mob of Shelby in Tennessee that burned the court house after it failed to get the negro that it wished to lynch was the most consistent, reasonable, logical, civilized and far-seeing mob that, to this time, has been reported in this 100 per cent "American" republic.

If the people shall rule by lynching, not by law, why have a court house?

Let us not turn thoughts from the crime of which the mob is supposed to have held the negro prisoner, in the hands of the law, guilty. It was damnable.

Let the uplifters of foreign communities, like New York, say what they will, the crime against woman is aggravated when it is done in a land in which both the white and black races live in numbers. The negro assaulter does inflame the white mob more than would a white monster. So it is in South Africa (the condition there is worse than in the South). So, in Massachusetts any crime was more infamous 200 years ago when it was done by an Indian or a negro than by a white villain.

This is no reason why we should not have law in the South and that law enforced. If the laws of Tennessee are inadequate to deal with the crime that crazed Shelby, the Tennesseeans, if they are partially civilized, should make laws that fit the crime and punish it. A court to meet in twenty-four hours, empowered to sentence to death and from which would be no appeal, could be set up. It might shock the uplifters, who would call it barbarous, but still it would be law. It would give civilization a start. Civilization would have a chance to grow in stature.

The uplifters of foreign parts have tried to impose their notions on the South the last one hundred years. If they had practical sense more than half-wits they would see in the trial and condemnation of the Scottsboro negroes by law in Alabama a triumph over lynching. Instead of that they have acquitted the "boys" as they call them, in their purified and superior minds, and denounced the Alabama juries and judges as lynchers. What the uplifters want is martyrs. They care nothing about the negroes—and they are multiplying negro martyrs in the South.

If the Tennesseeans are to confess themselves savages incapable of enacting laws and enforcing them, for the trial and punishment of criminals of whatsoever kind they should not rebuild the court house in Shelby.

If they mean to be savages, why pretend to civilization?

Why waste money on a court house?

NEWS
Bluefield W. Va.
DEC 26 1934

With Other Editors

MOB VIOLENCE

A striking and horrible example of mob violence is reported from Shelbyville, Tenn., where a mob, defeated in its efforts to lynch a Negro, fired and reduced to smouldering ruins a courthouse valued at $150,000.

For hours national guardsmen had withstood the attacks of the mob which sought to take away the alleged assailant of a young school girl. In the clashes between the soldiers and the citizens two persons were killed and several severely injured. Finally, the Negro was whisked away, dressed in the uniform of a guardsman and wearing a gas mask over his face. Then came the mob's revenge—the burning of the courthoose.

Lynchings and other forms of mob violence constitute one of the gravest problems of the nation. If the present administration really intends to make a strong drive for respect for law and order in the coontry, serious ionsideration most be given to the matter of reducing to a minimum such outrages as reported from Shelbyville.

It is an old problem, especially in the South, and a hard one, but possibly it is not beyond solution.—Fairmont West Virginian.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH
DEC 20 1934

A Salutary Lesson

THE Tennessee National Guardsmen who killed and wounded several members of a mob of would-be lynchers at Shelbyville yesterday, deserve commendation for their devotion to duty. They were ordered to use their rifles, if any attempt was made to interfere with the orderly processes of justice, and they obeyed orders.

The members of the mob knew that the Guardsmen were at the scene for the purpose of protecting the prisoner, but they made an effort, nevertheless, to smash in the main door of the courthouse and carry off the accused. A number of them were cut down by bullets, and they deserved it.

This episode should prove a valuable lesson to mob-minded citizens in the South and elsewhere. It has shown such persons that despite the deplorable prevalence of lynching in recent months, and the frequent failure of officers of the law to do their duty, such officers can usually protect their prisoners and themselves, if they wish to do so.

There has been entirely too much laxity on the part of sheriffs and other officers in the face of mobs. Some such occurrence as that at Shelbyville was needed to stiffen the columnar vertebrae of these gentry, and to show them what can be done when the determination to protect the prisoner is predominant.

AUGUSTA, GA.
HERALD
DEC 30 1934

LACK OF THOUGHT IN A MOB

BOTH the kind of firmness which officers of the law ought to show in times of stress and the utter irrationality which can pervade a mob were strikingly illustrated by the tragic events at Shelbyville, Tenn., where national guardsmen foiled an attempted lynching.

The bloodshed which attended that clash is, of course, an extremely regrettable thing. Yet it goes without saying that if officers of the law everywhere were as determined about protecting the prisoners in their charge as these Tennessee officers were in this case, lynching would speedily cease to be a disgrace to American civilization.

But it would be hard to think of anything much more senseless than the would-be lynchers' action in burning down their own courthouse. They will have to build a new one, and the money will come out of their own pockets. A more unintelligent way of venting their anger could hardly be imagined.

Batesburg, S. C., News
January 16, 1935

MOBS WOULD NOT FEAR FEDERAL LAW

Dr. Will W. Alexander, director of the commission on interracial co-operation, Sunday in Atlanta again held the threat of a federal anti-lynching law up before the south because of a recent Louisiana lynching.

Just what Mr. Alexander hopes to accomplish by these threats, we do not know. He can't expect to convince two or three town or county officers that they can stop a mob of scores when that mob has made up its mind to lynch some one. He is certainly not appealing to the fear complex of the mobs, for mobs do not have such a complex. Southern officers, as a rule, will protect their prisoners in any reasonable circumstances, but when fifty or a hundred armed men get the drop on two or three officers, what does Mr. Alexander expect them to do? Does he expect them to arrest the mob and lock them up, or to shoot the bunch out of hand?

And suppose there is a federal anti-lynching law passed. Will that stop lynchings? If Uncle Sam was able to find and arrest the alleged lynchers, does Mr. Alexander suppose enough witnesses could be found as a rule to testify against them to secure a conviction?

We doubt that the federal government would be any more successful in enforcing an anti-lynching law than it was in enforcing the prohibition law. Certainly the men who do the lynching in the south would not respect a federal law any more than they do the state laws, and lynching would continue, unless steps were taken to cure this evil in the right way.

The only remedy for the lynching evil is to build up a respect for the laws and the courts of the state. Lawyers who delay the work of the courts, juries who fail to convict, judges who are too light in passing sentences when it comes within their province; and governors who turn vicious criminals loose on society after being convicted and imprisoned, must bear the larger part of the blame of lynchings.

But in certain cases in the south, with all these evils remedied, there would still be lynchings, which no law that can be passed would stop.

So Mr. Alexander might as well stop worrying over the possibility of a federal anti-lynching law, for it will come sooner or later.

Lynchings-1935
6
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4946

Chattanooga, Tenn. Times
December 23, 1934

Parsons Adds More Details of Mob Hanging Man in Bedford Years Ago

The man lynched in Shelbyville back in 1889-92 was Bill Bates, Charles Parsons, former police officer, who read in The Times yesterday the account of C. D. Hewlett, relates.

Mr. Hewlett, state editor of the Roanoke (Va.) Times and former telegraph operator for The Chattanooga Times, in a letter to a friend here Friday recalled that the only lynching he ever witnessed occurred in Shelbyville, between 1889 and 1892. He did not mention the name of the victim, but Parsons, who was present at the hanging, remembered in detail what took place.

Bill Bates and his father, Scott Bates, Parsons recalled, had been stealing horses. Mrs. Bill Bates gave evidence against them to a jury. In retaliation, Bill Bates beat his wife to death with a fence rail, Parsons declared. It was such a gruesome murder, the former officer said, that a mob was promptly organized to lynch both Bates and his son.

The mob went into the jail, took the keys from Joe Moore, son of the sheriff and a former Chattanooga druggist, Parsons related. The mob was not more than 150 or 200 people and was formed in the rural section of Bedford county.

"I was standing right by Bill Bates when they strung him up," Parsons declared. "I was just a boy 8 or 9 years old. Hewlett was right, he didn't quiver a bit after he was taken down. I think he was as good as dead when they strung him up. As they marched him out across the courthouse lawn to that tree, he collapsed. They had to carry him to the tree.

"After they hung Bill Bates, they brought his father, Scott Bates, up to the tree. The rope was put around his neck and they started stringing him up. Jim Hight cut the rope. He was not the mayor at that time, but later became mayor. When Hight cut the rope, Joe Easley knocked Bates down. Mr. Hewlett was wrong about them taking him back to the jail. Some one put him in a buggy and took him away."

Shelbyville was the scene of a riot last Wednesday when national guardsmen undertook to repel a mob which came to lynch E. K. Harris, Negro. Harris committed a criminal assault last Nov. 19 on a 14-year-old schoolgirl. When the mob was unable to accomplish its purpose, it succeeded in driving the national guard out of town, burning the Bedford county courthouse and five army transport trucks.

CROCODILE TEARS

Leading citizens of Shelbyville, Tenn., sent out pleas that the town not be condemned for the barbarous riot which took place there and culminated in the burning of the courthouse. The plea was that the outbreak was not sanctioned or condoned by the better element of the town.

With their plea in view, the following news item strikes a somewhat sour note:

LEWISBURG, TENN., Jan. 23.—(AP)—Prospects for an early grand jury investigation into mob violence that wreaked heavy property damage and cost four lives at Shelbyville last month were ended today with a statement by Circuit Judge T. L. Coleman at his home here that there would be no such inquiry until the April term of court.

Coleman, judge of the eighth judicial circuit, said there was no place to hold court at Shelbyville at the present time.

If the so-called better element at Shelbyville did not condone the action of the mob, it should assert itself by demanding the calling of a special grand jury if necessary. Over five months will have elapsed under the present plan before any move is made to bring those responsible to justice. A crime of the seriousness of the outbreak at Shelbyville warrants immediate action.

As for the excuse that there is no available place in which to hold court, that smacks of weakness.

Is there any constitutional provision in Tennessee that court must be held only in a suitable courthouse?

A vacant pasture would serve the purpose just as well if the leaders in the community were anxious to remove the shame that has been cast upon them.

Shelbyville can expect no sympathy if it continues in its mood of passive acceptance of mob rule. It deserves none.

Sandersville, Ga., Progress
January 17, 1935

A negro was lynched in the county jail at Franklinton, La., last week after the supreme court had granted him a new trial. Such delays over technicalities is one of the attributing causes of numerous lynchings in the south. In Canada or England, where criminals are given quick trials lynchings are unheard of.

Anderson, S. C., Independent Trib
January 19, 1935

Misinterpreted Remark Proves Bad For Negro

How lynchings get started, with all odds in favor of an innocent man getting his neck cracked, was ably demonstrated near Belton early last night.

The trouble originated when Elliott Jefferson, 53-year-old negro farmer, made a remark intended for condolence and interpreted as an insult.

It seems that a white family subrents a house on a farm Jefferson rents from F. Hanks, of the Belton section. The husband is a painter by trade and hasn't managed to get much work of late. Yesterday afternoon the wife, who was at home alone, opined to Jefferson how hard it was to make a living, citing several instances of hard luck of late.

Jefferson was sympathetic and remarked: "Don't worry, missus, I got a big pile of 'taters up yonder and if you treats me as well as your sister you can eat off them as long as there are any there."

The sister referred to, formerly lived in the house now occupied by the painter's family. He and his wife moved away a few months ago.

Jefferson's words of sympathy were misinterpreted by the white woman, according to investigating officers. Trouble started boiling, and a white man named Compton rounded up Jefferson with a shotgun.

When Sheriff Bud Clamp and Deputy Edgar Rainey arrived on the scene, some eight or ten men had gathered. They hadn't harmed Jefferson, but there was considerable mumbling around. One man was heard to remark: "If we only had a gallon of likker we could do this thing up right," according to reports.

Jefferson was taken to the county jail for safe keeping. He will probably be released today, as it is not likely that any charges preferred against him will stand, officers said last night.

"I didn't mean a bit of harm," Jefferson said when seen at the county jail. "I just wanted to invite those white folks to help themselves to my potatoes because they had been good to me."

Jefferson has a good reputation, according to officers.

Anniston, Ala. Star
February 2, 1935

On Preventing Lynchings

Two Southern newspapers recently have given timely and thoughtful discussions of the lynching problem and of possible measures to prevent mob violence. The Birmingham Age-Herald emphasizes the need of some action by the Southern states to curb lynchings and forestall legislation by Congress that might be prejudicial to the South, and The Louisville Courier-Journal likewise comments on the responsibility resting upon state authorities after describing an incident that took place in Alabama in which a lynching was narrowly averted.

The Age-Herald says:

"Last Monday Senator Costigan directed attention to the bill which he and Senator Wagner are sponsoring, and had read into the record the contents of the measure which he said is substantially the same that received the approval of the judiciary committee at the last session of Congress. That proposal did not come up for action in the Senate, largely because Southern Senators were opposed to its consideration. It is highly questionable that they will be able to make themselves equally felt this time. The Claude Neal lynching has given a special momentum to sentiment for federal legislation in the premises. That means that the affair is most likely to be fought out on the floor of the Senate.

"Southern Senators can be relied upon to leave nothing undone to prevent enactment. But as matters stand, they are up against an ominous situation. The tide is running against them, and will continue to do so to an overwhelming extent, unless the Legislatures of this section take steps to strengthen their own laws on the score of lynching. A very clear obligation rests on our General Assembly to scrutinize the Alabama statutes for the purpose of implementing them as much as possible. We have anti-lynching laws, which in the hands of an aggressive Governor, or under the pressure of a determined public opinion, can serve as a deterent. The trouble is that we cannot usually be sure of having either force at work.

"Governor Graves has shown his courage in this respect, during his first administration. He can be expected to toe the mark again, whenever the occasion arises. But that assurance does not make less desirable such additions or amendments to existing statutes as shall operate to drive home to all concerned the serious consequences of a lynching bee. There are too many loopholes in the arrangement we have. There is lacking that mmediacy between a mob's action and the penal-ies therefor which ought to exist as a warning t would-be lynchers and the communities in which ynchings take place. We ought to have, as a state aw, pretty much what the Costigan-Wagner bil provides, by way of establishing accountability and meting out punishment.

"How much better off would our representatives and Senators be, if they could cite this step in the direction of state and local responsibility At this hour, when so much is being done o planned at Montgomery to advance the socia well-being of the state and to make governmen an effective agency, a modern anti-lynching statute would be thoroughly in order. It would b the best answer we can contrive to the criticisms hurled at Alabama on the score of race relations It would help us to gain that position in the eyes of the country which for one reason or another we have lost—to our very painful disadvantage."

The Courier-Journal editorial follows:

"In Alabama the other day a frenzied mob clamored for the lives of three men, believed to be guilty of a robbery and murder at a filling station in the little Florida town of Laurel Hill. Members of the mob were convinced that they had sufficient evidence against the men to make no mistake in requiring their lives in return for those they were supposed to have taken. The law was too slow for these aroused citizens. They wanted to take justice and vengeance in their own hands.

"By a combination of good luck and the integrity of certain peace officers the men were spirited away from the place where the mob milled about, crying for blood. Once safe in Montgomery the suspects were able to establish their absolute innocence and lack of connection with the Laurel Hill crime. Two ex-convicts, out on parole, confessed soon after the robbery and murder, and the case was cleared up. The men and women of the Alabama community had barely missed putting three innocent human beings to death in the most hideous and degrading fashion.

"Such outbursts of lynch fever can be curbed if the responsible authorities want to curb them. Senator Costigan of Colorado recently pointed out that the threat of a punitive federal law on lynching during the last session of Congress had a marked effect on the lynch record of the nation. 'For the five and one-half months in which the Congress was in session,' he declares, 'lynchings virtually ceased in this country. Then promptly following the adjournment of Congress, which did not enact the considered legislation, the stream of lawlessness again began to flow at the rate of approximately one lynching a week, until the whole country was saturated with its revolting recitals.'

"So much for the argument of the 'inevitability' of lynching in some American communities. And so much, in the case of the men sought by the frantic Alabama mob, for the argument that lynching of suspects is ever justified."

METHODIST PAPER DECRIES LYNCHING

Christian Advocate Calls On Press, Pulpit And Public To Stamp Out Crime

NASHVILLE, TENN., Feb. 9.—(AP)—The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through its official organ, The Christian Advocate, today called upon the public, the press and the pulpit for renewed effort to stamp out the "vile and cowardly crime" of lynching.

In an editorial headed "A Shameful outrage on justice," Dr. W. P. King editor of The Christian Advocate, pointed out that although 1,741 persons were lynched from 1900 to 1930 there is recorded only 12 convictions of the prosecution of these crimes.

"No defeat of justice," he added, "is so notorious as the failure to bring lynchers to justice."

Two Tennessee incidents were mentioned in the broadcast against lynching.

"Citizens are beginning to see that even in self defense, the present rage of lawlessness must be checked," the editorial said. The burning by a x x x mob of the Bedford County Courthouse at Shelbyville, Tenn., should be a warning written in letters of fire to the entire country."

The courthouse was burned after a mob failed in an attempt to take a negro accused of attacking a white girl from National Guardsmen.

"It is regrettable," the editorial continued, "that there was the necessity of militiamen killing members of the mob. The authorities of the law, however, are under an inescapable obligation to protect a prisoner both before and after he may be found guilty or innocent."

"Several months ago," the editorial added, "Cordie Cheek was taken from Nashville and lynched by a mob of Maury County citizens. Sworn identification was made of members of the mob and yet the Nashville court has done nothing. If the Cordie Cheek lynchers had been brought to justice, the more recent deplorable incident might not have happened."

The editorial urged preachers, the public and both the secular and religious press to throw their weight against lynchings and declared that "the press should be willing to expose public officials, from the judges down, who evade their responsibilities."

Bamberg, S. C., Herald
February 7, 1935

What is Lynching?

The Greenville News objects to calling every killing by masked men in a group a lynching and seeking to bring the event under the laws against lynching, and it says:

County Attorney Townes has a case of much pertinence and unusual legal interest in his appeal from the circuit decision directing Greenville county to pay $2,000 to the wife of George Green, who was killed by a band of masked men.

The verdict was directed on the ground that Green had been "lynched."

But obviously every homicide committed by a group of persons cannot be called a "lynching." What constitutes the difference between a murder, even if committed by a gang or "mob" and a "lynching" in the legal sense?

The courts, of course, will have to answer that, and their decisioin will be of much practical importance. The word is generally defined to mean punishment for a crime, or alleged crime, outside of the established machinery of justice. An essential to a lynching is the taking of the law into their own hands by citizens, to inflict punishment for a crime for which the victim would otherwise have been tried and, if found guilty, sentenced. In former years the mob spirit was not necessarily essential for some lynchings, such as of horse-thieves, were conducted in a very orderly manner. In later years, however, the term has come to embrace action by a mob. However, in this particular case a decisive question would seem to be that of whether or not Green was believed to have committed some serious offense for which a band undertook to administer summary "justice" without benefit of the courts.

Tupelo, Miss. Journal
January 2, 1935

MISSISSIPPI LEADS

Mississippi leads the list in lynchings. Figures for 1934 show that of the 15 persons lynched, all of whom are Negroes, six met their death in Mississippi.

This is not a record of which any Mississippian can be proud. Nor can the South be proud of the fact that all 15 lynchings occurred below the Mason and Dixon line. On 44 other occasions Southern sheriffs prevented lynchings, while Northern and Western officers were called upon to defy a mob only seven times.

The reasons why the 15 were lynched are interesting: four because of attempted rape; two because of rape; two because of murder; one because of wounding a man in an altercation; one because of associating with a white woman; one because of striking a man; one for writing an insulting letter; one for talking disrespectfully; one for insulting women; one for implicating others in a charge of stealing and bootlegging turpentine.

These figures at least show that the excuse given by many people for the prevalence of lynching, the fact that the courts will not punish those guilty of murder and rape, is largely without any foundation of fact.

The fact that seven were lynched for comparatively trivial reasons shows that unreasoning anger, not a pure desire for justice, is the mob spirit. Nor can the Mississippi courts be accused of leniency to rapists.

People who see mob law as a far greater evil than the ones the mobsters try to stamp out, can, however, get some consolation from the fact that there were 13 fewer lynchings in 1934 than in the preceding year.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4947

Term 'Lynching' Was Derived From Virginia Justice's Method Of Handling Tories, Says Editor

Letters to Newspapers, Pro and Con on Subject, Not All From Illiterate Individuals, He Says.

By John Temple Graves II.

Editor's Note: John Temple Graves II conducts a widely read daily column in the Birmingahm (Ala.) Age-Herald. He has been editor of two southern papers, author of numerous papers, author of numerous books, contributor to many magazines, and this year was awarded a doctor's degree by the University of the South for 'distinguished contributions to the field of journalism.' He saw service in France in 1918, served on the American peace commission in Paris in 1919, was economist for the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, and was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia. Dr. Graves is the son of a distinguished southern journalist and the great-grandson of the eldest brother of John C. Calhoun. By way of versatility he holds the middle Atlantic states tennis championship for 1934.

This is the second of a series of articles by southern writers on "The South Today." These articles will not necessarily reflect the position of The Constitution on the problems discussed.

During the war of the American Revolution a Virginia justice of the peace developed a nice technique with the Tories. He would suspend them by their thumbs until they were persuaded to shout "liberty forever!" The gentleman's name was Charles Lynch, and even though his patients all survived this extra-legal treatment, the name was given thereafter to a practice by which nearly 5,000 Americans, most of them southern negroes, have been put to death without benefit of law in the last 50 years. The simpler and better name for these premeditated killings, of course, is murder. The term "lynching," although undoubtedly less offensive to practitioners, is an understatement—and an injustice to the memory of Charles Lynch.

Wide Range of Letters.

With all that is being said and done, or at least, attempted, against lynch law, it seems strange that there should be so few studies of the lynch mind—photographs taken from life. Almost any southern editorial writer who has taken a stand against mob murder is likely to have a drawerful of more or less revealing letters from people who believe in lynching; letters of abuse, epithet, protest, argument, philosophy.

In the course of ten years as an editorialist in Florida and Alabama, conducting a daily editorial column on the first page under his own name, this writer has had his share of such letters; and because they have come to him as to an individual they have been, perhaps, more intimate and enlightening than letters addressed formally to a newspaper's editorial page. Their contents may offer little of argumentative worth, but they have a certain news value and as indisputable clinical interest.

Some people will tell you that the lyncher has no mind, that he is a moron. But it can be stated on the best of evidence that thousands of very good readers and writers in the south today believe in lynching as a stern necessity under certain circumstances, even though they may be unwilling to take part in an actual lynching themselves.

Without them and the prestige which their comparatively "educated" supporte gives the institution, actual lynchers might be much more careful. For one letter from the moron who scrawls on coarse ruled paper that you are a "low down yellow-livered nigger-lover" and calls you unprintable names in a spelling all his own, there are dozens of letters from perfectly intelligent people who write to debate the thing with you, sometimes sorrowfully, sometimes angrily, sometimes with complete dispassion.

Lynch Psychology.

Never to be forgotten, for example, is the obviously genuine regret with which a certain graduate of the University of Virginia offered his conclusion that the white and negro races will never be able to live successfully side by side in the south—or the perfect calm with which he suggested a way of solution "a general massacre." Comparable in philosophical ferocity is the rule laid down by a Birmingham physician in a letter insisting that a certain negro defendant should be hanged whether he was guilty or not. "The important thing," he wrote, "is that whenever a white woman is raped by a negro there should be an example and a spectacle of punisament. If possible, get the right negro and string him up. String up one or two of his nearest relatives at the same time. And if the right one can't be found, take some other negro."

A major point with lynch sympathizers is that those who are not in favor of lynching have never been faced personally with the situation which incites it. "If we had sat quietly (sic) on our royal," asserts one correspondent, "while the niggers were killing our white women and alibing and getting by, we would never had been recognized." He wrote: "If those women who were attacked were some of your own friends or relatives, I wonder if you would be for handlinged them so nice and gentle?"

Communist Influence.

Interference of the communist international labor defense is mentioned in many letters as a cause of lynchings. A Georgia author wrote that the only way to end present-day lynchings and racial disorders in the south was to "discover the agitators—they happen to be communists and labor organizations—punish them; their action is treasonable." But that the communists themselves feel that their coming, far from aggravating the lynch impulse, has cowed it, is suggested in a letter from the secretary of an international labor defense district organization:

"The I. L. D. has forced the southern lynchers to now assume the defensive. They are no more the arrogant fellows they were in 1931. In 1931 a Scottsboro paper openly made lynch threats against any negro who aspired to jury service in the south. The Jackson County Sentinal editorially stated: 'A negro juror in Jackson county would be a curiosity, and sometimes curiosities are embalmed, you know.' Today we witness Tom Knight (attorney-general of Alabama) telling the supreme court of the United States that negroes are not systematically excluded from Alabama juries because of their race."

The conviction that lynching parties are composed of men grimly and calmly performing a social duty in the spirit of early American vigilantes is common to many of the correspondents. "I do not think the mob is composed of the blood-thirsty anarchists which you intimate," wrote a Florida school teacher, "any more than our Confederate grandfathers were such, because they united secretly to free this fair land from the dominion of the carpet-baggers and scalawags. Rather are they composed of men who have lost confidence in the agencies that have been duly constituted to effect justice. And with no small reason."

Defenders of Lynch Law.

A superior knowledge of the negro race is the claim with which a number of letter-writers set themselves up as defenders of lynch law. "How much do you know of negro psychology?" scoffed a Tennessee merchant. "Do you know anything of the negro you are thrown with but what he wants you to think? Do you appreciate that the vindication of the 'majesty of the law' is Greek or Hebrew to him? The law is something to be used in his favor by his friends and against him by his enemies. He will put you and your newspaper among those that think 'them boys didn't do nothing wrong' and he will not admit it to you but you could never make him believe that they (the Scottsboro defendants) rode in a car at night with any strange women without having intercourse with them, and range you with those who think opportunity justification."

But the most frequently employed and impressive point made in defense (or explanation) of lynching is the ineffectualness of the law, the technicalities employed to delay and often to defeat the doing of justice. "Those (Scottsboro) negro boys were convicted and sentenced by an Alabama judge and jury and should have been dead and forgotten long ago," writes a Georgia merchant. "That they are still living is the fault of our laws. If you are crusading for law and order, then for God's sake start with the law. Get the laws fixed so that when a man is fairly convicted by a jury of his peers let him suffer the penalty imposed without further bother and expense. How in the name of decency is Alabama to keep her women from being raped by black devils when they have such examples of the inadequacy of our existing laws?" In this writer's mind, obviously, there is no question of the fairness of the Scottsboro trials, nor any concern for it.

Organizations Active.

It is only within recent years, of course, that organizations like the International Labor Defense and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have interfered to offer to negro defendants in certain cases in the south the services of resourceful attorneys, and thus to protract trials and legal processes. Whether this "interference" tends to defeat justice or to procure it, the fact that it is a comparaive recent development means that the lynch argument based upon it is also recent.

These selected letters are typical of the variations in intelligence, education and point of view of those who write to southern newspapers in defense of lynch law. There are many, if not more, letters expressing uncompromising hostility to mob murder and the lynch philosophy. The number of southerners who believe that lynching is a disgraceful, corruptive and wholly unnecessary practice rivals today the number of those who do not. The expressions of their belief have neither news value nor clinical interest, as they are identical with those of civilized people the world over, but the picture attempted here would be incomplete without a reference to them. In Birmingham last year, for example, when a third-rate politician called facetiously for "bigger and better lynchings" and suggested that "rope is too high and one bullet placed in the correct position will do the work at much less cost," he found himself sixteenth in a field of 16 in a race for the state legislature. It is symptoms of this sort that give hope to southerners who are earnestly striving to do away with the crime of lynching.

GREENWOOD, MISS.
COMMONWEALTH
DEC 6 1935

HAD THIS SUSPECT BEEN LYNCHED THE GUILTY MIGHT HAVE ESCAPED

Officers of still another Mississippi county, Montgomery, had to move fast this week to avoid mobbery.

They succeeded by rushing a suspect in a rape case to a distant jail, while a mob estimated at 1,500 persons advanced on the city hall at Winona.

Officers quote the suspect, who was trailed by bloodhounds, as insisting that he is innocent of the crime but as admitting that he knows the negro who committed it.

If that be true, they will have ample time to obtain this information while protecting the suspect. Had the suspect been lynched, on the other hand, the identity of the guilty man might never have been learned.

That's part of the folly and viciousness of lynching. Guilt of the victim is not proved in every case, and if the victim is innocent his lynching often protects the guilty.

We congratulate these Montgomery county officers on their quick and effective action. Swift trials with imposition of the death penalty upon conviction is the only effective method of curbing mobbery and will curb it even in these most provocative cases.

By their acts, the Montgomery county officers give this judicial method a chance in that county.

—Jackson Daily Clarion Ledger.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR

DEC 9 1935

PREVENTING LYNCHING

A committee of the North Carolina Bar association headed by a former superior court judge will study lynching and means of preventing it, with the purpose of filing a report of its findings before the next meeting of the state association.

There may be numerous legal aspects to lynching which require thoughtful study and carefully planned remedial measures, and if so the lawyer's committee will be doing a constructive service for the state.

From the lay viewpoint, the curbing of lynching presents no such intricate problem. All that is really needed is foresight and judgment on the part of the sheriff in a community where lynching is feared, prompt action by the courts when the accused is arraigned, and drastic punishment for those found guilty of taking part in mob violence.

It is the latter phase that offers the greatest difficulty. It is comparatively easy to secure adequate protection for a prisoner threatened with lynching, and the courts may be depended upon to deal justly with such prisoners.

Obtaining proof of participation in a mob outbreak is another question. Even though one or two isolated members may be recognized and arrested, as a rule they will swear positively that they knew none of their companions. So too will bystanders who witnessed the trampling of the law in this manner. It follows, therefore, that the paramount precaution is to prevent a lynching instead of seeking the perpetrator after it has happened.

RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH

DEC 30 1935

The South Disgraced Again

IN THE past 45 years, more than 5,000 persons have been lynched in the United States, and there have been convictions of the guilty parties in less than one-half of 1 per cent of the cases.

This orgy of crime continued during 1935, when 20 more persons were done to death in this fashion, 19 of them in the South and the other in California, according to figures just released by Tuskegee Institute. Since there were 15 lynchings in 1934, the total for the year now drawing to a close represents an increase of five. There were 28 in 1933, and 8 in 1932.

While it is obvious to all that lynchings have decreased greatly since the turn of the century, there has been no well-defined trend since 1923, when the total was 33. During the past dozen years the number has oscillated between that figure and 1932's all-time low of eight. From 1885 through 1901, the lowest for any year was 96, and the highest was 231. As recently as 1919 there were 80.

Since there has been no clearly defined trend in late years, we see no reason to think that lynching is about to become extinct, much as its extinction is to be desired. So long as conditions remain as they are, it seems reasonable to suppose that there will be a certain number of these ghastly crimes each year.

A few episodes from the twelvemonth now closing are illuminating as to the state of public opinion in the South, where almost all lynchings occur. Take the case of GOVAN WARD, for example, who was put to death in broad daylight by a mob on the streets of Louisburg, N. C., last July. A white North Carolinian obtained the names of nine of the lynchers and furnished them to the authorities, but no action was taken against them.

Consider also the brutal killing of two Negro boys, aged 15 and 16, by a mob in Colorado County, Texas, last month. The County Attorney blatantly announced that lynchings conform to "the will of the people," and indicated that neither he nor any of the other local officials had any intention of doing anything about it. During the same month, members of a mob at White Bluff, Tenn., took the sheriff's gun away from him, shot their victim to death, and calmly returned it to the official, who was said to have remarked, "they seem to be having a good time."

Even worse than the participation of adults in such orgies is their effect upon the minds of little children. A Negro lynched at Fort Lauderdale, Fla., was left hanging to a tree by the mob, and a photograph shows 10 little white girls, ranging in age from 4 to 11 years, standing under the tree and gazing up at the corpse.

We are frank to say that we are almost ashamed to be identified with a section of the country where such things occur with such frequency.

What is to be done about it? The proposed WAGNER-COSTIGAN antilynching bill is regarded by many authorities as unconstitutional, although its advocates contend that it is validated by the Fourteenth Amendment authorizing Congress to enact legislation to prevent any citizen from being deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

If the WAGNER-COSTIGAN bill is constitutional, we shall not be surprised to see it, or something like it, enacted by Congress in the coming years. Aside from its dubious constitutionality, the measure has other defects, but if lynchings continue at the present rate in Dixie, we think the South will get its due with the enactment of a law taking the prosecution of lynchers out of the hands of the local authorities, and placing it in the hands of Federal agencies.

Lynchings - 1935
0
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4948

TYLER, TEX.
COURIER TIMES
NOV 15 1935

Nothing But Lynching Will Save Southern Women From Negroes Who Ravish Them Declares Club Women

AUSTIN, Nov. 14. (AP)—A lone delegate at the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs convention Thursday protested a speaker's demands for a state investigation of a dual lynching at Columbus.

White-haired and elderly Mrs. J. R. White of Coleman arose without recognition at the conclusion of a plea to Governor Allred for an inquiry and said:

"Nothing in the world will save southern women from those brutes (Negroes) except lynching."

Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, Ga., executive director of the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching, demanded in a speech before the federation that Gov. James V. Allred order an inquiry.

A mob of men lynched two Negroes accused of criminally assaulting and murdering a young white school teacher. County Attorney O. P. Moore said he believed the action was an "expression of the will of the people."

"The county attorney's attitude being what it is," said Mrs. Ames, formerly of Georgetown, Texas, "I think the governor owes it to the state to order a speedy investigation. Such lynchings not only make the south and Texas ridiculous to other states but appear lacking in civilization."

She said absence of decisive action "makes it appear that we're helpless or don't care."

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS
NOV 19 1935

Anticlimax.

The lynching and its aftermath over in Tennessee last week, which progressed from one strange circumstance to another, had for its ending a scene with not even novelty in its favor. Just the opposite, the climax of the piece was distressingly trite.

Act I, you will recall, was the lynching, which oddly enough was accomplished without torture or dismemberment and with only one shot. In Act II there was the surrender of five men who confessed to the deed. Act III brought forth the trial and the plea of the five to manslaughter in self-defense against one unarmed Negro.

Act IV saw the jury file in and report. Not Guilty, was the verdict.

There was a mild epilogue to this farce, delivered by the judge upon the bench. Said he to the jurors: "I am astounded at your verdict."

CLARKSVILLE, TENN.
LEAF-CHRONICLE
NOV 19 1935

EDITORIAL

Lynching Encouraged

The acquittal by a Cheatham County jury of five white men charged with the lynching of a Negro man appears to us to have been a miscarriage of justice. The quintet, or at least one of their number, admitted killing the Negro, but claimed self-defense.

We are not upholding the Negro in the offense with which he had been charged. To insult and then slap a white woman is a foolhardy thing to do. But for a group of men to take him out and shoot him is an act that can hardly be described by any other word than murder.

Judge Wirt Courtney was justified in expressing amazement at the verdict. "By your action," the court said, "you will make Cheatham County the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future." Without casting reflections upon the good people of our neighboring county, we cannot challenge the sweeping statement by the court. The lynching was a disgrace to Cheatham County and to the State of Tennessee and the verdict of acquittal showed to the world that all of Cheatham County resented mob rule. No doubt the verdict met with popular disapproval by the majority of Cheatham County residents. It was a triumph of violence over law and order.

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
NOV 22 1935

Shears and Paste

Executed?

A Texas mob lynched two negro boys last week and the county attorney called it an execution. The mob he called citizens. He said, "I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people." He did not add that the voice of the people is the voice of God. We have heard a great deal lately about the dangers that are besetting the constitution of the United States. Here we have a case in which the constitution was stamped upon by one who had sworn that he would defend it. The constitution was disregarded by a mob and the one who swore he would defend the constitution called the mob citizens. He is the man who would have these constitution destroyers brought to justice. Instead he becomes a party to the disgraceful proceedings. But why should we go all the way to Texas in a hunt for enemies of the constitution when we have them right here in our own state. A group of citizens (?) murdered a crazed negro in Franklin county only recently and nothing has been or will be done about it. In this case the solicitor made an effort to find out who took the negroes away from the officers of the law whose sworn duty it was to protect their prisoner, but was unable to learn a thing. We do not even know whether or not he demanded their removal from office. We have some defending of the constitution to do right here at home.—Charity and Children.

ROANOKE, VA.
TIMES
NOV 23 1935

"WILL OF THE PEOPLE."

P. P. Moore, county attorney in Columbus, Texas, said of the lynching of two Negro boys who had assaulted and killed a high school girl, "I do not call the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

Nothing more cowardly has been said by a public official in our recollection. Lynching is an extralegal measure that cannot be regarded as anything but murder. Those who participate in it are guilty of murder. To say that murder in any case is the "will of the people" is to negate every statute that has been passed for the protection of human life; furthermore, it is to say that any mob, in a frenzy of the moment, is justified in destruction either of property or life because that is the way it feels at the time. Human experience in all fields shows the folly and the ruinousness of any such attitude. The mob that cries for a man's life at one moment may lift him to power the next; the mob that cheers its hero in one instant may lead him to the chopping block in the next.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
NOV 16 1935

Determined Officers Can Prevent Lynchings

After a relatively good record for the first half of the year in the matter of lynchings, 1935 has become increasingly marred by outbreaks of mob violence. In the first six months of the year there were only four lynchings, and these took place in only two states, Mississippi and Louisiana. For a similar period, that is probably as low a number of lynchings as there is on record. In the first half of 1934 there were six lynchings, and for the same period of 1933 there were eight.

Since midyear, however, there have been several lynchings in various states. Happily, Alabama's record thus far in 1935 is free of such a blot.

In Texas two Negro boys, one 15 and the other 16 years old, were taken from officers by a large mob and lynched, after they were said to have confessed attacking and killing a 19-year-old girl. On Thursday a mob in Georgia tried to take from officers a Negro convicted of slaying a white man, but National Guardsmen frustrated the attempt.

These two cases illustrate one of the chief aspects of the lynching problem. In one case determined and courageous officers of the law fought off a mob and prevented a lynching. In the other, the officers, evidently less determined, did not prevent the mob from capturing the two victims. Perhaps the Texas officers were overpowered by great numbers and could not have prevented the mob from taking the prisoners. But if that was the case, it simply means that the authorities of the law did not take adequate precautions.

The crime of which the Texas Negroes were accused was a heinous one. But that does not excuse the lynchings. No crime justifies lynching, in a country where law is supposed to reign. The point was made, by legal authorities in Texas, that under the law these prisoners could not have been executed because of their youth. This point is advanced to condone the lynchings. In fact, the county attorney in whose county the lynchings took place said he considered the mob's action "an expression of the will of the people." The county judge, while saying he was strongly opposed to mob violence and in favor of orderly processes of the law, said the fact that the Negroes could not be "adequately punished" by law because of their ages prevented him from "condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers." That is not an enlightened attitude for a judge to adopt. Gov. Allred seems to have taken a more enlightened stand, saying that lynching was deplorable at any time.

In the Georgia case, the prisoner had been convicted of murder and sentenced to die on Dec. 12. Yet the mob did not wish to wait for less than a month for the man to be put to death. After hand-to-hand fighting, however, the National Guardsmen repulsed the members of the mob. Georgia is to be commended for thus upholding the law.

Unfortunately, there was a lynching in Georgia in connection with the same case. An entirely innocent Negro was put to death by a mob that was seeking the Negro convicted of the murder. This, of course, the officers could not prevent, because the victim was not in their custody. The incident affords a commentary on the unreasoning nature of mobs. Searching for one man, the Georgia mob put to death another who had no connection with the crime. But of course mobs do not reason, and they are not fair. That is why mob violence, whatever the provocation, cannot be tolerated in a civilized country.

In the great majority of cases, determined officers of the law can prevent mob violence.

When our law-enforcement officials all realize that fact, and recognize their duty to protect any prisoner in their custody, we will see lynching disappear.

BEAUMONT, TEX.
ENTERPRISE
NOV 20 1935

LYNCHING IS NEVER EXCUSABLE

The chamber of commerce of Columbus, Texas, where two negro boys were lynched by a mob of several hundred persons, said to include women, attributes this crime to the inadequacy of state laws. Usually, mob action is attributed to impatience with the "law's delay." In the case of the Columbus lynching delay could not be offered as an excuse, because the negroes were too young to receive capital punishment.

They probably were typical country negroes, with low-grade mentalities. They committed an atrocious crime and naturally the people of Columbus were aroused to frenzy. Still, this is no justification for a lynching, never has been and never will be, so long as civilized society agrees to abide by certain rules or laws for its governance.

While the Columbus chamber of commerce disavows any purpose of condoning the crime which brought so much unfavorable publicity to Columbus, there is evidence in the chamber's set of resolutions of a wish to shift the blame from the mob to the state. However hollow such an proceeding may be, and usually is, it would have been better for the chamber to have "deplored" the lynching.

Almost as much as the lynching itself, the astonishing attitude assumed by public officials entrusted with the duty of enforcing the laws brought condemnation upon Columbus. It is bad enough when private individuals — including women — take part in a lynching. It is worse when public officials, not content to condone such a crime privately, as so many public officials do in the south where black rapists are concerned, publicly make statements showing sympathy for if not open approval of mob violence.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TRIBUNE
NOV 15 1935

"The Will Of The People"

THE hanging of two Negroes by a Texas mob would have been just one more lynching, horrible but common in a world of many horrors, had not the county attorney of that bailiwick spoken up:

"I do not consider the citizens who executed the Negroes a mob. I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

This officer of government implies that the will of a mob amounts to law, may supersede written law, that it is the court of last resort, supreme arbiter of action. Being an attorney, he knows better. Being an officer of the government, he has sworn to enforce the written law no matter what "the will of the people" may be. He lends momentary authority to a falsehood unworthy of his training and his responsibilities.

MORE than 700 residents of his district are said to have participated in this lynching. If that happened to be a majority of its population, the county attorney might have delivered another deceptive maxim: "Let the majority rule."

But nothing could be more dangerously false than either of these precepts as this small-town poohbah would apply them. He is really speaking not of the will of the people at all, but of the frenzied impulse of an inflamed crowd to violate the law which does represent the will of the people.

Were an entire State to license mob-murder, which is inconceivable, the first attempt to exercise that will under the official sanction of State government would bring Federal troops into that State to mend matters.

BUT why turn to the fantastic? We have observed that many persons who, in hysteria, violate law singly or in mobs display good sense in most matters under normal circumstances.

"The will of the people!" It was once the will of New England townsmen to burn witches. They did it sometimes by process of law, sometimes without it.

It is the will of some American communities to lynch, and they do that. Local law-officers often wink, but seldom are so foolish as to try to sanctify murder with sophistry.

It is the will of some other American communities to murder freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of the press, and now and again they seem to succeed. But such popular "will" as these crimes demonstrate and fulfill is no more the popular will which is the essence of democratic government than is a majority vote by the inmates of a nut-house.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
CITIZEN
DEC 8 1935

BAR COMMITTEE IS SELECTED TO STUDY LYNCHING

President Broughton Of State Group Names Other Committees

RALEIGH, Dec. 7. (AP)—Roy L. Deal of Winston-Salem, a former superior court judge, will head a special committee of the North Carolina Bar association to study the subject of prevention of lynching during the next year and offer recommendation to the next bar convention.

The lynching study committee was named today by J. M. Broughton of Raleigh, president of the bar association, along with other regular and special committees, completing the set-up of the organization.

Prof. James H. Chadbourn, Jr., of Chapel Hill, who has made a particular study of lynchings and who has done extensive magazine writing on the subject, will serve as secretary of this committee. Other members will be: J. K. Wilson of Elizabeth City, George C. Green of Weldon, Robert M. Gantt of Durham, and Walter H. Woodson of Salisbury.

C. D. Wharton of Greensboro was named by Broughton as chairman of a special committee to study and make recommendations concerning summary judgment law with a view of proposing legislation to shorten civil litigation and avoid frequent delays that result from frivolous or dilatory pleading. A resolution calling for the study was passed at the last association convention.

Albert Coates of Chapel Hill, will head a committee on criminal law and its enforcement, a companion group to that headed by Wharton.

Revision Committee

The committee on revision of the corporation law of North Carolina will be composed of Prof. M. S. Breckenridge of Chapel Hill, chairman; John H. Anderson, Jr., of Raleigh, Ozmer L. Henry of Lumberton, Kemp B. Battle of Rocky Mount, and Charles A. Hines of Greensboro.

William B. McGuire of Charlotte, will head the special committee on the junior bar, the first in the history of the association. Other members will be: Edward L. Cannon of Durham, M. A. James of Asheville, W. J. Hooks of Kenly, E. D. Kuykendall, Jr., of Greensboro, W. J. Adams, Jr., of Rocky Mount, and R. S. Averitt of Winston-Salem.

Junior Bar associations already have been organized in a number of cities of the state, including Durham, Winston-Salem, Asheville, Charlotte, Smithfield and Raleigh.

Johnston On Committee

The special committee on American citizenship will be: Oscar Leach of Raleigh, chairman; T. L. Johnston of Asheville, Charles P. Greep of Louisburg, Judge Marshall T. Spears of Durham, John W. Aiken, of Raleigh, R. S. Pruette of Wadesboro, and D. C. Barnes of Murfreesboro.

J. Y. Jordan, Jr., of Asheville will head the committee on unauthorized practice of law, which has the following other members: Joseph L. Carlton of Raleigh, Fred P. Parker, Jr., of Goldsboro, Roy L. Deal of Winston-Salem, and Carroll W. Weathers of Raleigh.

Jordan's committee will study the proposed passage of legislation designed to prevent individuals who have not been licensed and corporations who cannot be licensed from engaging in law practice.

Lynchings - 1935

Discussions

White Press, Southern.

4950

Herald
Sarasota Fla
NOV 17 1935

RADICALS TO BLAME

The deplorable lynchings occurring in the south within the past month or two are not condoned by the people who have unalterable beliefs in law and order, and who believe in the perpetrator of a crime paying the penalty for his act through the properly constituted courts.

However, the people of the south are noting with no little amazement and alarm that radicals of other sections of the country are rushing to the defense of perpetrators of crimes in the south, and are employing every means, irrespective of the serious nature of the crime, to defend and free those charged with taking the life of a white man or woman or committing a serious crime upon a white woman.

The radicals had better let the people of the south handle their own crime problems, or the deplorable lynchings instead of decreasing, will be on the increase. Men of the black race charged with a crime in which capital punishment is the maximum are given proper defense, the courts appointing capable attorneys in the event the criminal is without the means to engage a lawyer. In such instances proper defense is presented the jury and the accused is given the benefit of every legal doubt. There are few, if any instances, of where a man white or black paid the extreme penalty for a crime without having his conviction reviewed by the supreme court, at least that is the rule in Florida. There may have been one or two exceptions.

The radicals are going to find that their attempts are not going to meet with the approval of the southern people who are more capable of handling the negro problem than are the radicals. They may find their actions so reprehensible to the people of the south that lynchings abhorred by the majority of southerners will increase instead of diminish.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES
NOV 15 1935

A Texas Lynching

TEXAS furnishes another lynching with an unusual aftermath.

Those put to death by the mob were two youthful negroes, aged 15 and 16. Their victim was the young daughter of a farmer who undertook on horseback and armed to guard his pecan orchard against thieves. The negroes, marauders on the property, waylaid her, forced her from her mount, assaulted her, then murdered her and threw her young body into a ditch.

They were quickly captured and made frank confessions. A determined body of men seized them and carried them to an oak tree on the farm on which she was assaulted and killed. Seven hundred members, probably a majority of the community in which she lived, gathered at the scene, many of them in automobiles whose headlights circled the oak and turned night into day. Over the eloquent protests of a minister of the Gospel stern popular justice was done. A number of women attended the executions.

* * *

WHAT makes this lynching stand apart from others is that the community boldly justifies it and the authorities are apparently not intending to make a mock and perfunctory investigation of it. They say you cannot indict a whole community.

Says the county attorney: "I believe the lynching of these two youthful negroes by a mob of 700 persons, including several women, here last night was 'an expression of the will of the people'."

Declares the county judge: "I am strongly opposed to mob violence. The fact that the negroes who so brutally murdered this girl could not be adequately punished by law because of their ages prevents me from condemning those citizens who meted justice to the ravishing murderers last night."

The minister's plea was that the law should be permitted to take its course. But the Texas community held that since the maximum penalty, because of the ages of the negroes, that could have been inflicted on the murderers was imprisonment in a reformatory until they were 21, was wholly incommensurate with the horror of the crime, it was an occasion that called for the administration of primitive justice.

LYNCHING is always deplorable. It has constantly met our reprobation. We hope to see Southern sentiment so thoroughly organized that eventually it will disappear from this section. The orderly processes of law that send a murderer to the scaffold or to the chair are undeniably more impressive and effective than sudden outbreaks of vengeance that scandalize the administration of justice.

Yet when other communities undertake to assail this Texas community for this latest and most remarkable lynching let them ask themselves what would have been their reaction to an atrocious and unspeakable assault on and murder of a fine young girl in the bloom of life when judicially the only penalty possible to be imposed is a few years of pleasant imprisonment in a reformatory.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
NOV 21 1935

Not a Matter of Votes.

O. P. Moore, county attorney at Columbus, Texas, defends the recent lynching of two negro boys, one 15 the other 16, on the ground that the people of Texas approve it. It is, he declares, "an expression of the will of the people."

And it may be, of course, that Mr. Moore is right, that the majority of the Texas voters are in favor of the lynching. But that does not make it any the less murder, or any the less wrong and foolish. There are some things that cannot be decided by vote of the people.

GREENVILLE, TEX.
EVENING BANNER
NOV 13 1935

Mob Women Jeer With Men at Plea Of Rector for Law

Seven Hundred Kill Two Negroes Held for Girl's Slaying.

COLUMBUS, (AP).—Seven hundred sullen mob members, including several women, jeered pleas of an Episcopalian rector to allow the law to take its course and hanged two youthful negroes to a live oak tree near here last night.

The negroes, Ernest Collins, 15 and Benny Mitchell, 16, who assertedly confessed the brutal attack and subsequent drowning of Miss Geraldine Killmann, 19 year old Columbus high school honor graduate, were seized from officers and hanged a mile from the family home of the slain girl.

A few seconds before the mob slipped hangman's knots across the throats of the negroes, the Rev. E B. Marmion, an Episcopal rector leaped to the top of an automobile and pleaded with the mob to "let the law take its course."

* * *

Jeers Preacher.

The mob remained silent until he had finished, then it broke out in a chorus of jeers and went ahead with the lynching.

The negroes, who had been held in Houston for safe keeping, were brought back for trial in juvenile court today. The maximum sentence they could have received was confinement in a reformatory until they were 21.

Sheriff Frank Hoegemeyer found his way blocked by a large caravan of automobiles at the Colorado river bridge near Altair, 11 miles south of Columbus. Ten masked and armed men forced the sheriff and his deputy, Harry Townsend, to hand over the prisoners, who were chained together by the neck.

The men sped away with the prisoners, leaving the officers powerless to pursue them because the road still was blocked. Both the the sheriff and his deputy had been dicarmed.

* * *

Ignore Pleas.

A short time later, the automobile bearing the negroes came to a stop beneath an oak tree a short distance north of Columbus. A ring of automobiles encircled the tree. Headlights were flashed on as the negroes were taken from the car.

"White folks, please don't do this," Mitchell pleaded. But the mob, working swiftly, paid no attention to his plea.

The hangman's knots, fashioned before the negroes were seized, were slipped around their necks. One of the lynchers sought to remove the chain which bound Mitchell and Collins. As he worked Collins, who semed unshaken, peed into Mitchell's face and grinned. Neither spoke at this time.

Failing to break the chain, the mob marched the youths beneath the limbs of the tree and threw the ropes over. Twenty men seized the ropes and pulled the negroes' feet from the ground.

Collins, large for his age, grabbed the rope and pulled himself up, meanwhile crying "Oh Lord, help me." Several members of the mob sprang upon him and jerked his legs downward.

Silently the crowd began to leave the scene. Sheriff Hoegemeyer reached the tree about an hour later and cut the bodies down. They were delivered to the negroes' parents.

In a final statement, Mitchell assertedly told his captors the name of another negro he said planned the slaying of Miss Kollmann. A few members of the mob went in search of the third negro, but they were told that he had left this section.

Miss Kollmann was killed after she rode into her father's pasture Oct. 19 in search of pecan thieves. She came upon the negroes sitting under a tree and accused them of the thefts. They confesssed, officers said, that they knocked her from her horse with an elm limb, choked her, criminally attacked her and threw her body into a creek. Each accused the other of being the actual slayer.

Sheriff Hoegemeyer, hoping to slip into town without notice, was approaching Columbus in a roundabout way when the mob intercepted him.

"While we were crossing the bridge," he said. "A large body of men stopped us. Before I could make a move, they opened the automobile door and took out the prisoners. They placed the negroes in another car and sped away toward Columbus.

"Seven cars on the bridge blocked my way, so I could not follow them."

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD NEWS

NOV 19 1935

Editorial Comment

MORE LYNCHING.

(From the Baltimore Sun.)

Late editions of The Sun yesterday contained a dispatch from Texas of the lynching of two Negro boys and a dispatch from West Virginia of the apparent lynching of a foreman of the Civilian Conservation Corps. In the latter case, authorities decided later the man had committed suicide. In the case of the Texas Negroes, there was no question. They were hanged by a mob of 700 persons. Several women were present.

To make the lynching more disastrous to law and order, the county authorities apparently condone the crime. The county attorney calls it "an expression of the will of the people," and declines to speak of the lynching group as a mob. He terms the action an "execution." The county judge, while asesrting he opposes lynching, declines to condemn "those citizens who meted justice to the murderers." His reason is that the Negroes, one of whom was 15 years old and the other 16, could not legally been executed in Texas. They could not, therefore, he reasons, be "adequately punished" for their alleged attack on and murder of a young white girl.

Such a state of affairs as is indicated by the expressions of these officers cannot exist in a truly civilized community. The State of Texas should take steps to apprehend and punish leaders of the mob.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

NOV 17 1935

The Self-Defense of Five Against One.

The strange lynching over in Tennessee last week which was followed by the stranger surrender of the five participants and their immediate trial has produced still one more strange feature. It is a plea of self-defense. These five men had taken a Negro away from two officers of the law and had driven him out into the country intending, they said, to whip him but not to kill him. The car was stopped about five miles from town.

"Get out," said Luther Dotson, "we are going to give you a whipping."

"You ain't going to whip me," the Negro is sworn to have replied and to have reached for a rock that lay on the roadside. Dotson fired, killing the Negro.

If white supremacy has reached such a state that five white men of daring and strength proven by their having wrested a prisoner from two white officers, cannot defend themselves against one unarmed black man without having to shoot him, then white supremacy is hardly worth maintaining. Let the jury take that into consideration.

EDINBURG, TEX.
VALLEY REVIEW

NOV 15 1935

Investigation Of Lynching Demanded

AUSTIN, Nov. 14—(AP)—Mrs. Jessie Daniel Ames of Atlanta, Ga., today called on Governor Allred for a speedy investigation of the lynching of two negroes at Columbus.

Mrs. Ames, formerly of Georgetown and executive director of the association of southern women for prevention of lynching, was here to address the Texas Federation of Women's clubs convention.

"I think the governor ought to order a prompt inquiry," she said, "the county attorney's attitude being what it is."

County Attorney O. P. Moore of Columbus said he regarded the lynchings as an "expression of the will of the people."

"Such lynchings not only make the south and Texas ridiculous to other states," she said, "but appear lacking in cizilization. Absence of decisive action," she added, "makes it appear that we're helpless or don't care."

Winston-Salem, N. C. Journal
December 6, 1935

The South and Lynching

The interracial problems of the Southern states must be solved by Southerners if they are to be solved properly or at all. The white man and the Negro—working hand in hand with each other in the same locality and environment and dealing one with the other in understanding, justice, and equity—can extirpate the evils of lynching, race prejudice, and other malevolent influencs which hinder the progress of the South.

This thought is inspired by an open letter which James E. Shephard, president of the North Carolina College for Negroes, at Durham, has written to the several governors of the Southern states.

In this epistle, remarkable for its temperate tone, its candor and appreciation of of the realities embraced in the Southern lynching drama, Dr. Shephard declares that no Negro born and reared in the South relishes the idea of running to Washington for remedies that lie at home. No federal anti-lynching legislation is necessary if the governors of the Southern states will take a firm, resolute stand against this atrocity. Sufficient laws already exist by which lynching can be driven out of the country, provided they are properly enforced.

He proposes that this question be discussed at a conference of governors such as is held every year, with the thought of having these state executives devise ways of bringing home to their constituents the essential treason which lies in every act of surrender to the mob.

At the same time, Dr. Shephard intimates, the white man of the South can do much to eradicate the cause of lynching by investing more equitable sums in Negro education. As the colored man becomes better educated, as also in the case of whites, he moves farther and farther away from crime.

In the last paragraph of his letter, Dr. Shephard draws a conclusion which must appeal to the sound sense of the thinking Southern mind in referring to the attitude of the intelligent Negro of the South toward the racial problem:

"We desire that our own neighbors and friends enforce the law and if our Southern governors will take a stand against lynching, and protect prisoners at any cost—this dreadful evil will soon be eradicated from American life and there will be no need of a federal anti-lynching law on the statute books—to needlessly add to unnecessary statutes and legislation which even the federal government is powerless to enforce, nor even has the desire to do so. It is in this spirit I appeal to you. We must work out our destiny and salvation in the South by mutual confidence and respect each for the rights of the others."

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4951

THE STATES MUST ACT OR TAKE THE CONSEQUENCES

The Advertiser must call attention here to two significant editorials on a vital Southern question by representative Southern newspapers, The Charlotte Observer and The Charleston News and Courier.

Advertiser

These splendid newspapers are concerned, independently and without collusion, with the question, "What does the South intend to do about lynching?"

And also, "What shall we do about the Costigan-Wheeler bill which would give Federal courts jurisdiction over lynchings?"

11-3-35

The two papers approach these questions from different agles.

Let us quote first what The News and Courier has to say in a leading editorial:

Senator Borah's answer to Walter White, Negro leader and author of the Costigan-Wagner bill, that the bill is unconstitutional and that if president he would veto it, places him as the foremost man, Democrat or Republican, in any party, outside of the South, defending the State right, the Southern right, of each State to manage its own affairs.

While Mr. Borah does not say in this answer (it was necessary) that he would oppose a constitutional amendment his record as a State rights man is enough. He voted against the Costigan-Wagner bill. A few years ago, when he was in Augusta, Ga., he made a statement that was the clearest and plainest that any man in the front political rank has made in defense of the position upon which government by Southern white people rests.

Surely it is a singular thing—this far Western senator come to be the foremost American not a Eoutherner upholding the faith of Hampton, Vest, Ben Hil, Zeb Vance, Lamar, Butler, Bayard, Cleveland, Bryan, Tillman, all the Democrats who protected the beleaguered South decade after decade from "force bills," Lodge bills, Foraker bills, by which the South was harassed and menaced.

The Costigan-Wagner bill would not stop lynchings. It is not designed to stop them.

It is part of the insidious campaign, along many fronts, the educational included, of the Northern Negroes to enfranchise the Southern Negroes, restore to them the lost power that they had in "Reconstruction times." This so intelligent a Negro as Walter White could hardly deny without stultifying himself. Probably he would not do that.

So when the Costigan-Wagner bill was pressed in the Senate and was being postponed by a filibuster of Southern senators last Spring, when Borah was voting against it. What was the attitude of the national Democratic party and administration?

The President, Mr. Roosevelt, could have stopped the bill by a word—which he did not utter. Newspaper correspondents, Pearson and Allen, published that he favored it. That has been privately denied. They published that Mrs. Roosevelt strongly favored the bill and was active for it. That has not been denied.

Anyway we all know that the Democratic senators from Northern States supported the bill, that all or nearly all of them from the border States supported it.

There stood the South deserted by all save Southern senators—and Borah.

The national Democratic party has captured the bulk of the Northern Negro vote.

It cannot hold that vote without capitulating to Negro demands, and Northern Negroes of course demand that the Negroes vote in the States of the "Deep South."

Are they not contesting in the courts that Negroes be admitted to Democratic primaries—in Texas and Virginia?

"But Borah is a Republican." So is Norris, and President Roosevelt declares that Norris should stay in the Senate.

The News and Courier has recited the facts. Who are your Northern friends?

Who are our Northern friends? That question is not so pertinent as the question, Who are the friends of Southerners?

The Observer says:

The acquittal of the five white men in Tennessee charged with murder in connection with the lynching of a Negro, who was not even accused of the "usual crime," was another in a long series of invitations to Congress to enact a Federal anti-lynching law.

The five men admitted at the trial that they overpowered two officers and took their prisoner from them by force, hauled him away to a thicket several miles distant and shot him to death. Their defense was that they had not intended to lynch him but that one of them shot the Negro to death in self-defense when he started to pick up a rock. Also they pleaded as an extenuating circumstance that the Negro had made an insulting remark to the wife of one of the five men and when she resented it he slapped her. He was arrested and chagred with assault and battery.

After hearing all the evidence, including the testimony of the officers, the jury "deliberated" for two nights and a day and brought in a verdict of not guilty. The judge expressed himself as "astounded," but he had no reason to be, if he had been keeping posted on the record of such cases. As a rule the evidence and the law do not count with juries in lynching cases any more than they count with a mob bent on committing a lynching.

For some months now North Carolina has maintained a standing invitation to Congress to enact an anti-lynching law by its failure to punish or even to arrest any member of the mob of 20 or 25 men who in mid-day light took a Negro prisoner from the sheriff and his deputies in Franklin County and lynched him. At a brief formal hearing before Judge W. C. Harris, sitting as a committing magistrate, immediately after the lynching, the sheriff and the deputies swore they were unable to identif, a single member of the mob or get the number of any one of th group of automobiles used by the lynching party. And that seems to have ended the State's interest in the case.

Of course the absurdity of the testimony of the sheriff and his deputies in a rural county, like Franklin, with a population of barely 30,000—where everybody knows the sheriff and the sheriff knows everybody in the county—made no difference.

These two recent cases of lynching—one in North Carolina and one in Tennessee—widely different in their aspects—illustrate the manner in which States generally deal with lynchers, in South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and elsewhere.

And yet, when Congress convenes again and an anti-lynching bill is introduced to provide for more certain punishment of lynchers, the Senators and Representatives from all of these States will be expected to make a determined fight in opposition, with orations in defense of States' rights, maintaining that a Federal law is unnecessary because the several States "are amply able to deal with lynchers and are doing so."

Certainly the matter of dealing with lynchers should be one for the States and not for the Federal Government, and should be left to the States—if they will deal with this crime of combined murder and anarchy.

But, sooner or later, if the States will not deal with it—if they will not punish or arrest lynchers, or if State court juries persist in acquitting lynchers regardless of the evidence and the law—then the arguments against a Federal anti-lynching law will become generally recognized as absurd and ridiculous and the matter of dealing with lynchers will be taken over by the Federal Government.

The Nation as a whole has some rights as well as the individual States in the matter of the disgrace of continued and frequent instances of lynch law and sooner or later will insist that the Federal Government take action to deal with lynchers if the States will not.

Frequent lynchings with virtual immunity for the mob are more dangerous to the constitutional rights of the people of the States than a Federal anti-lynchings law would be.

In the interest of States' rights the States should prove that they can deal effectively with lynchers.

Apparently The News and Courier had not seen The Observer's editorial at the time its own editorial was written.

The Advertiser, like The News and Courier and The Observer, prefers to see lynching remain a State rather than a Federal offense, and has said so in numerous articles; it has heretofore roundly condemned the Wheeler-Costigan bill.

But condemning the Wheeler-Costigan bill and receiving the condemnation of mankind are not quite the same agreeable experiences.

Either lynching must go or the right of the States to exclusive jurisdiction over lynchers must go, whether we will it or not!

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
DEC 10 1935

EQUAL AND EXACT

LAST week a Superior Court judge in Georgia did what the U. S. Supreme Court majority refused to do last May. He cut thru technicalities and declared the conviction of the Negro Angelo Herndon to be "unconstitutional, illegal, void and of no effect."

The Herndon case is the South's celebrated cause. Accused under an old and almost forgotten 1866 anti-insurrection law of trying to establish a Negro republic and of enlarging the Communist Party in Atlanta, Herndon was sentenced to 18 to 20 years in prison. The arrest followed his action in organizing a relief appeal of about 1000 Georgia families, of whom 600 were white.

Judge Hugh M. Dorsey found that application of this statute to Herndon's activities was in conflict with the 14th Amendment and also the Georgia Constitution. The U. S. Supreme Court majority had refused to consider the case on a technicality.

Judge Dorsey has sustained law and enrobed his court with dignity. He has said that regardless of the color of a defendant's skin or political doctrine he is entitled to the shelter of the Constitution. He has upheld what Jefferson called "equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion."

Salt Lake City, Utah
UTAH TRIBUNE
NOV 27 1935

Borah's Constitutional Reply

ONLY THOSE who do not know the man or have failed to follow his course in congress attribute Senator William E. Borah's attitude on the antilynching bill to a desire to win southern delegates to the next national convention of his party. He would jeopardize every chance for the nomination rather than compromise on what he interprets to be the limitations of the federal constitution. He cannot understand the inconsistency of those who champion state sovereignty in one instance and reject it in another.

To an inquiry from the National Association of Colored Voters, "representing a population of 12,000,000 American negroes," the senator stated with frankness seldom found in a presidential possibility, that he had opposed the Costigan-Wagner bill on principle, that he intends to vote against such measures as long as he remains a member of the senate and that he would veto it "if the unexpected and great honor" of election to the office of chief executive were conferred upon him.

"I do not enter a discussion of what in my judgment is the utter futility of these measures aside from the congressional question. Neither do I take time to again express, as I have often expressed it by word and act, my horror of lynching, further than to say that if the federal government is to deal with the subject, it can only do so by an amendment to the constitution of the United States."

Without discussing the senator's views or the desirability of taking some decisive action to discourage lynchings, one cannot withhold admiration for the frank avowal of his convictions at a critical period of his public career. It was Henry Clay who declared that he "would rather be right than be president." Senator Borah believes that statutory crimes are punishable by and within the states where they are committed. He evidently bases this decision on articles VI, VII, IX and X of the federal constitution.

In conclusion the senator said with emphasis: "Whatever may happen in the future politics of this country, so far as my position on the question presented by these measures is concerned, it will not be changed or even modified."

Vienna, Ga., News
December 19, 1935

Woman's Society Scores Yynchings

METHODIST GROUP DENOUNCES FAILURE OF OFFICERS TO PROTECT NEGROES.

ATLANTA.— The Women's Missionary Society of the Atlanta District of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. in quarterly session here, adopted resolutions deploring the two recent lynchings in Georgia, saying that in neither of these cases "was there even the pretense of excuse" for mob violence. The meeting was held Wednesday but not made public until today.

One of the mob's victims, they said was not accused of any offense whatever and the other was accused only of drunkenness and of effecting his escape from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol.

Registering "unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances," the society voiced its protest against "officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob", and urged "upon all religious, educational, and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence."

The society commended county and state officials who in other recent cases have averted threatened lynchings by calling out the troops.

The resolution said:

"We, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Atlanta district M. E. church, South, in quarterly session, note with deep humiliation that two lynchings has disgraced our state in the last two months; one near Vienna, another near Moultrie. Mobs have defied our laws discredited our civilization, and mocked our religion. We bow our heads in shame and contrition that such things can happen among us.

"Lynching in our opinion is never excusable, but in these two cases there was not even the pretense of an excuse.

"Lewis Harris, lynched on September 27th near Vienna, was accused only of drunkenness and of escaping from an officer by seizing the latter's pistol. When he was rearrested, the same officer, apparently without resistence, handed him over to a mob to be shot to death.

"Bo" Brinson, lynched near Moultrie on October 16, was not accused of any offense whatever.

"Searching for another Negro, a mob entered Brinson's house. When he objected, they shot him to death in his own home. So far none of the participants in either lynching has been apprehended.

"Therefore, we register our unqualified condemnation of lynching under whatever circumstances. our protest to officers and courts that tamely bow to the mob, and our shame for a Christian civilization so superficial as still to tolerate such savagery.

"We urge upon officers and courts their sacred obligation to uphold the constituted processes of law, and upon all religious educational, and civic agencies the imperative duty of building a public opinion which will no longer tolerate mob violence.

"We are glad to commend the county and state officials who in recent cases have called out the organized power of the state to protect persons in the custody of the law and to vindicate the authority of the courts."

Lynchings-1935
Discussions of

White Press, Southern

4952

WINSTON SALEM, N.C
JOURNAL

AUG 1 1935

The Real Voice of Franklin County

The mob that disgraced the fair name of Franklin county Tuesday does not speak for that fine county, any more than it voices the real sentiment of North Carolina.

Some years ago Franklin gave North Carolina one of its greatest governors. Thomas Walter Bickett was a citizen of Franklin. He spoke for that county. And single handed and alone Governor Bickett faced a mob in another county and prevented it from lynching a Negro prisoner.

During his administration Governor Bickett let it be known that all the executive and judicial power of the State would be used, if necessary, to apprehend and bring lynchers to justice. In this policy he had the backing of a vast majority of the people of his own great county.

We do not believe a majority of those people have changed. They do not believe in lynch law today any more than they did in the days of Bickett, the most vigorous foe of Judge Lynch this State has ever had.

When in November, 1918, by the aid of Governor Bickett the forces of law and order had successfully dealt with a mob in Winston-Salem, Governor Bickett wrote Mayor Robert W. Gorrell as follows:

"I desire to congratulate you and all the officials and law-abiding citizens of Winston-Salem on the intelligent and courageous manner in which the sanctity of the law was upheld in the recent trouble in your city. The case is a tragic illustration of the insanity of the mob, and how the lives of innocent people are always imperiled when the mob spirit prevails. It is to be earnestly hoped that all the people of the State will learn from this tragedy that safety for the innocent can only be assured by the strict observance of the law. The law will always punish any man who violates a woman in North Carolina. It has never failed to do it. The guilty cannot possibly escape, and the mob so often wreaks its vengeance, intentionally or unintentionally, upon the innocent."

In 1917, the year he entered the governor's office, Governor Bickett let it be known how he stood on mob violence and the lynching of Negroes. He said:

For a mob to kill a man is the essence of brutality and cowardice. The white people are under a peculiar obligation to refrain from violence of any sort against the colored people of the land."

The man who is now charged with the responsibility of prosecuting the members of the Franklin county mob is a son of Governor Bickett. If Solicitor William Bickett is the worthy son of his father that we think he is, there is going to be a vigorous and determined effort to convict and punish every man who had part in this horrible and disgraceful affair in Bickett's home county.

Gastonia, N. C. Gazette
August 3, 1935

Why Lynchings?

Disgraceful as was the lynching of the crazed negro Ward, down in Franklin county this week it would surprise you to know that there are scores of good people who feel no qualms about it, as is shown by Legette Blythe, Charlotte Observer columnist, quoting a well known Mecklenburg man.

And the reason is not far to seek. It is because the people are doubtful of the courts, or afraid of the pardoning power of the governor and his commissioner.

It is strikingly significant that Detective Frank N. Littlejohn should have issued his excoriation of the governor simultaneously with the lynching of this negro. A negro murderer from Mecklenburg, Thomas Carter, was given a life term by commutation from the death sentence for the murder of James Davis, a Charlotte merchant. Here is what Mr. Littlejohn said in this connection:

"Apparently Governor Ehringhaus acted upon the advice of defense attorneys for it is a known fact that no communication was made with members of the police department who obtained evidence upon which the negro was convicted.

"At the time the killing occurred, according to Commissioner Gill, Carter was only 16 years of age. Now we know here in Mecklenburg that the negro was nearly 20 years of age and also know that Davis was killed in cold blood during a robbery. A jury of 12 men reached the same decision, but Governor Ehringhaus finds ample reason to overlook the decision of the jurymen and has decided for the prisoner to be maintained by the state for the rest of his life. I'll be willing to bet my hat that within a very short time ample reasons will be found by the Ralegih officials to pardon Carter completely for the atrocious crime he committed."

This too free use of the pardon power is one of the main reasons why the law is held in such contempt these days. People are almost confident that justice will slip a cog, and the prisoner will go free, or else, if convicted, be pardoned in a few months. It has happened too often, we are sorry to say, and has brought about this general contempt and disregard for the law and the courts. We quote from the Observer reporter:

"Those men down there at Louisburg that lynched that negro did the State a good turn. Of coure, they won't get any of them. I hope they won't. I'm tired of all this soft talk about lynching. There's nothing that will do more good in a community than a well-conducted lynching every now and then."

The man who said that was one of the county's upstanding citizens, a man who is a leader in his own community, and in his church, a former office-holder. Were his name given—which it will not be—many people would be shocked, many surprised, many would applaud.

"There's much to be said in favor of lynching," this man went on. "Take that negro down there at Louisburg who cut off that farmer's head with an axe. It was a good thing they did when they hung him. It was all over pretty soon and there's one less criminal in the world. It didn't cost much to get rid of him, either, and the taxpayers won't have to pay for a trial.

"If they hadn't lynched him, what would have happened? They would have had a big trial, called out the national guards, they would have found he was crazy—which I guess he was—and would have sent him off to some hospital for the insane. And in a month or so or a year maybe he would have got out and chopped off some other man's head. As it is, he won't chop off any more heads, he's probably better off dead than alive, and the Louisburg folks won't have to pay for trying him."

Palatka, Fla. News
July 31, 1935

Another epidemic of mobitis has broken out. Hardly had Florida finished swinging up a victim until a North Carolina mob got into action. The South gains nothing by this tendency upon the part of some of its citizens to take the law into their own hands. The lynching habit is hard to break and will not be entirely overcome until public sentiment swings in the other direction. There are no penalties for conforming to a sanctioned precedent.

Springfield, Tenn. Herald
August 8, 1935

JUSTICE FOR THE NEGROES

While we would never be among those who seem to desire strict prosecution of all Negroes accused of any crime for the sole reason that they happen to be colored people, we do feel that it is time some definite action is taken to curb the wave of killing, fighting and general disorder which seems to be sweeping Robertson County's Afro-American population.

It would not be just to condemn the entire group of colored people for the actions of a few—for Springfield and Robertson County have some Negroes as good as can be found anywhere. Many of them are honest citizens, receiving the just respect of white and colored people alike, and we are inclined to think that these are among the majority.

However, with the recent slayings of Negroes by members of their own race and the general fight at the carnival last week-end resulting in the injury of a white man, it appears that disrespect for law and order is spreading among a certain element of colored people.

Laxity in prosecution of Negroes on criminal charges and the large number of those apparently justly accused of crimes reaching even to murder who have been allowed to either go free or given light prison or jail terms have given rise to this disregard of fundamental law in the city and county. Aggressive prosecution and fulfillment of the duties of prosecuting attorneys, judges and juries will be necessary to establish the due regard for law and order. Let us hope that such action will be immediately forthcoming.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.
CITIZEN

AUG 1 1935

THE PROBING BE UNSPARING

Governor Ehringhaus, who seems to have acted with commendable vigor in his efforts to prevent the lynching which occurred in Franklin County Tuesday, is sharply critical of Sheriff Moore and the other officers of the county. He declares that the Governor's office received no word whatever of the situation there, adding that assistance could and would have been rendered if it had been asked for. Since Raleigh is less than forty miles from Louisburg, the county seat of Franklin, it would have been an easy matter to have rushed help there in a very short time.

On the basis of the Associated Press reports, the sheriff of Franklin (a new officer, just appointed the day before to fill a vacancy) and his deputies seem to have been derelict in other respects as well. It was broad daylight when their prisoner, a negro who had killed and decapitated a white farmer who was trying to quiet him after he had become crazed, was taken from them, they say, by a band of infuriated men, said to have included both whites and blacks, and lynched. The men, according to the sheriff, were armed with both pistols and shotguns. The sheriff and his deputies are quoted by the Associated Press as saying that they did not recognize any member of the mob. But none of the members of the mob was masked, the hour was shortly before noon, Franklin is a small county, news of the murder which aroused the mob had not had time to spread far, the members of the mob must almost surely have been gathered from the immediate neighborhood.

It seems to us that this leaves the sheriff and his deputies in an extremely vulnerable position. Their story calls for believing either that the members of the mob had gathered from a distance, which would seem almost incredible; or else that they do not know the people of the community in which they were charged with the responsibility of maintaining the peace. The average person will draw his own conclusion. It is for the sheriff and his deputies to establish that there was a mob. We have only their word for it as matters stand. It is for them to establish if they can why they failed to protect their prisoner against the mob. The reports do not indicate that they made any effort to do so. It is for them to explain why they could not recognize unmasked men at high noon or describe any of those men so that they might be identified.

The crime committed by the Negro Ward was a most revolting crime, shocking and hideous in the highest degree. It seems evident that the negro was crazed. What he did horrified the officers when they discovered it, and it was horrifying. But all the known facts indicate that the law could have taken its course with Ward if the officers had acted intelligently. They failed to act in that manner. Instead of communicating with the Governor, less than forty miles away, they started with the negro for Rocky Mount, which we would judge to be quite as far from Louisburg as Raleigh, and in another direction. Then they say that Ward was taken from them by an unmasked mob, no member of which they knew, and lynched. That is the story as reported. The judicial investigation which is to be started today should bring out the facts. The public, a wide public, has a right to expect that the probe will be thorough and unsparing.

Sarasota, Fla., Herald
August 8, 1935

IN GLASS HOUSES

The people of the southern states do not approve of lynchings. Society has provided the way to mete out punishment and that is through orderly processes of the law. When lynchings do occur in this section of the nation the people just as emphatically resent the unwarranted slurs emanating in the minds of editorial writers in other sections.

In other words the people of the south, generally, are in no mood to be criticised when a lynching does occur, than are the people of other sections where crime is rampant and seemingly impossible of stemming. Those who take part in lynchings do not write a letter to the law-abiding residents of a community notifying them that they intend to stage a lynching. If they did lynchings could be stopped.

The Detroit Free Press published in a city where several atrocious crimes have been committed recently, and in a state where capital punishment is outlawed, very properly, of course, condemns the practice of lynching. In 44 years four whites and one negro have been lynched in Michigan, but the Miami Herald says, "protests against lynchings would come more reasonably from some other state in view of the fact that lynching only would mete out fitting punishment in some recent Michigan crimes, as that state has no capital punishment."

The Free Press editorial said in part:

"Whatever excuse may have been made for lynching in the past, there is no justification for it now in the United States, which is supposed to be a nation of civilized people."

The Miami paper declaring that the statement does not apply to Michigan, adds:

"There are some excuses for lynchings in Michigan, because the law cannot exact the proper penalty. In the same edition of the newspaper were stories of several murder and assault cases. Two of nine girls identified one man as their assailant. It was in Detroit that a degenerate brutally murdered one little girl and packed her body in a trunk. It was there that a noted New York lawyer was taken for a ride lately and killed for a few dollars. It was from Michigan that a brute forced a man to drive, and slaughtered him through an operation. Michigan has contributed in the last few months some of the worst and most outstanding crimes of degeneracy and brutality on record.

"Yet the Detroit paper says there is no longer any excuse for lynching, although Michigan will only pat these killers upon the back and send them to prison for a few years. That is not protecting society; it is not giving an example of civilization. Where the law is effective and prompt, and the penalty sufficient, there is no excuse for lynching, and it should be condemned, particularly in cases where doubt as to guilt exists. But that is not true of Michigan in its glass house."

WAYCROSS, GA.
JOURNAL HERALD
SEP 9 1935

Lynchings

During the first six months of 1935 there were four lynchings, two in Louisiana and two in Mississippi.

This compared with six lynchings for the first half of 1934 and eight lynchings for the first half of 1933.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
October 7, 1935

Lynching Multiplies Crime

A South Georgia mob lynches a negro for pointing a revolver at an officer, thus where there was a single non-capital felony chargeable against one lawbreaker, there eventuates a capital felony, involving an uncounted number of persons.

The circumstances are exceedingly unfortunate, constituting another evidence of the widespread disrespect for law that is proving so demoralizing in many quarters. In all such cases there are two victims of mob violence—the person lynched and the law that is designed for the protection of society and which must be upheld if society is to enjoy the protection that the law affords.

The very men who join in a lynching look to the law for their own protection, both in person and in property, and should realize that when they make such an assault upon the law they are weakening the very structure that has been erected for their own defense.

Multiplying crimes never has and never will help to create a happier social condition and this is so obvious that it should be apparent to all.—Gadsden Times.

Greensboro, N. C., News
November 16, 1935

Vox Populi.

"I do not call the citizens who executed the negroes a mob," says the county attorney in a Texas county where two negro boys were strung up without the formality of trial. "I consider their action an expression of the will of the people."

This statement added a grotesque humor to a horrible crime against the law. It uncovered the impotency of a type of official to whom nothing is criminal if enough people are concerned in it. If people in his county want to make a bloody spectacle of the law, it is all right with their county attorney.

But perhaps he did not carry his logic far enough. Lynching is the voice of the people. May some vestige of decency still protect the south from the cowering, pusillanimous official who will go on and say that the voice of the people is the will of God.—Raleigh News and Observer.

Lynchings-1935
Discussion.

White Press, Southern.

4953

WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR

SEP 4 1935

STATE SHOULD MAKE ITS OWN CASE

THE National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has furnished Governor EHRINGHAUS with what purports to be a list of nine persons allegedly involved in the recent lynching of a negro near Louisburg for the murder of a white farmer.

The association contends the information contained therein was secured by a southern white man employed as a private investigator.

The Star-News looks upon this with some feelings of misgiving. It is and has always been the foe of mob violence regardless of the racial issues involved, and now confronted with a virtual challenge, it is moved to hope that the facts contained in the allegations are unfounded.

Otherwise, law enforcement in North Carolina has been dealt a serious blow, for it stands to reason that if one private investigator can establish names and facts regarding a crime of this kind, that certainly the paid officers of the law whose numbers are legion should be able to do the same thing and without the necessity of an outside agency entering into the equation.

And North Carolinians as a rule are not fond of interference from those outside.

While the N.A.A.C.P. and Mr. BAILEY have recently engaged in a sharp interchange over the same question, let us hope that the Governor will do his best to get to the bottom of the affair in the interests of the good name of the state and its reputation for impartial justice regardless of the identity of those concerned.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
NEWS

SEP 8 1935

Dedicated To Franklin County.

(Smithfield Herald.)

That lynchings are sometimes founded upon inexcusable presumptions was clearly demonstrated here one day recently. A middle aged negro man was tramping about through the county and stopping at a farm house he was given employment which lasted for several weeks. He had no appearance of being an insane person other than being dull and stupid. One day at the dinner hour, without warning he made a vicious assault upon the farmer's wife, and but for her ability to escape his clutches, a foul crime might have been committed. The first impulse of the farmer and his neighbors was to take guns and kill the negro. Reason and commonsense, however, finally prevailed and instead of doing violence to him, they brought him to the county seat where it was discovered that he was regularly adjudged to be a lunatic and some few months ago had escaped from the State Hospital at Goldsboro.

It is commendable when men resort to law rather than violence in handling assaults of this kind.

Jacksonville, Fla., Times-Union
August 18, 1935

Man Confesses Part In Lynching After Thirty-Five Years

BEAUFORT, N. C., Aug. 17, (AP)—Carteret County officers today disclosed receipt of a letter from Cortez, Fla., signed A. F. Taylor in which the writer said he participated in a lynching here 35 years ago.

Asserting that he had become religious and was being troubled by his conscience, the writer said he was willing to return here if officers wanted him. However, they decided it was useless to accept his offer.

The lynching referred to was the only one in the history of this county. A negro, Louis Patrick, was shot and hanged after the slaying of Elijah Weeks, a merchant.

The Florida letter writer said he was a lookout for the mob but did not witness the lynching.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
September 8, 1935

Hon. J. C. B. Ehringhaus,
Governor of North Carolina;
Hon. A. A. F Seawell, Attorney General;
Mr. William Y. Bickett, Solicitor,
Seventh Judicial District.

Gentlemen:

Of course I do not know how much evidence the Association for the Advancement of Colored People has against the nine persons whose names it has filed with you and which it charges were members of the mob that seized and lynched a negro prisoner in Franklin county a few weeks ago.

However, the association says the names were supplied it by a Southern white investigator. Presumably the association has had a detective working on the case in order to obtain the names.

In any event, it is entirely probable that if the State should turn over the names with all available facts to one or two good detectives authorized to go into Franklin county and undertake to get evidence against the guilty ones, it would not be long before some arrests would be made and evidence produced that would result in conviction at the hands of an impartial jury.

There seems to be division of opinion as to whether the State has authority under the law to take such action. If it has not, then it is a subject for much-desired legislation when the General Assembly convenes again. If the State has such authority, then by all means it ought to exercise it without further delay.

In any event the State should not stop until it has exhausted all its powers in vigorous and determined efforts to apprehend the members of the mob and bring them into court.

Lack of vigorous action on the part of State as well as county authorities in the matter of the Franklin lynching is calculated to encourage recurrence of the same kind of mob lawlessness in that and other counties, as you know.

GENERAL MECKLENBURG.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
September 20, 1935

Lynchers of All Sorts

What fools are Southerners, some of them especially those who lynch a negro charged with murder in Oxford, Mississippi. They are no worse than Californians, who have lynched three or four white men in the last year or two. Still, the Mississippians and the Californians are as dependable to maintain civilization as are those New Yorkers and others who a few years ago were trying to lynch the courts of Massachusetts because they convicted and condemned murderers and are now denouncing the courts of Alabama. These people who demand a federal anti-lynchnng law love the courts no more than they love the lynchers when the courts do not conform to their opinions.

dw, Ala., Democrat
August 15, 1935

The Tuscaloosa News editorializes on the south's fundamentalism, prohibition and lynchings. The News says southerners are indifferent a weeks ago, when a mob took a Negro from the hands of compliant officers and lynched him, might be cited the lynching of a lynching in Abbeville, South Carolina, Sunday night. Learning of the approach of a mob with its intentions centered on the jail house, the sheriff of the county called upon the governor for troops. A company was on the spot in short order, in time to deploy with fixed bayonets and by the mere presence of the soldiers to suggest to the mob when it arrived the good sense of going on about other business.

8-13-35

There has been introduced in this session of the U. S. Congress and there will be in future sessions anti-lynching bills. The genius of these bills is that they delegate to the federal government the right to try lynchers and state and local officers of the law who may have been derelict in protecting their prisoners from the mob. The theory is, and we are inclined to subscribe to it, that if a few are made to feel the wrath of Justice, the impulse to lynch will be deterred.

However, South Carolina's response in the face of this threatened lynching was superior in one respect to the proposed federal method. The sheriff and, in turn, the governor acted before and not after a lynching had been committed. There were no victims, and that is a point to be considered.

of them. He continues to vote dr and drink wet, and wonders wh anyone should worry about it. H can not see any difference betwee a lynching in Mississippi and Cali fornia, nor a bank robbery hold u in Florida or Brooklyn.

The editorial sounds as if th editor had just finished reading the "Old Boat Rocker" by summariz ing, "When critics tell the south i is goin to hell, they want some more impressive reaction than i embodied in an invitation to g fishing, or have a round of golf." Southerners just don't seem to give a dam.

Score One for S. C.
Charlotte, N. C.

To counteract the discouragement at what happened in Franklin county, North Carolina, two

Newton, N. C., News-Enterprise
September 24, 1935

NOTE ON LYNCHING

The latest lynching—that of a Mississippi negro—is one of the least excusable that has dotted the records of American annals.

The victim was taken from jail while a jury deliberated on his case. The charge against him was heinous, that of slaying a white planter in cold blood.

Still the law was taking its course, and the accused was taking his chance of life before a white jury, with a white judge and white prosecutor. Certainly such odds that existed were not in his favor, and the lynchers should have been satisfied that if guilty would pay for the crime.

We are reminded by this affair that a New Hanover sheriff once took precautions that commended him as a foe of mob violence and a diplomat as well.

The racial prejudice element was involved in a trial here, but the sheriff did not wish to rile the tempers of the spectators by parading armed soldiery in their midst but neither did he wish to have his prisoner hurt.

The troops were mobilizing but kept in their armory several blocks distant, the sheriff arranging with the court to receive the verdict in private. This was done, and the guilty verdict returned assuaged the feelings of the crowd, and the soldiers were not needed.

A bit of foresight like this would have prevented the affair in Mississippi.—Wilmington Star.

Roanoke, Va., World News
September 20, 1935

A MISSISSIPPI LYNCHING

Mississippi, home of lynching, offers a variation in the form of a crime that is at once murder of the defenseless by an armed mob and an attack on the courts. In the latest instance, a Negro accused of killing a white farmer was on trial. The evidence had been submitted, the case argued. While the jury debated its verdict, evidently with some substantial doubts as to the Negro's guilt, an impatient mob took the prisoner from an unresisting sheriff and hung him.

When the presiding judge found his prisoner was dead, he thanked and dismissed the jury. It was not learned how it stood when dismissed, for it had not, after some hours of debate, agreed upon a verdict.

It is of course impossible to believe that Sheriff Lyles and his three deputies do not know who were the men who came to the jail and took his prisoner away from them. The sheriff apparently made no resistance, allowing the mob to get from his office the keys to the Negro's cell. The usual Mississippi announcement follows that "none of the mob had been identified."

It all comes back to a matter of public opinion: Sheriffs are elective officers and will not jeopardize their jobs by asserting themselves against a band of influential voters. And undoubtedly there are the usual number of "respectable citizens" in the community who deprecate this attack on the courts, but who will do nothing to bring the lynchers before the court for murder, and may even vote for reelection of a sheriff who has made no defense of a prisoner committed to his keeping.

A really strong judge could put an end to lynching in Mississippi once and for all, by having the members of that mob brought before him for contempt of court. But the judge, like the sheriff, is looking more to reelection than upholding the dignity of his office.

It is such occasions that give argument for a Federal anti-lynching bill. It is when the States fail in their responsibilities that the public mind turns to the Federal government for relief.

ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD NEWS
SEP 20 1935

A MISSISSIPPI LYNCHING

Mississippi, home of lynching, offers a variation in the form of a crime that is at once murder of the defenseless by an armed mob and an attack on the courts. In the latest instance, a Negro accused of killing a white farmer was on trial. The evidence had been submitted, the case argued. While the jury debated its verdict, evidently with some substantial doubts as to the Negro's guilt, an impatient mob took the prisoner from an unresisting sheriff and hung him.

When the presiding judge found his prisoner was dead, he thanked and dismissed the jury. It was not learned how it stood when dismissed, for it had not, after some hours of debate, agreed upon a verdict.

It is of course impossible to believe that Sheriff Lyles and his three deputies do not know who were the men who came to the jail and took his prisoner away from them. The sheriff apparently made no resistance, allowing the mob to get from his office the keys to the Negro's cell. The usual Mississippi announcement follows that "none of the mob had been identified."

It all comes back to a matter of public opinion. Sheriffs are elective officers and will not jeopardize their jobs by asserting themselves against a band of influential voters. And undoubtedly there are the usual number of "respectable citizens" in the community who deprecate this attack on the courts, but who will do nothing to bring the lynchers before the court for murder, and may even vote for reelection of a sheriff who has made no defense of a prisoner committed to his keeping.

A really strong judge could put an end to lynching in Mississippi once and for all, by having the members of that mob brought before him for contempt of court. But the judge, like the sheriff, is looking more to reelection than upholding the dignity of his office.

It is such occasions that give argument for a Federal anti-lynching bill. It is when the States fail in their responsibilities that the public mind turns to the Federal government for relief.

Oklahoma City, Okla.
OKLAHOMAN
SEP 22 1935

When Justice Is Mobbed

OF course nothing was added to the heinousness of the offense by the fact that the lynching at Oxford was staged in the vicinity of the University of Mississippi and not very far from the grave of Justice Lamar. But better things are expected of a community where a university has stood for approximately a century and where lies the statesman who wrought so earnestly for sectional and racial reconciliation.

Some of the trivial excuses offered by the usual mob cannot be offered by the mob of Oxford. The man who was lynched had been apprehended by the officers, had admitted his guilt of murder, and had been tried legally before a jury of his peers. After the evidence had been heard and the jury had retired to reach a verdict, a mob broke into the county jail and lynched the prisoner. Hence the law's delay and the uncertainties of justice can hardly be pleaded by the willing murderers of Oxford.

Another question of a legal nature and of rather serious moment is raised by the Oxford proceedings. Even if the jury had found the defendant guilty (as it probably would have done since he had admitted his guilt) would the appellate courts have permitted the verdict to stand? The streets of Oxford and even the courtroom itself were filled with angry citizens demanding vengeance. The fair and impartial trial promised to every defendant was clearly impossible under the circumstances. It is significant that on the day following the Oxford lynching the appellate court of Virginia reversed a jury verdict in a capital case on the ground that a prejudiced audience in the courtroom at Fredericksburg had by its presence made an unprejudiced trial impossible. Would not an appellate court have held the same way in the Oxford case?

The same opinion might have been returned by the higher court if national guards had been thrown around the Oxford court to protect the prisoner and make an orderly trial possible, for the presence of the troops can influence a jury just as the presence of a sullen mob can influence it. Hence the ordering out of the militia can do nothing more than make it certain that a trial will be had. It cannot make the trial fair and impartial. In a way the presence of the militia may insure the commission of judicial murder.

Of course the presence of the troops usually prevents a mob murder and of course the militia should be ordered out just as soon as the first hint of mob violence is in the air. Even if the militia is forced to take life to protect a prisoner, it should not hesitate to take life. But it is decidedly unfortunate that the very steps taken by constituted authority to carry out the due process of law may in certain cases vitiate the processes of justice. It is unfortunate that the mobilization of the militia is not enough to cure the evil that persists in disgracing the country.

Lynching will not end in America and is certain to be approved by the appellate courts will be made certain for every lenient and they have remained passive entirely too long.

Impartial justice cannot be made certain in America until the people demand fair and impartial trials and refuse to do anything that will make a fair and impartial trial impossible. When citizens unanimously refuse to join a sullen throng in a mob violence must cease to be criminal courtroom, when they almost unanimously condemn all mob manifestations, when they demand certain punishment for all mob members, and when by the rights of every prisoner. They must demand the strict to protect

Lynchings-1935
Discussions of

White Press, Southern

4954

Miami, Fla Herald
August 6, 1935

IN GLAS[S] HOUSES

RECENTLY The Detroit Free Press carried an editorial condemning the practice of lynching, and quite properly so. In 44 years four whites and one negro have been lynched in Michigan, which is a mild record. But protests against lynching would come more reasonably from some other state in view of the fact that lynching only would mete out fitting punishing in some recent Michigan crimes, as that state has no capital punishment.

The Free Press editorial said: "Whatever excuse may have been made for lynching in the past, there is no justification for it now in the United States, which is supposed to be a nation of civilized people."

That statement certainly does not apply to Michigan. There are some excuses for lynchings in Michigan, because the law cannot exact the proper penalty. In the same edition of the newspaper were stories of several murder and assault cases. Two of nine girls identified one man as their assailant. It was in Detroit that a degenerate brutally murdered one little girl and packed her body in a trunk. It was there that a noted New York lawyer was taken for a ride lately and killed for a few dollars. It was from Michigan that a brute forced a man to drive, and slaughtered him through an operation. Michigan has contributed in the last few months some of the worst and most outstanding crimes of degeneracy and brutality on record.

Yet the Detroit paper says tnere is no longer any excuse for lynching, although Michigan will only pat these killers upon the back and send them to prison for a few years. That is not protecting society; it is not giving an example of civilization. Where the law is effective and prompt, and the penalty sufficient, there is no excuse for lynching, and it should be condemned, particularly in cases where doubt as to guilt exists. But that is not true of Michigan in its glass house.

LAW AND LYNCHING

To The Commercial Appeal:

A few days ago another lynching was added to North Mississippi's already full record—the third in a few months. We lead all sections of the south in the number of such demonstrations. It is a situation that should demand the consideration of thinking men and women who are law-abiding citizens of the state.

In a recent editorial The Commercial Appeal recalled the lynching of a man by a mob in California. The reason for the act was that the citizens had lost confidence in law enforcement. The thought arises in my mind: Is this why we have to lynch in Mississippi? Does Mississippi have such a reputation for delayed justice that it becomes necessary for the citzenry to assert itself? Is it possible that the legal machinery is so dilatory and so ineffective that atrocious crimes can go unpunished?

Is there any justification for mob rule?

MRS. DAN G. COMFORT.
Durant, Miss.

Columbia, S. C. Record
August 14, 1935

Argument.

Every lynching the participants in which go unpunished as most lynchers do is an argument for the enactment of the Costigan-Wagner federal anti-lynching bill and everyone of them is seized upon by advocates of federal intervention to punish lynchers and lynching states for this purpose.

Every lynching that is prevented by local and state authorities is an argument against the Costigan-Wagner bill. Abbeville's Sheriff McLane prevented a lynching Sunday by calling for state aid and getting it in time. All the power of the federal government could not have accomplished so much.

Sheriffs being on the ground can prevent lynchings. Washington, no matter what the law may be, cannot.

Charleston, S. C. News & Courier
August 14, 1935

For a White South First

We direct attention to an article, from the magazine "Time," which we reprint today.

Reluctantly though repeatedly The News and Courier has mentioned that the Costigan-Wagner, or "anti-lynching, bill, introduced and pressed by Northern Democrats, written by a negro leader of New York, compels the South to think again upon the "race question."

As long as shall be 8,000,000 negroes in seven or eight Southern states, those states will not be safe without a national party to protect them even though they must organize it themselves.

After 1865 the national Democratic party stoutly and stubbornly defended the white South. Without Thurman, Vorhees, Cox, Cleveland, millions of Northern men, the civilization of the South would have been stamped out of existence.

What has Senator Wagner, Tammany Democrat, in common with Grover Cleveland? In New York city now are 150,000 negro voters; Wagner wants them; Wagner solicits them; Wagner buys them with his Wagner-Costigan bill.

The state right of Pennsylvania was and is to pass its state civil rights bill, to wipe out all social as well as political differences between whites and blacks—"'Everyone to his taste', as the old woman said when she kissed the cow."

Shall states force their "tastes" upon our little state, with its 950,000 white people and 800,000 negroes?

That is what they attempt when they demand that county sheriffs failing to protect certain classes of criminals shall be tried in federal courts.

That is the opening charge in their campaign when they demand that federal, not state, courts, try accused "lynchers." They define as a lynching a killing done by three men or more.

When Byrnes, Smith, the other Southerners, defending the South against this Northern Democratic measure, had to resort to a filibuster, did Franklin D. Roosevelt, the leader of the national Democratic party, come to their assistance with a word?

Why not? The answer is plain. The negro vote, about 200,000 or more, may turn an election in New York. So it may in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Illinois, Maryland, Delaware, Kentucky, Missouri. Examine the record and you are likely to find Democrats of those states voting or coquetting with the Costigan-Wagner bill. In them are more than a million negro voters, perhaps a million and a half. They have learned to vote the Democratic ticket, and their leaders (they have able leaders—don't forget that) are demanding compensation and they are getting it.

Read the article from "Time."

The national "Democratic" party no longer defends the South on the "Southern" question.

The national Democratic party is no longer the national "white man's party."

The South can, of course, hope for nothing from the national Republican party, even if an exceptional Republican like Borah is a state rights man.

The time has come when the South has got to stand up and fight again for the safety of its civilization.

If the South cannot bring Mr. Roosevelt and his party to re-affirm the loyalty of Cleveland and Thurman to the South, it had better form its own national Democratic party, cutting loose from the people who would destroy state rights.

Remember this: we Southerners separate the races in industry—in the cotton mills. Think you that Northern Democrats seeking Northern negro votes will not try to abolish the separation? If by amending the constitution to enlarge the president's control of interstate commerce, they can abolish this separation. They dare not offer an amendment that would protect the white South in race relations.

The News and Courier dislikes to discuss this matter. We wish that we could get away from the "race question" forever. Forty-five years this writer has wearied of it and been disgusted with it. We Southerners cannot forget it. "It is a condition, not a theory, that confronts us."

You know the "condition" in South Carolina. You know what an election would be if 200,000 negroes were voting in it and you know what would happen if the federal government protected negroes seeking to work in cotton mills and to live in the cotton mill villages.

If and when the choice shall be between the national Democratic party and a white man's party The News and Courier will choose the white man's party though it cost every dollar sent from the treasury in Washington to South Carolina.

Read the article from the magazine "Time." It is one of the most reputable and representative of weeklies of national circulation.

Zebulon, N. C. Record
August 9, 1935

THE FRANKLIN COUNTY LYNCHING

For the violent and illegal act of less than a dozen men Franklin county as a whole is suffering the criticism and disgrace brought on it by lynching a murderer. Quick justice, saving expense to the county in a trial, and other reasons to justify the act of the mob, do not in anywise remove the crime of mob murder. No matter how guilty the negro was, so long as we have laws and courts to mete out justice, so long lynching remains a crime against the state and a sin before God.

In the early years of the West when there were no courts or established laws to regulate human conduct and deeds, then the will of the majority was law and justifiable if carried out seriously to punish and protect. There may be provocation, but no justification for any body of citizens to take the law in their own hands, especially when we are told that the object of their wrath was probably insane when he committed his crime.

Years ago a lynching of a man occurred near Zebulon. No one was convicted, but for years the shadow hung over the community. We know men who took a deep interest in church and civic affairs up to that time, and who were believed to have been members of the mob, who lost interest in the things of law and order. Seed have been sown by this act of a few men that will produce harvests not only in Franklin county, but every other place where it is known that the law has been pulled down and trampled under foot of men.

Miami, Fla., News
August 16, 1935

Proving the Need

At Abbeville, S. C., 11 negroes were charged with assaulting and attempting to kill a white man. The sheriff heard that a mob was on the way to take justice into its own hands. He might have waited until it appeared, then delivered the prisoners on the familiar plea that he was powerless to resist. Instead, he called on the governor for a company of national guard troops. The executive quickly responded. When the mob arrived and saw the soldiers, it "listened to reason," dispersed. There was no marching through those lines while troops armed with machine guns looked the other way.

South Carolina, in this instance, gave some evidence that it is able to handle its own lynching problem. That is true of none of the states, however, in which lynchings commonly occur. In three states during the last few days there have been as many mob murders. North Carolina had one, California another—a white man in the latter case— suggesting that the evil is neither racial nor sectional. The third occurred in Mississippi, which has now accounted for six of the 11 lynchings so far this year. That state holds the record, incidentally, for the number of such crimes since 1882. It is significant that there never has been a local conviction of a lyncher there. Louisiana's Long boasted that his state could take care of its lynchers without federal assistance; two lynchings in Louisiana this year are the answer to that.

In 1932, when a federal anti-lynching law seemed likely to be enacted, lynchings stopped. In April and May of this year the threat of a similar measure was equally effective. A few Southern senators, promising to kill the bill by filibuster, once more discouraged the legislation. What have they to say now of the series of lynchings since?

Greensboro, N. C. Patriot
August 19, 1935

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE HOAXED BY 'LYNCHING MOB' WIRE

Called out by the governor's office to prevent the lynching of a negro near Epsom, on the Franklin-Vance line, Vance county officers, on Thursday found the scene of the asserted mob violence as quiet a hamlet as anyone could find in this state or elsewhere.

They are diligently trying to ascertain the identity of the hoaxer who sent a telegram urgently requesting assistance to Governor Ehringhaus, with the name of Dan T. Dickie, reputable Epsom merchant, falsely signed to the message. The hoax message was delivered to the chief executive's office Wednesday morning.

Roanoke Rapids, N. C. Herald
August 15. 1935

No chance was taken of a repetition of the Franklin county lynching of a few weeks ago in two cases in which Governor Ehringhaus called out the State Highway Patrol to accompany criminals to State's Prison last Thursday and Friday for safe keeping, after they had committed atrocious crimes. George France, alias Jake Johnson, negro, arrested in West Virginia, was brought to the State line by Sheriff Sheffield and there met by about 20 patrolmen who accompanied them to Raleigh. France, or Johnson, is charged with criminally assaulting and robbing a 65-year-old woman in Rockingham county last winter. Ross Cline, trusty who escaped from the Alexander county prison camp, was brought to State's Prison after he had, it is charged, attacked criminally two women in Alexander county, one 14 years old, after his escape. Patrolmen also accompanied Sheriff Len Mays to Raleigh with the escaped convct. It is reported that feeling was running high in both Rockingham and Alexander and that infuriated mobs sought for Cline for several hours. Goven Ward, negro, was lynched some two weeks ago by an unidentified mob after he had cut off the head of a respected farmer with an axe.

Lynch Law Misnomer; No Law in Lynching

To the Editor of The Journal:

The words "lynch law" are a glaring misnomer, and greatly misleading. Blackstone defines law as a rule of action. The action of a train wrecking mob consists of a coil of rope, a jug of whisky and torches to light up the scene. Why not use the expression "train wrecking law" or stealing law? In short, why not hyphenate any crime by affixing the word "law" thereby legalizing any crime, and call any crime some kind of law so as to legalize any crime, if committed by a mob, and thus make crimes a kind of "vox populi, vox dei," proceeding, instead of "vox diabolo?"

Lynchers attempt to justify their deeds by saying the courts of law will not punish criminals, especially criminals having wealth or influence. When by violence lynchers deprive the "lynchee" of his right to a fair trial by law and by a jury are committing a far more heinous crime than the lynchee is alleged to have committeed, however, great his crime may be, innocent or guilty. When lynchers do this, they are making war upon the United States of America, just as much as the state of South Carolina did when she fired her cannon at "Old Glory."

When the courthouse was burned down in Tennessee, we realized what an enraged whisky soaked mobocracy can and will do by way of showing their respect for lynch law. Lynching used to be done only to perpetrators of a certain crime, but now lynchers lynch anyone whom they do not like. The possibility of getting the wrong man is also a serious feature. The legal maxim says," better that ninety-nine guilty men should escape, then one innocent man should be punished." Further, lynching develops a cruelty in the hearts of men that outcrops in an increasing amount of crime. That is appalling. It kills the national murderers and criminals. Already visible signs of great moral degeneracy are observed everywhere. Mobs and whisky are by no means calculated to improve moral conditions. Judas Iscariot charged thirty pieces of silver for betraying the Master. A whiskeyite pays more than that for the privilege of betraying Him.

—P. A FONTAINE.

Kernersville, N. C.,
Aug. 19. 1935.

Jackson, Miss., News
August 19, 1935

Missionary Unit Protests State's Lynching Record

Women attending the study group of the Woman's Missionary Societies of the Jackson District, meeting recently at Galloway Memorial church, protested lynchings, and voted that a telegram be sent to authorities voicing this protest.

Terming lynchings "barbarious and unChristian," they endorsed the speech of Mrs. Eurie M. Weston, who deplored the record of Mississippi in such cases.

The group included study leaders, presidents and other members. Mrs. F. C. Hayden of Vaughan, Mrs. I. H. Sells and Mrs. W. H. Parman of Jackson, who attended the training class taught by Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb at Biloxi in July, gave the program.

Tuscaloosa, Ala., News
October 3, 1935

LYNCHING MULTIPLIES CRIME

A SOUTH GEORGIA mob lynches a negro for pointing a revolver at an officer, thus where there was a single non-capital felony chargable against one law breaker, there eventuates a capital felony, involving an uncounted number of persons.

The circumstances are exceedingly unfortunate, constituting another evidence of the widespread disrespect for law that is proving so demoralizing in many quarters. In all such cases there are two victims of mob violence—the person lynched and the law that is designed for the protection of society and which must be upheld if society is to enjoy the protection that the law affords.

The very men who join in a lynching look to the law for their own protection, both in person and in property, and should realize that when they make such an assault upon the law they are weakening the very structure that has been erected for their own defense.

Multiplying crimes never has and never will help to create a happier social condition and this is so obvious that it should be apparent to all.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions.

WHITE Press, Southern

4955

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
JUN 17 1935

LYNCHING AND INNOCENCE.

It is no province of laymen to sit in judgment on the decisions of the supreme court as they relate to the law, the law being what the supreme court says it is. And, in the light of the heretofore declared law on the subject, the justness of the decision, overturning the directed verdict in the case of Mary Green v. Greenville couty and requiring a new trial at which the issue may be submitted to a jury, is not to be questioned; it is not the important issue, except perhaps to Mary Green, herself, widow of George Green, unoffending negro who was killed in his house by a Greenville mob on the night of November 16, 1933.

But it is important that no narrow definition of what constitutes a lynching within the meaning of the state statute penalizing a county for the breakdown of orderly legal processes shall be permanently adopted. The purpose of the statute, allowing the estate of a mob victim to recover $2,000 damages from the county, is to bring home to the law-abiding citizens of the county their responsibility for the maintenance of law and order in all cases of mob violence, thereby tending to discourage any resort to mob law, not merely in certain cases.

In the instance of the slaying of George Green there is some doubt under the definitions of lynching adopted whether Green was accused of crime and whether therefore he was "lynched" or merely murdered by the robed and hooded mob. The testimony was, as the supreme court points out, susceptible of two inferences, "(1) was George Green killed by a mob by reason of his having been charged with or suspected of some crime?, (2) was he killed (by a mob) on account of the bitter feeling aroused against him growing out of his refusal to vacate the premises occupied by him." If there was any accusation of crime then it was a lynching, but if not then simply murder and no penalty upon the county.

The distinction is of course a distinction without a difference to the mob victim; in either case he is dead and if the statute is to serve its purpose of discouraging resort to mob violence no distinction should be made. It is ironic if nothing worse to penalize a county for the lynching of a person accused of murder, for example,—as Green, the victim in Greenville, was not—and to refuse damages for the lynching of a labor organizer—which Green was not—accused of nothing more heinous than a belief in the federal and state constitutions. And there is always county responsibility in any case of mob violence, whether there be some supposed law violation involved or not. The victim may be innocent, the county or state never. The slaying of Green was not the first instance of resort to mob law in Greenville county, not the first instance of the attempt by mobs to make their own law and punish for it in Greenville. And Green, it seems likely, would never have been slain—whether it be lynching or murder—if Greenville county had not acquiesced in these preceding demonstrations of the mob spirit—aimed at hotel bell boys accused of selling liquor and at labor organizers accused of being communists.

But as the law now stands it isn't a lynching unless some crime is charged against the victim, lynching being, as the court declared in the case of Kirkland v. Allendale county, "merely a descriptive phrase which 'is universally understood to signify the illegal infliction of punishment by a combination of persons for an alleged crime.'"

And this definition, which is neither new, nor even a South Carolina invention, though adequate enough for some purposes falls short of essential justice if the intent and purpose of the state constitution, Article VI, Section 6, are to be carried out, the important thing being not the $2,000 in exemplary damages but the maintenance of law and order. For it ignores what every student of mobs and their ways knows—mobs are none too careful in their selection of victims and are as likely as not to pick a perfectly innocent person, accused of no crime greater than having some idea or belief differing from the ideas or beliefs of the mob. It penalizes a good reputation.

Perhaps the trouble is with the constitution which itself limits the recovery of damages merely to those cases "of lynching where death ensues" when it should have made provision for the penalty in all cases of mob violence. If so the constitution should be amended to remedy the oversight. There is, incidentally, another curious result of phraseology in that Article VI, Section 6; it provides for the ouster of officers who through "negligence, permission or connivance" permit the lynching of "any prisoner lawfully in the charge, custody or control of any officer," which seems to indicate that an officer would not be liable to lose his office for conniving even at the lynching of a person illegally or unlawfully taken into charge, custody or control. There can be no temporizing with mobs if the states are to maintain jurisdiction. Either South Carolina will, without drawing its definitions too finely, do what it may to prevent mob violence and to punish mob members or it will eventually see the federal government step in to attempt to do what South Carolina ought to have been able to do better.

negro women at tea, with one on each side of her, and has declared with reference to the matter that: "There will be no social distinction while I am in the White House." We have seen from time to time the names of negro women of prominence that Mrs. Roosevelt has entertained at tea at the same time that she was entertaining white women at tea. If the negroes are good enough for social equality they are good enough to protect from mob murder.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
July 12, 1935

What Mob?

The Daily's news staff has come into contact with so many "phantom mobs" created in the minds of prejudiced or possibly just plain nervous eastern reporters that perhaps it should come as no surprise to learn from Tuesday's edition of The Birmingham Post that Sheriff Street Sandlin and a "squad of deputies" rescued a murder suspect from a potential "lynching party" near Hartselle.

Yet it does come as something of a shock to read in a reputable Southern newspaper such rubbish, such distortion of facts, such haphazard handling of the truth!

There was no mob at Hartselle nor near Hartselle. A crowd of curious persons did gather when news reached them of the discovery of the body of a woman on a creek bank. Certainly, however, by no stretch of the imagination could the gathering of these citizens (some of whom no doubt came to offer their aid to the officers and others perhaps curious) be called a "mob."

Our good friend, Sheriff Street Sandlin, is placed in an awkward position by the publicity. The Post pictures him as a dashing hero, arriving on the scene with a squad of deputies just in the nick of time to rescue the defendant from a threatening throng.

As a matter of record Sheriff Sandlin wasn't even present at the time, being engaged elsewhere in the county. The defendant was detained by Chief of Police Les Williams and later ordered arrested by Coroner Brown, who subsequently swore out a warrant charging murder.

Morgan county is just a rural county situated some miles from Birmingham and perhaps The Post will not be interested in whether or not our feelings are hurt, but we publish this protest nevertheless.

Greensboro, N. C., News
July 21, 1935

MORE EVIDENCE.

Attribute it to mid-summer madness, influence of the dog star or whatever you may, the south has been treated to three exhibitions of mobbery within the past fortnight.

Two of the lynchings occurred in Mississippi, which has had a virtual corner on rope and faggot parties for the past year, and the third was reported Friday from Florida. In all three instances the victims, alleged attackers, were taken from officers. A single deputy sheriff, obviously cognizant of the danger, had the Mississippi pair in tow, avowedly trying to spirit them to a place of safety, when a mob of 35 —so he says—overtook him. In the Florida atrocity, a mob estimated at 100 descended upon the accused negro and his escort of six deputies.

In the Mississippi exhibit, the folly of trusting two prisoners, suspected of such a crime as they were, to a single officer is patent. On the surface, it invited, if it did not cooperate for, mob action. In Florida, six deputies should have been capable of causing considerable trouble for a mob if they had been so inclined. The point to this whole piece, however, is that there was, as reported, no manifestation of resistance. Nor was there recognition, as if anybody expected it, of a single mobster. Two weeks have glided by since the Mississippi outburst and days are slipping since the Florida repetition; yet nothing whatever has been done to retrieve law and justice which were lynched along with the trio of negroes. Much vaunted state's rights, sovereignty which invariably sweeps southern congressmen to ethereal heights, have not come to anybody's rescue or protection.

All of which, of course, shows the absolute needlessness for any such federal anti-lynching measure as is now accumulating the dust of a Washington pigeon-hole.

Orlando, Fla., Sentinel
July 21, 1935

The Lauderdale Lynching

THOSE OFFICERS WHO surrendered the Ft. Lauderdale negro to a crowd of lynchers Friday evidently did not have the courage to defend their prisoner.

Criminal assault has been considered an offense punishable by lynching in the south, but an attack with only penknife wounds, hardly calls for such drastic action.

When an officer takes charge of a prisoner, he is in duty bound to give him protection, be he guilty or innocent. The law says he is to have a fair and impartial trial.

If a mob knows an officer means to hold his prisoner, it will seldom go to the extreme of having men killed, that a prisoner may be lynched.

Attorneys are partly responsible for mobs taking the law into their own hands. Delays of court trials and tricks pulled by smart lawyers, in all too many cases permit guilty persons to escape punishment.

If the courts would speed up justice, permitting no loop holes thru which culprits might slip, lynchings would diminish.

The affair at Ft. Lauderdale will remain a blot against the good name of Florida. For the investigation, if there is one, will, as they always have been, be a mere sham.

Roselyn, Va.
Chronicle
July 5. 1935

SPOOFING THE NEGRO—JUSTICE MORE IMPORTANT TO NEGRO THAN SOCIAL EQUALITY

DEAR to every negro heart is the bill in Congress against lynching, dearer to him than all pending legislation. Eminient lawyers in and out of Congress have pronounced the bill constitutional. It is aimel ot mob murder which always goes unpunished in the South if a negro, however innocent, is the victim. Leaders of the Senate and House who have voted for all of Mr. Roosevelt's unconstitutional socialist legislation, his unconstitutional N. R. A. and unconstitutional Agricultural Adjustment Act, all violative of the rights of the states, ought not to be heard in raising objections to the Anti-Lynching bill on the ground that it violates state rights, state rights to see the mob murder shall not be punished, if a negro is the victim. However innocent.

Negroes have been lynched in the South for such trivial things as walking on the side of a bridge used by white people, a negro boy tearing the dress of a white girl playmate, speaking impudently to a white woman, cursing a white man who cursed him, for claiming to be white, for making a threat, for simple assault on white men, for claiming the right to vote. Not one sixth of the negroes lynched were ever accused of rape. That is shown by a 500 page book published by the University of North Carolina Press. In 1892 there were 255 persons lynched of which number 100 were white. The 155 negroes lynched were lynched in the South. Between 1889 and 1930 there were 3,724 lynchings in the United States, and 2,980 were negroes. Of the 21 persons lynched in the South in 1930 sixteen had never been arrested for any offense and were murdered by mobs without proper evidence of identity, or that a rape had been committed.

The negroes of the South commit few serious crimes. If you do not believe this statement read the "Reminiscences" of Senator John B. Gordon of Georgia who was a Major General in the Confederate army, and the "Recollections of a Lifetime," by John Goode who was President of the last constitutional convention in Virginia.

In his speech "The New South," there came from the lips of gold of Henry W. Grady these words:

"The relation of the Southern people with the negro are close and cordial. We remember with what fidelity, for four years, he guarded our defenseless women and children, whose husbands and fathers were away fighting against his freedom. To his eternal credit be it said that whenever he struck a blow from his own liberty he fought in open battle, and when he at last raised his black and humble hands that the shackles might be struck off, those hands were innocent of wrong against his helpless charges, and worthy to be taken in loving grasp by every man who honors loyalty and devotion. Ruffians have maltreated him and rascals have misled him, but the South with the North protests against injustice to this simple and sincere people."

Time and again during this session of Congress Mr. Rooseveit could have put thru the Anti-Lynching bill but for political reasons he has done nothing. He ought to know that it is more important to the negroes of this country than entertaining members of their race at luncheons and teas at the White House. When President Theodore Roosevelt was charged with eating lunch with Booker T. Washington it was stated at once that Booker Washington was asked if he had eaten lunch to which he replied that he had eaten lunch with the Southern statesmen and newspapers went wild about the incident, but not a word comes from any Southern Senator or Member of the House when they know that it is a common practice for President Franklin D. Roosevelt to entertain negro men and negro women at luncheon where they mingle with the white guests, and that Mrs. Roosevelt has repeatedly entertained

White Press, Southern.

Lynchings-1935

Discussions.

4956

St. Petersburg, Fla., Times
January 8, 1935

THE LYNCHING PROBLEM

FLORIDA WILL TAKE LITTLE PRIDE in the fact that she ranks high among the eight states in which lynchings occurred last year. Only Mississippi, with a record of six lives exacted by mob violence, exceeded Florida, and only Louisiana equalled this state's unhappy mark of two lynchings.

Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Texas each ended the year charged with one mob killing, bringing to 15 the total number of persons lawlessly executed in 1934. All of the victims were negroes, and their offenses ranged from murder and rape to talking disrespectfully and stealing turpentine, according to statistics compiled by Tuskegee Normal and Industrial institute in Alabama.

But these figures do not in themselves tell the complete story, for had not the law intervened promptly and effectively, the number of lynchings would have been much larger. In more than half a hundred instances the timely intervention of armed legal forces thwarted the murderous intentions of blood-crazed mobs. Seven of these 51 occurrences took place in northern and western states, and 44 in the south. In five attempted lynchings, armed force was used to repel mob violence, and in the 46 others tragedies were averted by spiriting the prisoners away or augmenting the number of guards to such an extent that threatened assaults upon jails and courthouses were prevented.

Black as the picture is, there is some consolation, at least, in the fact that 1934 recorded 13 fewer lynchings than did 1933. This decrease, however, it is too painfully evident, is due rather to greater alertness and efficiency upon the part of peace officers in meeting the emergencies created by attempted lynchings, than to any noticeable decline in the spirit of mob violence.

Seventy-four men and women, both white and black, were saved from ghastly deaths by rope, rifle and fire, only because armed forces of the law were superior in strength to wild-eyed mobs. In each instance, the intent to kill existed despite the fact that the bloody purpose was not carried into execution. This is not a heartening circumstance to the student who searches for signs of civilized development and progress in the human race.

And this brings us around to the recent mob spirit displayed in Shelbyville, Tenn., when, as the Memphis Press-Scimitar says in a splendid editorial, the mob was more logical than most mobs.

"They did not burn the prisoner; they burned the courthouse," the Tennessee paper comments, and continues:

"A community where a mob rules has no need of a court house. What need has a mob for trial, the judge, the jury, the careful search for truth and justice which the courthouse stands for—the law?

"The young men of Shelbyville were not slain by the soldiers, who did their manly duty of upholding the law. They were slain by the mob, which forced the soldiers to resistance to lawlessness. If they were spectators, they were murdered; if they were part of the mob, they committed suicide."

The Shelbyville incident, which cost three lives, has been a particularly illuminating demonstration of the objects, the methods and the sort of people who are responsible for mob violence.

The attack on the courthouse, in an effort to lynch a negro prisoner, was utterly needless. The prisoner was already on trial. There was every prospect that he would be legally condemned to die. There had been no miscarriage of justice, no hesitation on the part of the authorities in proceeding against him.

The mob sought to lynch him out of a mere lust for revenge and butchery—because it was drunk, or hysterical, or purely wanton.

There are persons who try to condone lynching, on the grounds that it is prompted by the delays and uncertainties of the law; by the necessity of protecting womanhood; by self-preservation on the part of southern whites, and other high-sounding reasons.

Those who have studied, or have witnessed, lynchings, know that none of these high-sounding reasons is responsible.

Mobs are made up of the dregs of the community where the lynching occurs. They are normally led by men who have little interest in the purity of womanhood or the preservation of race. They are inflamed by liberal supplies of liquor and foul talk, until hysteria takes control and mob psychology runs unchecked.

Shelbyville, Tenn. Times
January 10, 1935

The Only Salvation for Mobs

By a Rural Teacher

There is very little that can be said of the Shelbyville mob which has not already been said by people all over the world. Practically every person knows of our sorrow and shame. Yes, shameful is the way we should all feel, for we are now considered by the people of this great progressive country as a "back-woods, illiterate people," who stop at nothing short of violence to appease our passions.

I say "we" and "our" for it is every citizen who has been judged. The mass has been cast with the few and all have gone through the same mold of the public's machine and have come out in the same form—lawbreakers.

What are we to do about it? Are we to sit by and hold our hands saying there is nothing we could have done to prevent it and 50 years from now witness another outbreak of lawlessness? No! There is something that could have been done many, many years ago which would have held in check on December 19, 1934, that seething mass of crazed people who so ruthlessly destroyed our beautiful courthouse, the pride of our county. That wasn't done 50 years ago but it must be done now in Bedford county to prevent a repetition of this crime. We cannot right the wrong already committed, but we can make preparations now to teach the right from wrong in our young boys who will make the citizens of tomorrow. Shall they grow up to be lawless? May God forbid!

There is only one way in which we can manage this. It must come through a more perfect educational program. We can raise funds for a

Bedford County

50,000 courthouse, but can we raise funds to erect a new High School in which to build citizenship? That is not the question rather, can we afford NOT to do that? The financial standing of Bedford county enables us to do both.

Can we risk the chance of youth impoverished by our negligence? Can we risk the scathing criticism of the public over a catastrophe more terrible than anything the mob did—the collapse of a school building with people? This thing happened in England this year and if our present high school is carefully surveyed it will be found to have leaning walls, rooms which shake when crowds and a building justly condemned. Are we to continue daily exposing our children to this?

GREENSBORO, N. C.
NEWS
JUL 21 1935

While the conditions of the Elementary Schools of the city are hardly as dangerous, they are indeed too crowded to give any child justice. There can be nothing but group instruction which reaches only the child eager to learn.

These conditions exist in the city but when the rural schools are looked into they are in such a terrible state that the city children seem unduly favored. If you have never visited a rural school you can not appreciate those of the city.

Imagine children having to sit from 6 to 8 hours each day in a one room school which is very unattractive, (being bare walls save a few childish attempts at improvements with boxes and old tables); an old stove in the middle of the floor, which smokes; recitation benches on which the children's parents have carved their names when they were pupils at the same school; nothing new; nothing to cause a disinterested boy to even want to attend school; no library; no sandtable, in fact, nothing that the teacher doesn't buy or some person donate. The number in school range from 25 to 50 children, the first to eighth grades inclusive, with 20 to 40 classes a day ranging from 5 to 15 minutes in duration with as many as three classes in progress at once. There is no time to waste and not much time for the one teacher, who is usually a young inexperienced girl, to devote her precious time to the backward boy. As a result he drags along for a few years, in school one day and out the next, making one grade about every two years. He gets behind; feels out of place with the smaller children and at last stops, having as much "education" as his father which satisfies the family completely.

These are the criminals and lawbreakers of our county and country. Statistics show that 97% of the prisoners in the State Penitentiary have never finished the 7th grade, 9% being illiterate against 3% graduates from college. Isn't that proof enough that the only sane course to follow by which we may combat the crime wave is through education and early child training.

Many of the young criminals come from homes overcrowded and poverty-stricken and much of their time is spent in the company of bad associates. Clarence Darrow, America's greatest criminal lawyer has said, "The two greatest causes of crime are ignorance and poverty." Only through the schools can this child learn good social habits, cooperation and obedience to laws. There should be classes also for the dull child where special types of training can be devised to prepare him for a better social order.

For years teachers have taught for salaries of $50 to $70 a month, eight months in a year in rural districts. The other four months must be spent attending summer school preparing for another term. This takes more than could possibly be saved, as the teacher is expected always to be a community leader, dress neatly, read good books, travel some and keep fit in other ways which require money. What keeps them teaching when they could get work in a factory for more money a month and have a job for 12 months with no responsibility of public trust placed in them? The answer is, one class remains for the simple love of the profession. To this class, teaching is their very life. There is something about children which gets a hold on their heartstrings and makes them want to cry when they see a boy or girl fail, happy over their joys and weeping over their yielding to temptations.

The other class is much more numerous. They are teaching either to gain experience or using the profession as a stepping stone to a better job.

Why can we as a nation spend $300 a year to keep a man in the penitentiary and only $100 for a child in school? Why can we afford to spend 75c for trailing criminals to every $1.00 for children's education? Why can we have a man to supervise roads and no truant officer? Can we afford to stand in 44th place in the 48 states in the expenditure per child in average daily attendance? Isn't Tennessee among the richest of the states in Natural Resources?

Roy D. Boles, principal of Loddy High School of Chattanooga says, "Ninety-five per cent of the red cedar of the U. S. lies within four counties of Tennessee. Of the 63 known varieties of mineral wealth 57 are found within the state. The Tennessee River and its tributaries are said to have about 1-5 of the water power of the U. S. By comparison, Tennessee is richer in tangible wealth of its bordering states except Virginia and North Carolina, and ranks in 23rd place of other states." By this we can see that Tennessee has the means for more funds.

You might ask yourself, "Well, what can I do about all this?" There is much that you can do. It has been proven that where more people want better schools, better schools were obtained. Can't we demand better schools?

Our present county school budget is adopted by the County Court, some members of which think teachers draw a "pension" which should be cut to $25 a month, and then in turn expect more from the teachers toward their children than any one else. We should pay more attention to our selection of the members of the County Court and select men whom we know have high educational aspirations and who realize that when reductions are made that schools should not be the first "to fall under the axe."

Why should any parent not want their child to have better advantages than they had themselves? They can't be satisfied with an ox-cart for means of conveyance, but still a few are satisfied with schools just as much out of date. For these few the mass must see that the children go to school and hold the torch by which the others travel.

The Educators of Tennessee are trying to formulate a new method of appropriations of funds and bring about a great change in the school system. Gov. McAlister appointed a commission to study the needs of our schools and they have suggested many plans which will be made known to all Tennesseans. It will certainly be befitting for Bedford countians to heartily endorse these measures and ask our legislators to have a part in their adoption.

From the ashes of our courthouse will rise a new building and with it may our citizenship rise to have more respect for law and order. This catastrophe can become a means by which many blessings can be obtained if we take advantage as the needs present themselves and build a citizenship of moral, lawloving people of whom Bedford county can proudly say "He is One of Our Own." The schools need your support, the churches need your support, your children need it—will you give it?

Lynching Can Be Stopped

In Alabama the other day a frenzied mob clamored for the lives of three men, believed to be guilty of a robbery and murder at a filling station in the little Florida town of Laurel Hill. Members of the mob were convinced that they had sufficient evidence against the men to make no mistake in requiring their lives in return for those they were supposed to have taken. The law was too slow for these aroused citizens. They wanted to take justice and vengeance in their own hands.

By a combination of good luck and the integrity of certain peace officers the men were spirited away from the place where the mob milled about, crying for blood. Once safe in Montgomery the suspects were able to establish their absolute innocence and lack of connection with the Laurel Hill crime. Two ex-convicts, out on parole, confessed soon after the robbery and murder, and the case was cleared up. The men and women of the Alabama community had barely missed putting three innocent human beings to death in the most hideous and degrading fashion.

Such outbursts of lynch fever can be curbed if the responsible authorities want to curb them. Senator Costigan of Colorado recently pointed out that the threat of a punitive Federal law on lynching during the last session of Congress had a marked effect on the lynch record of the Nation. "For the five and one-half months in which the Congress was in session," he declares, "lynchings virtually ceased in this country. Then promptly following the adjournment of Congress, which did not enact the considered legislation, the stream of lawlessness again began to flow at the rate of approximately one lynching a week, until the whole country was saturated with its revolting recitals."

So much for the argument of the "inevitability" of lynching in some American communities. And so much, in the case of the men sought by the frantic Alabama mob, for the argument that lynching of suspects is ever justified.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

MORE EVIDENCE.

Attribute it to mid-summer madness, influence of the dog star or whatever you may, the south has been treated to three exhibitions of mobbery within the past fortnight.

Two of the lynchings occurred in Mississippi, which has had a virtual corner on rope and faggot parties for the past year, and the third was reported Friday from Florida. In all three instances the victims, alleged attackers, were taken from officers. A single deputy sheriff, obviously cognizant of the danger, had the Mississippi pair in tow, avowedly trying to spirit them to a place of safety, when a mob of 35 —so he says—overtook him. In the Florida atrocity, a mob estimated at 100 descended upon the accused negro and his escort of six deputies.

In the Mississippi exhibit, the folly of trusting two prisoners, suspected of such a crime as they were, to a single officer is patent. On the surface, it invited, if it did not cooperate for, mob action. In Florida, six deputies should have been capable of causing considerable trouble for a mob if they had been so inclined. The point to this whole piece, however, is that there was, as reported, no manifestation of resistance. Nor was there recognition, as if anybody expected it, of a single mobster. Two weeks have glided by since the Mississippi outburst and days are slipping since the Florida repetition; yet nothing whatever has been done to retrieve law and justice which were lynched along with the trio of negroes. Much vaunted state's rights, sovereignty which invariably sweeps southern congressmen to ethereal heights, have not come to anybody's rescue or protection.

All of which, of course, shows the absolute needlessness for any such federal anti-lynching measure as is now accumulating the dust of a Washington pigeon-hole.

Lynchings-1935
Discussions

White Press, Southern.

4957

Chattanooga, Tenn. News
April 5, 1935

Lynching Must Stop

FOR quite a number of years a large section of Southern leadership has been viewing with increasing concern the tragedy of lynching in these Southern States. A number of earnest efforts have been made to arouse sober Southern concern about this evil, and to cause the States themselves to instrument in an effective fashion the machinery both for preventing mob violence, and when it occurs, for insuring the punishment of those guilty of this heinous crime against an ordered society.

Progress along these lines, however, remains fearfully slow and disappointing. Commissions study the background of the situation, remedial State statutes are suggested and urged, but the inertia of legislative indifference all too often prevents anything being done. Thus year after year the South has repetitions of lynching terrors. There was the outbreak at Sherman, Texas, which ended with men burned to death and courthouse destroyed. Ocilla, Carnersville and Ailey, in Georgia, added to the shameful record. A lynch-bent mob at Shelbyville, Tenn., destroyed a courthouse. A gruesome scene at Marianna, Fla., lingers in the memory as an exhibition of the sadistic depths to which bloodthirsty mobs will sink.

With such a record, and with the ardiness of successful implementation of local legal machinery for its correction, it is little wonder that for some years important groups all over the nation have been urging Federal anti-lynching legislation. In the present Congress, Senator Wagner and Representative Costigan, both staunch Democrats of excellent record, have sponsored a bill which would permit the Federal Government, when local government does not act, to take a hand in the apprehension of the wreakers of lynch law.

The South has been opposed traditionally to Federal interposition in any type of racial relationship. The historical background behind this feeling makes it altogether understandable. Southern suspicion of Federal legislation is a legacy of the age of hate succeeding the Civil War. Its direct progenitors were the clamant Radicals of Reconstruction. These men's experience had been one of inflammatory agitation; their war-cries were of destruction. They were sophomoric in any technique of evolutionary social readjustment, had no conception of the need for cushioning the dislocations of scoial change.

At any event, they assumed that, by legislation passed in Washington, millions of ignorant freedmen could be made the rulers of the great white majority of the Southern States. Due to them, the Fifteenth Amendment was added to the Federal Constitution, the so-called civil rights amendment, and efforts were made by the Congress to implement it so as to set up, not a workable relation in the post-Appamattox South, but a hierarchy of carpetbag scalawag control. When such measures were brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, they were not sustained. In the 'Nineties similar efforts were made, largely under the leadership of Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts. These were bitterly resented by the Southern leadership and were defeated by filibuster.

These particular animosities, however, have happily disappeared. No longer is the North represented in the Congress by a group of hate-filled Radicals anxious to put the bottom rail on top. The North is now represented in the Congress by members who are the grandsons and often great-grandsons of the generation which was represented by the Bloody Shirt of the Thaddeus Stevens-Charles Sumner-Zach Chandler-Ben Wade group. Certainly no charge of animus or bitterness against the South can be brought against either Senator Wagner or Representative Costigan. The Federal anti-lynching machinery they have brought forward has no such animosity back of it as the Lodge "force bills."

Changing too is the attitude of a large section of the South, as is shown by the offering of many leading Southern newspapers. For example, the Macon Telegraph, one of the most forceful journals of the Cotton South, in a recent discussion of the Wagner-Costigan bill, indicated that in its opinion "public sentiment in the South has about crystalized into the feeling that only by Federal intervention can we ever hope to wipe out lynching." To this it added:

There will be a certain amount of opposition to this bill here in the South, but it is a fair question to ask: What else are we to do? Lynching goes on year after year and punishment for the crime is practically unknown. One of the most revolting of these crimes was the latest to gain general attention, when a Florida mob, near Marianna, after bringing the victim from an Alabama jail, where he had been taken for safe-keeping, sent out invitations in the morning to attend the lynching, which resolved itself into slow torture, with gruesome detail hardly fit to be printed.

Members of that mob were well known to the officers of the law who, indeed, might have prevented the lynching in the first place if they had cared to do so, and yet no one was ever punished, as no one in that State has ever been punished for such a crime, although, as the women of the State themselves point out, there have been thirty lynchings.

This brutality simply cannot go on. The States have had ample opportunity through the years to do something to prevent this barbaric crime. The time has come when something must be done and the Federal anti-lynching bill appears to be the answer.

There is considerable merit to the statement of our Macon contemporary. Anyone studying the lynching record will agree that "this brutality simply cannot go on." We ourselves have hoped for the instrumentation by the States themselves of legal machinery to put an end to the tragedy of lynching. But if the States themselves will not do it, and the Federal Government can fill this vacuum of efficient law enforcement, it would seem to us that there is no recourse but for a Federal agency to do so.

It is all important, of course, that the Federal legislation to be enacted will be of a character which can be expected to work. There would be no use whatever merely putting another unenforcible law upon the statute books. But if the States themselves will not act, and intelligent and effective Federal legislation can be provided, the evils involved are certainly grave enough to warrant the introduction of the Federal corrective.

WINTER HAVEN, FLA.
CHIEF
MAY 23 1935

TWO TYPES OF LEADERSHIP— YOU MAY TAKE YOUR CHOICE!

Senator Smith, of South Carolina, staunch advocate of the highly christian(?) practice of lynching, rises to tell this enlightened twentieth century:

"LYNCHING IS NECESSARY TO PROTECT THE SANCTITY OF OUR WOMANHOOD."

Down in Atlanta, metropolis and capital of Georgia, Mrs. Jessie D. Ames, distinguished woman leader, cultured and benevolent, but apparently having a brand of Christianity quite different from that of Senator Smith, says:

"I AM OPPOSED TO SOUTHERN SENATORS USING SOUTHERN WHITE WOMEN AS A DEFENSE FOR LYNCHING."

Take your choice as to the kind of leadership you want to see developed in the South.

BAPTISTS WILL STUDY LYNCHINGS IN SOUTH

5-15-35

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 14.—(AP)—The Southern Baptist convention opening here tomorrow will be asked to approve establishment of a bureau of social research to study the race problem, mob violence in lynchings and labor disputes, unemployment, government in business and moral standards of the church.

Establishment of the bureau will be recommended in a report to be submitted to the convention Friday by Dr. E. McNeil Poteat Jr., Raleigh, N. C., whose report says there is "an amazing confusion of the public mind on liquor, increasing laxity of moral imperatives and the changes in the ideals of the home and its increasing disappearance as a place of discipline and instruction."

Charging alcohol was a factor in 60 per cent of the accidents studied by insurance companies, the social service commission, headed by Dr. Arthur J. Barton, also of North Carolina, will ask the convention to condemn by resolution "liquor traffic in all forms."

The commission also will ask the adoption of a resolution "urging our people to use their influence to defeat ratification of the child labor amendment to the national constitution." Another resolution expressing opposition to war will be adopted.

Bamberg, S. C., Herald
May 23, 1935

Broxton Bridge Lynching Recalled

Columbia Record.

Discussion of the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill in the the United States senate brings to mind to a number of the older citizens of South Carolina several outbursts of the mob spirit which resulted in lynching in this state. Of the lynchings which mar our state's history probably none stands out like the Broxton Bridge case of 1895, which gained notoriety because it was probably the first case of its kind in which a definite and strong effort was made to bring the lynchers to justice.

Those were spirited times, with feelings running high when four white men were put on trial for their lives for the murder of a young negro man and his mother. The negro who was lynched was suspected of a crime no more serious than stealing the altar Bible from a country church.

The same year that the Broxton Bridge case was tried in South Carolina 131 lynchings occurred in the entire United States. While extremely large this was not the largest number of lynchings reported in this country for any one year. In 1892 155 negroes and 100 white men died in this country by the lynching route.

Although many lynchings blot this state's history the crime is not most prevalent in South Carolina. Figures for the years from 1900 to 1929 show that of 14 southern states including Oklahoma and Arkansass, South Carolina was third from the last in the number of lynchings per negro population. In the same period it was seventh from the bottom in the number of lynchings per white population and the same in relation to all population.

The Broxton Bridge case, so called because it was at that locality that the crime was committed, was noteworthy in another respect. It brought fame to G. Duncan Bellinger, father of the present judge of the fifth judicial circuit. He showed uncommon courage in the prosecution of the case in the face of open threats and a prevailing spirit of condonance for the lynchers, a fact which probably helped him to be elected attorney general of South Carolina a few years later.

Incidentally Judge Bellinger, who was only a boy at the time that the case was causing such widespread comment and feeling, has said that he remembers the time vividly because of the tenseness of the atmosphere in his home at the time and of the way his father was worried by the seriousness of the case.

Early in the fall of 1895 St. Michael's church in Barnwell county was broken into and a Bible with one or two pieces of church furniture were stolen. There was no clue to the theft, but several lawless acts had recently been committed in the neighborhood and Isham Kearse, a young negro of a roving disposition with no regular employment, was suspected.

According to the evidence given at the inquest, the night of December 2 four men from Barnwell rode across into Colleton county and getting two Colleton citizens to join them went to the home of Keare's mother, where he was reported to be hiding.

The negro was halted as he attempted to leave the house, his hands securely tied with a rope, which was passed around his neck and then fastened to the back of a buggy occupied by two of the party. The vehicle was started at a rapid pace to Broxton bridge, about two miles away. The unfortunate man was several times jerked off his feet and dragged over the roots and ruts of the country road. Before reaching the bridge two of the men returned to the house for the mother and wife of Kearse, the wife a 17-year-old girl with a five-months-old baby.

The negroes were questioned about the robbery of the church and all denied any knowledge of it. The three were then stripped of their clothing and the men began beating their naked bodies with buggy traces. In justice to the lynchers it should be said that they were all drunk at the time. Several times Kearse begged them to shoot him. Finally he fell unconscious and the women broke away and ran into the woods.

That was Monday night. Two days later the body of Kearse was found where he had fallen under the blows. A hundred yards away in the swamp, lying in water about a foot deep, was the body of his mother. She lay as she had fallen—face downward and arms extended

The younger woman lay for several days in a critical condition. She had told several of her neighbors about the crime the day after it happened but they had apparently been afraid to mention it.

At the inquest the names of the lynchers were brought out. All belonged to a good class of people.

Virtually the entire Walterboro bar where the case against the men was tried, before Circuit Judge James Aldrich, assisted in the defense of the men with Col. Robert Aldrich, of Barnwell, as chief counsel.

One night during the course of the trial the life of W. H. Newbold, state detective, who had worked up the case under the solicitor's direction, was threatened with violence but he showed that he would protect himself with firearms and he was not harmed.

A current newspaper account of the trial declared:

"Both sides have conducted the case with marked ability. The defense has not been strong. No effort was made to prove alibis. There seems to be no doubt in the mind of anyone as to who did the whipping and it is the generally accepted belief that they did not do it with the intention of producing death. At the same time there is a feeling in the air that there will be no conviction. There are hundreds of men in the audience which has been in attendance who would not find a verdict against these four men whatever the evidence is and it is not to be expected that the jury should not have some of that class in its composition."

After having been out about four and a half hours the jury returned with a verdict of acquittal.

And there the case was ended, although the whole thing had repercussions in later political campaigns.

There is an interesting and persistent legend to the effect that all of the principals in the case came to their death by some violent means, but this is probably just one of those stories which has little foundation in fact. It is a fact which is almost impossible to check.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
JUN 2 1935

Tear-Gas For Lynchers

THE Oklahoma Crime Bureau uses tear-gas bombs to rout a mob of non-union demonstraters seeking vengeance for beatings received from striking lead miners.

Local peace officers in those parts of the South where lynching is a popular all-season diversion seem to be passing up something. We hear occasionally of some determined and highly respected sheriff thwarting a mob by oratory and the example of his own sobriety, but such suasions are highly uncertain of effect.

Science gave the professional criminal a fearful weapon in the sub-machine gun, but it made up for that by giving law and order the gas bomb, which is practically useless to many classes of criminals, but still suits well the need of law-enforcers. Bombs are much less effective in the open than within walls, but even at a roadside they can cause a deal of annoyance, and they should be particularly potent against mobs, for mob action depends upon the maintenance of a highly unstable hysteria. A few sneezes and tears, and that's gone.

GREENVILLE, S. C
NEWS
Lynching Dis.
White Southern
JUN 19 1935

THE LYNCHING PENALTY

Discussing the recent Supreme Court decision remanding for a new trial by a jury the judgment for $2,000 against Greenville county for the alleged lynching of George Green, the Columbia Record manifests a sense of dissatisfaction at "too narrow a definition of what constitutes a lynching within the meaning of the statute penalizing a county."

The inference from our contemporary's somewhat elaborate discussion of this case is that it feels the penalty should be made applicable in any instance of "mob violence," regardless of whether or not the condition necessary to bring the act within the legal definition of a "lynching"—that is, the fact that the victim is charged with or accused of some crime—is fulfilled.

We hasten to enter a dissenting opinion. The essential distinction is one between the motive of committing an ordinary crime, directly, and that of attempting to punish a citizen for a crime outside of the established processes of justice. It is true, as our contemporary says, that the victim is just as dead whether lynched or killed by a mob bent upon crime; it is also true that he would be just as dead if shot to death by an individual. The penalty imposed upon the county in the event of a lynching which results in death is apparently based on the idea of punishing the community for what may frequently be a rather broad evidence of community connivance in or approval of an act of punishing a crime, or suspected crime, outside the processes of justice. We cannot agree with our contemporary that "there is always county responsibility in any case of mob violence, whether or not there be some supposed law violation involved or not." A gang of hoodlums may commit a murder for purposes of robbery, or gangster revenge. In such a crime we cannot see any greater "county responsibility" than in the event of a plain murder committed by an individual.

However, we do not believe that this $2,000 penalty upon a county treasury is any effective deterrent to lynchings or gang murders or any other form of mob action. We believe it would be difficult to show where any mob or group bent either upon punishing a crime or committing crime has ever been, or ever will be, caused to hesitate by the reflection that the county treasury would have to pay out a certain sum of money. The effect upon the affairs of the individual components of the mob is too negligible to be a factor. The only effective remedy—beyond the constant effort to cultivate a broader and more earnest respect for law—is to continue to seek in the most vigilant way the apprehension and adequate punishment of the individual perpetrators of all such acts, whether lynchings or ordinary crimes.

Lynchings - 1935
& Discussions.

White Press, Southern.

4958

JOURNAL
Ft. Coombs Miss.
FEB 12 1935

BLOW TO LYNCHING

Such procedure as that displayed in the conduct of the Coyner trial at Cleveland last week will soon deal a death blow to mob violence. The giant negro, guilty of a most atrocious and fiendish crime, was arraigned and tried in an orderly manner, and sentenced to hang.

While several hundred members of the State National Guard had been mobilized and sent to the scene for fear there might be an outbreak among the friends of the butchered couple, and violence done, their presence there proved unnecessary.

Mississippians as a rule are pretty sensible people. Except in rare instances will they take the law into their own hands. And then only when in their judgment it seems there is a tendency to unduly delay justice, or a probability that a fiend like Coyner might escape just punishment.

The behavior of the Delta people at the Coyner trial, which is to be commended, is only one example of how Mississippians act when justice is meted out as it should be, without any fol-de-rol, red-tape, or monkey-business. Laws are made to punish criminals, and when enforced as they should be, as in this instance, lynching will pass out of the picture.

Until, however, we are convinced future trials will be dispatched with the speed and orderliness of the Coyner case, it will not be amiss to make sure there will be no outbreak of violence to mar the fair name of Mississippi, by stationing the state militia at the scene, as was done in the Cleveland instance. Governor Conner is to be commended for his thoughtful action.

DURHAM, N. C.
SUN

FEB 5 1935

Southerners Decry Lynching not As Southerners but as Americans

People of the south are not ashamed of lynching as southerns but as Americans, Dr. Howard E. Jensen, Duke university in a talk this morning on problems confronting the nation involving the Negro. Lynching was deplored and the spotless record that is Durham's was held up as the accomplishment of good citizenship.

There are many questions in the field of race relations about which informed citizens will continue to differ for a long time to come, Dr. Jensen stated in beginning his address. These questions he held to be so complex that it is as yet impossible to get the fact necessary to answer them conclusively. The speaker stressed two matters in his presentation of his address "about which there is no difference of opinion among citizens who know the fact," namely the right of Negro children to develop and the shame of lynching.

"Every Negro child, like every white child, must have the opportunity to develop and express the best capacities within him," Dr. Jensen said, and he gave names of many Negroes who rose above their handicaps to high planes of useful living and who engraved for themselves records of outstanding accomplishments to show what can be done by members of the colored race if given an opportunity. The problem of providing for the Negro youth no longer confronts North Carolina, he said, because the state government has adopted the definite policy of equalizing educational opportunity for the races as rapidly as its resources will permit.

The speaker dwelt more at length upon the lynching evil and he declared that lynching must stop. "We must end it for patriotic reasons, if for none other," he said, further saying that "there is nothing that discredits America abroad quite so much as this." Lynching was held up by the speaker as "not a sectional matter," for "there are only six states that have never had a lynching, and although it occurs most frequently in the south and west, no state in the union is entirely safe."

The surprising thing, according to Dr. Jensen, is that lynching is not exclusively a racial matter. Nearly one-third of the persons lynched during the past 50 years were white, and in only 20 states have more Negroes than whites been lynched. Twenty-two states have actually lynched as many or more whites than Negroes, and the speaker pointed to Oklahoma where 116 whites and 44 Negroes have been lynched, as well as the situation in other states, to prove his statement.

"Therefore, we who love the south are not ashamed of lynching as southerners, but as Americans, and today the strongest stand against lynching is being taken by the most trusted leaders of our section," the Duke professor said. Leading citizens of the south from every state are petitioning congress to pass the Wagner-Costigan anti-lynching bill, which would enable the federal government to support the forces of law and order in every state of the union in controlling the crime of lynching.

"It is true that many people still justify lynching, but if they happen to live in a county like Durham that has never had a lynching, they point to the fact with pride," Dr. Jensen said in offering this county as a striking example of the attitude of an enlightened people towards crime and lynching.

BATON ROUGE, LA.
ADVOCATE
FEB 6 1935

PASSING OF HANGINGS

There was a time back a decade ago when the South was noted for its lynchings and its gory hanging tales, but those days, fortunately are passing from the present day dealings, as many of the old barbarous customs are being forgotten.

No longer does the riding of a ruthless band across hillside touch the man in jail, regardless of what crime he has committeed, or of the crime with which he is charged. Mob violence which once flared because there were no courts of law to punish the offenders is not a safe thing with which to deal. Under mob violence the innocent sufferer, and the guiltless are often known to lose their lives in the swift anger of the crowd which is banded together.

The old-time lynchings placed a strain on the name of the South which there has been much difficulty in erasing, and which is something those of us who have grown past the stage of lawlessness like to remember.

There are few children who have grown to manhood and womanhood in recent years who do not remember the gory tales of hangings which were repeated ever so often. Men were taken from their cells during the dead of night and hanged from a convenient limb or bridge. The investigations which followed in half-hearted fashion came to naught.

Times have changed and the mood of the people with them. Nowadays a man may be charged with all manner of crimes but the people of the city and the state wait for the law to take its natural course.

Atlanta, Ga. Journal
February 14, 1935

UNCLE SAM MUST STOP LYNCHINGS, MENCKEN WARNS

Others Join in Plea for Federal Act Prohibiting Mass Killings

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14.—(AP)—The United States was told Thursday by Henry L. Mencken, the writer, that "either it must make every possible effort" to stop lynchings "or suffer the scorn and contempt of Christendom."

He testified to a senate judiciary subcommittee after Senator Costigan (Democrat, Colorado) had urged approval of his bill to impose stringent penalties against mob participants, officers who fail to protect prisoners and counties where lynchings occur.

Lynching was described by Costigan as "open anarchy."

Explaining he could offer no opinion on the wisdom or the constitutionality of the bill, Mencken urged its enactment as an "experiment."

"Even if the worst comes to the worst and we find that preventing lynching is actually impossible, that discovery will at least be something," he added.

Assuming that federal action was necessary to check mob killings, Mencken said:

"The states are charged with punishing all such invasions of the common right of citizens, but some of them have failed to do so and others have not honestly tried.

"Meanwhile, lynchings continue, and though they do not increase in number, they show a tendency to increase in savagery. . . .

"No government pretending to be civilized can go on condoning such atrocities."

Senator Wagner (Democrat, New York), co-author of the anti-lynching bill, said that when "the lynchings perpetrated during the past two years are studied as separate cases they constitute almost every type of infamy that blot the record of civilization."

Representative Caroline O'Day (Democrat, New York) advocating the measure, said the United States was losing prestige as a result of lynching.

A native of Savannah, Ga., Mrs. O'Day said on a visit to South Africa she was asked about the "race problem" and the impression there was that the U. S. condoned lynching.

Later, in India, she said she found a book by a Hindu on lynching and racketeering in the United States was a "best seller."

ENTERPRISE
Rockville, N. C.
FEB 21 1935

THE "ONLY WOMAN" HANGED

Mrs. C. O. McMichael refers to a colored woman, Tilda Carter, of Rockingham county, as the "only woman ever legally hanged in North Carolina." This hanging is reputed to have taken place about fifty years ago.

The term "only" covers a lot of territory and we often assume that since we do not know of other cases, the one we have in mind is the "only" one of its kind.

Fact is that the late Frances Silver, of Burke county, has long and notoriously borne the distinction of being the first and "only" woman to be "legally hanged in the state of North Carolina." She was hanged on the courthouse square in the "western capital of the state," in 1833, for the murder of her husband. H. E. C. (Red Buck) Bryant, well known Washington correspondent of the Charlotte Observer, New York World, and other papers of years, has written a graphic story relating to the life of Frances Silver, who is credited with having written a poem which she recited just before her execution. One couplet in that poem expressed a guilty mother's fear for her surviving child:

"Now all you of Adam's race
Let this not my child disgrace."

Since both of these hangings belong to recorded history and not to legend, there seem to have been at least two women legally hanged in this state. Musty records in courthouse here and there might reveal others.—Twin City Sentinel.

GREENVILLE, TEX.
EVENING BANNER
FEB 26 1934

Judge Lynch

News that Grayson-co is to have a new fireproof courthouse recalls that blot on the escutcheon that is Grayson-co's that happened in Sherman in 1930 in the ghastly mobbing of a negro, firing the county's building and dragging the then-dead body of the victim through the streets in a paganistic, sadistic spirit.

Grayson-co, shamed, doesn't intend to have that sort of thing to happen again. Likely she won't. But elsewhere in Texas there will. All over the South there will. Dozens of them, not as bad, maybe, but nevertheless with all the disregard for public rights, American principles of the accused right to jury trial and freedom from violence.

Grayson-co moves to frustrate any attempt at recurrence of a deplorable happening. But neither Grayson-co, Hunt-co, Texas nor the South makes any move to unseat Judge Lynch.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
MAR 5 1935

HER FIRST LYNCHING

From the New York World-Telegram

To any who hold that art can not be propaganda and still be true and even great art we recommend a visit to the Arthur U. Newton Galleries, 11 E. 57th St., where a distinguished exhibition of the art on lynching is now on view.

There are numbers of persons, perhaps, who might be inclined to steer away from such an exhibition as from a chamber of horrors. But here art and truth come in. A number of these paintings and drawings—by Bellows, Benton, Curry and the cartoonists and illustrators Kirby, Duffy, Fitzpatrick, Reginald Marsh—are on their merit as pure art worth a place in any museum or art gallery.

Such is their power and strange beauty of execution and idea that to many who see them it becomes tragic that museums and art galleries are so exclusively concerned with mere objective beauty and afraid of art which exposes injustice and brutality and human degradation—art which tells a moving story, stirring thought and feeling.

Unforgettable fear and pity is in the face of the beautiful little girl raised high so she can see in the hands of her frenzied mother, who amid a mob cries to another woman, "This is her first lynching."

Imperishable impression of dumb terror is in the face of the young Negro braced in a tree as a mob—dog led, afoot and on horseback—pass behind on the road in the moonlight, in the painting by John Steuart Curry, Kansan.

In these courageous artists with social zeal, combined with artistic genius, lie the finest immediate hope for art in America or the world.

Memphis, Tenn., Com'rcial Appeal
January 6, 1935

Letters to the Editor

IN OPPOSITION

To The Commercial Appeal:

Congratulations on hitting onto such an effective way of discouraging opposition to Mr. George Morris' views on lynching. A little quipare as many, and more advocates printed over such letters workand defenders of lynching in the onders in seeing to it that nobodvorth and west as there are in the south. Letters to northern newspapers after the San Jose incident disclosed that. Probably the most notorious defender of lynching is Westbrook Pegler, ex-Chicago sports writer and a constant scoffer at the south and everything it stands for.

Defenders of lynching are nothing new. The argument is centuries old, but what is significant and what is amazing is that The Commercial Appeal, thanks to Mr. George Morris, is the first public utility of any kind, north or south, east or west, to openly defend lynch law, directly or indirectly.

As a student of southern history, I happen to know that the intelligent element in the south, as distinguished from the reactionary, has always denounced lynching. This was true before the Civil War, and is true today. Governor McAlister nobly carries on that tradition. And backing him to the limit would be found the law enforcement officials of the city of Memphis.

At the attorney generals' crime conference in Washington three weeks ago I had the privilege of standing within 20 feet of the president of the United States as he denounced those who would resort to mob violence.

Of course, possibly the president and governor are wrong. Perhaps they should have taken their cue from Mr. George Morris.

Possibly even Mr. Morris would volunteer to personally examine the guilt or innocence of anyone before turning them over to a mob!

HUGH RUSSELL FRASER.

Editor's Note—This controversy in the Letters to the Editor column has been fully aired, opportunity having been given for expression of opinion on both sides. No more letters on the subject will be printed.

else dares disagree with you.

However, there is just one little point I wish to call your attention onto: the defenders of lynching are not confined to Mr. George Morris and southern reactionaries. There

STAMFORD, CONN
ADVOCATE
MAR 26 1935

THE MOB SPIRIT

The human race has to cope with many enemies in its long struggle to work out a scheme for peaceful living, but the greatest enemy of all is the mob. For a perfect picture of the way the mob acts, consider the riot that swept up and down the streets of New York's Harlem the other day.

A colored boy tried to pinch a ten-cent knife from a store counter. A floorwalker collared him and the boy, naturally enough, set up a holler. An excitable woman saw and heard just enough to touch off her motor reactions, and she ran out into the street yelling that the boy had been killed.

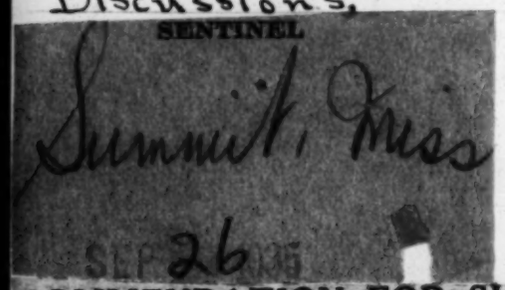
Up and down the streets went the cry. Out of poolrooms, lunchrooms, and workshops came angry men, milling in the streets, yelling, looking for some one to fight, afraid, suspicious and angry. A crowd of a thousand men and women swept into the store, turning things upside down, breaking things, yelling, hitting, fighting.

Police reserves came, by the hundreds. There were dozens of fights. Scores of men were cut, beaten, or slugged. More than a hundred were arrested. Thousands of dollars' damage was done to property. And the juvenile knife-stealer who unintentionally started it all managed to jerk away from his captors during the melee and vanished, utterly unharmed.

You could search the world over without finding a better example than this of the blind, panicky insanity of the mob spirit. Here was a riot of major proportions, an ugly welter of fights that spread all across a populous section of a great city—and all for what?

Not one of the rioters knew. They could not possibly have hoped to know. It started, literally, from nothing at all; and because men and women were jittery, and gave way to the combined emotions of anger and fear, there was merry Ned to pay.

Now one does not need to think very hard to draw the needed moral from all this. The mob spirit that can seize a few thousand people in one city is the same spirit that can and frequently does seize whole nations, when hatred and panic get together.



It sweeps dictators into power, causes mass executions, concentration camps, sluggings and clubbings; it fills the air with bombing planes and the fields with infantrymen and sets cruisers loose on the sea lanes; it inflicts more misery and destruction on the earth than a generation can repair.

And all, as in Harlem—for what?

Lynchings - 1935
6
Discussions,

White Press, Southern.

4959

COMMENDATION FOR SUMMITONIANS

Much has been said about Sheriff Statham's part in the almost-lynching affair in Summit last week. Without wishing to underestimate the work done by Sheriff Statham, it must be said that he did not have an unruly, restless mob to deal with. The men who gathered at the scene were, for the most part, quiet, law-abiding citizens, there in the interest of maintenance of that law. The rabble-rousers were even nicer than the average because they were not hot-headed enough to take the lives of either of the two negroes accused until they knew, BEYOND THE SHADOW OF A DOUBT, which one was guilty. That one factor was what saved Summit from witnessing a lynching, and not any particular effort on the part of officers. The men who gathered there were fair-minded and wanted to be quite sure they were dealing with the real criminal. And they deserve commendation because they stayed their hands.

We hear so many adverse remarks from the North because of our lynchings in the South: Northerners having not, and never will have, any adequate conception of the Southern negro. Take this boy, for instance: His "white folks" would unhesitatingly have sworn to his innocence. He had always been a quiet, humble, unobtrusive negro, doing his work quietly and well, and never causing any one a moment's trouble. It is logical to assume that he temporarily went crazy. And that is why Southerners distrust the negro. There is an old Southern expression which Southern men believe to the utmost: "A negro's hide can't cover the beast in him." The Southerner firmly believes that negroes are wolf-like animals, and that no amount of training will ever make them submissive or anything except wild beasts. And the North can argue against the lynchings "from can 'til can't" but the Southerner will go his way, attempting to "make examples" of those who revert to their beastly qualities.

Do not assume that this writer holds any brief for either lynchings or lynchers. All men are due a fair and impartial trial, and men who have not a respect for the law should be punished. But it does seem that, when a man has confessed himself guilty, that some of the red tape could be cut away and punishment meted the offender. It is impatience with tse slow methods of the law which causes at least nine-tenths of the lynchings in the South. The Oxford case was a fair example. The JURY STAYED OUT TOO LONG.

A LIFE IMPRISONMENT SENTENCE FOR NEGROES WHO HARM WHITE PEOPLE ISN'T DRASTIC ENOUGH TO SUIT MEN OF THE SOUTH. THEY WANT DEATH FOR THE MAN WHO CAUSED DEATH IN THE HEART OF A SOUTHERN WOMAN. THEY REFUSE TO BE SATISFIED WITH LESS.

It seems to be up to the thinking people of the South to remedy this condition. Let's make the law more drastic. Let's demand the death penalty and the mobs won't be so anxious to have murder on their hands. There MUST be a way to preserve law and order without calling out the militia every time an offense is perpetrated. It's up to us to find it.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
October 11, 1935

The Jury Wasn't Sure

Ellwood Higginbotham, the Mississippi Negro, who has been lynched within the shadow of the state university, was charged with killing a white man who had gone to his home "to have a talk with him."... The Negro had been arrested, had been tried before a white jury, with a white judge presiding and a white prosecutor representing the state of Mississippi—and yet the jury had so much difficulty reaching a verdict that it had already spent some 24 hours considering the evidence.

This is the vital fact because everyone knows that unless the jury had been in serious doubt as to its verdict—in brief, was gagging over the state's contention of cold-blooded murder — it would have convicted Higginbotham in a much shorter time.... When a jury reflects long, a reasonable question is raised as to whether the evidence against the prisoner was impressive.

Lynching the prisoner would have been indefensible if he had been as guilty as a Dillinger. But the solemn question raised by this latest example of the traditional Mississippi savagery is whether the mob killed a man whom the state's justice would have treated more leniently. In the circumstances it seems easily probable.—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

Guntersville, Ala., Advertiser
October 9, 1935

LYNCHING MULTIPLIES CRIME

A South Georgia mob lynches a negro for pointing a revolver at an officer, thus where there was a single non-capital felony chargeable against one lawbreaker, there eventuates a capital felony, involving an uncounted number of persons.

The circumstances are exceedingly unfortunate, constituting another evidence of the widespread disrespect for law that is proving so demoralizing in many quarters. In all such cases there are two victims of mob violence—the person lynched and the law that is designed for the protection of society and which must be upheld if society is to enjoy the protection that the law affords.

The very men who join in lynching look to the law for their own protection both, in person and in property, and should realize that when they make such an assault upon the law they are weakening the very structure that has been erected for their own defense.

Multiplying crimes never has and never will help to create a happier social condition and this is so obvious that it shoud be apparent to all.—Gadsden Times.

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.
OBSERVER

OCT 2 1935

ECHOES OF 1870.

In 1870 at the courthouse in Yanceyville J. W. Stephens, a white man from the North who had set himself up as a leader of the newly freed negroes, was attending a negro Republican mass meeting at the courthouse in Yanceyville.

During the height of the meeting he arose as though summoned and left the room.

The next morning his body, strangled and stabbed, was found in a small room in the courthouse.

Slaying of Stephens was the signal for a strenuous effort on the part of the Federal Government to abolish the Ku Klux Klan. Martial law was declared and many suspected klansmen were arrested and the writ of habeas corpus suspended by Governor W. W. Holden, a circumstance which afterwards figured in his impeachment trial when the Democrats regained control of the State.

Charges against the klansmen finally collapsed from want of evidence, and the truth of the matter came to light only recently when Capt. John G. Lea, the last survivor of six men who took part in the killing, died in Danville.

Capt. Lea at the request of the North Carolina Historical Commission had made a deposition to the late Col. Fred A. Olds several years ago and the deposition had been placed in the commission's vaults not to be opened until Capt. Lea's death.

Stephens represented a faction of self-seeking adventurers who came South to get what they could for themselves at a time when the South was in the hands of an unintelligent electorate. These Carpetbaggers did not stop at inflaming the negro race with hatred against the whites. They did not stop at the sale of justice and the auction of public interest. They were supported by a federal government which regarded North Carolina as conquered territory which deserved the type of treatment it was getting.

Result was that the leaders of North Carolina decency finding it impossible to obtain good government through constitutionally organized channels, organized their own system of government—sub rosa.

When the regularly organized courts were unable to enforce order the Invisible Empire enforced order in its own very effective way.

In which light the slaying of Stephens appears as something short of murder. It was an enforcement of public protection in an unorthodox manner occasioned by the failure of regularly constituted agencies to protect the public, occasioned by what Governor Holden termed the "exhaustion of the judiciary."

To some degree the slaying of the tyrant Long in Louisiana might be likened to the taking off of Stephens. Long undoubtedly was tried and condemned by a secret court as being detrimental to good government. The difference was that the Ku Klux Klan acted in a body to enforce its ordinances whereas the Louisiana clique delegated one representative to play the martyr role.

In a lesser degree most of our lynchings are kin by philosophy to the Yancey county affair of 1870.

The lynch spirit springs from a fear in the breasts of the people that the law either cannot or will not punish adequately the perpetrator of some especially heinous, or heinous-seeming, crime.

Remedy for such extraordinary executions as that of the Caswell county carpetbagger, remedy for assassinations such as that of the Louisiana Kingfish, remedy for the lynchings with which our South is disgraced in singular and the rest of the country is disgraced in plural, lies in the true and speedy functioning of the courts.

More than three hundred years ago Shakespeare in Hamlet's soliloquy spoke of "the law's delay."

In three hundred years it has picked up no speed.

We live today in an automobile and aeroplane civilization and seek justice in courts still geared to ox-cart days.

And wonder why crime rages and wonder why people take the law in their own hands.

Nashville, Tenn. Tennessean—M'ng
October 19, 1935

How Mobs Behave.

The best argument against lynching is found in a news report from Georgia where a mob set out to find the negro slayer of a white man.

It was not successful, but it did not come home empty handed. Bloodlust was satisfied by the killing of another negro who had no connection with the crime.

Mobs are that way.

They are controlled by inflamed emotions and not by law or reason. In consequence, they make no fine distinctions. If they cannot get the right man, there is always the probability that they will get the wrong one.

There is no accurate data on how many innocent victims have been put to death by lynchers, but it may be conceded that the incident in Georgia is not an isolated one.

Members of the mob may hope to dismiss the affair as a "slight error," but it amounts to a great deal more than that. It is another strong indictment against the application of lynch law in the South or elsewhere, and should prove a potent factor in rallying sentiment against this old and barbaric practice.

Nashville, Tenn. Tennessean
October 19, 1935

The Wrong Negro.

A dispatch whose wording is somewhat obscure gives an account of the killing of an innocent negro by members of a Georgia "posse" out to find the slayer of a white man.

The sheriff of the county in which the negro was killed said the wounded man, who had been both beaten and shot, was being brought to the hospital at Moultrie before he knew of the killing, which he referred to, according to the dispatch, as an accident.

The negro was shot several times in the head and the chest and, according to his family, was beaten severely. This is the sort of accident which caused the death of a negro farmer who was not connected in any way with the crime which the Georgians sought to avenge.

It was not made clear in the dispatch whether the members of the posse were acting under any sort of legal authority in their hunt for the killer, whether they joined the chase as volunteers who wanted to see a murderer brought to justice or whether, as seems possible, they were merely out for excitement.

Whatever the legal status of the crowd that shot down this negro, whose only offense was that he sought to defend his home against those who were searching it, it was grossly careless in committing an accident that consisted of shooting a number of bullets into the negro's body and in his being beaten—the punishment resulting in his death a few hours later.

The negro, set upon by this posse or mob and frightened, undertook to take a gun from one of its members. That was the signal for the accident.

While the mob was dealing with the negro who was not a party to the killing of the white man the real killer escaped and has not been seen. The matter seems to have been handled in a bungling and inhuman fashion. As long as there are white men's courts operating under white men's laws, there is no excuse for the perpetuation of mob law. And when mob law is invoked against an innocent person, be he white or negro, it is certainly time to call a halt.

Charlotte, N. C. Observer
November 10, 1935

Lynched For Slapping Woman

ACCUSED OF SLAPPING a white woman, a negro was lynched in daylight near White Bluff, Tennessee, Monday by a group of five white men who took him from two officers.

The victim, Baxter Bell, about 45 years old, was seized in the business district of White Bluff, driven four miles into an adjoining county and shot through the chest. His body was thrown into a thicket.

A short time later, according to Sheriff Ed Hutton, five white men surrendered to him in connection with the lynching.

Deputy Sheriff Robert H. Williams of Cheatham county said that as Mrs. Luther Dotson alighted from a bus near Kingston Springs Sunday night the negro came up and slapped her. She ran and later had a warrant issued for him, charging assault and battery. The sheriff said the negro was arrested that night.

Monday morning, as two officers started to take him to Ashland City to turn him over to Cheatham county officers, he was seized by five white men who held up the officers in the business district with drawn guns. The officers said they chased the would-be lynchers but the negro had been shot to death before they could rescue him.

Lynchings-1935
Federal Council of Churches.

4960

15 LYNCHINGS SHOWN IN CHURCHS' REPORT

NEW YORK, March 3.—(AP)—The Federal Council of Churches reported tonight that records of its race relations department showed 15 lynchings in 1934 compared with 28 in 1933.

Despite increased agitation against the practice, however, the council reported there were only 40 states free of lynchings last year, an increase of one over the preceding year.

"After a downward trend from 33 victims in 1923 to 10 in 1929," the report said, "there has been a tendency to increase except in 1932 when there was a decrease to 8 victims. There were 28 victims of lynching in 1933 and 15 in 1934.

"There has been as much savagery in torturing victims as in former years, if not more.

"The determination and spirit of mobs have been seen in the large number of attempted lynchings prevented by officers of the law. The failures of the law-abiding citizens in many local areas to wipe out lynching point clearly to the need of national assistance to state and local officers through legislation which will bring federal power to the aid of those officers who struggle to protect life and limb of accused persons."

In a list of the states that had no lynchings last year, the following were omitted: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas.

New York Herald-Tribune

MAR 4 1935

Drop in U. S. Lynchings From 28 to 15 Is Noted

Federal Council of Churches Hails Gain in Fight

Lynchings in the United States during 1934 decreased to fifteen, as against twenty-eight the preceding year, the Federal Council of Churches reported yesterday through its department of race relations. All the lynchings occurred in eight states, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas.

Dr. George Edmund Haynes, executive secretary of the department, called attention to the fact that, after twelve years of effort on the part of the Federal Council of Churches, there was only one more state on the council's honor roll than in 1923.

"The persistence of the evil and its hold upon local areas are indicated by the fact that seventeen states during ten years have fluctuated on and off the honor roll," he said. "The number of victims of the mob has shown a similar unfavorable tendency. After a downward trend from thirty-three victims in 1923 to ten in 1929, there has been a tendency to increase, except in 1932, when there was a decrease to eight victims."

Bronx, N.Y. Home News

MAR 4 1935

Church Council Reports 15 Lynchings in 1934

The Federal Council of Churches reported last night that there were 15 lynchings in the U. S. in 1934, as compared to 28 in 1933, but asserted that there was just as much savagery and torture as in previous years. Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas had lynchings last year.

NEW YORK AMERICAN

MAR 4 1935

15 Lynched in U.S. Last Year, Church Council Reports

The Federal Council of Churches reported last night that 15 persons were lynched in America last year. This was 13 fewer than in 1933, but five more than in 1929, when the lowest mortality, 10, was reached.

The report asserted that as much savagery in torturing victims prevailed last year as in other years, if not more. The Sstates descredited with lynchings in 1934 were Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas.

Lexington, Ky., Herald

March 4, 1935

LYNCHINGS IN U. S. FOR 1934 SHOW DECREASE

NEW YORK, March 3 (AP)—The Federal Council of Churches reported tonight that records of its race relations department showed 15 lynchings in 1934 as compared with 28 in 1933.

In a list of the states that had no lynchings last year, the following were omitted: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas.

Rex Scott, 20, negro, former convict, was taken from a jail at Hazard, Ky., the night of January 24, 1934, and hanged in a graveyard in Knott county. A score or more shots were fired into his body. The negro was accused of slaying a white coal miner.

Atlanta, Ga. Journal

March 4, 1935

Lynching Decrease For 1934 Recorded

NEW YORK, March 4.—(AP)—The Federal Council of Churches reported Monday that records of its race relations department showed fifteen lynchings in 1934 as compared with twenty-eight in 1933.

Despite increased agitation against the practice, however, the council reported there were only forty states free of lynching last year, an increase of one over the preceding year.

In a list of the states that had no lynchings last year, the following were omitted:

Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas.

New York Evening Post

MAR 4 1935

15 LYNCHED DURING 1934, DROP OF 13 FROM 1933

Fifteen persons were lynched in eight States and forty States were entirely free from "mob hangings" in 1934, Dr. George Edmund Hayes, executive secretary of the Department of Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches, reported today.

Twenty-eight persons were lynched in nine States in 1933, the report said, attributing the "meager increase" in the number of States free from lynchings to "increased activities of the church and religious organizations, social and civic agencies, added law enforcement and the almost "united voice of the press."

Augusta, Ga., Chronicle

March 4, 1935

LYNCHINGS DROPPED DURING PAST YEAR

New York, March 3. (AP)—The federal Council of Churches reported tonight that records of its race relations department showed 15 lynchings in 1934 as compared with 28 in 1933.

Despite increased agitation against the practice, however, the council reported there were only 40 states free of lynching last year, an increase of one over the preceding year.

"After a downward trend from 33 victims in 1923 to 10 in 1929," the report said, "there has been a tendency to increase except in 1932 when there was a decrease to 8 victims. There were 28 victims of lynching in 1933 and 15 in 1934."

In a list of the states that had no lynchings last year, the following were omitted:

Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas.

NEW YORK JOURNAL

MAR 4 1935

15 Lynched in U. S., Showing Fall in Rate

The Federal Council of Churches reported today that fifteen persons were lynched in America last year. This was thirteen fewer than in 1933, but five more than in 1929, when the lowest mortality, ten, was reached.

ELMIRA, N. Y.
STAR GAZETTE

MAR 7 1935

Only 40 States Avoid Lynchings

States entirely free of lynchings last year totaled 40, one more than in 1933 it is announced by Dr. George Edmund Haynes, executive secretary of the Department of Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches.

"This meager result has come in the face of increased activities of church and religious organizations, social and civil agencies, increased efforts of local officers of the law to protect prisoners and the almost united voice of the press," Doctor Haynes said.

There were 15 lynchings in the other eight States during 1934, the report showed. In 1933 38 persons were lynched. The figures disclosed a downward trend from 33 victims in 1923 to 10 in 1929, since then the tendency has been upward, except in 1932, when the number of victims dropped to eight.

Doctor Haynes urged the enactment of legislation to "bring Federal power to the aid of those officers who struggle to protect life and limb of accused persons."

Lynching Decrease For 1934 Recorded

New York, March 5.—The Federal Council of Churches reported yesterday that records of its race relations department showed 15 lynchings in 1934 as compared with 28 in 1932.

Despite increased agitation against the practice, however, the council reported there were only 40 states free of lynching last year, an increase of one over the preceding year.

In a list of the states that had no lynchings last year, the following were omitted:

Alabama, Florida, Georgia Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi Tennessee and Texas.

United States News
Washington, D.C.
MAR 11 1935

War on Lynchings

Upward Trend in Mob Killings Brings Plea for Federal Action

AT THE same moment the Federal Council of Churches on their Honor Roll of States endorsed those States that never have had a recorded lynching. They are Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont.

There is a bill before Congress at the moment which provides stringent penalties for lynch mob participants, officers who fail to protect prisoners, and counties where lynchings occur. Senators Edward P. Costigan (Dem.), of Colorado, and Robert F. Wagner (Dem.), of New York, are its sponsors.

The Federal Council of Churches notes that "after a downward trend from 33 victims in 1923 to 10 in 1929" there were 28 victims in 1933 and 15 in 1934, with as much savagery as ever in torturing victims, "if not more."

A Federal law is urged in view of the indication that the failure of law-abiding citizens to wipe out lynching points to the need of National assistance.

Augusta, Ga. Herald
March 17, 1935

FORTY OF THE STATES HAD NO LYNCHINGS LAST YEAR

According to late reports, only one state has been inscribed on the honor roll of states free of lynching since the Federal Council of Churches began its recording twelve years ago, it was disclosed in a recent report issued by the council's department of race relations. In 1934, the disclosure shows, the total number of states free of lynching was forty, only one more than in 1923. Kentucky and Florida, which were free of lynching in 1933, lost their places on the roll last year.

In releasing the statement, Dr. George E. Haynes, executive secretary of the department of race relations said, "The persistence of the evil and its hold upon local areas are indicated by the fact that seventeen states during ten years have fluctuated on and off the honor roll. The number of victims of the mob shows a similar unfavorable tendency. After a downward trend from 33 victims in 1923 to ten in 1929, there has been a tendency to increase, except in 1932 when there was a decrease to eight victims. There were 28 victims of lynching in 1933 and 15 in 1934."

Continuing, Doctor Haynes says "There has been as much savagery in torturing victims as in former years, if not more. The determination and spirit of mobs have been seen in the large number of attempted lynchings prevented by officers of the law. The failures of the law-abiding citizens in many local areas to wipe out lynching point clearly to the need of national assistance to state and local officers through legislation which will bring federal power to the aid of those officers who struggle to protect life and limb of accused persons."

Lynchings - 1935
International Labor Defense Report

5186

ILD Names Seven Whites as Members of Lynch Party; Indictment Demanded

NEW ORLEANS, La. — The names of seven white men allegedly members of a mob which attempted to lynch Adam Joseph, farmhand, at Ville Platte, La., were presented to Gaston Porterie, state district attorney, here last week by the International Labor Defense with a demand that those accused be immediately indicted.

The ILD demands the indictment of Chack Reed, Ville Platte's chief of police, for negligence which materially assisted the lynching party. Suit for $10,000 against each of the men is also being initiated. Herman Midlo, who has handled several cases for the ILD, will represent Joseph.

Threatened for "Back Talk"

The names given to the district attorney are reported to be: Ferdinand DeVille, merchant and leader; Otley DeVille, Johnnie LeFleur, Loren Soileau, Jack Peets, Chester LeFleur, and Ferdinand Vidrine.

Joseph was employed on the farm of Mrs. P. M. Reed. On June 19, she sent him to Otley DeVille to buy some wood on credit. DeVille is said to have agreed to a week's credit, but broke into Mrs. Reed's yard on the following day and took back the wood. Joseph is said to have remonstrated with the white man for his actions and received a threat for his "talking back."

Two weeks later DeVille reported to Chack Reed, police chief, that Joseph had insulted his wife. He was arrested, but an investigation brought no evidence of his guilt. Joseph was held in jail over night for "safekeeping." During the night a mob of some twenty-five persons broke into the jail.

Left to Die in Woods

They placed Joseph in an auto, carried him about eight miles into the woods. As he stepped from the car, Joseph received two shote in the back. Each member ofthe lynch-gang then gave him ten licks with a buggy whip.

Left unconscious, Joseph was found by the chauffeur of a doctor who cared for him overnight then sent him to New Orleans. There, the Unemployment Council referred him to the ILD, which gave him medical aid and began to organize a campaign for the punishment of the hoodlums.

Lynchings-1935
Reports on.

International Labor Defense.

4520

I. L. D. LISTS 24 LYNCHINGS IN '35

Mississippi Reported as Leading With 8

1-4-36

Twenty-four lynchings were reported in the United States during 1935, according to a compilation made by the International Labor Defense,

(Ed. Note: The research division of Tuskegee Institute recorded twenty lynchings during the year.)

Of these, twenty-three were Negroes. The twenty-fourth occurred in California, where C. L. Johnson, white, was lynched at Yreka on August 3.

Mississippi had the largest number of lynchings during the year, with eight recorded. Louisiana was second with 5, Alabama third with 4; 2 were recorded from Texas and 2 from Georgia. Florida, North Carolina, California, Tennessee, and Virginia had 1 each recorded.

The list, it was pointed out by the I. L. D., is not claimed to be complete, as many lynchings occur which are not recorded in the press, and only come to light sometimes months after, if ever.

The definition of a lynching used in compiling this list was as follows: Any killing by a group of three or more, unauthorized by law and premediated, in a case in which commission of an offense was charged, and given as the excuse for the killing.

ILD SAYS 24

Figures just released by the ...rnational Labor Defense set th... reported lynchings in the ...d States at 24 for the year 1935. Of the 24, 23 were Negroes. The one white lynching reported was that of C. L. Johnson, which occurred at Yreka, California, on August 3rd.

In the I. L. D. compilation, Mississippi led in the number of lynchings with eight recorded. Louisiana followed with five, Alabama was third with three. Two each were reported in Texas and Georgia and Florida, North Carolina, California, Tennessee and Virginia ...ed one each.

This list, declared the I. L. D., however, could not be claimed as complete inasmuch as many lynchings occur which are not recorded in the press and which only come to light months after if ever. In compiling the statistics, a lynching was defined as any killing by a group of three or more, unauthorized by law, and premeditated, in a case in which commission of an offense was charged, and given as the excuse for the slaying.

ILD Lynch Report Of 24 Is Four Higher Than Tuskegee

Twenty-four lynchings were reported in the United States during 1935, according to a compilation made by the International Labor Defense, made public this week. Of the twenty-four, 23 were members of the Race. The twenty-fourth occurred in California, where C. L. Johnson, white, was lynched at Yreka on August 3.

Mississippi had the largest number of lynchings during the year, with eight recorded. Louisiana was second with five, Alabama third with four. Two were recorded from Texas and two from Georgia, Florida, North Carolina, California, Tennessee and Virginia had one each recorded.

The list, it was pointed out by the ILD, is not claimed to be complete as many lynchings occur which are not recorded in the press, and only come to light sometimes months after, if ever.

The definition of a lynching used in compiling this list was as follows: Any killing by a group of three or more, unauthorized by law, and premeditated, in a case in which commission of an offense was charged and given as the excuse for the killing.

The ILD figure of 24 lynchings for the year is four more than the total reported by the department of research and records for Tuskegee Institute last week. This variation is due to the fact that many lynchings each year are carried out so secretly that they are not disclosed.

Jerome Wilson, Franklinton, La., Jan. 11—

Wilson had been convicted of the slaying of Delos Wood, a deputy sheriff, after officers had invaded his house. The lynching took place after the State Supreme Court had ordered a new trial. Wilson was shot to death in his cell; his body was taken from the jail and dumped on the road three miles north of town. Sheriff J. B. Brock said: "There wasn't any lynching. There were just six or eight business men going about their business."

(Continued from page 1)

Anderson Ward, Maringouin, La., Feb. 24—

Ward had an altercation with Dennis Brudroe, a white man. Brudroe drew his gun on Ward, but it failed to explode properly. Ward drew a knife to protect himself. A mob of 25 gathered to search for Ward, stormed the jail where he was locked up and killed him. He was hanged from an oak tree and his body riddled with bullets.

Ab Young, Slayden, Miss., Mar. 12.—

Young was an organizer among the share-croppers who was urging them to demand their share of the AAA funds. He was approached and threatened by Hardy Mackie, an agent of the landlords. Mackie drew a pistol and Young shot in self-defense. He was seized by lynchers, placed on top of an auto with a rope around his neck, one end was tied to a tree and the car was driven from under him. He was captured at Rossville, Tenn., and carried across the state line.

R. J. Tyrone, Hattiesburg, Miss. March 22:

Tyrone was supposed to have committed suicide, but a month later the following facts were revealed: A group of rich white plantation owners had wanted his property and had provoked Tyrone to a fight. When he defended himself the landlords organized a gang to lynch him. Three days later his body was found riddled with bullets, making the coroner's verdict of "suicide" ridiculous.

Rev. T. A. Allen, Marks, Miss., April 5

Body found shot to death and weighted with trace chains about his waist in a river near Marks. Carried literature indicating that he was interested in the conditions of the poverty-stricken sharecroppers.

R. D. McGee, Wiggins, Miss., June 22

Accused of "attempting to attack" 11-year-old white girl in a blackberry patch and of beating her in the attempt. Posse seized him in his bed and carried him to the woods, where a mob of 200 to 400 hanged him from a tree and riddled his body with buckshot wounds and bullets.

Joe Spinner Johnson, Greensboro, Ala., July 11—

Johnson was a leader of the Share Croppers Union in Perry County. Called from his cotton patch by Landlord B. J. Young and Overseer Locke Trainer, he was bound hand and foot and beaten. He was placed in the Selma jail. Inmates heard screams that night. Next morning Johnson was not in jail. His body was dumped in a secret grave near Greensboro and found and recognized by friends.

Bert Moore, Columbus, Miss., July 15—

Charged with "attack" on a white woman, Moore was seized by lynchers who took him from the deputy sheriff of Lowndes county. He was hanged to an oak tree. Deputies offered no resistance to the lynchers.

Dooley Martin, Columbus, Miss., July 15—

Lynched at the same time and under the same circumstances as Moore.

Riblin Stacy, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., July 19—

Stacy was accused of a knife attack on a wihte woman. He was taken from six deputies by a mob of masked white men, hanged from a tree and riddled with bullets.

Gowan Ward, Louisburg, N.C., July 30—

Ward had had a quarrel with a white farmer, Charlie Stokes. Stokes was killed during the dispute. Ward was turned over to the lynchers by the sheriff and his deputy on the way to the jail.

C. L. Johnson, white, Yreka, Calif., Aug. 3—

Johnson had been accused of killing Chief of Police F. R. Daw of Dunsmuir. A mob dragged him out of jail and hanged him to a tree.

Bodie Bates, Pittsboro, Miss., Aug. 5—

Bates had been accused of attempted assault on a white woman. A mob took him and another Negro from the Pittsboro county jail, lynched Bates and possibly also the other Negro. Lynchers had keys to the jail and to the cells of the two other Negroes.

Jim Press Meriweather, Lowndes County, Ala., Aug. 22—

Meriweather was a leader of the Share Croppers Union and of the cotton pickers strike. He was arrested by a sheriff's posse which took him away and killed him. The posse gave the excuse of "self defense."

Edward Bracey, Hope Hill, Ala., Sept. 3—

Bracey was shot and killed by a gang of landlords and vigilantes urging the cotton pickers strike. The gang opened fire on the house and shot Bracey as he tried to escape through the back door.

Ellwood Higginbotham, Oxford, Miss., Sept. 17—

Higginbotham was a leader of the Share Croppers Union and had aroused the anger of the landlords. He shot the landlord-leader of the lynch gang in self defense when the lynchers invaded his house. He was lynched during the trial, while the jury was deliberating.

Lewis Harris, Vienna, Ga., Sept. 28—

Mob "overpowered" sheriff who was taking Harris to jail on charge of drunkenness. Sheriff had also tried to arrest Harris' son, and Harris demanded the boy's release. Mob claimed that Harris had threatened and cursed the sheriff.

Bo Brinson, Moultrie, Ga., Oct. 17—

Band of armed men deputized and led by Sheriff T. V. Beard lynched Brinson, a tenant farmer, and then swept South to Florida state line, spreading terror among the Negro population.

Dave Hart and Henry Freeman, New Orleans, Nov. 2—

These two young Negroes had been accused of attacking a white woman. They were shot and killed in jail by officers of the parish.

Baxter Bell, White Bluff, Tenn., Nov. 5—

This 45-year-old worker was hanged and shot by husband and three brothers-in-law of a white woman who the Negro was reported to have "struck and insulted."

Benny Mitchell and Ernest Collins, Columbus, Tex., Nov. 14—

These two 16-year-old Negroes were arrested in connection with the death of a white farm girl whom they had been acused of assulting and beating to death. The youths were taken by a mob from county officials and lynched.

Unidentified, Ripley, W. Va., Nov. 13—

The body of an unidentified Negro was found hanging from a tree. The body had been burned beyond identification.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

4972

New York
Journal of Commerce
NOV 14 1935

Scottsboro Indictments

A special grand jury in Scottsboro, Ala., reindicted the nine Negro youths whose original convictions on assault charges were overturned by the United States Supreme Court. The jury was made up of seventeen white men and one Negro. Mrs. Victoria Price, one of the two alleged victims of the assault, was a witness before the grand jury. Ruby Bates, her companion, repudiated her testimony and withdrew from the case during earlier litigation.

ALABAMA SEEKS END OF SCOTTSBORO CASE

New York Times
New York City

By New Indictments the State Hopes to Meet Supreme Court Ruling and to Conclude Trials Speedily

11/17/35

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d.
Editorial Correspondence. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 15.—New indictments found this week in the Scottsboro case point to an early resumption of all the noise, bitterness, notoriety and expense that attended the earlier trials. Alabamians still are divided on the merits of the case, but of one mind in the wish to be rid of the thing for better or for worse.

There is no present disposition in the press or anywhere else to debate the guilt or innocence of the defendants any longer. Comment everywhere runs now to regret that the ugly business must be brought forth again and to hope that this time it will be settled permanently one way or another. To meet the decision of the Supreme Court a Negro sat on the grand jury that found the new indictments.

Tom Knight, who was Attorney General at the time of the last trials and who conducted the prosecution in that capacity, has since been elected Lieutenant Governor, largely as a result of prestige won in opposing "Communists and New Yorkers" allied against him in the case. Detailed as special prosecutor for the new trials, he is said to have Gubernatorial ambitions which new triumphs in the Scottsboro case would serve handsomely. Those close to him are convinced that he believes absolutely in the guilt of the Negroes, who are charged with assaults upon two white girls.

"Outsiders" Not Wanted.

In the opinion of many Alabamians the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it to further the Communist movement among Southern Negroes. These Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified with what has come to be known as "outside interference in Alabama's affairs." This is in all probability the essentially realist attitude toward the case.

When the United States Supreme Court ordered a new trial in the cases of two of the defendants last April on the ground that members of their race had for years been barred from jury duty in Jackson and Morgan Counties, Alabama's Governor, Bibb Graves, took immediate steps to comply with his interpretation of the decision by having the names of Negroes placed on the jury rolls of this State's courts. Similar steps were taken in other Southern States.

But it is a long cry from a jury roll to a jury room, and thus far few Negroes have made it. Negroes are being listed in jury venires and on grand jury panels, and some of them get as far as the grand jury itself, but a Negro on a trial jury is as rare as ever in the deep South, except in Federal courts.

Lawyers Bar Negroes.

The ordinary procedure from jury roll to jury room for criminal cases is that a venire of 50 to 180 names is drawn each week from the list of those on the roll, and from this venire, by a process of letting each side strike names until only 12 remain, a trial jury is selected.

In civil cases the judge draws 24 names from a box and each side strikes 6. In both criminal and civil cases, if Negroes survive the drawing they can be—and are—easily eliminated by one or both sides through the striking privilege.

Because of the relatively small number of Negroes on the original jury rolls only a very few are ever drawn for venires. These are generally struck by both sides at once, opposing counsel advising the court that to avoid advantage or disadvantage to either side the striking is by mutual agreement.

In the selection of grand juries there is a different situation. The judge draws the 18 names from a panel of 36 and inevitably, if the drawing is properly conducted, some of the Negroes on the panel will be chosen.

At Decatur, in the same court room where the last Scottsboro trials were held, three Negroes were drawn a few weeks ago for service with 15 white men on the Morgan County grand jury. Judge A. A. Griffith administered the oath to them without comment. But when a Negro warehouse employe was qualified for trial jury duty in Jefferson County the same week he was promptly stricken from an assault case panel by Assistant Solicitor Long.

Many "Race-Conscious."

In other States of the deep South the situation seems to be much the same. Georgia and Mississippi report a few Negroes on grand juries but none on trial juries. Florida has no Negroes on any juries at all. In Louisiana a Negro was admitted to a trial jury at Grand which convicted a member of his race accused of attacking a white woman. In Tennessee Negroes are appearing occasionally on grand juries and there is report of one on a trial jury in Criminal Court at Knoxville.

In the rare instances in which Negroes are allowed to serve on trial juries in cases involving members of their race the effect must be a matter of speculation and hearsay, of course, but it is not likely that the defendant's cause is served appreciably. The Negro juror is inclined by the circumstances to be painfully race-conscious.

Southern lawyers with whom this writer has discussed the situation are convinced that the now apparently South-wide practice of placing the names of Negroes on jury rolls is legally faithful to the point made by the United States Supreme Court last April, and that their continuing absence from actual juries is something against which there can be no recourse at law now.

The Issue Raised.

They point out that even though Chief Justice Hughes mentioned "evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County" he lodged his specific criticism against the fact "that, according to the practice of the jury commission, their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age, but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll." In other words, they believe that the placing of names on the jury rolls was all the Supreme Court ordered or could order.

There is no doubt of the fact that Negroes are just about as successfully and consistently excluded from jury duty in this part of the South today as they were before the Supreme Court's decision. And there are enough legal loopholes and human ingenuities on hand to keep them excluded, apparently, for a long time to come.

The letter of the court's injunction is being served, perhaps, but its spirit will not prevail until the white men themselves are convinced that it is safe, comfortable and wise to rub elbows in jury rooms with their colored brothers.

REINDICTED

International.

Haywood Patterson, among the accused in the Scottsboro case.

Atlanta, Ga.

SCOTTSBORO NEGROES STICK TO LEIBOWITZ

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 14.—(AP) The nine negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" are "satisfied" with their counsel, Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, and believe he will serve them better than a southern lawyer.

A group of southern white men and women interested in the negroes had suggested that they might fare better with an outstanding attorney from the south.

Bronx, N.Y. Home News
NOV 14 1935

Scottsboro Youths Again Indicted by Jury Sitting With Colored Member for First Time

Scottsboro, Ala.—With a colored man sitting as a member of the Jackson County Grand Jury for the first time, that body yesterday returned 18 indictments in the famous "Scottsboro case" against the nine colored youths charged with attacking two white women four years ago.

Each of the nine colored youths named in the indictments was charged on two counts—attacking Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price on a freight train on March 25, 1931. The crime punishable by death in Alabama.

The colored Grand Jury member was Creed Conyer, chosen with 17 white men for the special jury. Another colored man drawn in the panel, Bird Hill, 74, was excused yesterday because the age limit for Grand Jury duty in Alabama is 65.

The new indictments were made necessary by a ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court, which held that colored men had been "systematically excluded" from juries when two of the defendants were sentenced to death.

Latest Move in State Fight

Impaneling of the special Grand Jury was the State's latest move in its fight for convictions, and the jury was asked to act upon warrants sworn out last summer by Mrs. Victoria Price, who alleged she was attacked by the colored youths on a freight train while she and her girl companion, were "hoboing" a ride.

Judge A. E. Hawkins, of Circuit Court, personally drew the jury, the foremanship of which went to Wiley Whitaker. After its selection, court was recessed until 1.30 p. m. It was the first time in history that a colored man had been drawn for jury duty in Jackson County.

Defendants in the case are Haywood Patterson, Clarence Norris, Ozie Powell, Willie Roberson, Andy Wright, Olen Montgomery, Charlie Weens, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright.

Patterson Convicted Three Times

Patterson three times has been convicted and sentenced to death. The convictions twice were reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court and once by an Alabama judge. The first ruling of the Supreme Court reversed the conviction of all defendants. Only Patterson and Norris were placed on trial again.

In the previous trials Ruby Bates repudiated testimony she had given earlier to corroborate Mrs. Price's story.

During the long litigation, the case grew from a relatively minor incident to international stature. Entrance of the International Labor Defense, the Society for the Advancement of Colored People and the League for the Defense of Political Prisoners attracted wide attention to the case.

New York Evening Post
NOV 14 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASE BACK TO START AS 9 ARE REINDICTED

Alabama Answers Supreme Court's Reversal on Jury Color-Line Charge

NEGRO MEMBER OF PANEL AS WOMAN TESTIFIES

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 14 (AP).—Prosecution of nine Negroes in the Scottsboro criminal attack case was back today where it started four and a half years ago, with each indicted twice by a mixed Grand Jury impaneled to meet a Supreme Court objection to its all-white predecessor.

Death in the electric chair faces the Negroes, eight of whom were convicted previously, if they are convicted again.

Creed Conyers, Negro farmer and school board trustee, served on the eighteen-man jury which late yesterday returned the true bills charging attack.

Conyers lives at Paint Rock, Ala., near the scene of an asserted mass assault on two white girls, Mrs. Virginia Price and Ruby Bates, aboard a Southern Railway freight train March 25, 1931.

Two Negroes on Venire

He was one of two Negroes on the venire of thirty-six. Names of the jurors were drawn from a box.

Mrs. Price testified yesterday. Officers said Miss Bates, who once repudiated her prosecution testimony, could not be located.

It was not announced how the jury balloted on the true bills. A two-thirds vote is required for indictment.

Twice the Supreme Court has ruled for the defense on appeals of the convicted Negroes. First it held their counsel had been inadequate.

Last spring it set aside death sentences imposed on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson on the ground there had been "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from grand and trial juries in Jackson County and in Morgan County, where the hearings were held under a change of venue in 1933.

The new indictments were the State's answer. Attorneys expected a special session of the Morgan County court would be called soon for retrial of the Negroes.

Indicted with Norris and Patterson were Eugene Williams, Roy Wright, Andy Wright, Willie Roberson, Olen Montgomery, Ozzie Powell and Charlie Weems. They are in jail at Brimingham.

New York Evening Post
NOV 14 1935

9 REINDICTED IN SCOTTSBORO ASSAULT CASE

Negro on Panel as Alabama Answers Supreme Court

WOMAN TESTIFIES; OTHER IS MISSING

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., Nov. 14 (AP).—Prosecution of nine Negroes in the Scottsboro criminal attack case was back today where it started four and a half years ago, with each indicted twice by a mixed Grand Jury impaneled to meet a Supreme Court objection to its all-white predecessor.

Death in the electric chair faces the Negroes if they are convicted again.

Creed Conyers, Negro farmer and school board trustee, served on the eighteen-man jury which late yesterday returned the true bills charging attack.

Conyers lives at Paint Rock, Ala., near the scene of an asserted mass assault on two white girls, Mrs. Virginia Price and Ruby Bates, aboard a Southern Railway freight train March 25, 1931.

Two Negroes on Venire

He was one of two Negroes on the venire of thirty-six. Names of the jurors were drawn from a box.

Mrs. Price testified yesterday. Officers said Miss Bates, who once repudiated her prosecution testimony, could not be located.

It was not announced how the jury balloted on the true bills. A two-thirds vote is required for indictment.

Twice the Supreme Court has ruled for the defense on appeals of the convicted Negroes. First it held their counsel had been inadequate.

Last spring it set aside death sentences imposed on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson on the ground there had been "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from grand and trial juries in Jackson County and in Morgan County, where the hearings were held under a change of venue in 1933.

The new indictments were the State's answer. Attorneys expected a special session of the Morgan County court would be called soon for retrial of the Negroes.

Indicted with Norris and Patterson were Eugene Williams, Roy Wright, Willie Roberson, Olen Montgomery, Ozzie Powell and Charlie Weems. They are in jail at Birmingham.

BROOKLYN CITIZEN
NOV 15 1935

It appears that the Alabama officials who are convinced of the guilt of the nine Scottsboro Negro boys, charged with criminal attack, have at last overcome their prejudice and thereby have enhanced the likelihood of the boys' convictions standing up in the United States Supreme Court. Twice the highest tribunal overruled Alabama courts because Negroes were excluded from the juries. There was, for the first time in memory, a Negro, on the Jackson County Grand Jury which has just re-indicted the boys. Whether that is enough or whether it remains for Alabama to include Negroes in the petit jury panel to satisfy the Supreme Court, still is in doubt. It is hardly to be expected that any Negro in that panel would be allowed to sit in the trial jury.

Tarrant, Ala., Standard
November 26, 1935

NEGROES PLAY IN HEADLINES

Scottsboro Decision Creates Precedent

For the first time in the history of Southern newspaperdom the picture of two negroes is carried on the front page of a newspaper—that is so far as memory dates back.

The negroes are Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two defendants in the now famous "Scottsboro" attack cases and the paper which carries their photos on the front page is the Jackson County Sentinel.

Also, another negro, Creed Conyers, who was a negro member of the recent grand jury which reindicted the nine defendants for an attack on Mrs. Victoria Price became a headliner in the paper.

P. W. Campbell is editor and publisher of the Sentinel which is published in Scottsboro, scene of the first trials in which death sentences were imposed on Patterson and Norris.

In Shelby County, Alex Scott, negro janitor at Alabama College served as a juror in the Circuit Court. The names of four other negro jurors were drawn for the box but were excused.

This was in compliance with the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court which reversed the decision of the court in the "Scottsboro" cases because the names of negroes were systematically excluded from the jury box.

Lynchings – 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4973

This Simple Request Will Be Chief Aid To A Bitter South In Skating Around Famous Scottsboro Decision

Members of Race Are Facing Loss Of Jobs, Possible Violence If They Insist On Serving On Juries---Must Ask For Excuse

By WILLIAM WISE ELLISON

Nothing in the last 70 years has served to electrify the South more than the decision of the United States Supreme Court discouraging systematic exclusion of the Race on juries. It set bilious colonels stroking snowy beards and neurotic majors tapping walking sticks irritably while in commun-ion with cuspidors. Able jurists and blatant barristers took cognizance of the order but are manifestly doubtful whether the mandate of the highest tribunal can ever be peacefully carried out. Georgia spoke of the possibilities of seceding from the Union.

While the decision was regarded as a blanket ruling applicable to all Dixieland, the Supreme court's action in reversing death sentences of two Scottsboro defendants on evidence that names of no members of the race appeared in jury boxes or on jury rolls, naturally held particular significance for Alabama. Governor Bibb Graves, hardly seated comfortably in the executive chair for a second administration, accepted the high court's decree unequivocally and forthwith interpreted it in letters to circuit court judges and solicitors throughout the state, calling for revising Alabama's jury lists to include Race members' names.

"Holdings of the United States Supreme court are the supreme laws of the land," the governor wrote. "Whether we like the decision or not, it is the patriotic duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and spirit. . . . It is unusual and arbitrary, if not unprecedented, for the governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which under our state policy are particularly under their jurisdiction. However, I have a duty to perform and an oath to abide by, and I and they are equally bound to enforce the supreme law of the land. . . ."

The decision confronts Alabama with the most serious situation it has faced in its affairs since the War Between the States. But Alabama has made little more than a gentle gesture at compliance.

After excitement attending the ruling had subsided to some extent, legal minds began picking the governor's order apart. Members of the race were not necessarily required to be placed on juries, but that their names be placed on the jury rolls in the boxes from which juries are drawn. Trial judges are permitted a certain amount of discretion in accepting or rejecting jurors. In selecting a jury from a venire, the state is permitted one strike to the defense's two until the venire is narrowed to 12 men, this in addition to the strikes for cause.

Qualifications of a juror require that he (or she) be a person of good character, good standing and good intelligence. On this theory names are admitted to the jury box. The jury commissioners of Alabama, inquiring for new names to be put on their lists, have instinctively reported only the names of white people.

Alabama law provides that a person to be eligible to vote, except in certain circumstances, must pay $1.50 annual poll tax, must be literate ad understand the Constitution.

MUST BE A QUALIFIED VOTER

In his letter to trial judges, Gov. Graves said that he would ask the legislature to enact "such legislation as will be needful along the lines of filling or refilling jury boxes." Thus, when the General Assembly convened for the first time since 1931, Senator J. Miller Bonner, of Wilcox county, rose majestically to the occasion. In offering a bill adding to already drastic statute the provision that no person's name shall be placed on the jury roll or in the jury box unless he is a duly qualified oter, the U. S. Supreme court heard a distinct echo of its Scottsboro decision.

Senator (Bone Dry) Bonner blandly announced there were no qualified voters in his, the famous Black Belt, and added, "the same situation appears generally throughout the state." He assured skeptics there was no need for apprehension that his bill might bring about the re-opening of the whole question of suffrage in Alabama. For, the solon explained, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Washington and Wisconsin all have similar laws.

The Senae Judiciary committee voted for a favorable report of the Bonner bill and it was hastily deposited in the legislative hopper bearing the stamp of unanimous approval. It then moved to the upper calendar and decks were cleared for introduction when suddenly the measure was recommitted to committee at the suggestion of the author. There it expired.

ELECTION LAWS ENDANGERED

The wall of silence that rose about this action was removed with the explanation that pressure for passage of such legislation might subject Alabama's election laws to litigation in federal courts. This was admittedly a dangerous procedure and one to be carefully avoided.

It was generally talked about the capital that while the nation's highest court has frequently passed on Alabama's election laws, it has never passed directly on them. There are members of the State Supreme court inclined to the belief if the elector system were established, Alabama's questionable election laws would be open to direct attack because of race discrimination, or alleged discrimination, and that they would fall under any semblance of heavy bombardment.

The world is familiar with the sordid drama that for more than four years has been the Scottsboro case. How nine Race boys, accused of assaulting two white girls after their hobo companions had been beaten up aboard a freight train, were taken off the train by sheriff's authorities at Paint Rock, Ala.; how death sentences were twice stayed by reversals of lower court judgments by the United States Supreme court. In its latest decision the high court held that Race members were systematically excluded from juries in Jackson (Scottsboro) county where the alleged crime occurred and in Morgan (Decatur) county where they were tried under a change of venue.

Complying with the decree of the nation's highest tribunal, the Alabama Supreme court issued quash orders in the cases of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the defendants, remanding them to Morgan county with instructions to dismiss the original indictments.

BOYS HELD ON NEW WARRANTS

This order also specified that the circuit court could make such further orders as might be deemed proper to await new indictments by a Jackson county grand jury expected to convene in September. In the event of new indictments, subsequent trials were ordered held in Morgan county. The defendants were to remain in custody "until due course of law."

Despite the change of venue, Jackson county will be forced to bear the expense of trial, the heated expostulations of angry taxpayers to the contrary notwithstanding. Legislative assistance in the form of an appropriation approximating $35,000 may be forthcoming.

After quashing of the original indictments and pending the return of others, the boys are held on nine new warrants sworn out at Scottsboro by Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville, Ala., one of the two victims of the alleged attack. This, of course, was a precautionary measure to frustrate known plans of defense to liberate the defendants on bond via habeas corpus proceedings during the interim.

At the first Scottsboro trial at Decatur, in March 1933, Patterson was on the stand when Judge James Horton overruled a defense motion to quash the jury venire on grounds that Race members were excluded from jury service. The jurist had already conceded that burden of proof of performing the duties according to law in selecting jurors was upon the state, and that the defense presented prima facie evidence that the names of Race members were not on the jury list. Every man on the Morgan county roster was white.

The Morgan county sheriff and captain of the National Guard testified they had never heard of a Race citizen serving on a jury in their county. Samuel Leibowitz, then counsel for International Labor Defense, offered testimony to substantiate his contention that no Race citizens had served on juries for the past five years, or the past 20 years. A jury commissioner was called to the stand by the state against the motion.

JURY LISTS TAMPERED WITH

"Who," he asked," would you consider to be the leading Negro citizen in Morgan county?"

"Don't know any such," was the answer.

"Isn't there a single Negro in Morgan county having qualified for jury service?"

"Not that I know of."

The books containing the jury roll for Jackson county for 1930-31 were procured for examination by Supreme court jurists. On the pages appeared names of six members of the Race. They were entered, respectfully, at the end of the precinct lists which were alphabetically arranged.

"The genuineness of these entries was disputed," the Supreme court decision reads. "It appeared that after the jury roll in question had been made up, and after the new jury commission had taken office, one of the new commissioners directed the clerk to draw lines after the names which had been placed on the roll by the preceding commission. These lines, on the pages under consideration, were red lines, and the clerks of the old commission testified that they were put in by him. The entries made by the new clerk, for the jury roll, were below these lines. . . . These names of the six Negroes were in each instance written immediately above the red lines, that is they were written after the lines had been drawn. The expert was not cross-examined and no testimony was introduced to contradict him. In denying the motion to quash, the trial judge expressed the view that he would not 'be authorized to presume that somebody had commited a crime' or to presume that the jury board 'had been unfaithful to their duties and allowed the books to be tampered with. His conclusion was that the names of Negroes were on the jury roll. . . . We think that the evidence did not justify that conclusion."

RACE NAMES USED IN JEFFERSON COUNTY

Alabama jury officials found themselves in a quandary. They held everything in abeyance pending action by the legislature. With the General Assembly going into recess without creating "remedial legislation" as prescribed by Gov. Graves, the question of dumping and refilling of jury boxes became a matter of conjecture few have ventured to fathom.

There has been a ripple of acknowledgment on the part of some court attaches and jury board members here and there obviously less obdurate than the major portion of their brethren, but hardly sufficient to disturb the state of outward tranquillity that has been characteristic in Alabama since emancipation of the black man.

The assistant county solicitor came forward with the revelation names of Race members have been on the jury lists of Jefferson (Birmingham) county for the last 10 years and members of the Race are eligible to serve on both grand and petit juries. Possibility that the Supreme court may reverse convictions in Jefferson county on grounds similar to the Scottsboro case, therefore, is remote, he declared.

The chairman of the Jefferson county jury board maintained a number of Race citizens' names were added to the jury list two years ago purposely to comply with the law that Race members are not to be excluded from the jury box. He added, too, that Race citizens have frequently been summoned to serve on grand and petit juries in his county, but invariably they have asked to be excused. Without exception these requests have been granted.

ALL NINE STILL IN CUSTODY

This summarizes the situation where at Jefferson county jail six of the Scottsboro defendants languish in cells. Two others are in Kilby prison, at Montgomery, and the ninth defendant whose age was 13 at the time of the alleged crime, was placed in custody of juvenile authorities.

For the first time since the stirring days when carpet-baggers held forth in the now dim and distant sixties, the names of Race citizens have been added to the jury list of Etowah county. To avoid future complications, the trial of a Gadsden, Ala., Race man charged with murder was postponed at the request of the circuit solicitor, the motive being to seek reindictment by a grand jury drawn from a jury box containing the names of Race citizens.

Nor is the jury service issue being confined wholly to Alabama by any manner or means. Names of Race citizens have been placed in jury boxes at Spottsylvania, Norfolk, Fredericksburg, Harrisonburg, Suffolk and elsewhere in staid old Virginia, for instance.

Race citizens have been made eligible to serve on Jefferson (New Orleans) parish juries for the first time since reconstruction days. One petition of the jury commissioners, Judge William O'Hara signed an order authorizing the commission to open the wheel of 700 names to make "a check of the names therein contained for the purpose of ascertaining whether the jury wheel as it now stands complied with the decision of the United States Supreme court in the Scottsboro case."

Commissioner of Agriculture Tom Linder became greatly perturbed over the unexpected twist things have taken. While his chief, Governor Eugene Talmadge, was absent from Atlanta shellacking the President, all alphabetical agencies and the New Deal in general, Linder was moved to enliven the usually drab columns of The Market Bulletin, official organ of the State department of agriculture:

SUCCESSION IS THREATENED

"The Democratic party is supposed to be the white man's party. . . . the United States Supreme court a few days ago reversed all the courts of Alabama in a case where some Negroes had been convicted of an assault on two white women, on the grounds that no Negroes were on the jury or in the jury boxes. . . . I notice where the governor of Alabama has ordered names of Negroes be put in the jury boxes. . . . I ask you men and women of Georgia—do you intend to submit to this kind of proposition? Do you intend to submit to the proposition that no Negro can be convicted of assault on a white woman unless Negroes sit on the jury to try him? . . . Remember no question is ever settled unless it is settled right. We still have the right to secede."

When Governor Talmadge returned to his office and loyal Democrats, shocked at Linder's suggestion of secession, stormed the capitol, he had Linder hauled on the carpet. Georgia's critical executive administered a sound rebuke for usurping the columns of a farm paper with such inflammatory copy. The publication was failing of its purpose by carrying such material for the consumption of agrarian readers.

Next issue of The Market Bulletine was back to normal—roasting Roosevelt haranguing Hopkins and walloping Wallace.

But Commissioner of Agriculture Linder, in defense of his utterances that Georgia might secede, doggedly declared that for the first time in the history of Georgia, white voters went to the polls along with Race citizens to vote on the retention of the Bankhead cotton control bill. He also, quite naturally, reiterated the inconsistency of the Scottsboro ruling.

MAILING PRIVILEGES ARE REVOKED

"No Southern white man could answer secession but one way, under the circumstances," he asserted. "No son or grandson of a Confederate veteran would hesitate to advocate secession under such conditions."

The heavy hand of the Postoffice Department fell upon Linder's shoulders at this juncture, revoking second-class mailing privileges of his publication. This move was aggravated by the commissioner's vigorous printed attack on the farm policies of the national administration, particularly the processing tax, although these have received even more vociferous attention over radio by Georgia's governor himself, whose ambitious aspirations would either have him succeed Secretary Wallace or President Roosevelt in next year's national elections.

A letter from the postal authorities cited a law enacted in 1900 requiring that publications of state departments of agriculture "shall be published only for the purpose of furthering objects of such departments," in order to be entitled to second class privileges of one and one-half cents per pound for mailing printed matter.

"In one of our issues we carried an article setting forth three planks of the Democratic platform of 1932," Commissioner Linder explained, "and in it we showed the President had carried out the principal planks of the platform of the Socialists and Republican parties."

KU KLUX KLAN WAKES UP

Resuscitated after 10 years of molding in the grave, a rejuvenated Ku Klux Klan has entered the scene to leave a trail of terror in sections of Alabama and Georgia. Brutal beating with leather straps, threats and intimidation against both whites and blacks and the burning of innumerable fiery crosses from hillsides and in front of residences, so intensified matters as to cause at least one grand jury investigation into depredations of hooded Klansmen and night riding gangs.

The inference that Governor Graves was indifferent to the acts of the Ku Klux Klan may or may not have been without foundation. Once he is said to have served as Grand Exalted Cyclops and used the backing of the organization to advantage in his gubernatorial campaign. Later, on his withdrawal the once powerful Alabama arm of the K.K.K. began to wither until a mere remnant of the original structure remained.

An appeal to Governor Graves by Attorney Samuel Leibowitz for an outright pardon for the Scottsboro defendants to bring an end to "this carcusal of hate," credited to subversive elements, was quitely declined. Request for appointment of an impartial fact-finding committee composed of outstanding state denominational leaders and heads of Alabama colleges, was also proposed without avail.

Opposition to outside intervention and interference in the case has been a factor of no minor concern in itself. A bill to give judges in the circuit and other courts of the state the authority to pass on the qualifications of lawyers from other states, is pending in the Alabama legislature. This measure is aimed specifically at attorneys sent into the state by "those who are undesirable" and follows in the wake of forfeiture of bonds for two New York I.L.D. lawyers, accused of attempting to bribe the principal witness in the Scottsboro case.

STATUS QUO IS UNCHANGED

Taken, by and large, the South will go on handling its affairs in much the same way it always has. In no Southern state is there any particular alarm over the Supreme court's ruling. Some alteration in practice may be necessary but no revolutionary changes are contemplated. It will be a comparatively easy matter for officials of Alabama and the rest of Dixie to put the names of Race citizens on the panel, but overlook them when the jury list is made up.

If that does not prove practicable, the district attorney who tries the case can throw these names out by the stereotyped process of challenging them without cause. On an actual trial proposed jurymen may be subjected to personal examinations or test of intelligence which are not commonly applied to white people.

The manufacturer, business man, plantation owner, and, in fact, anyone employing Race labor, can further complicate matters. If the simple expedient of a warning bearing the sinister signature of "K.K.K." fails to dampen the black man's passionate ardor to perform jury service, then there remains the dread of placing his job in jeopardy. It is hardly conceivable that many will incur the enmity by asking to be excused when subpoenaed to serve. Few Race citizens will enthuse over the thought of getting on a jury alongside their boss one day and absorbing his abuse in the cotton field the next day.

So, until other legislation, more specific and more drastic, is enacted by the states below the Mason and Dixon line themselves, the Race has gained little more than an empty victory through the high court's holding. Placing names in a jury box is one thing; including them on jury rolls is another.

Southerners persist in the belief that the Race prefers to entrust its fate in the hands of a white jury rather than an inter-racial jury, and the assertion is oft heard that white jurors are more sympathetic toward a Race offender than toward white men charged with the same offense.

The traditional thought of white supremacy, instilled from infancy, will prevail. And the general attitude of Southern-born whites in the matter of jury service will continue to be:

"I do not know of any Negro in my county over 21 and under 65 who is generally reputed to be honest and intelligent and who is esteemed in the community for his integrity, good character and sound judgment who is not a habitual drunkard, who isn't afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness which would render him unfit to discharge the duties of a juror, and who can read English and who has never been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude."

Lynchings—1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4974

Scottsboro—What Now?

THE DECISION of the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case was a notable one in several ways. For the first time in history the Court twice reversed the lower courts in a case involving capital punishment and, by its ruling in regard to the exclusion of Negroes from Southern jury rolls, it reaffirmed a principle of justice that various commonwealths in the South have long ignored. It did not, however, contrary to general impression, write a new legal bill of rights for the Negro and will not seriously upset established legal procedure in the South. New Republic

The principle that the exclusion of Negroes from grand and petit juries solely on the grounds of their race or color is unconstitutional was established as early as 1897 in the case of Strauder v. Maryland. This ruling was upheld the following year in the case of Neal v. Delaware and again in 1903 in the trial of Rogers v. Alabama. The Scottsboro decision, therefore, is important, not because it establishes a constitutional right, but because it tells those Southern states guilty of discrimination that they have been violating the Constitution for the past hundred years and that any indictment or conviction returned under such conditions is null and void. It will doubtless be cheering to the many Southern Negroes who have been tried, convicted and put to death, to hear that they have been executed in an illegal and unconstitutional manner. 4-17-35

Nor does the decision mean that the Negro will ever sit in the jury boxes south of the Smith and Wesson line. It is quite possible for the state of Alabama, for example, to observe the absolute letter of the Scottsboro decision and thoroughly to rape it in spirit. In so far as grand juries are concerned, Negroes may be called for service and may actually serve. But, should an indictment be sought against a member of his own race in whose guilt he does not believe, any reluctant Negro juryman can be forced to concur in the indictment by the simple expedient of threatening him with violence. And, in regard to petit juries, the state, by virtue of the various challenges at its command, can easily dismiss any possible Negro juror. Not only does it have its peremptory challenges but it may challenge the unwanted Negro in other ways. The two questions, "Are you related to the defendant or any member of his family?" and "Are you personally acquainted with the defendant?" are ones that any Southern Negro, living a gregarious, communal life which brings him into close contact with nearly all other Negroes living in his neighborhood, will find hard to answer negatively.

The most important meaning of the Supreme Court's decision has not, so far as we know, been yet pointed out. It is simply that the Court has demonstrated that it will not accept the statements of petty state officials about the conduct of legal procedure in their localities but will investigate the matter itself. The Court gave the Scottsboro case as much thought and consideration as the Gold Clause case, involving hundreds of millions of dollars, and it has certainly refuted the charge that it exists in a dead and spiritless legal vacuum, devoid of all humanity and understanding.

With these facts realized, and with Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama calling for a revision of county jury lists to include the names of Negroes, the Scottsboro case is both simplified and made more complex. What will happen now? Wisdom—even the most shallow and opportunist kind of wisdom—would certainly dictate that the case be dropped now and forever. The state of Alabama must realize by now that the chances are at least twenty to one that a new conviction will meet the same fate as its predecessors. It must also realize, merely through its pride, that by continuing these useless and vengeful proceedings it is dragging itself into disgrace and ill repute.

It would have been wise for the state to quash the case and free the boys—whose innocence has long since been established before the bar of public opinion—when Judge Horton so courageously set aside the conviction in the second trial. Such a step would be even wiser now. The Scottsboro case during the last trial, was little more than a political bass-drum. The members of the prosecution and Judge W. W. Callahan, who presided, were not trying a case so much as they were making stump speeches. These gentlemen have received from the case all it can possibly give them. Mr. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., the former Attorney General, is now Lieutenant-Governor. Other members of the prosecution have also been rewarded. Judge Callahan has been returned to office. What more do they want? What more can the case give them? It is not enough, as they are unquestionably aware, to carry them to positions of greater importance and power. And if they suffer a third defeat, as seems inevitable, they will lose much of the personal and political prestige they have gained.

It would be wise, also, for Governor Graves to take the lead in moving to free the Scottsboro boys. The Governor is out to make a reputation as a "liberal." By carrying the torch of the New Deal he seeks to repudiate the light he upheld in his earlier days—the fiery cross of the Ku Klux Klan. He has spoken brave and beautiful words regarding the Court's decision. He has declared that his only ambition is to see justice done. Here is his opportunity to realize his ambition and to prove his disavowal of his past career.

Much of the future of the case depends upon the reaction of the Southern press—particularly the Alabama press—to the ruling of the Court. We can only hope that the various Southern newspapers will stand behind the Court and place before the state of Alabama the futility of further procedure. Here is a magnificent chance for both Alabama and the South to deny all charges of prejudice, passion and hatred. It is a solution that may be accepted without dishonor, with a surrender only to those principles of humanity and justice for which the South, throughout its history, has always professed to stand.

Boston United Front Rally Hails Scottsboro Victory

By a Worker Correspondent

BOSTON, Mass.—Last night I attended a branch meeting of the I.L.D. in the South End. This meeting was held to celebrate the recent Scottsboro victory. I judge about sixty persons were assembled in the hall not counting the red squad. There were speakers from many organizations including the I. L. D., Communist Party, the Garveyites, Knights of Pythias and the New England Committee for the Suppression of Lynching. Daily Worker

The speakers were received with great enthusiasm by the audience, which pledged itself to rally thousands of workers to win the release of the Scottsboro boys and to carry on broad struggle for Negro rights in the city of Boston. I particularly noted the biting sarcasm of Mrs. M. Cravatt-Simpson, chairman of the New England Committee for the Suppression of Lynching, who, in the course of her talk exposed the N. A. A. C. P. leaders as allies of the Kluxers. Mrs. Simpson reminded me somewhat of Mother Bloor for her wit and militancy.

"I believe fervently in the Lord," she said, "but while I pray, I make sure to keep my hand on the handle of my hatchet." 4-16-35

I also recall the statement of Dr. Holmes who said, "Our people have been betrayed by every political party and by all the churches in Christendom, and when we are convinced that the Communist Party means what it says, we will back it in five thousand wards in the city of Boston."

The speaker from the Garveyites hailed the Communist Party and the

I. L. D. and stated that without them the Scottsboro Boys would have been lynched a long time ago. Donald Burke, who spoke for the I. L. D., issued a timely warning against the Liebowitz inspired illusion that he (Liebowitz) would rescue the Scottsboro Boys in an airplane.

George Blake, representing the Communist Party in New England, spoke eloquently on the need for widening the Scottsboro campaign, linking it up with the local struggles of the Negro people in Boston. He concluded his speech with an appeal to carry forward the struggles in the May Day demonstration.

Chattanooga, Tenn. Times
April 6, 1935

Justice for Negroes

(New York Times.)

It is more than four years since the case of the Negro boys condemned to death at Scottsboro began to trouble the conscience of Americans in all parts of the country. It is not necessary now to recall all the circumstances of the trial. Its conduct and some of the evidence admitted were of a sort to make many doubt the real guilt of the accused, but far more important than this was the growing conviction that they had been denied their constitutional rights and made the victims of race prejudice. Largely on this ground the case was appealed to the supreme court of the United States, which held that the constitutional point was well taken—namely that the defendants had not had full opportunity to obtain counsel. For this reason the original verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered. That was had in due time, the same verdict was reached and another appeal was taken to the supreme court. Yesterday it ruled that Negroes had been systematically excluded from the jury, so that the defendants are entitled to a new trial, which the court ordered. Chief Justice Hughes said that there was no disagreement on the point at issue. It was that, when the evidence showed that Negroes eligible to jury duty were regularly excluded, the trial was vitiated in the constitutional sense and the verdict would not be allowed to stand.

The judgment shows that the highest court in the land is anxious to secure and protect the rights of the humblest citizen. The case originally seemed of comparatively little importance. But with the lapse of years it has taken on the proportions of a celebrated cause. The test under which the supreme court was placed has been trying, but the judges have met it in the finest tradition of judicial independence and integrity. They have showed that their love of justice extends to the smallest as well as the greatest. The records which they have made in this case cannot fail deeply to impress the whole country. People may well hope to be spared a renewal of the original proceedings in the lower court. Might not the governor of the state find sufficient reasons in what has already taken place for issuing a pardon in order to do substantial justice and at the same time free the courts from the duty of going on with a case which has become a public symbol of the mischief that may be wrought when prejudice is allowed to invade the place dedi-

Bowing to the Court Decision

Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama bowed gracefully enough to the recent Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro cases. The court ruled that the trial judge was not justified in supposing the jury commissioners had shown no discrimination against the Negro race. It intimated that books had been tampered with and evidence had been manufactured.

Governor Graves moved at once when he learned of the decision. It was announced that he wrote every trial judge in Alabama to comply with the ruling by revising jury rolls before any new juries are drawn. Also that he asked that all jury boxes be emptied and refilled in accordance with the principles enunciated by the decision of the Supreme Court.

He apologetically said: "It is unusual and arbitrary, if not unprecedented, for the Governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which under our state policy are peculiarly under their jurisdiction. However, I have a duty to perform and an oath to abide by, and I and they are equally bound to enforce the supreme law of the land."

The Governor also wrote to all jury commissioners and to all circuit solicitors suggesting the manner in which they can best meet the pending indictments.

People all over the South were naturally interested in what the Governor had to say, and the judges in almost every judicial circuit in every state naturally took stock.

Georgia lawyers feel that their supreme court has a clean record. It has not hesitated to reverse any judgment that was tainted with prejudice. A case in Bryan county was reported in 168th Georgia, pages 370 to 374, in which the commissioners were on record as saying they would keep out of the jury box a certain race of citizens.

The Georgia supreme court promptly said that was a gross abuse of legal discretion and the court could not escape the conclusion that jurors' qualifications had been arbitrarily decided. When the question of prejudice or discrimination has been raised in Georgia, it has been customary, so far as can be learned, to invite evidence to that effect.

More than one county, including Bibb, has used Negro jurors, though in recent years the use of them has grown less and less until some counties have not had any on a panel in a number of years.

There can be no doubt that the Supreme Court's ruling will result in precautions that have not been taken in the past. But as one Macon lawyer puts it, the question of selecting a jury is not and never should be a race question. The very best material available is none too good, and the shame of the entire country has been the lack of the right kind of material for the best jury service. Questions involving race, politics, social standing, and all matters of that kind have no proper consideration in a jury system among intelligent and upright people.

And while there can be no objection to doing everything that can promote justice and fair dealing to everybody, it stands to reason that the higher the type of jurors the more the chance of insuring justice to Negroes and white people.

Nothing can be gained by criticising the court for jerking up the public and reminding it of the jury section of the fourteenth amendment, nor should such criticism be indulged, but it is perfectly proper to say that the jury section of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution was never intended to be patriotic. It was intended to humiliate the gentry of the old South. It pretended to champion the cause of the Negro. It may have been the best product of the brains of the time, but it is not a credit to such brains.

The law was ratified by carpetbag legislatures, and the Negroes who were supposed to benefit by it were finally embittered and left among the Southern white people with whom they would have been as good friends in those days as they are in these days. The only hindrance was just such foolhardy efforts to lift them into high place before they were prepared by education, experience or intelligence.

Those who have made their way up in the scale since those gory and unhappy days are to be congratulated, and they have never had any trouble in getting patient co-operation and sympathetic hearing from Southern whites in any moves for the betterment of their race.

The Supreme Court has not upset the order of things in many communities of the South. The two races get along together now better than they ever have since the carpetbaggers ruined the peace and happiness of both through just such spirit as the fourteenth amendment so strikingly manifests.

Savannah, Ga., News
April 6, 1935

NEGRO JURORS IN ALABAMA?

Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama evidently believes in following the rulings of the nation's highest tribunal no matter whether or not they are in accordance with sectional customs and prejudices. A dispatch from Montgomery says he announced that he had written circuit judges, solicitors and jury commissioners that the United States Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case meant the names of negroes must be placed in the jury boxes in the state. He said he was also going to ask the Legislature when it reconvenes April 30 to enact such legislation as may be necessary to cover dumping and refilling jury boxes in Alabama. The Supreme Court held that negroes were "systematically" excluded from jury rolls in Jackson and Morgan counties, infringing on the constitutional rights of the defendants in the Scottsboro case.

If Governor Graves' instructions are carried out, refilling jury boxes will place negroes' names on jury rolls and in the boxes for the first time since reconstruction days in many counties, unless some plan is devised to circumvent this procedure. Governor Graves says, "Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme law of the land. Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and spirit."

Through the tightening and strengthening of rules governing the organization of political parties, it may be possible to continue to exclude negroes from participating in primary elections and to bar them from jury duty through lack of mental and other qualifications, but the recent Supreme Court decision and the action of Governor Graves raises questions of great import in the South, the danger being that there may be a wholesale reversal of thousands of other cases in the trial of which negroes have been excluded from the jury box and which are carried to the highest court, through the efforts of negro organizations.

Fayetteville, Tenn., Observer
April 4, 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASE RULINGS SET ASIDE

The supreme court at Washington Monday set aside the death sentences imposed on Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson, negroes convicted of assaulting a white woman near Scottsboro, Ala., and returned both cases to Alabama courts for further action.

In the case of Norris, Chief Justice Hughes' opinion directly ordered a new trial after saying there was no controversy about the constitutional principal involved—that if negroes are excluded from jury service, equal protection of the laws to all does not result.

In a separate opinion on Patterson, Hughes returned the case for the Alabama courts to decide whether he should not be given a new trial.

While court attaches explained the Alabama court could refuse a new trial and re-sentence Patterson, they contended in this event he could return to the supreme court for a direct order for a new trial.

Houston, Miss. Post
April 11, 1935

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the famous Scottsboro, Ala., cases seems to pretty well settle the question of whether or not negroes will have to be drawn on juries in the South and elsewhere throughout the country. In order for verdicts to stand the final test. The Governor of Alabama is reported to have advised the authorities in his state to include negroes in the jury box and it looks like that is what will have to be done by the other states. It is a deplorable condition of affairs brought about by the interference of outside agencies, but the Jackson News suggests that it will simply result in the raising of the standard of qualification for jury service. If the white jury material generally, it may prove beneficial after all.

Alabama

4975

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

NEW YORK TIMES

NOV 17 1935

ALABAMA SEEKS END OF SCOTTSBORO CASE

By New Indictments the State Hopes to Meet Supreme Court Ruling and to Conclude Trials Speedily

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d
Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 15.—New indictments found this week in the Scottsboro case point to an early resumption of all the noise, bitterness, notoriety and expense that attended the earlier trials. Alabamians still are divided on the merits of the case, but of one mind in the wish to be rid of the thing for better or for worse.

There is no present disposition in the press or anywhere else to debate the guilt or innocence of the defendants any longer. Comment everywhere runs now to regret that the ugly business must be brought forth again and to hope that this time it will be settled permanently one way or another. To meet the decision of the Supreme Court a Negro sat on the grand jury that found the new indictments.

Tom Knight, who was Attorney General at the time of the last trials and who conducted the prosecution in that capacity, has since been elected Lieutenant Governor, largely as a result of prestige won in opposing "Communists and New Yorkers" allied against him in the case. Detailed as special prosecutor for the new trials, he is said to have Gubernatorial ambitions which new triumphs in the Scottsboro case would serve handsomely. Those close to him are convinced that he believes absolutely in the guilt of the Negroes, who are charged with assaults upon two white girls.

"Outsiders" Not Wanted.

In the opinion of many Alabamians the prime thing to be considered today is whether the International Labor Defense shall be permitted to win a famous victory and exploit it to further the Communist movement among Southern Negroes. These Alabamians would be well satisfied if the defense could be taken over by some well-known Southern lawyer or lawyers and an acquittal won under such command. They do not believe acquittal would be wise if the International Labor Defense were in a position to claim credit for it and they do not believe an acquittal will be possible if the defense is conducted by this or any other group identified with what has come to be known as "outside interference in Alabama's affairs." This is in all probability the essentially realist attitude toward the case.

When the United States Supreme Court ordered a new trial in the cases of two of the defendants last April on the ground that members of their race had for years been barred from jury duty in Jackson and Morgan Counties, Alabama's Governor, Bibb Graves, took immediate steps to comply with his interpretation of the decision by having the names of Negroes placed on the jury rolls of this State's courts. Similar steps were taken in other Southern States.

But it is a long cry from a jury roll to a jury room, and thus far few Negroes have made it. Negroes are being listed in jury venires and on grand jury panels, and some of them get as far as the grand jury itself, but a Negro on a trial jury is as rare as ever in the deep South, except in Federal courts.

Lawyers Bar Negroes.

The ordinary procedure from jury roll to jury room for criminal cases is that a venire of 50 to 180 names is drawn each week from the list of those on the roll, and from this venire, by a process of letting each side strike names until only 12 remain, a trial jury is selected.

In civil cases the judge draws 24 names from a box and each side strikes 6. In both criminal and civil cases, if Negroes survive the drawing they can be—and are—easily eliminated by one or both sides through the striking privilege.

Because of the relatively small number of Negroes on the original jury rolls only a very few are ever drawn for venires. These are generally struck by both sides at once, opposing counsel advising the court that to avoid advantage or disadvantage to either side the striking is by mutual agreement.

In the selection of grand juries there is a different situation. The judge draws the 18 names from a panel of 36 and inevitably, if the drawing is properly conducted, some of the Negroes on the panel will be chosen.

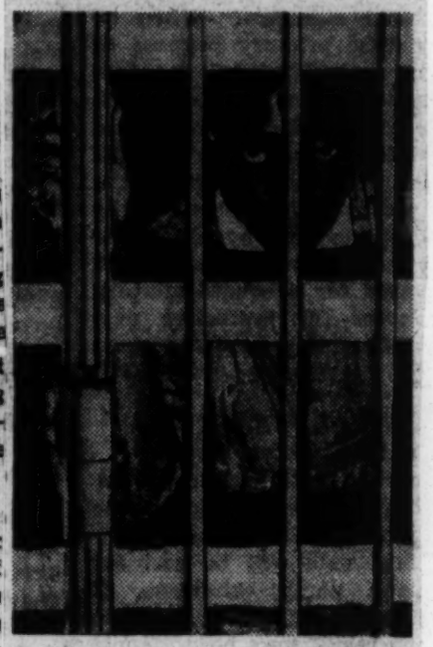
At Decatur, in the same court room where the last Scottsboro trials were held, three Negroes were drawn a few weeks ago for service with 15 white men on the Morgan County grand jury. Judge A. A. Griffith administered the oath to them without comment. But when a Negro warehouse employe was qualified for trial jury duty in Jefferson County the same week he was promptly stricken from an assault case panel by Assistant Solicitor Long.

Many "Race-Conscious."

In other States of the deep South the situation seems to be much the same. Georgia and Mississippi report a few Negroes on grand juries but none on trial juries. Florida has no Negroes on any juries at all. In Louisiana a Negro was admitted to a trial jury at Grans which convicted a member of his race accused of attacking a white woman. In Tennessee Negroes are appearing occasionally on grand juries and there is report of one on a trial jury in Criminal Court at Knoxville.

In the rare instances in which Negroes are allowed to serve on trial juries in cases involving members of their race the effect must be a matter of speculation and hearsay, of course, but it is not likely that the defendant's cause is served appreciably. The Negro juror is inclined by the circumstances to be painfully race-conscious.

Southern lawyers with whom this writer has discussed the situation are convinced that the now apparently South-wide practice of placing the names of Negroes on jury rolls is legally faithful to the point made by the United States Supreme Court last April, and that their continuing absence from actual juries is something against which there can be no recourse at law now.



The Issue Raised.

They point out that even though Chief Justice Hughes mentioned "evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County" he lodged his specific criticism against the fact "that, according to the practice of the jury commission, their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age, but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll." In other words, they believe that the placing of names on the jury rolls was all the Supreme Court ordered, or could order.

There is no doubt of the fact that Negroes are just about as successfully and consistently excluded from jury duty in this part of the South today as they were before the Supreme Court's decision. And there are enough legal loopholes and human ingenuities on hand to keep them excluded, apparently, for a long time to come.

The letter of the court's injunction is being served, perhaps, but its spirit will not prevail until the white men themselves are convinced that it is safe, comfortable and wise to rub elbows in jury rooms with their colored brothers.

REINDICTED

International.
Haywood Patterson, among the accused in the Scottsboro case.

ANOTHER TRIAL FOR THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS

New York, N. Y.

Associated Press.

Last week new indictments were returned. Some of the defendants at a previous trial at Decatur are shown as they marched to court under guard of militiamen.

HIGH COURT REJECTS NEGRO RIGHTS PLEA

"Scottsboro" Appeal in Arkansas Fails

CLOSED JURY CLAIM 'LATE'

Two Convicted of Assault Have 15 Days to File Petition for Rehearing—Other Cases Are Decided

By The Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 18.—The Arkansas Supreme Court rejected today a "Scottsboro plea" presented by attorneys for Jim X. Caruthers, 19, and Bubbles Clayton, 21, negroes, and affirmed their death sentences for criminal assault.

The tribunal held that the defense plea that the negroes were denied their constitutional rights because no negroes were on the grand or petit juries could not be considered because the question was not made an issue in the lower court.

Caruthers and Clayton, convicted of assaulting a young woman at Blytheville, Mississippi County, last Dec. 21, have 15 days in which to file a petition for a rehearing.

"There is nothing in this record tending in any way to show that there were no negroes on the grand jury that indicted them or on the petit jury that tried them," the court's opinion said.

"No objection," the ruling continued, "was made to either jury on this account nor was such a ground alleged in the motion to quash the indictment nor was any motion made to quash the trial panel on this or any other grounds.

"Not Even Metioned"

"It was not even mentioned as a ground in the motion for a new trial. This question is raised for the first time in the brief for appellant's without any record to support it. It cannot be considered even though raised in the motion for a new trial for the first time. Such assignment comes too late."

The court also rejected a defense contention that the lower court erred in refusing allegedly faulty indictments because they were not signed by the prosecuting attorney or his deputy.

"It has never been the law in this state," said the court, "that the signature of the prosecuting attorney to an indictment is necessary to its validity. On the contrary, it has been continuously held that such signature is not necessary."

The supreme court affirmed the St. Francis circuit judgment holding that E. A. Rolfe, was the winner of the county judgeship in the August, 1934, runoff primary against Charles Fleming.

The tribunal upheld the lower court's decree that Fleming had failed to show he had received a greater number of legal votes cast. Fleming contended that the lower court erred in permitting Rolfe to amend his answer to the original suit setting out the votes received by Fleming which were illegal.

The supreme court said that "to reverse this case for the reason assigned would result in permitting appellant to get the benefit of all of the illegal votes cast for him."

Without Authority

The high court held that chancery courts have no authority to decide election contests in reversing a Faulkner chancery decision of J. A. Hutto against Roy Rogers.

Rogers and others brought suit in the lower court over failure of County Judge Hutto, County Clerk John Griffith and election commissioners to place the initiated county salar act tilte on the November, 1934, general election ballot.

Rogers claimed that the petition asking the vote on the salary act was filed with Griffith in August and that the clerk issued a certificate stating that the petition contained the required number of names of qualified electors. Rogers charged that on Oct. 29, Griffith issued a second certificate saying that the petition did not contain the required number of names.

Salary act supports advertised in the newspapers and told the people they were entitled to vote on the question with rubber stamps which would be furnished. The election commissioners warned on Nov. 3, three days before the election, that such rubber stamps ballots would not be counted.

In the Nov. 6 election, the rubber stamp salary act votes won with 1,187 of the 2,101 votes cast, but the election board refused to certify the result.

The lower court held that the salary act had been legally adopted and was law.

The following opinions were delivered and proceedings had in the supreme court today

JOHNSON, C. J.:
3966. James Kelly vs. State, from Crawford circuit; affirmed.
2891. Lula Little vs. Chas. I. Evans, from Lafayette chancery; affirmed.
SMITH, J.:
4032. W. B. Hammond, admr., vs. T. W. Hamby, from White circuit; affirmed.
HUMPHREYS, J.:
4082. J. A. Hutto, county judge, vs. Roy Rogers, from Faulkner chancery; reversed and dismissed, Mehaffy, J., dissents.
MEHAFFY, J.:
4149. C. R. Ledbetter vs. W. G. Hall, from Pulaski chancery; affirmed. Butler and Baker, J. J., dissent.
4049. Mutual Benefit Health and Accident Association vs. Mamie Basham, from Johnson circuit; affirmed.
M'HANEY, J.:
3944-45. Bubbles Clayton and Jim X. Caruthers vs. State, from Mississippi circuit, affirmed.
4156. Chas. Fleming vs. E. A. Rolfe, from St. Francis circuit, affirmed.
BUTLER, J.:
3953. L. T. Talley vs. State, from Mississippi circuit, affirmed.
4050. A. B. Crissman vs. W. W. Shaver, from Cross circuit, affirmed.
BAKER, J.:
3964. Ike J. Prather vs. State, from Pulaski circuit, affirmed.
4051. John L. George vs. Evan George, from White circuit, affirmed.
PER CURIAM:
3971. James O'Neal ex parte; petition for habeas corpus, writ denied.
SUBMISSIONS:
3982. Minerva E. Yelvington vs. Nancy L. Mitchell, from Monroe chancery.
3992. Wm. L. O'Connell, Gin., vs. Arthur W. Sewell, from Ouachita chancery.
4048. Sylvia Bene vs. New York Life Insurance Company, from Pulaski circuit.
4053. T. Scott Herron vs. Southern Tractor Co., from Mississippi circuit.
4054. Pearl Dennis vs. Equitable Life Assurance Society, from Pulaski chancery.
4058. Troy Stockburger vs. Neal Cruce, from Washington circuit.
4065. Continental Oil Co. vs. City of Fort Smith, from Sebastian chancery; argued orally.
ORDERS PER CURIAM:
Cr.. 3950. Jesse Dixon vs. State from Pike circuit, rehearing denied.
3996. M. H. Greer vs. Leo Keathley, from Prairie circuit, rehearing denied.
Cr. 3971. James O'Neal ex parte; petition for habeas corpus, writ denied.
4012. Harriet A. McEachin vs. Peoples National Bank, from Pulaski chancery, motion to dismiss passed for consideration until Jan. 19, 1936.
3993. W. W. McCrary vs. Clarence Schenebeck, from Lonoke circuit, rehearing granted; substituted opinion by McHenry J.; Johnson, C. J., and Baker, J., dissent.
3923. Wm. F. Hobbs vs. W. E. Lenon, from Pulaski circuit, rehearing denied.
MOTIONS, ORDERS, ETC.:
S. L. Cantley, receiver, vs. M. Danaher from Lincoln chancery, submitted on rehearing.
John Gazzola vs. J. J. New, from Prairie circuit, submitted on rehearing.
Southeast Arkansas Telephone & Power Co. vs. W. T. Allen, from Grant circuit submitted on rehearing.
H. B. Watson et al, commrs., vs. Mercantile Bank, from Craighead chancery, advanced and set for three weeks; C. B. Barnett substituted as appellee, as interest of bank has been assigned to him.
Earl R. Wiseman, commr. revenues, vs Madison Cadillac Co., from Pulaski chancery, advanced and set for four weeks.
The First National Bank vs. J. L. Godwin, from Boone circuit, appellant given two weeks from date for brief on rehearing.
Postal Telegraph Cable Co. vs. E. A. White, from St. Francis circuit; mandate U. S. Supreme Court dismissing appeal filed.
Paul S. Bauer vs. J. A. Gwaltney, from Mississippi chancery, advanced and set for five weeks.
J. F. Sims vs. J. J. Holmes, from Prairie circuit, advanced and set for three weeks.
Paving Improvement District No. 51 vs. Refunding Board of Arkansas, from Pulaski circuit, permission granted to file brief amicus curiae.
J. C. Johnson vs. Earl Page, from Pulaski chancery, permission granted to file briefs amicus curiae.
Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana vs. Marshall I. Dykes, from Union circuit, 30 days to appellant.
Ivan Williamson, Mountain View, licensed.
J. M. Bryant vs. M. L. Edgmon, from Newton chancery, two weeks for reply brief.
Jno. White vs. Blake Williams, from Pulaski chancery; three weeks to appellee.

Concord, N. C. Tribune
November 21, 1935

Scottsboro Hearing Set December 16th

Decatur, Ala., Nov. 19.—Arraignment of the nine negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" under new indictments charging them with attacking two white women was set for December 16, today by Judge W. W. Callahan, with the trials fixed for January 6, 1936.

The new indictments, returned at Scottsboro last week by a grand jury that included one negro, Creed Sonyers, charge each of the defendants with participating in alleged mass attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates in Jackson county March 25 1931.

Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor, said in Montgomery on announcement of the dates, that Judge Callahan had agreed to postpone the trials in event a special session of the Legislature was called before they were finished.

Governor Bibb Graves recently announced that he would call the Legislature into special session early next year, and it generally is believed in official circles the call will be for January 14.

Lynchings - 1935
6
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4976

ALABAMA LEGISLATURE APPROPRIATES FUNDS FOR NEW SCOTTSBORO TRIALS

Crusader 6-8-35 New York, N.Y.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. - (CNA Special) The legal machinery in Alabama, which has for four years threatened to grind out the lives of the 9 Scottsboro boys, has been oiled again.

Says Trials Will Cost $35,000

By a unanimous vote the Alabama House of Representatives on June 4th passed the O'Neal bill setting aside state funds to pay for past and future prosecutions of the "Scottsboro cases". Representative O'Neal - Scottsboro representative - estimated the cost of new trials of the Scottsboro boys to be $35,000.

He declared that Alabama should pay for the Scottsboro trials as New Jersey paid for the Hauptmann kidnapping trial.

It is estimated that previous trials of the Scottsboro boys has cost the state of Alabama over $100,000.

Schools Are Closing

Despite the fact that thousands of dollars are available to the Alabama officials for Scottsboro trials, the state is near the bottom of the lists in providing for education. Hundreds of teachers - particularly Negro school teachers - have been laid off. Schools are being closed for lack of funds.

Representative O'Neal is also the author of a proposed bill to restrict jurors to qualified voters. This measure is intended to bar Negroes from jury service. Negroes through intimidation and subterfuges by state officials are prevented from registering and voting.

Scottsboro, Ala., Sentinel
June 6, 1935

A SALUTE TO SCOTTSBORO

John Temple Graves, II, Birmingham-Age Herald columnist, writer and lecturer, on Sunday evening, May 26th, saluted Scottsboro in his regular radio broadcast over WAPI, sponsored by the Protective Life Insurance Company. The much appreciated tribute to our town and citizens was as follows:

Tonight in Northeast Alabama the 2,000 or more inhabitants of a little Tennessee Valley town are going about their business much as all the rest of us are wont to do on Sunday nights. Some are at church; some are tuned in on the radio; some are reading; some are yawning; and many are talking. Life goes on as sedately and unself-consciously in that little town as if it were not at this moment very nearly the most widely-known one in all the world. People in Vienna know it. In Berlin they recognize its name as soon as it is sounded. They know it in Tokyo, in Rome, in Vladivostok, in Rio de Janeiro, and from Rangoon to Mandalay. Foreigners who may never have heard of Birmingham, or Atlanta or New Orleans or Nashville, or Charlotte, know this town. Or rather they know its name, for its name is Scottsboro. Scottsboro, Alabama! The town where they had the first trial of the nine negroes taken from a freight train at nearby Paint Rock, accused of a crime against two white girls. The town whose name is used universally now to designate the negro defendants and the world-famed case against them. The negroes didn't come from Scottsboro and neither did the white girls; but they are known for all time as the Scottsboro negroes. The case against them has gone on in many courts and only one of them was at Scottsboro. Yet the wide world over it's the "Scottsboro Case." If there had been only one or two negroes rather than nine, their own names would have been used, as the names of Mooney and Billings are used and as were those of Sacco and Vanzetti—but nine names were too many to repeat, so they called them "the Scottsboro negroes" and the case "the Scottsboro case." If the freight train from which the negroes were taken had run only five miles further it would have entered another county—it would have been in Madison County rather than in Jackson. Only a little difference in distance and time and it might have been the "Huntsville case," they might have been the "Huntsville negroes." It's idle to speculate on such things of course, but it's interesting at any rate to consider how a mere chain of circumstances has dragged this little town to world-wide attention and made its name a synonym for one of the ugliest and most perplexing cases in all the history of courts.

And it's such a pretty little town. I was up there last week for the commencement exercises of its Jackson County High School, and I marvelled that a name associated with something so foul should belong to a community whose physical aspects are so fair. I drove in at twilight over a broad graveled and graded highway, with blue hills of the Cumberland lining all the distances and green and growing valleys rich in every vicinity. The trees were stately and heavy-laden around the court house where the first trial has held and where the troops stood guard. The lights were warm in many cheerful windows, and there was breath of mountains in the air. No negroes at all were in sight, for, strange to say, negroes are something of a rarity in Jackson County—over 92 percent of the county's 37,000 inhabitants are white. There were two hotels to choose between, one very new and modern; the other time-honored, comfortable and extraordinarily clean. They point with pride to their theatre building—the Bocanita, a beautiful little affair in English brick—and it cost a pretty penny, too, they'll tell you. There's a hosiery mill, a box factory, a bottling plant, a rug making establishment, but these items of industry are small in the great ocean of agriculture upon which the community's economic life floats; cotton, corn, hay, soy beans, livestock, poultry, and the ever more important dairy. In Jackson County the land is everything. For love of this land the Cherokees and Chickasaws fought the Shawnees in a war that lasted "five hundred moons" until the Shawnees were driven to exile over the Ohio two hundred years ago.

And it was beside Sauta Creek in this land that Sequoia, the Cherokee scholar, taught the alphabet he had worked out for the language of his tribe. With that alphabet the Cherokees were able to achieve a civilization more advanced than that of any other Southern tribe. If Scottsboro cared, it could cite Sequoia and his school by way of claiming to be one of the earliest centers of learning in the New World. But Scottsboro cares more about the present state of its learning. There were 56 graduates at the high school commencement exercises last Tuesday; they marched through the auditorium crowd to the platform in stately sequences, a boy in a black cap and gown, a girl in a white, two by two until the platform was a vivid two-toned design. Some of the mothers had objected to the graduation gowns; they wanted a chance to deck their daughters in dresses that would be the envy of other mothers and daughters, but the school principal, who is a statesman as well as a schoolman, said not so. He insisted upon the leveling democracy of cap and gown, covering rich and poor in the single uniform of light and of learning. That there is light, that there is learning, he can prove with statistics of an achievement test sponsored by the Alabama state department of education and covering every high school in the commonwealth. The results of this test place the Scottsboro School at the top of the county high school list and level with the best of the big city schools. The principal's name is Browder, I. J. Browder—and he happens to be also, with any change of whiskers, the Scottsboro district's state senator. He does it without change of whiskers because he isn't the whiskered kind. He is a young University of Alabama graduate who is up-to-the minute every second, clean, broad-minded, well-informed. In the senate, where he serves on leave without pay from his school while the session is on, he is ranked with the forward-lookers, the enlightened ones. Politicians and professional lobbyists who approach him with appeals to a prejudice they seem to think a "Senator from Scottsboro" would possess, find to their sorrow that he hasn't any prejudices. He's the schoolman in politics, and his passion, is for education, and more education, in Alabama. If I seem to be making a political speech for him it's only because the man, like his community, offers such amazing contrast to what so many people all over the world would expect.

"High Jackson" they call the county over which Scottsboro presides. High for the Appalachian glories it commands, for the lifting splendors of its mountains, the stance of its long plateaus, the heights from which it looks down upon the Tennessee's mighty flood. Too high to deserve, even though it must endure, the internationally bad name that has come to its county seat.

Goodnight and pleasant dreams, ladies and gentlemen. There are measures of ugliness, dullness, bigotry and hate there as everywhere else in the world, but no one can visit it without this certain conclusion: all is not unlovely that's Scottsboro, Alabama, tonight in the South.

An I. L. D. Victory

PERSISTENT fighting by the International Labor Defense has won the removal of two of the Scottsboro boys, Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, from the death cell of Kilby Prison, to the Jefferson County Jail, Birmingham, where the other seven Scottsboro boys are confined.

Daily Worker

During his last two months in the death house, Patterson had to sleep on the concrete floor. He was not permitted to receive any relief money. Even his mother couldn't visit him.

6-19-35

Next steps are the hearings in July for the two youngest boys, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, and the pleas for bail for Willie Roberson and Olen Montgomery. All four boys will be represented by I.L.D. attorneys.

Money is a vital item in the Scottsboro campaign. Only $6,634 has been received for the $20,000 Scottsboro fund, and this was eaten up by expenses for the case as fast as it came in. At least $4,000 will be needed for the July hearings.

The working class has given the Scottsboro case epoch-making support. There must be no let-down now. Complete the $20,000 drive. Demand the release of the Scottsboro boys!

Montgomery, Ala. Journal
June 15, 1935

PAIR ARE MOVED IN ATTACK CASE

Scottsboro Defendants Taken From Kilby Death Row to Birmingham Jail

Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case," were removed from Kilby prison's death row Saturday and taken to Jefferson county jail at Birmingham where seven other Scottsboro defendants are held.

Patterson and Norris, whose sentences recently were reversed by the United States supreme court were given into the custody of Sheriff J. S. Sandlin, of Morgan county, where the men were last convicted of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price aboard a freight train in 1933.

Sandlin said he would go directly to Birmingham from here. The transfer was described as "routine" by prison officials, who pointed out that only convicted persons were held in Kilby's death row.

The death sentences of the negroes were reversed by the U. S. court on the grounds negroes were systematically excluded from service on the grand or trial juries connected with the case.

Birmingham, Ala. News
June 15, 1935

SCOTTSBORO MEN BACK

Two Negroes Here After Year In Kilby Death House

Haywood Patterson, 22, and Clarence Norris, 22, two of nine Scottsboro Negroes who have been confined in the Kilby Prison death house for more than a year, were returned to the Jefferson County Jail Saturday morning after the U. S. Supreme Court had reversed death sentences imposed upon them by a Morgan County Circuit Court jury for criminal assault on Victoria Price.

The Negroes were smiling and appeared to be happy to join the seven other Scottsboro Negroes who have been confined in jail here four years.

Patterson and Norris were brought to Birmingham by Sheriff Sandlin, of Morgan County, on order of Judge W. W. Callahan, who presided over their last trial.

They will be held here pending another trial.

LYNCH EDITOR JEERS VERDICT

Montgomery Paper Scoffs at Negro Jurors' Citation on Scottsboro

Daily Worker

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 3.—Featuring the threat by Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight, Jr., of new indictments against the Scottsboro boys, the Montgomery Advertiser, organ of the Alabama lynch rulers in the old Confederate slave capital, in a long leading editorial yesterday derided as "a lot of baloney" the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court reversing the death verdict against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the boys.

4-4-35

The paper is particularly enraged over the fact that the high court ruled favorably on the fundamental questions raised for the first time in a case involving Negroes by the International Labor Defense of the violation of the constitutional rights of the Negro people through the systematic exclusion of Negroes from grand and petit juries. The Advertiser admits, with an implied "so-what?", that "generally speaking the names of Negro citizens are not in the jury boxes in counties of Alabama."

"Forgets" Mass Pressure

The Advertiser sharply criticizes the federal court for "concerning itself" with what it cynically describes as "the academic political rights' of a politically dispossessed race." In its rage against the ruling of the high court, it leaves out of consideration altogether the fact that the favorable ruling was wrested by the world-wide mass protest from the high court, which at the same time upheld the disfranchisement of Negroes by the Texas State organization of the Democratic Party of President Roosevelt.

"Race Question Rarely Raised"

The slander of the Alabama rulers and jury commissioners, declared untenable by the U. S. Supreme Court, that no Negroes are qualified by "intelligence, honesty" etc., to serve on juries, is again raised by the Advertiser with the claim that "the jury commissioners of Alabama, inquiring for new names to put on their lists, never ask whether one is black of white, brown or bronze." However, admits the paper:

"The citizens to whom these verbal inquiries are addressed, instinctively report only the names of white persons. The race question is rarely if ever raised between jury commissioners and citizens whom they question."

Then, with typical slave-drive logic and hypocrisy, it continues:

"From a strict technical standpoint Negroes are not excluded from juries; in common practice they are, of course."

It was the raising of this basic issue by the International Labor Defense together with its policy of organizing mass pressure on the Alabama courts and the U. S. Supreme Court, that evoked the furious hatred of the lynch rulers for the militant defense organization, leading to repeated, but unsuccessful attempts to drive the I. L. D. out of the case.

Jury To Reopen Scottsboro Case

Advertiser

Jackson County Venire For Probe Today Includes Names Of 2 Negroes

11-13-35

SCOTTSBORO, ALA., Nov. 12.—(AP)—From its starting point nearly five years ago, "the Scottsboro case" tonight had been moved back to Jackson County where a new grand jury tomorrow will again investigate the alleged mass attacks on two white women on March 25, 1931.

The venire of 36 from which the 18-man grand jury will be selected contained the names of two negroes, the first to be called in Jackson Circuit for many years, but whether they will serve was not known.

Montgomery

Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor retained by the State, said he would call as many witnesses as necessary, and would ask that true bills be returned against the nine negro defendants charging them with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates.

Mrs. Price has appeared in all seven trials in the case thus far, but the Bates girl after appearing in the first four here in April, 1931, two years later at Decatur, repudiated her previous testimony. She asserted she was not molested.

Since her dramatic appearance in the courthouse at Decatur to repudiate her former testimony partially on which eight of the nine were convicted and sentenced to death, she has dropped from sight. Lieut. Gov. Knight said the grand jury would be informed her whereabouts are unknown.

New indictments were made necessary under a decision of the United States Supreme Court last March which in effect sustained defense motions to quash the indictments on constitutional grounds.

The nation's highest tribunal held that there had been "systematic exclusion" of negroes from the grand and trial juries in Jackson and in Morgan County, where the trials were held under a change of venue.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, representing the defendants, in the trials of Haywood Patterson, thrice convicted and sentenced to death and Clarence Norris, twice under death sentence, had contended the absence of negroes from the jury rolls in the two counties violate their constitutional rights.

Since the decision reversing death sentences for Norris and Patterson the names of negroes have been placed in the jury boxes in most Alabama counties.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

4977

NEW HEARINGS SET IN SCOTTSBORO CASES
6-[illegible]-35

I.L.D. Attorneys To Argue Petitions For Bail

Crusader News Agency

I.L.D. SEEKS IMMEDIATE RELEASE OF BOYS

NEW YORK - (CNA SPECIAL) - Another step in the four-year fight to free the nine Scottsboro boys, was taken last week when the International Labor Defense secured a date for hearings on the bail petition of Clen Montgomery and Willie Robertson, two boys now imprisoned in Birmingham jail.

Will Cite Judge Horton Decision

The hearings on the bail petitions are similar to regular trials. The I.L.D. attorneys will support their petitions for bail with witnesses brought to show the innocence of the boys. They will cite the decision of Judge Horton, and other documents.

These hearings will take place in Decatur, Alabama, before Judge W. W. ("Speed") Callahan who rushed through the trials of Patterson and Norris last year.

The bail petitions, filed by Attorney C. B. Powell of Birmingham, have been set for hearing the first week in July.

Attorney Osmund K. Fraenkel, who has been in charge of the Scottsboro proceedings since the last trial, and Attorney Powell will argue the petitions.

Bent upon holding the boys for further prosecution, Lt.-Governor Thomas E. Knight, former Alabama attorney general and special prosecutor for the Scottsboro cases, has announced that he will oppose the granting of any bail at all to any of the boys.

Death Sentence Reversed 3 Times

World wide mass protests for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys has resulted in setting aside death verdicts against Patterson and Norris by Judge Horton of Alabama, and reversals of death sentences in 1932 and again in 1935 by the United States Supreme Court. The innocence of the Scottsboro boys is now generally accepted after 4 years of pitiless exposure by the I.L.D. of the whole frame-up character of "rape" charges including the lily-white jury system under which the boys were prosecuted.

Held On False Warrants

Despite the fact that the indictments against the Scottsboro boys have been quashed, they are being held for re-indictment on the basis of new false warrants sworn out by Victoria Price.

The I.L.D. is pressing to have juvenile hearings on the cases of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, the two youngest boys. These hearings, which are in the nature of the trial, should be conducted at the same time of the bail hearings, the I.L.D. declared last Tuesday.

I.L.D. Issues Statement

The following statement was issued by the I.L.D. last week:

"The slackening up in the Scottsboro $20,000 drive of the I.L.D. to meet the daily expenses of the campaign, and for the other heavy expenses of these hearings, is endangering the fight to free the Scottsboro boys," Anna Damon, acting national secretary, pointed out.

"A flood of protests to Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama, at Montgomery, demanding the unconditional freedom of all the boys, and intensifying the collection of funds for the defense, which should be rushed to the I.L.D., Room 610, 80 E. 11th Street, New York," was called for.

Southern Spokesmen

Sirs: June 5-6-35

In your issue of April 15 you make this astounding statement with respect to the Supreme Court's second Scottsboro decision: "Alabamans and the Press of the entire South took that decision with a stunned and apprehensive silence."

So far from receiving the recent findings with "a stunned and apprehensive silence," editors throughout the South commented immediately, and most of those whose comments I saw not only thought the Supreme Court entirely justified in its action, but expressed gratification that the conviction had been set aside.

A wholly incomplete list of papers which approved the Supreme Court's action would include the Birmingham Age-Herald, published in the State where the crime occurred: the Raleigh News and Observer, the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot and the Richmond Times-Dispatch. The Memphis Commercial Appeal urged the authorities of Alabama not to try the defendants again, saying that there is too much doubt concerning their guilt. . . .

VIRGINIUS DABNEY
Chief Editorial Writer
Richmond Times-Dispatch
Richmond, Va.

SCOTTSBORO FUND VOTED

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 4 (AP) While the Alabama senate today defeated a movement to reconsider the Dominick sterilization measure passed Friday, the house today without a dissenting vote passed the O'Neal bill appropriating $35,000 to defray the cost of prosecuting the "Scottsboro cases."

'SCOTTSBORO DECISION' PLEA IS TURNED DOWN

A formal decision was rendered yesterday by Federal Judge E. Marvin Underwood in the habeas corpus proceedings of Buddy Knox, negro, against H. M. Isbell, warden of the Georgia state penitentiary, for Polk county. 10-25-33

Knox had demanded his release from the Polk county penitentiary on the ground that no negro had sat on the jury that convicted him.

Judge Underwood declared this was no case for a habeas corpus, but should have been made the basis of a writ of error or an appeal. He denied the petition.

Grave Concern Over Future Fate of Scottsboro Boys and Question of Negro Jurors Is Expressed

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The full text of the letter sent Governor Graves of Alabama under date of May 20, by more than 100 nationally prominent people of both races, including congressmen and senators, setting forth reasons for effecting the freedom of the nine Scottsboro boys, follows in full:

The state of affairs which made it necessary for the U. S. Supreme Court to render its recent decision in the Scottsboro case compels us to express our grave concern.

The decision states in part: "We think that the evidence. . . established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids. . . and, upon the proof contained in the record now before us, a conclusion that their (Negroes) continuous and total exclusion from juries was because there were none possessing the requisite qualifications, connot be sustained. . . the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings."

Your statement of April 5th recognized the seriousness of the situation and declared it to be "the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them (supreme laws of the land) in letter and in spirit. . . This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county of the state."

A Difference Noted

But the U. S. Supreme Court decision deals specifically with the exclusion of Negroes from juries, not merely with the absence of their names from jury boxes. This difference is highly significant and becomes more so in view of the announced intention of Senator Bonner to propose a bill in the Alabama legislature which would restrict jury service to qualified voters only.

The words of Senator Bonner make it plain that the purpose of the bill is to maintain discrimination against Negroes in jury service in contravention of the U. S. Supreme Court decision and to rest this upon the disfranchisement of Negroes. He stated recently: "Take my county, for instance, we do not have a single qualified Negro voter."

Among other similar statements we call your attention particularly to the editorial of the Montgomery Advertiser for April 2, which was reprinted in the Jackson County Sentinel and circulated in the very county where the nine Negro boys were illegally indicted, and tried in a court surrounded and dominated by a lynch mob, and where, it has been announced, new indictments have been sought against them.

This editorial states: "Mr. Hughes' pontifical deliverance is a lot of baloney. . . we cannot see what the political rights and privileges of Negroes in Alabama have to do with the guilt or innocence of the gorillas who are charged with criminal assault upon two women." This, in spite of the testimony of Ruby Bates, Lester Carter, the examining physicians, and other witnesses at the second trial of Haywood Patterson which proclaimed the innocence of these boys before the world.

These appeals to prejudice and blood-lust are being made in the face of the decision rendered by Judge James E. Horton, in reversing the second conviction and death sentence against Haywood Patterson: "The testimony of the prosecutrix in this case is not only uncorroborated, but it also bears upon its face indications of improbability and is contradicted by other evidence, and in addition thereto the evidence greatly preponderates in favor of the defendant."

Since four years ago, when these nine unemployed boys were seized and tried at Scottsboro, we have observed numerous violations of basic principles of justice and human rights which are solemnly affirmed by the Constitution of the land and also by laws of the state of Alabama. We are aghast at the fraudulent placing of names of Negroes on the jury rolls of Jackson County, at the appeals to prejudice and denial of legal and constitutional rights by prosecuting officials and courts, at the reports of tortures inflicted upon these boys, at the lynch spirit manifested throughout.

Lynching Spirit Rises

That this lynch spirit is again rising is evident from such statements in the press as this provocative expression found in the correspondence columns of the Birmingham Post: "When you come to think of how the Scottsboro case has been dilly-dallied around. . . you can easily see that lynching would have been the lesser of two evils."

As writers, educators and other professional people, as human beings who are convinced that these boys are innocent, we urge that you use every means at your disposal to prevent reindictments and to assure the safe release of these nine boys, unjustly held in prison for over four years.

We urge also that you take requisite measures to enforce the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court affirming the right of Negroes to serve on juries and to enforce all the democratic rights guaranteed to Negroes as to all the people by the Constitution.

List of Signers of Letter Asking For Freedom of Scottsboro Boys Reads Like U. S. Roll of Honor

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The list of those who signed the letter to Governor Graves of Alabama asking for the release of the Scottsboro boys reads like an American roll of honor. The letter was drafted and circulated for signatures by the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, Room 534, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. The list of the signatories follows:

GERALD P. NYE, U. S. Senator; THOS. R. AMLIE, N. S. Representative; JOHN DEWEY, professor emeritus, Columbia Univ.; DR. JOHN HAYNES HOLMES, Community Church; BISHOP FRANCIS J. McCONNELL, Methodist Federation of Social Service; E. HALDEMAN-JULIUS, publisher; OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD, editor and publisher; JAMES WATERMAN WISE, writer and lecturer; PROFESSOR BROADUS MITCHELL, Johns Hopkins University; FRANZ BOAS, Columbia University; ROGER N. BALDWIN, director, American Civil Liberties Union; VAN WYCK BROOKS, poet; FRANK E. BAKER, president, State Teachers College, Milwaukee; ERSKINE CALDWELL, writer; REVEREND WILLIAM B. SPOFFORD, director, Church League for Industrial Democracy; WILLIAM SAROYAN, writer; JOHN DOS PASSOS, writer; LOUIS ADAMIC, writer.

MALCOLM COWLEY, editor, The New Republic; JOHN HOWARD LAWSON, writer; TESS SLESINGER, novelist; JOHN L. SPIVAK, writer; ALFRED KREYMBORG, poet; H. W. L. DANA, former professor at Harvard and Columbia Universities; GEORGE SOULE, editor, The New Republic; HUBERT C. HERRING, director, Council for Social Action of the Congregational and Christian Churches of the U. S. A.; ALICI HAMILTON, Md D.; DR. BERNHARD J. STERN, Columbia University; DOROTHY DUNBAR BROMLEY, columnist, New York World-Telegram; PETER WITT, Cleveland, Ohio; MARTHA GRUENING, writer; PROFESSOR ROBERT MOSS LOVETT, University of Chicago; FREDA KIRCHWEY, editor, The Natien; LEWIS MUMFORD, writer and critic; ERNEST BOYD, literary critic.

* * * *

JAMES WELDON JOHNSON, Fisk University; ABRAM L. HARRIS, Howard University; PROFESSOR ALAIN LOCKE, Howard University; PROFESSOR J. O. BAILEY, University of North Carolina; LETITIA P. RANDALL, writer, Baltimore, Md.; PROFESSOR VIDA D. SCUDDER, Wellesley College; DR. RALPH J. BUNCHE, Howard University; ELMER P. CARTER, editor, Opportunity; EDWARD A. ROSS, University of Wisconsin; GEO. CLIFTON EDWARDS, Dallas, Texas; PROF. JESSIE H. THOMAS, Swarthmore College; REVEREND ERNEST F. TITTLE, First Methodist Episcopal Church, Evanston, Ill.; ANNA M. PENNYPACKER, writer; WILLYSTINE GOODSELL, Teachers College, Columbia University; ADELAIDE CASE, Teachers College, Columbia University; ISABEL M. STEWART, Teachers College, Columbia University.

BESSIE L. GAMBRILL, Yale Graduate School; ANNA ROCHESTER, writer; GRACE HUTCHINS, Labor Research Association; MAURITZ A. HALLGREN, writer, Glenwood, Md.; MRS. KENROY MALCOMBE, Chapel Hill, N. C.; HORACE M. KALLEN, educator, New School for Social Research; PROFESSOR F. H. HANKINS, Smith College; DR. EDWARD T. DEVINE, New York; HENRY HARAP, Western Reserve University, Ohio; PROFESSOR P. F. BRISSENDEN, Columbia University; PROFESSOR READ BAIN, Oxford, Ohio; ARNOLD DONAWA, D.D.S.; REUBEN S. YOUNG, M.D.; REV. HERMAN F REISSIG, Kings Highway Church; REV. E. C. MACKLIN, Victoria Congregational Church; REV. A. J. BUTTREY, Park Ridge, N. J.; REV. JAMES K. MORSE, Hackensack, N. J.; REV. RALPH H. READ, New York.

DR. HENRY NEUMANN, Ethical Culture Society; JOHN L. ELLIOTT, Ethical Culture Society; W. RUSSELL BOWIE, Rector, Grace Church; EVANS CLARK, writer; DR. W. P. LADD, Connecticut; A. EPSTEIN, New York; HAROLD LOEB, economist; LEROY E. BOWMAN, New York; BENJAMIN GINSBURG, writer; EDWARD NEWHOUSE, writer; MARIAN MURRAY, writer; MARGUERITE YOUNG, writer, Washington, D. C.; ARNOLD WILLIAMS, University of North Carolina; MURIEL WOLFF, University of North Carolina Press; HERMAN E. SPIVEY, University of North Carolina; LORETTA CARROLL BAILEY, Chapel Hill, North Carolina; SALLIE E. SCOTT, teacher, Charlotte; CARO MAE RUSSELL, Chapel Hill, N. C.

PHILLIPS RUSSELL, writer and professor, University of North Carolina; LILLIAN LOWENFAL, New York; LEANE ZUGSMITH, journalist; LYND WARD, artist; J. ALBERT HIRSCH, publicist; PROFESSOR LEO GERSHOY, Long Island College; JEROME KLEIR, Columbia University; LISTON M. OAK, editor; EMANUEL EISENBERG, writer; JEROME SCHLOSS, New York; JOSEPH VOGEL, writer; J. L. ANDERSON, labor leader, North Carolina; GEORGE BONNER, M.D., WINIFRED L. CHAPPELL, secretary, Methodist Federation for Social Service; REV. RALPH B. URMY, Westfield, N. J.; FRANK L. PALMER, editor, Federated Press; HARRY BLOCK, editor, Covici-Friede; PROFESSOR THURMAN ARNOLD, Yale University; ARTHUR CAPPER, U. S. Senator, Kansas; THEODORE DREISER, writer.

LINCOLN STEFFENS, author; ELLA WINTER, author; PROFESSOR EDGAR DALE, Ohio State University; KATHERINE TERRILL, Council for Social Action of the Congregational and Christian Churches; MRS. FLORENCE HARRIMAN.

Wilson, N. C., Times
November 6, 1935

TWO NEGROES IN SCOTTSBORO JURY

Scottsboro, Ala., Nov. 6.—Names of two Negroes were drawn in a list of 35 from which an 18-man grand jury will be organized to consider new indictments in the international cause celebre—the Scottsboro assault case.

Presence of names of two negroes on the list was without precedent in Jackson county. The drawing of the new list followed reversal of death sentence convictions of two of the negro defendants by the United States Supreme Court on grounds members of their race systematically had been excluded from service on the jury which returned original indictments.

The two negroes are Bird Hill, negro farmer of near Bridgeport, Ala., and Creed Conyer, negro laborer of Paint Rock, Ala.

Their names were drawn from a list of 1,200 citizens by Circuit Judge H. E. Hawkins.

However, since under Alabama law only 18 men comprise a grand jury, it is possible that one or both might be disqualified before the special grand jury is empanelled on Nov. 13 and asked to return new indictments against the nine negro youths charged in the internationally-famous crime.

Although representing the first time negroes have been drawn for service in this county, negroes have been called for service in nearby Morgan and Jefferson counties since the Supreme Court ruling.

The negro population of Jackson county, however, is the smallest in the state, and the percentage of negroes on any jury list was expected to be correspondingly small.

Alabama

4478

Lynchings—1935

Legal Punishment for Rape

Birmingham, Ala. News
July 9, 1935

Relieving Jackson County Of An Unjust Burden

Simple justice has been done Jackson County by the bill, passed by the Legislature and signed Monday by Gov. Graves, appropriating $35,000 for payment of past and future costs of the so-called Scottsboro case. Representative O'Neal, of Jackson, who sponsored the measure, appealed to the Legislature to pass it on the ground that it was unfair to place the heavy expense of the trials on his county when none of the principals involved in the case was a resident of the county. The people of the state agree with him, as the Legislature did. It was merely by chance that the case originated in Jackson County.

Under the law, Jackson County stood to bear the costs of the trials even after the case was removed to the Morgan County Circuit Court under change of venue. Two or three years ago an appeal was voiced in behalf of relieving Jackson County of the great expense of the trials. It was sympathetically received at the time, and it is gratifying that it has now been definitely answered by the enactment of the O'Neal bill.

Scottsboro, Ala., Sentinel
July 11, 1935

GOOD NEIGHBORS

Jackson County is truly thankful to the members of the Alabama Legislature from all over the state for the almost unanimous passing of the bill to relieve this county of the enormous and strangling costs of the notorious "Scottsboro cases." The bill, already passed by both houses and signed by the Governor, appropriates $35,000 by the State of Alabama to pay costs of these cases and provides for future trials in the same litigation. Jackson County was a sort of "innocent bystander" in this widely publicized matter. All persons concerned, both negroes, white men and white girls, were nonresidents of this county. The stopping of the freight train at Paint Rock, only about four miles from the Western county line, brought us a lap full of trouble, expense and undesireable advertising.

Scottsboro Case Expense Bill Okeh

The bill by Representative O'Neal of Jackson County, which makes an appropriation of $35,000 to cover past and future costs in connection with trial of the "Scottsboro Cases" was signed by Gov. Graves yesterday. Trials of these cases already held have placed a heavy cost burden on Jackson County where the crime with which the defendants are charged took place, and costs in future trials will also be chargeable to that county under the law, despite the change of venue to Morgan County.

Other measures signed by the Governor yesterday included the following: S. 215, repealing the permit fee of $1 a year imposed on cotton gins and collected by the State Department of Agriculture. H. 338, authorizing building and loan associations to transfer their mortgages and the indebtedness thereby secured for less than the amount due thereon to the Home Owners Loan Corporation, or to any other corporation created by or under an Act of Congress; and to facilitate operation in the State of Federal savings and loan associations. H. 446, enlarging the duties and powers of the State Docks Commission, and providing for the employment of a Harbor Master and deputies in supervising and policing the harbor and port of Mobile.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
July 15, 1935

Four Miles

The Jackson County Sentinel, published in Scottsboro, takes occasion to thank the members of the legislature for appropriating $35,000 for expenses of the Scottsboro trials. May The Daily add: "Me too!"

Remember a good part of the money still owing for the Scottsboro prosecution is owed to persons in Morgan county. Perhaps by now they have received their checks but at any rate we feel sure the money was or will be welcome.

The Sentinel also calls attention to what a vast difference a matter of four miles means to Jackson county in that case. Not a one of the principals in this famous case was a resident of Jackson county and only the fact that the train was stopped at Paint Rock, just four miles from the western boundary of the county dumped the case into Jackson county's lap.

Morgan is equally an "innocent bystander," the cases having been transferred to this county on a change of venue petition, largely because of the fact that none of the principals were residents of this county.

The Sentinel says:

"Jackson county is truly thankful to the members of the Alabama legislature from all over the state for the almost unanimous passing of the bill to relieve this county of the enormous and strangling costs of the notorious 'Scottsboro cases.' The bill, already passed by both houses and signed by the governor, appropriates $35,000 by the state of Alabama to pay costs of these cases and provides for future trials in the same litigation. Jackson county was a sort of "innocent bystander" in this widely publicized matter. All persons concerned, both negroes, white men and white girls, were non-residents of this county. The stopping of the freight train at Paint Rock, only about four miles from the western county line, brought us a lapful of trouble, expense and undesirable advertising."

The Alabama Lynchers

THE Alabama lynchers are trying new tricks.

They have learned lessons from their previous experiences with the Scottsboro trials, in which they saw tremendous masses in organized array, putting up a fight to save the lives of the nine innocent Negro boys.

Through a series of postponements and delays, Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight, for more than four years the leading figure in the persecution of the boys, is attempting to cripple the Scottsboro defense. He wants to scuttle the preparations to back up with mass pressure the legal actions which are being taken by the attorneys of the International Labor Defense on behalf of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, juveniles who have not yet had a hearing in the proper court, and Willie Robertson and Olen Montgomery, for whom an attempt is being made to secure bail.

The trickery of Knight must be met by a conscious drive for real action around these hearings. Protests should immediately be sent to Governor Bibb Graves, Attorney-General A. A. Carmichael and unconditional freedom for all the boys.

At the same time we must meet the $35,000 lynch-fund voted by the Alabama Legislature for prosecution of the Scottsboro boys by building a fighting defense fund to free them. Rush funds to the International Labor Defense, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Eufaula, Ala. Tribune
July 22, 1935

"SCOTTSBORO" OMITTED

The legislature passed a bill appropriating $35,000 for court costs in the trial of the nine negroes at Scottsboro and although the case is nationally known as the "Scottsboro" case, that name does not appear in the measure. The trial has already been a tremendous burden upon Jackson county, which appealed to the legislature for help.

Following the precedent of New Jersey in underwriting the Hauptmann trial, the legislature enacted the law "for the payment to the persons to whom originally due, their heirs, executors, or administrators, of unpaid costs and fees of jurors, officers and witnesses which are legal charges against any county fund; accrued, or which will accrue, in the prosecution of the criminal cases now pending against Haywood Patterson, Eugene Williams, Charlie Weems, Roy Wright, Ozie Powell, Willie Roberson, Andy Wright, Olen Montgomery and Clarence Norris, five O'Neal of Jackson county, where the sum of $35,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed as hereinafter provided, out of any monies in the treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The act, introduced by Representa-

Scottsboro Trial Is Set In Alabama

Daily Worker

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 3.—Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., said today that new Scottsboro trials probably will begin next month at Decatur, Ala. The Morgan (Decatur) county jury rolls are being revised to include the names of Negroes, Knight said. He made no comment on the general opinion here that the State would seek to prevent Negroes from actually serving on Alabama juries.

9-4-35

As State Attorney General, Knight conducted the prosecution against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the boys, whose death sentences were twice reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court under pressure of world wide mass protest.

New York Daily Worker

For his rabid attacks on the defendants and the entire Negro people, Knight was nominated by the State Democratic organization for Lieutenant Governor, by way of promotion for his services to the Alabama ruling class. He has since been named special prosecutor in the Scottsboro case.

New York Enquirer

SEP 22 1935

Scottsboro Case Trial Date Set For November

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 22—The famous Scottsboro assault trials, in the courts for four years, will not be resumed until the middle of November, because of a lack of jury rolls in Jackson (Scottsboro) County, Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight, Jr., announced yesterday.

Knight, special prosecutor in the cases which have gone through three Alabama court trials and have been reversed twice by the U. S. Supreme Court and once by an Alabama trial judge, previously had declared the cases would come to trial sometime in October.

A special session of the grand jury will be called to reindict the nine Negroes charged with assaulting two white girls in a railway car near Scottsboro, Ala., March 31, 1931.

The U. S. Supreme Court, in its most recent decision reversing the convictions and death sentences of the Negro youths, held that the original indictments accusing the Negroes were illegal because members of their own race had been systematically excluded from service on the grand jury.

SCOTTSBORO ISSUES Communist FACE SUPREME COURT

Arkansas Jurists Expected To Act Within Three Weeks

Appeal

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 26.—Issues similar to those in the death sentences given seven negroes at Scottsboro, Ala., for criminal assault will be pondered this fall by the Arkansas Supreme Court in the appeal of two negroes sentenced to death at Blytheville April 9.

7-22-35

Bubbles Clayton, 21, and Jim X. Caruthers, 19, were convicted in Mississippi circuit court of attacking two young women on a freight train.

Memphis Press

Citing the Supreme Court decision in one of the Scottsboro cases, attorneys for Clayton and Caruthers claim that their clients were denied their rights to have negroes on the grand and petit juries, that a change of venue should have been allowed, that the jury was forced to return a verdict after reporting themselves unable to agree on punishment, that the negroes were improperly questioned during the trial, that identification of the negroes as the assailants was impossible, that the negroes were beaten by officers.

The case is expected to be taken under submission by the supreme court within three weeks. Scores of letters have been sent to Governor Futrell on both sides of the case.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

SEP 22 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASE PUSHED IN ALABAMA

Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 21 (AP).—Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special State counsel in the Scottsboro case, said today that he would ask for a special session of the Jackson County Grand Jury in three weeks to re-indict the nine colored defendants.

If new indictments are returned, Knight said, he will seek an early trial and a change of venue to Morgan County, where the last trials were held. The men are charged with attacking two white girls on a freight train in March, 1931.

Bronx, N.Y. Home News

SEP 22 1935

New Trial for "Scottsboro Boys" Delayed to Mid-November in Absence of Jury Rolls

Montgomery, Ala.—The famous Scottsboro assault trials, in the courts for four years, will not be resumed until the middle of November because of a lack of jury rolls in Jackson (Scottsboro) County, Lieut.-Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., announced yesterday.

Knight, special prosecutor in the cases which have gone through three Alabama court trials and have been reversed twice by the U. S. Supreme Court and once by an Alabama trial judge, previously had declared the cases would come to trial sometime in October.

A special session of the Grand Jury will be called to reindict the nine colored youths charged with assaulting two white girls in a railway car near Scottsboro, Ala., on March 31, 1931.

The U. S. Supreme Court, in its most recent decision reversing the convictions and death sentences of the youths, held that the original indictments accusing them were illegal because members of their own race had been systematically excluded from service on the Grand Jury.

Orders Jury Lists Revised

After the Supreme Court gave that decision in April, Gov. Bibb Graves wrote trial judges and Jury Commission foremen in the State urging them to revise their jury lists to "comply with the supreme law of the land" in seeing that colored persons were not barred from jury duty. Many counties are now revising their jury lists.

No official Jury Board has existed in Jackson County since Jan. 1, 1935. The law requires at least two members before any work can be done and in Jackson County there has been only one member of the board. Gov. Graves appointed two other members this month.

As soon as the board completes organization, Judge A. E. Hawkins will order the board to refill the Jackson County jury boxes. This procedure is expected to consume three weeks and then the special Grand Jury session will be called, with 60 days probably elapsing before the indictments will be returned.

After the indictments, the cases will go into the jurisdiction of the Morgan (Decatur) County Court, where the sentences were given. The trials were held in Decatur on a change of venue from Scottsboro.

Knight said that H. G. Bailey, Solicitor from Jackson County, and Melvin Hutson, Morgan County prosecutor, will aid him in the trials at Decatur.

The indictments will be based on warrants sworn early this summer by Mrs. Victoria Price, one of the alleged attack victims. She charges each of the nine youths with criminal assault. Ruby Bates was the other purported victim.

The accused are Heywood Patterson, Clarence Norris, Charles Weems, Ozie Powell, Willie Roberson, Andy Wright and Olen Montgomery. Two of them, Roy White and Eugene Williams, have been remanded to the jurisdiction of the juvenile courts.

SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS

SEP 25 1935

Race Issue Comes Forward

Reports from Scottsboro, Ala., announce that the way is being cleared for a bitter legal battle on the race issue in a new trial of the famous Scottsboro assault cases. Judge Hawkins has ordered the jury commission to fill the jury box in keeping with the most recent decision of the United States Supreme Court. From this box will be drawn a new grand jury which will be asked to re-indict the nine negro defendants. New warrants were sworn out early in the summer by one of the alleged victims of the attack.

The race issue has been sharpened by a letter of Gov. Bibb Graves to all Alabama trial judges to fill jury boxes in keeping "with the supreme law of the land." Death sentences of the defendants were reversed by the Supreme Court in a ruling which held in effect that their indictments were illegal since members of their race had been excluded systematically from service on the grand jury. It is generally regarded as pure guess work to speculate on how many names of negroes may appear in the new jury lists. It has been pointed out that Jackson (Scottsboro) county has the smallest negro population of any Alabama county. It is estimated that the work of filling the jury box will take at least three weeks. When the work is completed, the jury commission will notify the judge who will take steps for drawing a new grand jury.

New York Herald-Tribune

OCT 8 1935

3 Negroes Sworn on Jury In Scottsboro Courtroom

First Since Supreme Court Hit 'Systematic Exclusion'

DECATUR, Ala., Oct. 7 (AP).—Three Negroes were sworn in on the Morgan County Grand Jury today in the same courtroom where two years ago attorneys for the nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case introduced evidence to substantiate a claim of "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from juries in this county.

Judge A. A. Griffith, presiding, in qualifying the grand jury and in charging it to investigate all criminal cases brought before it by the Circuit Solicitor, made no comment on the presence of Negroes on the panel.

Spectators displayed only mild interest as the three Negroes took their seats—the first in the memory of oldest courthouse employees. The Negroes are Jim Sanford, of Decatur, former railway shop employee; Arthur Stewart and Glen Sharpley, both farmers.

Evidence introduced in court showed no Negroes had served on juries in recent years and formed the basis of an appeal to the United States Supreme Court in behalf of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, both convicted and sentenced to death for an attack on Mrs. Victoria Price aboard a freight train in Jackson County, March 25, 1931. The nation's highest tribunal set the verdicts aside, holding there had been "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from the juries and the constitutional rights of the defendants violated.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama.

4979

Fight Must Be Pressed for Scottsboro Boys

By ANNA DAMON
(Acting National Secretary, International Labor Defense)

We have passed one more milestone on the long road to Scottsboro freedom.

In a decision that was hailed with joy wherever men are oppressed, that was greeted by the Scottsboro boys themselves in the cells of Kilby Prison and Jefferson County Jail, with happy shouts, the United States Supreme Court was forced to reverse the death sentences against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris. And contained in this decision is the first uncompromising and unequivocal statement by this court in favor of the right universally denied in the South—of Negro citizens to sit as jurors. The importance of this decision can hardly be over-estimated. For the Negro people, the denial of this right has become, along with the denial of their right to vote, the symbol of their outraged status as an oppressed nation.

The decision of the Supreme Court has the effect of wiping out the indictments drawn up at Scottsboro, Alabama, four years ago. In the minds of many people not yet sufficiently aware of the determined lynch-spirit of the Alabama ruling-class, illusions have been born that the Scottsboro boys will now be set free, that there will be no attempt at re-indictments. But almost immediately came word from Alabama that Thomas Knight, special prosecutor of the Scottsboro cases, would seek re-indictments, even going to the extent of calling a special session of the Jackson County grand jury for this purpose.

The road to Scottsboro freedom is still an uphill road. There exists the possibility of smashing any attempt on the part of the State of Alabama to re-indict these boys. But this can only be done if the working-class shows more determination in the cause of Scottsboro freedom than does the Alabama ruling class in the cause of Scottsboro persecution. Thousands of telegrams and letters, pouring in at once upon Governor Bibb Graves and upon the State Supreme Court both at Montgomery, Ala., can smash any attempt to reindict the Scottsboro boys and can at last achieve the final step to Scottsboro liberation.

There are still other dangers that beset our path. There is the danger—present throughout these four long years of the Scottsboro fight, but now looming greater than ever—that the Alabama ruling-class will seek to dispose of the Scottsboro case by a rope-and-faggot-lynching. It is therefore necessary that the largest possible number of people and organizations inform the Governor of Alabama that in their eyes he is being held responsible for the safety of the Scottsboro boys.

The decision of the Supreme Court has given rise to new illusions concerning its fairness and its impartiality. To these illusions the actions of the Supreme Court itself, on Monday last, give the best answer. At the same time that the Supreme Court handed down the Scottsboro verdict, it handed down another decision, also of far-reaching consequence. In a case specifically brought as a test of the right of the Negro in the South to vote in primaries, the court decided that the Democratic Party of Texas is a "voluntary organization and competent to decide its membership"—that is, that the Democratic Party of Texas may limit participation in its primaries to its own members, and that it may refuse Negroes membership in the party. It is not without interest to know that when the Texas voting case came up before the U. S. Supreme Court two years ago, that court was forced to declare a state law, barring Negroes from the ballot, illegal, but at the same time the decision of the Supreme Court gave the white ruling group in Texas the broadest possible hint, that it could get around the decision by making the Democratic primaries an inner-party instead of a state affair. This hint the Texas rulers immediately took. Thus, while the Supreme Court with one hand affirms a fundamental right of the Negro people—to sit on juries—it takes away with the other hand another right equally fundamental—the right to vote.

How does it come about that the Supreme Court can act in such a way that its right hand knows not what its left hand is doing! Only the most naive persons will believe that these decisions are decided solely on points of law, that the Supreme Court had no interest in the political and social effects of its two decisions, but that it based itself, in an impartial, mechanical way upon the letter and precedent of the law. The fact is that no mass campaign had been developed around the Texas case. In accord with the well-known policy of many misleaders, white and Negro, and particularly of the leadership of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Texas case was brought before the Supreme Court, not with a demand for a fundamental right, a demand backed by the voices of indignant and determined millions. The Texas case was brought before the Supreme Court humbly and quietly, as slaves go before a master. And the Supreme Court had no hesitation in turning down the plea.

On the other hand, in the Scottsboro case, the two-fisted policy of the I. L. D., combining the greatest mass defense with the best available legal defense, has once more been proved correct. The excellent work of Osmond K. Fraenkel, constitutional attorney who was in charge of the Scottsboro appeals, the arguments presented by Walter H. Pollak constitutional expert, and the briefs in the Norris and Patterson cases, which they drew up, provided the legal hook on which the Supreme Court was forced by the mass protest to hang its decision.

The court could not help feeling the tremendous pressure, could not help hearing the loud voices of the millions determined that the nine boys should go free. During the four long years of the Scottsboro fight, the name of this little town has been written large on newspapers in every corner of the world, has penetrated into the smallest villages and into the most backward regions. J. Louis Engdahl, late secretary of the International Labor Defense and Mrs. Ada Wright, one of the Scottsboro mothers, carried the Scottsboro case across the world, and piled up for it new mountains of strength. The slogan: "The Scottsboro Boys Shall Not Die!" swelled to a roar that echoed from one corner of the world to the other. It was this, and this alone, that kept the nine boys alive for these four years, that forced from the U. S. Supreme Court two reversals of the death sentences.

We know that last Monday a great surge of happiness swept through millions of people because the Scottsboro boys had once more been snatched from the shadow of the electric chair. We know, also, that these people paused in the midst of their joy, to ask themselves: What can we do now? How can we take the final steps to bring about complete Scottsboro liberation?

The answer of the International Labor Defense, which has led the Scottsboro struggle, is this:

Flood the Alabama Supreme Court and Governor Bibbs Graves, at Montgomery, Ala., with demands for the immediate, safe release of the Scottsboro boys. Demand that there be no re-indictments. Hold greater mass demonstrations for Scottsboro than ever before. Follow the glorious victory in the Scottsboro case with demands for the freedom of Angelo Herndon, whose fate is closely linked with the fate of the Scottsboro case. The appeal of Herndon, young Negro organizer who was sentenced to a term of 18 to 20 years on the chain-gang for the "crime" of leading Negro and white workers in a demand for bread, will be heard in the Supreme Court on or about April 11.

The tasks ahead of us are great. To strengthen the fight for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys, and of all class-war prisoners, we call on all those who have participated with us in this fight, who are sympathetic with our aims, to join and help build the I. L. D.

And, once more, the I. L. D. must appeal for funds to carry on the fight. To date, the I. L. D. has spent more than $75,000 in the Scottsboro struggle. Though the goal is nearer, there is still a bitter fight to be waged, for the Alabama lynchers will not so easily give up their prey. We ask that all those who have shown their devotion in the past to the cause of the Scottsboro boys and the liberation of the Negro people and the workers, help once again to achieve final victory in this struggle.

Make your contribution today.

No new indictments against the Scottsboro boys!

* * *

Immediate, unconditional, and safe release for the nine innocent Scottsboro Negro boys.

Today Marks Fourth Year Of Scottsboro

Call for Greater Action For Their Freedom Must Resound

By Anna Damon

Acting National Secretary, International Labor Defense

Today the nine Scottsboro Negro boys will have been in jail, under the shadow of the electric chair, for four years.

By Monday, April 1, when the United States Supreme Court is expected to hand down its decision in the appeals taken by the International Labor Defense against death sentences passed on Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, they will have entered their fifth year in jail.

The power of world protest organized by the I. L. D. has kept them from the electric chair of the official, legal lynchers, and from the hempen rope and the burning faggot of the fascist gangs, for these four years, and it is only this power that can continue to hold off the eager hand of the executioner, that can force their complete freedom.

Four years ago these boys were arrested at Paint Rock, Ala., and taken to the town of Scottsboro for a mock trial conducted to the tune of a band that played "There'll be a hot time in the old town tonight."

4 Bitter Years in Jail

Four years ago, these boys were mere children. The youngest was only 15 when he was pulled off that freight-train. They were kids on the loose, turned out into the world to look for something to eat, a place to sleep—one of them travelling across the country looking for a clinic he had heard about where Negro boys could get glasses. He was almost blind.

Today the oldest of those boys, Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, have grown into manhood. The youngest is 19 years old. They have spent four bitter years, years of youth and energy, rotting in jail.

And today they sit in jail waiting for the decision of the United States Supreme Court, which has the power to set them free; which does not want to set them free; which can be forced by the pressure of the masses to set them free.

During this time so many things have happened that have centered around the courthouse where they were tried, the courtrooms where their appeals were heard by gowned servants of the lynchers, the jails where they have been beaten and mistreated, tortured with the sight of an electric chair. Only a few weeks ago, the guards at Kilby took away Haywood Patterson's bed, leaving him only the concrete floor to sleep on, took away his little personal belongings. For what? On principle—lynch principle.

Scottsboro—A Call to Action!

During this time, the story of their case has echoed around the world, and re-echoed in the voices of millions of toilers, white and colored, demanding the freedom of these boys. Trial after trial has conclusively proven their innocence. Ruby Bates, one of the original accusers, has told thousands of people, from the lecture platform, millions of people from the printed page, how she was forced to lie. She told it to the court in the first Decatur trial of the boys, after the Supreme Court reversed the first lynch-verdicts.

Scottsboro, in these four years, has become a call to action, and the demand for their freedom a major slogan in the struggle of the Negro people for civil rights, for the right to vote, to serve on juries, and for national liberation. Scottsboro has become a cry around which white and Negro have rallied together, smashing down the barriers of prejudice and Jim-Crow set up for their division and their exploitation.

The lessons of Scottsboro have been impressed deeply into the consciousness of the toiling masses of America, and has led them to a conscious struggle for unity of black and white as an indispensable prerequisite for successful struggle against exploitation and repression. Millions of white and black have joined the struggle against lynching, because of Scottsboro.

Scottsboro, four years after the arrest of those nine Negro boys at Paint Rock, is not yet won.

Facing a decision of the United States Supreme Curt, it is necessary for the masses of people who have by their protest kept these boys alive four years, to be launched into a new and greater campaign, with the determination that long before the fifth anniversary of their arrest is reached, the Scottsboro boys' freedom will have been won.

Safe and Convenient Venue

The action of the Supreme court of the United States Monday in remanding the Scottsboro cases for trial is heartening. It shows that at the fountain head of our judiciary there is a disposition to give the proper interpretation to the War Amendments, giving black men citizenship. The action of the court Monday shows that America's conscience has advanced far from the day when Chief Justice Taney rendered his infamous Dred Scott decision.

All law and its interpretation by the courts, in the last analysis, is the positive reflection of public sentiment, and it is refreshing to know that our national sanctions have evolved out to such liberal latitudes. Justice and equity are the objectives of law. The same should be the attributes and cornerstones of government.

Alabama, however, in the Scottsboro cases, shows how utterly state sanctions have missed the mark towards which the Supreme court points. Public sentiment in Alabama does not believe that the Negro should be accorded the guarantees of American citizenship, so Negroes are excluded from juries, denied the right to vote, and consequently the equal protection of the law. It should be kept in mind that men fashion public sentiment in their various political units with their ballots. Alabama denies this fundamental right to Negroes.

It is to be regretted that under our American system the Supreme court was forced to remand the Scottsboro case to Alabama for trial. All who have discourse to reason know that with slight changes made to technically conform to the court's ruling, the cases will be retried in the same way in the mob-ridden atmosphere of prejudice, and that when the wheels of Alabama justice have returned, the Scottsboro defendants will be given the same sentences of death. It is impossible for the Scottsboro boys to secure a fair trial in Alabama.

No court, even in Alabama, would ever have convicted seven white boys to die on the testimony of two white prostitutes, where one of the prosecuting witnesses changed her testimony and complained that the whole case was a frame-up, and that no rape of their persons occurred. Regardless to the fact that national news services continue to report that the Scottsboro boys were convicted of raping two white girls, Ruby Bates, one of the original complaining witnesses, still stands firm and says no rape occurred. One of the white youths along with the girls at the same time, affirms the statement made by the Bates girl. In the face of this avalanche of truth and fact, Alabama still demands the lives of seven innocent black boys.

Some day America's conscience is going to lift to a plane where it will change such sordid, ugly conditions in our local self government. To do this will help not only Negroes, but white people themselves. Tom Mooney could not get a fair trial in the inflamed local atmosphere where he was tried. There are thousands of other white men who have been immolated upon the altar of local prejudice and hate. How can a judge and jury render a fair and impartial verdict in a case where a mob surrounds the courthouse demanding its unreasonable pound of flesh?

Some day we are going to work out a plan by which a reasonable venue will be granted to defendants charged with crimes which inordinately inflame the minds of the local community. We believe a federal law should be passed, making the presence of the mob sufficient grounds for the selection of a new haven of justice for the accused.

A fair and impartial trial cannot be meted out to any man in the few short minutes usually accorded Negro defendants charged with crimes in the South. If the mob happens not to catch the defendant, when he is charged with rape, a crazy man can guess what the verdict of the court will be when he is brought before the judge and the hurriedly impaneled white jury.

Thus we make a shambles of justice. We convert the court into a legal mob. We dismiss due process. In such an atmosphere the court sinks to the very level of the atmosphere of violence in the street. If American justice is to advance we will work out some plan by which we will refuse to allow communities to retry defendants when the records show that local self government has broken down.

SCOTTSBORO BOYS TRIAL POSTPONED

Decision Of Supreme Court Forces Reorganization Of State Jury Board

The New York Age

TRIALS IN NOV.

9-21-35

New Warrants Sworn Out Against Boys By Mrs. Victoria Price

New York N.Y.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—New trials for the nine Scottsboro Boys will not be resumed until the middle of November, it was announced by Lieutenant-Governor Thomas E. Knight, jr., this week. The postponement of the trials, which according to recent previous announcement were scheduled to take place some time in October, has been occasion, it was said, by a lack of jury rolls in Jackson (Scottsboro) County.

The cases have already gone through three Alabama court trials and have been reversed twice by the United States Supreme Court, the high tribunal in its last decision throwing out the convictions of the youths on the grounds that their indictments had been found by juries from which Negroes were excluded

New Indictments Sought

A special session of the Grand Jury is expected to be called to reindict the boys who are charged with assaulting two white girls in a railroad car near Scottsbooro on March 31, 1931.

As a result o fthe last decision of the Supreme Court, efforts were started for the revision of the jury lists throughout the state and many counties are now revising their lists No official Jury Board has existed in Jackson County since January 1, 1935, and since the law requires at least two members before any action may be taken, Governor Bibbs Graves of Alabama has appointed two other members this month who are expected to join with the one formerly on the board and complete organization.

As soon as this is done Judge A. E. Hawkins will order the board to fill the Jackson County jury boxes, a procedure which is expected to consume about three weeks. About 60 days is expected to pass before the Grand Jury in their special session returns the new indictments, following which the cases will go in to the jurisdiction of the Morgan (Decatur) County Court where the previous convictions were obtained.

The new indictments wil be based on warrants sworn early this summer by Mrs. Victoria Price, one of the women alleged to have been attacked. She charges each of the youths with criminal assault. Ruby Bates, the second woman in the case, has long since, refuted her original charges.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4980

TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
APR 3 1935

Catching Up With 'Jim Crow'

THE Supreme court looks at the facts without bias, and once again saves two colored men from capital punishment in the Scottsboro case. Two of the seven defendants were named in the decision handed down by the high tribunal. But it is likely the opinion will apply to the others as well.

The evidence itself was of little concern to the Supreme court. It looked at the fact that the constitutional rights of the defendants were abridged when they were denied the right to have sitting on the jury that tried them, members of their own race. In Alabama there are some things that have not improved much since before the war (War of the Sections, not the Great war). Among them is the constitutional rights of colored people.

Unless Alabama alters its laws and regulations to permit colored people to sit on the juries of the trial courts in that state, it is difficult to see how these seven defendants in the Scottsboro case can ever be completely convicted. For it is certain that the Supreme court, once having determined the rights of colored citizens, will not reverse its position later.

The United States Constitution takes precedence over state organic law. When the federal constitution guarantees equal rights to its citizens, those rights cannot be taken away by the several states without some time or other they run afoul of the United States Supreme court.

Alabama, among some other states of the deep South, has flagrantly denied to hundreds of thousands of honest industrious colored citizens their constitutional rights. What can southerners expect, then, when occasionally members of the colored race carry their protests to the court of last resort?

The United States Supreme court has definitely outlawed the unconstitutional Jim Crow attitude in Alabama.

SUPREME COURT SCOTTSBORO DECISION INVOKED IN NEW JERSEY CASE

Cuba clipping

ELIZABETH, N.J. - (CNA) - Citing the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision on the Scottsboro case as a precedent, Attorney Frank Cohn, white, asked the quashing of the indictment against Amos Carr on the grounds that Negroes had been barred from jury duty. Carr, Philadelphia worker, is accused of manslaughter.

4-27-35

In the Court of Common Pleas, John J. Fitzpatrick, Union County jury commissioner, admitted that no Negroes had been called for jury service during the past twenty years. He claimed that there was only one Negro in Union County who could meet the jury qualifications. Despite Fitzpatrick's admissions, Judge Thompson denied the motion for the dismissal of charges against Carr.

The world-wide protest rallied by the International Labor Defense forced the U.S. Supreme Court recently to reverse the death sentences against Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the Scottsboro boys, on the basis that Negroes had been systematically excluded from Alabama juries.

Scottsboro Campaign Takes Spurt With $266 Pledged in New York

Daily Worker 4-18-35 New York, N.Y.

The $20,000 Scottsboro defense fund campaign of the International Labor Defense took a spurt yesterday with total contributions of $266.13 from organizations in New York district, which have raised more than half of the $2,302.18 received since the drive began.

The total of $325.68 received yesterday is still far below the amount needed for daily expenses in important legal steps that are being planned and carried through by the I.L.D. to press forward to complete the victory won in the reversal by the United States Supreme Court of the convictions of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, Anna Damon, acting national secretary of the organization, said.

The development of the campaign for the immediate, unconditional, safe release of the Scottsboro boys and of Angelo Herndon also demands not only constant expenditure, but a real spurt of protest activity, directed to Governor Bibb Graves and Lieutenant Governor Thomas E. Knight in Montgomery, Ala., in the Scottsboro case, and to the United States Supreme Court in the Herndon case.

Outstanding among the contributions from New York district organizations yesterday were:

From a group of teachers, $55.13; Section 10, Communist Party, $32.95; and Professional Workers League, $25.

Total received yesterday: $325.68.
Total received in drive: $2,302.18.
Still to be raised: $17,797.82.

Rush funds for Scottsboro defense to the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

COMMON SENSE AND THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Comment

With the filing last week of another complaint against the nine Scottsboro boys by Victoria Price, the dreary ritmarole starts all over again. 5-11-35

It is to be regretted that this case is still with us. It should have been disposed of years ago with the acquittal of the nine boys, who are unquestionably innocent.

But, on the one hand, Alabama has sought in this case to re-fight the Civil War and, on the other hand, the Communists have tried to use it as a lever for revolution. Neither side has won; only the boys have lost.

All except the professional agitators who view such cases as meal tickets would like to be rid of it. Alabama and white supremacy are certainly gaining no ground by its prolongation.

The effort of Attorney Samuel Leibowitz to get Governor Graves of Alabama to grant an outright pardon is therefore to be applauded. By one stroke of the pen Governor Graves can end this nonsensical routine of appeal, trial and appeal. He ought to have the courage and good common sense to do it.

Carrollton, Ga., Times
May 2, 1935

CASE OF THE ALABAMA NEGROES

A great deal of comment is heard, pro and con, in the case of those Alabama negroes charged with outraging two white girls on a freight train some two or three years ago, especially as relates to the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in remanding one of them recently for retrial, for the reason that no negroes were on the trial jury.

We have not read the decision of the court, nor do we know just what were the grounds for the appeal; but we do know that from the evidence as disclosed by the newspapers concerning the circumstances surrounding the case, there is very general belief that there was not sufficient grounds to justify a death penalty for any of the negroes, indeed we believe that but for the offensively officious meddling of the outsiders the courts of Alabama would not have permitted any of them to hang.

This opinion may not be well founded nor is it based on actual knowledge of the case save that obtained through the newspaper reports. Much concern is expressed over the court's ruling on the negro jurors and what it may mean for other southern states.

Under the system of selecting jurors in Georgia, there need be no fear of court interference, unless there be some flagrant failure of justice. In this state the jury commission meets every two years and selects a limited number of names from the tax lists from which the courts select a given number of jurors for each court. It is entirely within the discretion of the commission as to what names are to be selected.

From the list thus provided the court selects a given number as jurors for each subsequent term of court. Then when a case comes on for trial the opposing counsel selects the jury to hear and determine all cases at bar, hence there need be no special concern in this state over any class of jurors.

The editor of the Times has seen negroes serve on grand juries along with the whites and no serious objections were raised. In Arkansas some of the counties really preferred to have and often seletced two or three of the staid and settled negroes to serve on the grand jury, saying that they were valuable in ferreting and running down criminals of their own race.

Scottsboro, Ala., Age
May 2, 1935

Asks New Warrants In Scottsboro Case

Mrs. Victoria Price, Prosecutrix, Appears at Scottsboro Presaging First Step by State to Place Nine Defendants on Trial Again

Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville prosecutrix in the "Scottsboro case," Wednesday swore to nine warrants charging the nine Negro defendants with attacking her aboard a freight train in Jackson county, March 31, 1931.

The swearing of the warrants was the first step in the state's effort to reindict the Negroes and bring them to trial on the attack charge, a capital offense with death as the maximum penalty.

The move followed by a day the appeal of Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, retained as chief of counsel for the Negroes by the American Scottsboro Committee, to Gov. Bibb Graves for an outright pardon.

Leibowitz' appeal carried with it as suggestion, that a fact finding committee be appointed to investigate the now world known case, and that he for one would agree to abide by its report.

Mrs. Price came here accompanied by Ben Giles, former sheriff of Madison County, and went to the offices of County Solicitor H. C. Hayes, where the new warrants were drawn.

Whether they would be turned over to Sheriff M. C. Thomas, of Jackson County for service, or would be mailed to the sheriffs of Jefferson and Montgomery counties where the Negroes now are held was not announced.

Solicitor H. G. Bailey, at Boaz, original prosecutor in the case, said Wednesday he did not know when a Grand Jury would be called to investigate the evidence. and probably return new true bills.

"Some legislation will have to be enacted before we can move,' the solicitor said, indicating that the jury rolls would be revised before any legal steps for retrial were taken.

The legislation already has been started in the capitol at Montgomery, where Tuesday Senator J. Miller Bonner introduced a bill to amend the present statutes to limit jury service to qualified voters.

This was planned after the United States Supreme Court had reversed death sentences in two cases. holding that Negroes were systematically excluded from juries in Jackson County where the original indictments were returned and in Morgan County, where the Negroes had been convicted after change of venue.

The decision brought from Gov. Bibb Graves a statement in a letter to circuit judges and solicitors that this means the names of Negroes must be placed on the jury rolls in every county in Alabama.

In the same letter Gov. Graves suggested that jury rolls and boxes be made to conform to the decision.

The Negroes involved are Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, confined at Kilby Prison in Montgomery; Roy and Andy Wright, brothers, Glen Montgomery, Willie Robertson, Ozie Powell, Charles Weems and Eugene Williams.

In addition to charges of attacking Mrs. Price the Negroes were indicted originally on charges of attacking Ruby Bates, companion of the woman, who since has repudiated her testimony in the first trials. and said the case was concocted by the older woman.

Ozark, Ala., Star
May 15, 1935

WHAT DOES LEIBOWITZ KNOW ABOUT AMERICAN IDEALS?

Samuel Liebowitz, council for the defense in the famous "Scottsboro Case," has made a formal request to Governor Graves to pardon the nine negroe defendants, thus bringing to an end "this carousal of hate," and saying "subsersive elements" originally instrumental in popularizing the case are seeking to "tear down our form of government" and substitute "the bolshevism of Moscow" for "our cherished American ideals and traditions."

In the first place, we would like to know what a man with Samuel's last name would be expected to know about American ideals and traditions—we feel sure that he knows a lot about "the bolshevism of Moscow."

We are strongly in favor of giving every defendant (white or colored) in every case, a fair trial, and it is horrifying to us to think of our courts administering severe punishment to an innocent person, of any race, but it is our impression that in altogether too many cases our courts, our judges and our juries—are too sympathetic and too soft, and that mercy instead of justice, is too often shown. This is without doubt largely responsible for the wave of lawlessness and crime that has swept over the entire country in the last decade.

It seems that the only question involved in the famous case referred to above, is whether negroes are systematically excluded from juries in Jackson county. Mr. Leibowitz would have the defendants excused, not because they have been shown to be innocent, but because there were no negroes on the numerous juries which have found them guilty.

In other words, we are forced to believe, from his conduct as well as his name, that Samuel really belongs to that heard of "shister" lawyers who seem to take peculiar delight in trying to defeat justice on all occasions, thereby "seeking to tear down our form of government"—the most dangerous type of "public enemies."—Andalusia Star.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4981

Lake City, Fla., Reporter
April 12, 1935

The U. S. Supreme Court freed Scottsboro negroes because the state prohibited negroes from serving on the jury. The Tampa Tribune thinks it is going to be difficult to convict a woman in Florida because no member of their sex can serve.

Williamson, W. Va., News
April 16, 1935

JUSTICE FOR THE NEGRO

Although the state law of Alabama does not discriminate against negroes serving on juries, it has winked at the practice of local officials excluding them .It was for that reason the Supreme Court ruled the indictments against the nine negroes in the 4-year old Scottboro case invalid.

Negroes have been systematically barred from jury rolls in Jackson county, Alabama, where the case was tried, and in many southern states as well. The practice has done more to incite race prejudice than any other agency. The Supreme Court decision which sets aside the death penalties of the young Alabama negroes charged with assault on two white girls, will go a long way to correct an injustice that has prevailed in southern states. It will at least insure the prisoners a fair trial.

Legislatures in the south will now be asked to enact laws covering the dumping and refilling of jury boxes. And these bodies will obey the order of the high court to better the condition of enfranchised citizens made subservient because of color.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT
APR 5 1935

MORGAN COUNTY INDICTS ITSELF.

As to why no Negro jurors were called in the Scottsboro case, and also in other cases in Alabama, one of the Jury Commissioners of Morgan County was quoted in the Supreme Court showing as follows:

I do not know of any Negro in Morgan County, over 21 and under 65, who is generally reputed to be honest and intelligent and who is esteemed in the community for his integrity, good character and sound judgment, who is not an habitual drunkard, who is not afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness which would render him unfit to discharge the duties of a juror, who can read English and who has never been convicted of a crime involving moral terpitude.

Obviously some of the legal qualifications for jury service are recited in this statement. However, citizenship obligations include other and even more important obligations than occasional jury service. If this statement to the court is not overdrawn, how are these other citizenship obligations being performed by Negroes? Of course, the statement applying to a county in the state that has the Tuskegee Institute is grossly overdrawn in the light of facts cited by Chief Justice Hughes. If it is true only in small part, however, the state itself has a duty which it is fully qualified to perform but which it is not performing. Physical infirmities can be combated by medical resources, ignorance by education, moral delinquency by encouragement rather than oppression and the underprivileged status by an approach to equality before the law at least.

Alabama has 944,834 Negroes and 251,095 illiterates. Assuming that all the illiterates are Negroes, also an overdrawn assumption, it must have 693,739 literate Negroes.

RETAIN FAITH IN LEIBOWITZ

Scottsboro Boys Cling to Defense Attorney, Dr. Haynes Reports

7-27-35

Unswerving faith in Samuel S. Leibowitz on the part of the Scottsboro boys is reported by Dr. George E. Haynes, executive vice-chairman of the American Scottsboro Committee, who spent two days in Alabama last week visiting the imprisoned youths.

At Kilby Prison, Montgomery, he talked with Clarence Norris, whose case was won by Attorney Leibowitz in the decision of the Supreme Court which recently reversed the death sentence on the ground that Norris had been denied his constitutional rights because Negroes were excluded from grand and petit juries, which indicted him and before which he was tried.

At the Jefferson County Prison in Birmingham, Dr. Haynes met Andy and Roy Wright, Olen Montgomery, Ozie Powell, Willie Robinson, Eugene Williams and Charles Weems. According to Dr. Haynes the boys said they were still being approached by representatives of "radical organizations."

Speaking for the group, Dr. Haynes reports, one of the boys said: "When these representatives asked us to sign papers we told them that if they would go and bring Mr. Leibowitz and if he advises us to sign these papers we will sign them."

The committee is seeking a defense fund of $10,000, for which contributions were received last week from Hampton Institute; Church of the Good Shepherd, Chicago, and Walnut Chapel, A. M. E. Z. Church, Summit, N. J.

Montgomery, Ala. Journal
April 8, 1935

REGRETS—A lot of people r... gret that the Scottsboro cases were ever taken so seriously. You can find many white people who doubt that the negroes should ever have been convicted. Judge James E. Horton, of Limestone, who presided at one of the trials, is among that number. Judge Horton sacrificed his seat on the bench because he didn't believe the evidence was sufficient to warrant conviction. When the negroes were arrested feeling against them was high. The lapse of time has tempered the populace and you can find many persons now openly advocating the dismissal of the cases. It is probable that his would have happened a long time ago had not the I. L. D. with its propaganda sought to capitalize on the arrest of the negroes and to advance its own purposes by attempting to make the impression that it was interested in the welfare of the negroes.

FAILURE TO AID DOOMED BOYS SCORED

Journal & Guide

Joint Meeting I... Danville Proves Successful

5-18-35

MADISON REELECTED

Norfolk Va.

Special Session To Be Held Next October

Special to Journal and Guide

DANVILLE, Va.—A bitter attack on the Baptist churches in America for failing to aid the Scottsboro cases and a strong indictment of white churches for condoning lynching, jim-crowism, racial segregation and remaining silent in the midst of hunger, distress and misery among our population, and a fervent appeal to return to the old landmark of the Christian faith, were highlights of the messages delivered to the delegates and visitors at the 69th and 41st annual sessions, respectively, of the Virginia Baptist State Educational and Missionary Convention of Virginia which were held here at High Street Baptist Church, May 8 and 10.

These messages were heard by about 400 delegates and 600 visitors representing local associations and about 1,500 churches in Virginia, Western Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, the District of Columbia, and other states.

were heard by about 400 delegates and 600 visitors representing local associations and about 1,500 churches in Virgiina, Western Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, the District of Columbia, and other states.

Hits Modern Tendencies

The most challenging message at the convention was delivered, perhaps, by Dr. W. H. R. Powell, president, Virginia Theological Seminary and College, at the evening session of the two bodies Thursday. Using for his subject "The Revolutionary Hour in the History of Organized Christianity," Dr. Powell asserted that 3,000,000 Baptist Churches had missed a great opportunity in failing to champion the cause of the Scottsboro boys.

Dr. Madison

The college president also hit the tendency of modern churches to substitute politics and economics schemes for Christian principles. "No science or modernism scares me," Dr. Powell said "We need a religion of the heart in place of an empty intellectualism."

Officers Elected

The elections were as follows: Men's body, Dr. C. P. Madison, Norfolk, president; the Revs. W. E. Sanderlin, P. L. Harvey, L. W. Wales, and A. A. Spencer, vice presidents; Dr. W. R. Ashburn, recording secretary; the Revs. C. E. Jones, corresponding secretary; W. M. Gilbert, treasurer; E. T. Brown auditor; and M. C. Allen, editor.

Women's body, Mrs. C. E. Jones, Newport News, president; Mesdames C. A. Bagley, Rosa E. Loving, Rose Gentry, Maggie Arrington, and Ellen Obey, vice presidents; Mrs. M. B. Hicks, recording secretary; Mrs. M. Waller Richardson, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Millie J. Thompson, treasurer; and Mrs. M. E. Gordon, chairman, executive board.

All officers in both bodies were relected except Mrs. Esther Marshall, fifth vice president, who was succeeded by Mrs. Otey.

Both the men's and women's bodies adopted The Expected, the monthly religious magazine founded and edited by the Rev. M. C. Allen, as their official organ.

A special session of the convention will be held at Virginia Theological Seminary and College in late October and the next annual session will be held May 13-15, 1936, at Hill Street Baptist Church, Roanoke, Va., with the Rev. D. R. Powell and his congregation as hosts.

The two bodies raised $1,010 for Virginia Theological Seminary and College. More than $600 was raised by the two groups for foreign missions, state missions, ministers' relief, church edifice, and convention expenses.

Deplores Condition

The Rev. J. H. Jackson, of Philadelphia, who succeeds Dr. J. E. East as secretary, Foreign Mission Board, National Baptist Convention, deplored the lack of interest in foreign missions in our churches. He asserted that our churches have an indefinite program. "There is something fundamentally wrong with the Christian Church today," he said, "for we are taking our cue from social trends instead of following Christian principles set in the Bible.

Rev. Mr. Jackson's sermon in the afternoon on Wednesday gave more emphasis to the strong annual sermon delivered by Dr. C. C. Scott of Richmond, at noon. Dr. Scott had admonished the delegates to be living examples of the Christian faith.

Dr. C. P. Madison, of Norfolk, president of the men's body, and Mrs. C. E. Jones, of Newport News, president of the women's body, delivered their annual address at 8 p. m. Wednesday. Mrs. Jones warned the delegates against permitting other agencies to take the place of the family altar in the ethical and moral training of our children. Dr. Madison made a ringing appeal for a return to Christian principles in our daily lives.

Release Sought For Two Scottsboro Negroes

Habeas Corpus Petition Filed By Attorneys Seeking Bail

Copies of habeas corpus petitions seeking the release on bail pending retrial of Willie Roberson and Olen Montgomery, two of the Negro Scottsboro case defendants, and orders of the Morgan Circuit Court setting the petitions for hearing at Decatur on May 31, were submitted yesterday at the office of Atty. Gen. Carmichael by C B. Powell, Birmingham attorney, representing O. K. Fraenkel, of New York, International Labor Defense counsel for the negroes.

The copies will be turned over immediately to Lieut. Gov. Knight, special prosecutor for the State in these and companion cases. The Lieutenant Governor said last night that the State will resist the habeas corpus petitions when the hearing is held at Decatur.

Test For Other Cases

These petitions, it is believed, are in the nature of test proceedings under the recent ruling of the United States Supreme Court, reversing judgments of convictions of Alabama's courts in the cases of Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, co-defendants with Roberson and Montgomery, and on the outcome of these actions will depend whether or not like petitions will be filed on behalf of the other accused.

On the basis of the status of all the pending cases since the swearing out of new warrants for each of the defendants several weeks ago by Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville, star prosecuting witness for the State and one of the victims of the crime with which they are charged, it is believed the habeas corpus actions have little chance of accomplishing their objective, namely, the freeing of Roberson and Montgomery pending retrial. Even if they are admitted to bail, it is understood, they can be promptly rearrested on the new warrants and recommitted to jail.

To Ask New Indictments

Lieut.-Gov. Knight announced some time ago that he will ask the returning of new indictments by a Grand Jury in Jackson County where the assault with which the defendants are charged, took place. Just when that action will be taken was not definite last night, but it was believed he will make the request as soon as the Legislature recesses, which will be some time during the latter part of June.

By virtue of his office, the Lieutenant Governor is presiding officer of the State Senate, the duties of that position requiring his presence in Montgomery while the Legislature is in session.

Montgomery and Roberson, in whose behalf the habeas corpus proceedings have been filed, are confined at the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham, together with all the other Scottsboro case defendants with the exception of Patterson and Norris, who are held at Kilby Penitentiary.

Noted Persons Protest New Scottsboro Moves

105 Sign Letter to Alabama Governor Demanding Release of Boys, Protest Against Plan to Re-Indict Innocent Boys

Senator Gerald P. Nye, James Weldon Johnson, John Haynes Holmes, Bishop Francis J. McConnell and Van Wyck Brooks are among 105 prominent writers, educators and other professional people, who yesterday protested to Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama against the plans of Alabama officials to re-indict and prosecute innocent Scottsboro boys.

They were signatories to a letter sent yesterday by the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners to the Alabama executive. The letter reviewed the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court upholding the contentions of the International Labor Defense and its attorneys that the constitutional rights of the boys and of the whole Negro people were violated by the systematic exclusion of Negroes from Alabama juries.

Review Proof of Innocence

The letter also reviewed the overwhelming proof of the innocence of the boys, including the testimony of Ruby Bates that Victoria Price and herself had been coerced by Alabama officials into falsely charging the boys with "rape." Ruby Bates repudiated her original testimony and has since toured the country in defense of the boys.

The letter placed particular emphasis on the decision rendered by Judge James E. Horton in reversing the second verdict against Haywood Patterson, one of the defendants:

"The testimony of the prosecutrix (Victoria Price) in this case is not only uncorroborated, but it also bears upon its face indications of improbability and is contradicted by other evidence, and in addition thereto the evidence greatly preponderates in favor of the defendant."

Many Noted Signatures

Signatories to the letter are:

Gerald P. Nye, U. S. Senator; Thomas R. Amlie, U. S. Representative; John Dewey, Professor Emeritus; Dr. John Haynes Holmes, Community Church; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Methodist Federation of Social Service; E. Haldemann-Julius, publisher; Oswald Garrison Villard, editor and publisher; James Waterman Wise, writer and lecturer; Professor Broadus Mitchell, Johns Hopkins University; Franz Boas, Columbia University; Roger N. Baldwin, Director, American Civil Liberties Union; Van Wyck Brooks, poet; Frank E. Baker, president, State Teachers College, Milwaukee; Erskine Caldwell, writer; Reverend William B. Spofford, director, Church League for Industrial Democracy; William Saroyan, writer; John Dos Passos, writer; Louis Adamic, writer.

Senator Arthur Capper, Theodore Dreiser, novelist; Lincoln Steffens, publicist; Ella Winter, writer; Prof. Edgar Dale, Ohio State University; Mrs. Florence Harriman, and Katharine Terrill, of the Council for Social Action of the Congregational and Christian Churches.

Malcolm Cowley, editor, The New Republic; John Howard Lawson, writer; Tess Slesinger, novelist; John L. Spivak, writer; Alfred Kreymborg, poet; H. W. L. Dana, former professor at Harvard and Columbia Universities; George Soule, editor, The New Republic; Hubert C. Herring, director, Council for Social Action of the Congregational and Christian Churches of the U. S. A.; Alicia Hamilton, M. D.; Dr. Bernhard J. Stern, Columbia University; Dorothy Dunbar Bromley, columnist, New York World-Telegram; Peter Witt, Cleveland, Ohio; Martha Gruening, writer; Professor Robert Morss Lovett, University of Chicago; Freda Kirchwey, editor, The Nation; Lewis Mumford, writer and critic; Ernest Boyd, literary critic.

James Weldon Johnson, Fisk University; Abram L. Harris, Howard University; Professor Blaine [illegible] University; Professor J. O. Bailey, University of North Carolina; Letitia P. Randall, writer, Baltimore, Md.; Professor Vida D. Scudder, Wellesley College; Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, Howard University; Elmer P. Carter, editor, Opportunity; Edward A. Ross, University of Wisconsin; George Clifton Edwards, Dallas, Texas; Professor Jesse H. Holmes, Swarthmore College; Reverend Ernst F. Tittle, First Methodist Episcopal Church, Evanston, Ill.; Anna M. Pennypacker, writer; Willystine Goodsell, Teachers College, Columbia University; Adelaide Case, Teachers College, Columbia University; Isabel M. Stewart, Teachers College, Columbia University.

Bessie L. Gambrill, Dept. of Elementary Education, Yale Graduate School; Anna Rochester, writer; Grace Hutchins, Labor Research Association; Maurits A. Hallgren, writer, Glenwood, Md.; Mrs. Kenroy Malcombre, Chapel Hill, N. C.; Horace M. Kallen, educator, New School for Social Research; Professor F. H. Hankins, Smith College; Dr. Edward T. Devine, New York; Henry Harap, Western Reserve University, Ohio; Professor F. P. Brissenden, Columbia University; Professor Read Bain, Oxford, Ohio; Arnold Donawa, D.D.S.; Reuben S. Young, M. D.; Rev. Herman F. Reissig, Kings Highway Church; Rev. E. C. Macklin, Victoria Congregational Church; Rev. A. J. Butterey, Park Ridge, N. J.; Rev. James K. Morse, Hackensack, N. J.; Rev. Ralph H. Read, New York; Dr. Henry Neumann, Ethical Culture Society; John L. Elliott, Ethical Culture Society; W. Russell Bowie, Rector, Grace Church; Evans Clark, writer; Dr. W. P. Ladd, Connecticut; A. Epstein, New York; Harold Loeb, economist; Leroy E. Bowman, New York; Benjamin Ginsberg, writer; Edward Newhouse, writer; Marian Murray, writer; Marguerite Young, writer, Washington, D. C.; Arnold Williams, University of North Carolina; Muriel Wolff, University of North Carolina Press; Herman E. Spivey, University of North Carolina; Loretta Carroll Bailey, Chapel Hill, North Carolina; Sallie E. Scott, teacher, Charlotte, Virginia; Cabo Mae Russell, Chapel Hill, N. C. Phillips Russell, writer and professor, University of North Carolina; Lillian Lowenfel, New York; Leane Zugsmith, journalist; Lynd Ward, artist; J. Albert Hirsch, publicist; Professor Leo Gershoy, Long Island College; Jerome Klei, Fine Arts Staff, Columbia University; Liston M. Oak, editor; Emanuel Eisenberg, writer; Jerome Schloss, New York; Joseph Vogel, writer; J. L. Anderson, labor leader, North Carolina; George Bonner, M. D.; Winifred L. Chappell, secretary, Methodist Federation for Social Service; Rev. Ralph B. Urmy, Westfield, N. J.; Frank L. Palmer, editor, Federated Press; Harry Block, editor, Covici-Friede; Professor Thurman Arnold, Yale University.

Lynchings- 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4982

4982

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
April 6, 1935

Graves Meets The Issue

Governor Graves has acted promptly, decisively and courageously to the end that Alabama jury practice shall be in conformity with the recent ruling of the United States Supreme Court in the Scottsboro cases holding systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury rolls is unconstitutional.

"Without in any manner assuming or intimating," the governor has written all circuit judges, "that the contents of your jury boxes in any way fail to conform to this Supreme Court opinion, I write to suggest that in the event there be any non-conformity in this regard, that you speedily take proper steps to remedy any such defects."

The state's chief executive called attention to the 1931 jury law, declared he would ask the Legislature to enact the legislation needful in the filling or refilling of jury boxes and suggested that "in any case in which this question is injected into the pleadings, the case be passed, continued or, if need be, nol-prossed until a new indictment may be presented by a Grand Jury to which this objection will not apply."

Copies of the governor's letter were sent all solicitors.

In a public statement, the governor said in part:

I have received the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, holding in effect that when there is systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries, it is discrimination against the race in violation of the United States Constitution.

This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county in the state.

Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America.

The governor is the chief law enforcement officer of the state and the conservator of all laws. All laws, of course, include the supreme laws of the land.

It is unusual for the governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which under our state policy are peculiarly within its jurisdiction. However, I have a duty to perform and an oath to abide by.

"In the exercise of this power," the governor's statement explained, he sent his letter to the judges.

The Age-Herald already has expressed its conviction that the state should and must accept the plain implications of the Supreme Court ruling. It has voiced its concurrence in the theoretical, legal and moral soundness of that ruling. It now commends the governor for a brave, intelligent and forthright meeting of the issue.

It seems to this paper that, while it might have been possible for a chief executive to evade such a direct and personal facing of the situation and his responsibilities as characterizes the action of Governor Graves, the Alabama executive has proceeded in accord with a high conception of his duty that is well within the bounds of the prerogatives of his office and state leadership. His suggestions and recommendations surely cannot be rightly regarded as constituting an invasion of judicial functions.

Governor Graves has set an example for all the officials and citizens of the state in their attitude toward the Supreme Court ruling. If that example is generally adopted—as this paper believes it will be—Alabama can look forward without alarm to a successful solution of whatever problems the ruling may raise.

While these problems now may rise on a broader scale than in the past they will hardly be different in kind from those already overcome in this state.

It would seem undoubtedly to be the highest wisdom to deal with any such difficulties separately as they come up, to avoid the anticipation of troubles that may never occur and to suppress fears based on vague possibilities and generalities in the situation as a whole.

There is no reason to believe that the governor does not mean exactly what he says concerning his attitude. In their cooperation with him, The Age-Herald hopes that officials, legislators and citizens will so construe his purposes and spirit and act accordingly.

Goodwater, Ala., Enterprise
April 11, 1935

People Not Agreed On Matter Of Negro Jurors

The reversal of two "Scottsboro" cases by the United States Supreme Court last week and the consequent discussion of the matter shows that the people of Alabama are not at all agreed as to the right course to pursue in regard to putting the names of negroes on the jury lists of the state.

Gov. Graves, immediately following the court's decision reversing the cases on the ground that negroes were barred from jury service in Jackson County, issued an order to circuit court judges ordering them to empty jury boxes and to place the names of negroes in all jury boxes in every county in the state.

Protests, censure and criticism at once arose regarding the Governor's order. Lawyers and even some judges protested that it was out of the jurisdiction of the governor to issue such an order. Others have upheld the Governor's action and say there is nothing to do but to take action such as he has directed in order that cases in future may not be turned down by the Supreme Court for the same reason.

What the outcome will be is quite uncertain at the present moment.

Huntsville, Ala., Times
April 5, 1935

Negroes On Juries

Governor Graves took courageous action today in advising trial judges and solicitors that the names of properly qualified negroes should be placed in the jury boxes of every county in the state.

He cited the recent opinion of Chief Justice Hughes in the Scottsboro case, holding that exclusion of the names of negroes from county jury rolls is discriminatory, and therefore violative of the Constitution.

The whole question of service of properly qualified negroes upon juries has, it seems to us, been vastly magnified beyond its importance.

Most people have confused it with the issue of social equality, a vastly different issue, and one upon which there can be no compromise.

Jury service is a matter of intelligence, of good citizenship, of proper qualification.

The issue of equality is no more raised in jury service than in ordinary business transactions between the two races, wherein each buys or sells to the other, trades lands or mules, or engages in the thousand and one transactions that require contact between their members.

Negroes have been eligible and called for service on federal juries in this state, and nothing has been thought of it, though, it is true, it is a rare thing that this has taken place.

The fact is that proper qualifications for negroes to serve on juries in state courts will confine the number of those eligible in each county to a very small number.

Once the cstom that has prevailed since Reconstruction has been abolished—made necessary by the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court—it will be found that fundamental relations between whites and negroes will not be altered.

NEWARK, N. J.
EVENING NEWS
APR 2 1935

Justice

FOR the second time the Supreme Court of the United States has insisted upon fair trials for the Negroes condemned to death in the celebrated Scottsboro case. The State of Alabama should know by this time that the high court means business and is determined to uphold the fundamental rights of this country's citizens, be they white, yellow or black.

The issue before the court was the exclusion of Negroes from juries. The constitutional principle of the right of citizens to serve on juries regardless of their race was not in question. It was the application of the principle. The court swept aside as not sustained the contention that the reason why no Negroes were called to jury duty was because none could be found qualified by intelligence, experience and moral integrity. In one case it ordered a new trial and, in the other, referred the case back to "further proceedings," which means a new trial or the Supreme Court will be heard from again.

Savannah, Ga., News
April 2, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Sternly condemning barring of negroes from jury service, the United States Supreme Court struck down the conviction of two defendants in the famous Scottsboro assault cases. Terms of the decision apparently will make it necessary for them to be re-indicted and may result in the ultimate release of all the negro defendants. The court, in an opinion by Chief Justice Hughes, found that negroes had been systematically excluded from the jury rolls of Jackson county where the defendants were indicted. The court held this was sufficient to make the indictments invalid.

The two cases before the court involved Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, both of whom had been convicted a second time and sentenced to death. Five other defendants are still awaiting their second trial. They probably will not be tried again on the present indictments, because all the defendants were named in true bills by the grand jury at the same time. It begins to look as though the prolonged criminal proceedings are drawing to an end. In the past the Supreme Court has held that deliberate denial of jury places to negroes in trials of negro defendants is a violation of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS SENTINEL
APR 3 1935

Justice

EIGHT U. S. SUPREME COURT justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The Court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous case or re-indict and retry the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the High Court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932 the Court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped re-enforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

Scottsboro Drive Must Be Speeded

Daily Worker

Contributions to the $20,000 Scottsboro defense fund of the International Labor Defense fell to an alarming new low yesterday, when only $72.50 came in from the I. L. D. districts, and from the I. W. O. 4-17-35

A contribution of $15.50 from the poverty-stricken workers of Birmingham, taken up a penny at a time, and sent to the national office of the I. L. D. through the Birmingham district of the organization, was the outstanding contribution, in contrast to those districts which have so far failed to respond to the urgent appeals of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, and the National Executive Committee of the I. L. D.

Expenses are mounting daily, and thousands of dollars are needed immediately to carry on the campaign and take the necessary legal steps to save the Scottsboro boys from the new legal lynch trial being prepared by the Alabama courts to save Angelo Herndon from the chain-gang, Anna Damon, acting national secretary of the I. L. D. said.

She urged all the districts of the I. L. D. and the Communist Party, all trade-unions and mass organizations not to wait until they have a substantial sum, but to rush in all funds as fast as they are collected, to meet the daily, pressing needs of the campaign.

Besides th Birmingham I. L. D. district contribution, among the contributions which went toward raising the total received in the past ten days to $1,976.50, were a contribution of $10 from the I.L.D. branch in Erie, Pa., and $5 from Branch 521 of the International Workers' Order in New York. $19,023.50 must still be collected.

Rush funds for Scottsboro $20,000 fighting fund to the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East Eleventh Street, New York City.

Savannah, Ga., News
April 7, 1935

A dispatch from Augusta points out that the Scottsboro case could not have arisen from the Richmond County Superior Court, as negroes serve regularly on juries in that county. It is further stated that in one of the most celebrated cases there, the trial of a woman for the murder of her husband, two negroes sat on a jury which freed her after an earlier conviction had been set aside, and in another case a negro juror helped to convict a member of his own race on a criminal attack charge. The dispatch adds that negroes have not served on the grand juries, however.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
APR 10 1935

Alabama Bows to the Court

Governor Bibb Graves, of Alabama, deserves the nation's applause for heeding the ruling of the United States Supreme Court and ordering that the names of Negroes be included on the jury rolls of every county in his State.

If the court's decision in the Scottsboro case shows a proper regard for constitutional rights, Governor Graves shows an equally laudable regard for law. It is not hard to imagine a Southern Governor defying the court in so inflammatory a case.

But it may be noted that the mere fact of including Negroes on jury panels does not guarantee the right of the Scottsboro boys to have a few Negroes on the jury which hears their case. The Orphan Jones case in Maryland will illustrate.

There the Supreme Court of Maryland ruled that Jones must be retried because the exclusion of Negroes from juries constituted a violation of due process. Negroes were then included in the panel drawn for the retrial.

But attorneys for the State, exercising their right to challenge certain jurors without expressed cause, merely challenged all the Negroes picked for the new trial jury. No Negro sat on the jury that tried Orphan Jones and finally sent him to the chair.

Bristol, Va., Herald-Courier
May 3, 1935

New Move In "Scottsboro Case."

Mrs. Victoria Price of Huntsville, Alabama prosecutrix in the famous "Scottsboro Case," has sworn nine new warrants charging the nine Negro defendants in the case with attacking her on a freight train between Chattanooga and Scottsboro on March 31, 1931.

Two of these Negroes have twice been convicted and sentenced to death for this alleged crime, but each time the case has been carried to the United States Supreme Court, which tribunal has granted the defendants a new trial, the last time on the ground that Negroes were barred from Alabama jury lists.

The swearing of the new warrants is the first step in the State's effort to reindict the Negroes and bring them to trial for criminally assaulting the woman. Presumably, in the next trial the jury list will contain the names of Negroes, since otherwise another trial would be useless. In the light of the Supreme Court's ruling, a verdict of guilty would not stand.

This issue has now been raised in North Carolina for the first time. Counsel for a Negro physician charged with second degree murder in the death of a young white woman from an alleged illegal operation has asked that the indictment be quashed on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the grand and petit jury lists.

All States had as well recognize the fact that in cases of Negroes accused of crime members of their race must be included in the jury lists, and govern themselves accordingly. The States thus will save themselves much trouble and expense. Alabama has had the "Scottsboro Case" on its hands for more than four years.

Selma, Ala. Times
May 7, 1935

WHAT DOES LEIBOWITZ KNOW ABOUT AMERICAN IDEALS?

Samuel Leibowitz, council for the defense in the famous "Scottsboro Case," has made a formal request to Governor Graves to pardon the nine negro defendants, thus bringing to an end "this carousal of hate," and saying "subsersive elements" originally instrumental in popularizing the case are seeking to "tear down our form of government" and substitute "the bolshevism of Moscow" for "our cherished American ideals and traditions."

In the first place, we would like to know what a man with Samuel's last name would be expected to know about American ideals and traditions—we feel sure that he knows a lot about "the bolshevism of Moscow."

We are strongly in favor of giving every defendant (white or colored) in every case, a fair trial, and it is horrifying to us to think of our courts administering severe punishment to an innocent person, of any race, but it is our impression that in altogether too many cases our courts—our judges and our juries—are too sympathetic and too soft, and that mercy instead of justice, is too often shown. This is without doubt largely responsible for the wave of lawlessness and crime that has swept over the entire country in the last decade.

It seems that the only question involved in the famous case referred to above, is whether negroes are systematically excluded from juries in Jackson county. Mr. Leibowitz would have the defendants excused, not because they have been shown to be innocent, but because there were no negroes on the numerous juries which have found them guilty.

In other words, we are forced to believe, from his conduct as well as his name, that Samuel really belongs to that heard of "shister" lawyers who seem to take peculiar delight in trying to defeat justice on all occasions, thereby "seeking to tear down our form of government"—the most dangerous type of "public enemies."—Andalusia Star.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
MAY 7 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Mr. Black Is Convinced That The Negroes Are Guilty

To the Editor of The Courant:—

I have read the reply to my recent letter by Robert Linn of New Haven. He claims to know a great deal about the Scottsboro case, but in reality knows so little that he does not even give the name of one of the three principal witnesses. He narrows the case to three eye-witnesses, "Leslie Carter, Ruby Bates and Victoria Price." He is correct except that the name of the white boy was Orville Gilley, who was assaulted and held a prisoner along with the girls. The other six white boys were thrown off the train by the Negroes. This Gilley boy testified in the first and last trials (he could not be found for the second trial—why?) and identified each one of the Negroes as having taken part in the crime. As for this Leslie Carter who, Mr. Linn says, was kept from testifying, if he ever existed he could know nothing of the case, as he was thrown off the train. And if he was such an important witness why did not the defense put him on the stand? Nothing could have kept them from doing so.

He says that one of the girls, Ruby Bates, testified against these Negroes for fear of prosecution for vagrancy. She could not be found at the beginning of the second trial, but made a dramatic appearance a few minutes before its close, dressed in the height of fashion. She claimed to have just returned from a trip to Brooklyn. This doesn't look very much like vagrancy to me. Perhaps Mr. Linn could tell us where all this sudden wealth came from. But she has sworn out warrants against these Negroes a second time and will be one of the prosecutors at their next trial. Does this look like she knows they are innocent?

As for the last of the three, Victoria Price, Mr. Linn fails to even mention the recent attempt to bribe her for $1000, for which two of the defense attorneys were arrested and put in jail.

W. J. BLACK.

Hartford, May 5, 1935.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

4983

In Scottsboro Case

The recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, holding that the indictments in the "Scottsboro case" should have been quashed because no negroes appeared on the jury rolls, puts Judge A. E. Hawkins, original trial judge, in the case again. Under present plans, the State will ask new indictments of the nine negro defendants on charges of attacking two white girls. The indictments must be sought in the county of orriginal jurisdiction, Jackson, over which Judge Hawkins presides. Judge Hawkins sentenced eight of the negroes ot death after the first trials at Scottsboro.

Victoria Swears To 9 New Warrants

First Step In State's Effort To Reindict Negroes In Scottsboro Attack Case

5-2-35

SCOTTSBORO, ALA., May 1.—(AP)—Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville, prosecutrix in the "Scottsboro case" today swore to nine new warrants charging the nine negro defendants with attacking her aboard a freight train in Jackson County, March 31, 1931.

The swearing of the warrants was the first step in the State's effort to reindict the negroes and bring them to trial for attacking the woman, a capital offense with death as the maximum penalty.

The move followed by a day the appeal of Samuel S. Liebowitz, of New York, retained as chief of counsel for the negroes by the American Scottsboro Committee, to Gov. Bibb Graves for an outright pardon.

Mrs. Price came here accompanied by Ben Giles, former sheriff of Madison County, and went to the office of County Solicitor H. C. Hayes, where the new warrants were drawn.

Whether they would be turned over to Sheriff M. C. Thomas of Jefferson County for service, or would be mailed to the sheriffs of Jackson and Montgomery Counties where the negroes now are held was not announced.

Solicitor H. G. Bailey, at Boaz, original prosecutor in the case, said today he did not know when a Grand Jury would be called to investigate the evidence, and probably return new true bills.

"Some legislation will have to be enacted before we can move," the solicitor said, indicating that the jury rolls would be revised before any legal steps for retrial were taken.

The negroes involved, are Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, confined at Kilby Prison in Montgomery; Roy and Andy Wright, brothers, Olen Montgomery, Willie Roberson, Ozie Powell, Charles Weems, and Eugene Williams.

The issuance of the new warrants, it is understood, is a precautionary measure to block release of the defendants during the interim that will elapse between receipt by the Alabama Supreme Court of the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States, giving formal notice of that tribunal's ruling, and the returning of new indictments by a Jackson County Grand Jury.

Efforts may and probably will be made by defense counsel to obtain release of the prisoners on habeas corpus proceedings, but such action cannot be filed until jurisdiction in the cases is returned to the State courts. New York attorneys for the defendants have, in fact, already drawn habeas corpus petitions and have them ready to submit if they decide to do so, after the mandate comes through from Washington.

Leibowitz Asks Pardons For 9

Calls On Graves To End Scottsboro Case With Exercise Of Clemency

5-1-35

Samuel Leibowitz, of New York, counsel for the defense in the "Scottsboro Case" submitted a formal request in writing to Gov. Graves yesterday, that he pardon the nine negro defendants. Asking that the pardons be issued "forthwith" to an end "this Frankenstein of hate." Leibowitz declared "subversive elements" originally instrumental in popularizing the case are seeking to "tear down our form of government" and substitute "the bolshevism of Moscow" for "our cherished American ideals and traditions."

The request was contained in a letter dispatched to the Chief Executive by Leibowitz by special messenger, in which the suggestion was made that a fact-finding commission be appointed composed of prominent citizens of the State, to investigate the case and report its findings—in the event pardons should be denied the defendants. Gov. Graves said last night he had not replied to the letter and had no comment to make at the present time regarding the communication.

The negroes, two in Kilby Prison, the other seven in the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham, are charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, Huntsville mill workers, aboard a Southern Railway freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931.

The United States Supreme Court on April 1, set aside death sentences imposed on two of the defendants, Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, holding that negroes were systematically excluded from the juries in the counties where they were indicted and where they were tried.

Leibowitz in his letter to the Governor reviewed the history of the case, the first convictions at Scottsboro, when the case took its name, with subsequent reversals in the United States Supreme Court.

He also called attention to the action of Judge James E. Horton, who presided in the first retrial of Patterson, under a change of venue in Morgan Circuit Court, in setting the death sentence aside and ordering a new trial.

"A reading of this learned jurist's opinion," Leibowitz wrote, "can lead to but one conclusion. Here spoke the trial judge before whom appeared all of the witnesses for both sides, and who was familiar with every ramification of the evidence in the case. His opinion is an indictment of the prosecution of these defendants as a dastardly frame-up. . . ."

Referring to the International Labor Defense, that first took up the defense of the negroes, Leibowitz wrote, "this scheming crowd had been using the Scottsboro case among the negroes of the South to gain recruits of their political banner.

"If you should deem it appropriate, I would be most happy if you saw your way clear to appoint an impartial fact finding committee, composed of such men as Bishop McDowell (Bishop W. G. McDowell of the Alabama Episcopal Diocese) and some of the heads of colleges of the State. I, for one, would be ready to abide by the decision of such a group."

MACON, GA.
NEWS
APR 21 1935

Bowing to the Court Decision

Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama, bowed gracefully enough to the recent Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro cases. The court ruled that the trial judge was not justified in supposing the jury commissioners had shown no discrimination against the Negro race. It intimated that books had been tampered with and evidence had been manufactured.

Governor Graves moved at once when he learned of the decision. It was announced that he wrote every trial judge in Alabama to comply with the ruling by revising jury rolls before any new juries are drawn. Also that he asked that all jury boxes be emptied and refilled in accordance with the principles enunciated by the decision of the Supreme Court.

He apologetically said: "It is unusual and arbitrary, if not unprecedented, for the Governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which under our state policy are peculiarly under their jurisdiction. However, I have a duty to perform and an oath to abide by, and I and they are equally bound to enforce the supreme law of the land."

The Governor also wrote to all jury commissioners and to all circuit solicitors suggesting the manner in which they can best meet the pending indictments.

People all over the South were naturally interested in what the Governor had to say, and the judges in almost every judicial circuit in every state naturally took stock.

Georgia lawyers feel that their supreme court has a clean record. It has not hesitated to reverse any judgment that was tainted with prejudice. A case in Bryan county was reported in 168th Georgia, pages 370 to 374, in which the commissioners were on record as saying they would keep out of the jury box a certain race of citizens.

The Georgia supreme court promptly said that was a gross abuse of legal discretion, and the court could not escape the conclusion that jurors' qualifications had been arbitrarily decided. When the question of prejudice or discrimination has been raised in Georgia, it has been customary, so far as can be learned, to invite evidence to that effect.

More than one county, including Bibb, has used Negro jurors, though in recent years the use of them has grown less and less until some counties have not had any on a panel

The Supreme Court has not upset the order of things in many communities of the South. The two races get along together now better than they ever have since the carpetbaggers ruined the peace and happiness of both through just such spirit as the fourteenth amendment so strikingly manifests.

their race.

in a number of years.

There can be no doubt that the Supreme Court's ruling will result in precautions that will insure justice to Negroes as the law was ratified by carpetbag legislatures, and the Negroes who were supposed to be reason. The moretures, and to benefit by it were finally embittered and left among the Southern white people with whom they would have been as good friends as they are in these days. The only hindrance was just such foolhardy efforts to lift them into high place before they were prepared by education, experience or intelligence.

Those who have made their way up in the scale since those gcry and unhappy days are entitled to be congratulated, and they have never had It may any trouble in getting patient co-operation and sympathetic hearing from Southern brains, whites in any moves for the betterment of have not been taken in the past. But as one white people.

Macon lawyer puts it, the question of selecting a jury is not and never should be a race question. The very best material available is it of the jury section of the fourteenth amendment none too good, and the shame of the entirement, nor should such criticism be indulged country has been the lack of the right kind but it is perfectly proper to say that the jury of material for the best jury service. Question of the fourteenth amendment to the tions involving race, politics, social standing, Federal Constitution was never intended to and all matters of that kind have no proper consideration in a jury system among intelligent and upright people.

Nothing can be gained by criticising the court for jerking up the public and reminding those days as they are in these days. The amend-only hindrance was just such foolhardy efforts to lift them into high place before they the jury were prepared by education, experience or into the telligence.

champion the cause of the Negro. It may fair dealing to everybody, it stands to reason

And while there can be no objection to have been the best product of the brains doing everything that can promote justice and the time, but it is not a credit to such brains

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
AGE HERALD
MAY 1 1935

A Scottsboro Proposal

Samuel Leibowitz has not so conducted himself as defense attorney in the Scottsboro case as to endear himself to the people of Alabama, or to gain their admiration for his tact and diplomacy in handling delicate situations. Any suggestion coming from him would naturally be questioned to an unusually close degree even by those Alabamians who do not automatically see red whenever the Scottsboro case is mentioned. The tendency in the state is and probably will continue to be a feeling of fear of the Greeks bearing gifts. Nevertheless, Mr. Leibowitz made a suggestion Tuesday that seems to The Age-Herald to offer happy possibilities of disposing of this unsavory litigation in a way to save the state of Alabama and its people from further embarrassment.

Mr. Leibowitz proposes to the governor that he appoint a fact-finding commission consisting of men of the character and intelligence of Bishop McDowell and the presidents of some of our colleges; that both sides agree in advance to abide by the results of such a non-partisan inquiry by distinguished Alabamians. Furthermore, he pledges himself so to abide by the results of the study by such a commission.

It will be easy for the governor to take the technically correct position that he must not interfere with the judiciary, that a commission, such as Mr. Leibowitz proposes, would have no legal status and that the courts could not be bound in advance to accept its findings. In taking such a position Gov. Graves undoubtedly would have the soundest basis in law and precedent for his action. On the other hand, would not the creation of an extra-legal commission of the type suggested serve the best interests of the state? While the courts could not be pledged to abide by its findings, would not the mere fact that such an inquiry was being made by Alabamians of the highest character and intelligence result in an almost automatic willingness on the part of the executive and judicial departments to use the resultant findings as a guide?

The long history of the Scottsboro cases would seem to indicate that all of right and justice cannot be on one side. There have been three trials and three convictions carrying the death penalty. The first was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States; the second was reversed by Judge Horton, the trial judge, on the ground that the evidence did not justify and sustain the verdict; the third was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Judge Horton's opinion granting a new trial at the conclusion of the second hearing was a calm, deliberate review of the evidence by that able and distinguished Alabamian who had heard all of the testimony and was better prepared than any man in Alabama to say whether or not it was sufficiently strong to justify a conviction and the death penalty.

In the light of this brief resume of the Scottsboro cases and their history in the courts, is not Mr. Leibowitz' suggestion a possible way out for a people that must have grown tired and worn out with all the agitation over the fate of the Negro defendants? The Age-Herald earnestly suggests to Gov. Graves that he give this matter full consideration and, if he finds it a practicable and feasible way to handle an involved and complicated trouble, that he accept it at face value and carry it out.

Formal Scottsboro Mandate Received

Getting underway of legal processes that will again bring to trial each of the seven negro Scottsboro case defendants was in immediate prospect last night following receipt at the office of the clerk of the Jackson Circuit Court of the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States giving formal notice of reversal of judgments of conviction in two of the cases, those of Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson. Both were under sentence of death.

As Chief Justice John C. Anderson of the State Supreme Court is out of the city and there are a number of routine matters to be disposed by the court this week, Justice L. D. Gardner said that there will be no action taken on the mandate before next Monday.

It is understood, the Scottsboro cases will be remanded to the Jackson Circuit Court where original indictments will be quashed and new ones asked for. Immediately after the original indictments are quashed, it was learned, new warrants issued at Scottsboro some days ago by Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville, charging the defendants with criminal assault, will be served on them, and they will be held on these warrants until other indictments are returned by a Jackson County Grand Jury. Setting and holding of trials will follow.

In reversing judgments in the Norris and Patterson cases, the U. S. Supreme Court held that under the evidence negroes had been systematically excluded from jury rolls from which both grand and trial juries in the cases were drawn.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
May 1, 1935

A Scottsboro Proposal

Samuel Leibowitz has not so conducted himself as defense attorney in the Scottsboro case as to endear himself to the people of Alabama, or to gain their admiration for his tact and diplomacy in handling delicate situations. Any suggestion coming from him would naturally be questioned to an unusually close degree even by those Alabamians who do not automatically see red whenever the Scottsboro case is mentioned. The tendency in the state is and probably will continue to be a feeling of fear of the Greeks bearing gifts. Nevertheless, Mr. Leibowitz made a suggestion Tuesday that seems to The Age-Herald to offer happy possibilities of disposing of this unsavory litigation in a way to save the state of Alabama and its people from further embarrassment.

Mr. Leibowitz proposes to the governor that he appoint a fact-finding commission consisting of men of the character and intelligence of Bishop McDowell and the presidents of some of our colleges; that both sides agree in advance to abide by the results of such a non-partisan inquiry by distinguished Alabamians. Furthermore, he pledges himself so to abide by the results of the study by such a commission.

It will be easy for the governor to take the technically correct position that he must not interfere with the judiciary, that a commission, such as Mr. Leibowitz proposes, would have no legal status and that the courts could not be bound in advance to accept its findings. In taking such a position Gov. Graves undoubtedly would have the soundest basis in law and precedent for his action. On the other hand, would not the creation of an extra-legal commission of the type suggested serve the best interests of the state? While the courts could not be pledged to abide by its findings, would not the mere fact that such an inquiry was being made by Alabamians of the highest character and intelligence result in an almost automatic willingness on the part of the executive and judicial departments to use the resultant findings as a guide?

The long history of the Scottsboro cases would seem to indicate that all of right and justice cannot be on one side. There have been three trials and three convictions carrying the death penalty. The first was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States; the second was reversed by Judge Horton, the trial judge, on the ground that the evidence did not justify and sustain the verdict; the third was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Judge Horton's opinion granting a new trial at the conclusion of the second hearing was a calm, deliberate review of the evidence by that able and distinguished Alabamian who had heard all of the testimony and was better prepared than any man in Alabama to say whether or not it was sufficiently strong to justify a conviction and the death penalty.

In the light of this brief resume of the Scottsboro cases and their history in the courts, is not Mr. Leibowitz suggestion a possible way out for a people that must have grown tired and worn out with all the agitation over the fate of the Negro defendants? The Age-Herald earnestly suggests to Gov. Graves that he give this matter full consideration and, if he finds it a practicable and feasible way to handle an involved and complicated trouble, that he accept it at face value and carry it out.

Scottsboro Cases Ordered Quashed

Complying with the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Alabama Supreme Court yesterday reversed judgments of the State courts in the cases of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the negro so-called "Scottsboro" defendants, and remanded them to Jackson County with instructions to quash the original indictments in accordance with the decree of the Nation's highest tribunal.

Order of the Alabama Supreme Court specifies that the circuit court may make such further orders as may be deemed proper to await new indictments by a Jackson County grand jury. It is further specified that in the event of new indictments, subsequent trials shall be held in Morgan County; and that the defendants are to remain in custody "until discharged by due course of law."

After the original indictments have been quashed, and pending the returning of others by a Jackson grand jury, the negroes will be held on new warrants sworn out at Scottsboro several weeks ago by Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville, one of the two victims of the assault of which they were found guilty.

Indictments Against Two Of Scottsboro Boys Quashed

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 17.—Acting on the mandate of the United States Supreme Court, handed down on April 1, the Alabama State Supreme Court yesterday ordered the indictments against both Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, Scottsboro defendants, quashed.

Although no indictments now exist against Patterson and Norris, they were ordered held for further proceedings on the basis of new false warants sworn out at Scottsboro by Victoria Price.

The indictments still stand against five of the boys, while Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, the two youngest boys, are awaiting hearing before the juvenile court. In the last two mentioned cases, the International Labor Defense has been pressing for the setting of a date for the hearing, which will have all the character of a trial.

Special Jury Term Seen

Unless a date is set within the next few days, the I. L. D. has announced, it will seek a writ of mandamus to force Probate Judge B. L. Malone, of Decatur, Ala., to set such a date.

Strong intimation that a special term of the grand jury at Scottsboro will be called to bring new indictments against all the boys—which move would be preceded by quashing in the circuit court of the remaining five indictments — has been given by the authorities there. The next regular term of the grand jury is not until fall.

The present action of the State Supreme Court follows upon the decision of the United States Supreme Court, handed down April 1, that the indictments and convictions were illegally obtained, before grand and petit juries from which Negroes were systematically excluded.

To Put One Negro on Panel

Jackson county officials, voicing their determination to continue their efforts to burn the Scottsboro boys at all costs and regardless of evidence, have announced that they would follow the mandate of the U. S. Supreme Court at least technically, by placing a Negro on the panel from which the grand jury is drawn to re-indict the Scottsboro boys—though showing quite clearly that they have no intention of permitting any Negroes actually to serve.

Under Alabama law, Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson should have been moved from the death cells they have occupied for more than a year in Kilby Prison here to Jefferson County jail, in Birmingham, where the other seven boys are now held, as soon as the appeal proceedings were begun.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama.

4984

Dothan, Ala., Journal
April 12, 1935

THE RACE PROBLEM

The Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case has provoked universal comment but it has done no good except to emphasize the fact that those in the East who propose to improve the Negro's opportunity in the South know less about him and his problems than anybody.

All the courts in the land cannot solve race problems. If relations between the white man and the black are to be improved in the South, then the South must take the initiative; otherwise the situation will be aggragated. Southerners are sensitive about the Negro. all learned editorials to the contrary notwithstanding and will resent interference.

A few Negroes may serve on Houston county juries sometime in the future as a result of the recent Supreme Court decision, but it is our impression that this privilege will be gained at the expense of the race as a whole. The Society for the Advancement of the Colored Race may call it progress but we call it retrogression.

There was a time when the cry for swift justice where Negroes were involved was answered only by lynching, but in late years, as relations between the races improved, the public has come to rely with more confidence on the courts. That has been to the advantage of the Negro. But if the Supreme Court decision is applied literally, we may expect a relapse that will again rob the colored man of some of his human rights.

Scottsboro, Ala., Sentinel
April 11, 1935

Probable Procedure In New Negro Trials

Definite announcements have not been made regarding the future course of the State in the matter of prosecution of the negro cases, but it is presumed from the statement of Governor Graves regarding the necessity of placing names of negroes on jury rolls, that this will be done in Jackson County and then a grand jury summoned to hear the charges again and pass on whether or not the blacks are to be again indicted. According to the ruling of Hughes, the matter will have to go back to the very beginning with the grand jury indictment.

If the new grand jury found indictments, then it is likely a change of venue would be sought and the case tried at Decatur or elsewhere.

Up to this time, P. W. Campbell, who has been chairman of the Jackson County Jury Board since January 1st, this year, has had no official notice regarding any change in the Jackson County jury roll or box.

TWO BLACKS GET NEW TRIALS BY U. S. COURT RULING

The above is a picture of Haywood Patterson (top) and Clarence Norris (lower) who have been under death sentence for three years for the offense against Mrs. Victoria Price, a white woman.

Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser
April 30, 1935

LEIBOWITZ CHATS WITH CARMICHAEL

Nothing Important, 'Say Counse For Scottsboro Negroes And Prosecution

Samuel Leibowitz, of New York, counsel for the Scottsboro case defendants held an extended conference yesterday afternoon with Atty. Gen. Albert A Carmichael, Lieut. Gov. Thomes E Knight, Jr., special prosecutor for the State, and Asst. Atty. Gen. T. S. Lawson, who aided the Lieutenant Governor then Attorney General, in trial of the cases.

At the conclusion of the conference the only information made public concerning what transpired while it was in progress was contained in a brief statement issued by Mr. Carmichael. He said: "Mr. Leibowitz came to my office today and talked with me, Mr. Knight and Mr. Lawson about the Scottsboro cases. The conference was not of unusual importance or significance. We merely discussed those matters and things which lawyers on the opposite sides of cases usually discuss. I do not attach any importance or significance to this more or less routine conversation."

Mr. Leibowitz himself had no comment to make regarding his talk with them. To inquiries as to whether he planned habeas corpus proceedings for release of the defendants, and whether he intended to go to see them he replied, "I don't know." He said he came to Montgomery yesterday morning from Atlanta where he had called on a personal friend; that he would spend last night here, and that he might "have something to say" this morning. Later he stated "there might be developments of considerable purport" he would announce either here or in Birmingham today. He planned to confer with Gov. Graves yesterday, but failed to do so. He did not say whether he would renew his efforts to talk with the chief executive today.

Up to late yesterday, the Supreme Court of Alabama had not received from the U. S. Supreme Court the formal mandate officially advising that body of its action of some weeks ago, reversing the judgments of the Alabama courts in the cases of Clarence Norris and Heywood Patterson, two of the seven Scottsboro defendants, who were convicted of criminally assaulting two young white women, and sentenced to death.

Until the mandate is received, jurisdiction in the cases will not be returned to this State and habeas corpus petitions if filed now could not, therefore, be acted upon. When jurisdiction is returned, the State, through Mr. Knight as special prosecutor, will ask for new indictments of all defendants by a Jackson County grand jury.

Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris are at Kilby Prison. The other five defendants are confined in the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham. Liebowitz since severing his former association with International Labor Defense attorneys for the defendants, has announced he is representing all of them as counsel, with the exception of Patterson.

Scottsboro, Ala., Sentinel
April 18, 1935

No Development In New Negro Trial

The Sentinel is receiving daily inquiries as to the present status of "the Scottsboro case," and as to what steps will be taken in the matter and when the case will be brought before another grand jury in Jackson County.

Up to going to press Wednesday night the local Jury Board has had no word or order from any authority to make any changes in the jury roll in this county, or to make a report on the present roll.

The present jury roll in Jackson County is a brand new one so far as books are concerned. The old records were carried to Washington as evidence in the U. S. Supreme Court appeal.

P. W. Campbell, editor of The Sentinel, was appointed chairman, or president of the present Jackson County jury commission last December and officially entered the work in January this year. This board was composed of two members and clerk at its last session, Ernest Rush being the other member, and D. F. Fennell the clerk. The third member of the board, Felix Trice had turned in his resignation to the Governor last Fall when he entered another job and a jury commissioner cannot hold two appointive jobs.

Under the law, two members and clerk are legally able to function in the selection of jurors. In the present box and on the present new roll there are about 800 names of men deemed qualified to serve as jurors. In this county there are estimated to be about 8,000 white men between the ages of 21 and 65, of age for jury service, so far as age is concerned. For example, only one out of every ten men is placed on the jury roll in this county. There are many items on the disqualification list, a part of these being exemptions of different kinds from jury service if the person should ask for exemption. Of course, it is a big saving to the county to eliminate this useless cost of summoning men who under the law would be automatically excused from jury duty. The present commission, at the added insistence of the judge, endeavored to make a roll that would be eligible and free from statutory exemptions.

NEW YORK TIMES

MAY 7 1935

Scottsboro Ruling Plea Fails in Newark Court

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NEWARK, N. J., May 6.—The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Scottsboro case was the basis for a challenge on the method of selecting a jury in the trial of Elijah Drew, a Negro, on a murder charge, which opened today before Common Pleas Judge Walter D. Van Riper. Osie M. Silver, defense attorney, charged that Negroes were excluded from the panel.

Judge Van Riper overruled the objection and the selection proceeded, after Under Sheriff Alfred C. Walker and George Flammer, clerk to Jury Commissioner William Hildebrand, had testified that jurors were selected from registry lists without knowing whether or not they were Negroes. They also denied they avoided picking names from Negro-populated sections of the city.

The Scottsboro Decision

IN its recent review of the famous Scottsboro cases, the U[S] Supreme Court found that the testimony showed that Ne[groes] had arbitrarily and systematically been barred from jury service and that it "established the discrimination which th[e] Constitution forbids." Governor Graves of Alabama, the stat[e] most immediately concerned, at once stated, "Whether we lik[e] the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen an[d] the sworn duty of every public official to accept and uphol[d] them in letter and spirit."

In hailing the decisions as "a victory for southern Negroes," it must be borne in mind that the court stated no new rule but merely applied a principle clearly laid down in earlier cases. Further, Negroes in the South have not been excluded from juries by law, any more than they have been excluded by law from the ballot. They have just been excluded. Many of the southern editorials gathered by the Information Service of the Federal Council of Churches, discount the decision. Thus the Wilmington, N. C., Star:

. . . it does not follow that Alabama will rush to the fore with mixed juries. . . . Alabama is too deep in the South to permit of that, and even should it insert the names of Negroes in the jury boxes for the purpose of complying with the Supreme Court, ways will be found to continue the jury service as at present and within the law.

At this writing, it seems clear that Alabama authorities propose to continue their efforts to execute the seven Negroes, who have been in prison charged with rape since 1931. But after the trials already held, the reversals of the verdicts, the increasingly sharp racial issues raised, the local resentment over the communist propaganda based on the case, it is open to question whether the Scottsboro boys can be fairly tried there, no matter what kind of jury is in the box.

Andalusia, Ala., Star
May 2, 1935

WHAT DOES LEIBOWITZ KNOW ABOUT AMERICAN IDEALS?

Samuel Leibowitz, council for the defense in the famous "Scottsboro Case," has made a formal request to Governor Graves to pardon the nine negro defendants, thus bringing to an end "this carousal of hate," and saying "subsersive elements" originally instrumental in popularizing the case are seeking to "tear down our form of government" and substitute "the bolshevism of Moscow" for "our cherished American ideals and traditions."

In the first place, we would like to know what a man with Samuel's last name would be expected to know about American ideals and traditions—we feel sure that he knows a lot about "the bolshevism of Moscow."

We are strongly in favor of giving every defendant (white or colored) in every case, a fair trial, and it is horrorfying to us to think of our courts administering severe punishment to an innocent person, of any race, but it is our impression that in altogether too many cases our courts—our judges and our juries—are too sympathetic and too soft, and that mercy instead of justice, is too often shown. This is without doubt largely responsible for the wave of lawlessness and crime that has swept over the entire country in the last decade.

It seems that the only question involved in the famous case referred to above, is whether negroes are systematically excluded from juries in Jackson county. Mr. Leibowitz would have the defendants excused, not because they have been shown to be innocent, but because there were no negroes on the numerous juries which have found them guilty.

In other words, we are forced to believe, from his conduct as well as his name, that Samuel really belongs to that heard of "shister" lawyers who seem to take peculiar delight in trying to defeat justice on all occasions thereby "seeking to tear down our form of government"—the most dangerous type of "public [illegible]"

Scottsboro, Ala., Sentinel
May 2, 1935

Mrs. Victoria Price Comes To Scottsboro To Swear Out New Warrants For Negroes

Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville, accompanied by her bodyguard, Mr. Tiller, and former sheriff, Ben Giles came to Scottsboro Wednesday afternoon and swore out warrants against the nine negroes in the "Scottsboro Case." The warrants were against the negroes originally arrested, tried and convicted on charges of rape.

The warrants were sworn out before County Solicitor H. C. Hayes, presumedly at the orders of the state officials in charge of the prosecution. It is supposed that this new warrant move is a preliminary step for the further prosecution of this case. It is probable the grand jury investigation will not occur until the September term of the Circuit Court, by which time there may be some changes on the jury roll. Up to this time, however, the local jury commission has not been ordered to make any changes in the Jackson County rolls.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama.

4985

Ft. Payne, Ala., Journal
April 24, 1935

The Scottsboro Case

The United States Supreme Court has again reversed and remanded the trial of those Negroes who were convicted of having assaulted two white women in Jackson County a few years ago. This reversal by the highest tribunal in our land is not any surprise to a student of our Constitution, and said tribunal should not be censored for its decision. It merely upheld a certain part of the Constitution—the Fourteenth Amendment. It should be remembered that the Supreme Court is a court of law and its duty is to construe the meaning of the Constitution—to say whether or not any of it has been violated. In this particular case the court based its decision on the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment under the "equal protection" clause. In giving the opinion, Chief Justice Hughes stated that the absence of Negroes from the jury rolls should have caused the trial court to quash the indictments, that there is no justification for excluding qualified Negroes from the jury rolls. To one who is clothed with the highest robe and sitting a thousand miles away from the scene of such atrocious crimes, that sounds reasonable in light of the Fourteenth Amendment, but to us, who are Southerners, it presents a complex situation. But, as citizens of this great country, it is our duty to accept and obey the law of the land.

Since this decision, and in keeping with the spirit of obedience to law, Governor Graves has ordered that Negroes' names be placed on the jury rolls throughout the State. Whether or not this act will solve the situation is yet to be seen. Whatever the result may be it should be remembered that Governor Graves merely did what the highest law in the land said should be done.

Since this case happened so near us, and since it is a problem that confronts the South in particular and since some of our Republican friends, (Mr. Norman C. Wilkes and the Editor of the DeKalb Times) have tried to make it appear that the Democratic party is responsible for the Negro being on the jury rolls, it seems to me the public should be informed as to why the highest court in our land has twice reversed the lower courts in this case. I have answered one part of this question already. The first reversal was based on the "due process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and the second reversal was based on the "equal protection" clause of the same Amendment.

So the reversal of the death sentence of those Negroe criminals is not the fault of the United States Supreme Court, but rather the fault of that Negro Amendment to the Constitution which was proposed by a radical Republican Congress in 1866 and ratified by radical Republican States in 1868. It is the fault of that Amendment that was forced on the South by the Republican party, that Amendment that made Negroes equal to the Whites in the eyes of the law, that Amendment that allowed Negroes to sit with the "Carpet Baggers" in the Legislature of Alabama and squander our State resources.

Being a teacher, Mr. Wilkes should know the above facts, but being a Republican politician and living in the South, I doubt if he wants to know them. If you don't know these facts, Mr. Wilkes, in justice to the pupils you teach, read a little history. Then you will not ask a Democrat how he will feel sitting in the jury box beside the Negro, when any sensible Democrat or Republican will know that the presence of a Negro in a jury box will have been caused by the acts of the Republican party. And being a teacher I think you should get better informed on the immigration question. Do you know that it was a Democratic representative from this Congressional district that fought in a Republican Congress for years for a bill that would limit the number of immigrants? Your eleventh hour phrase is interesting. I am reminded here of the sacrificial eleventh hour message you sent to Montgomery—you repented at the eleventh hour, but now you haven fallen by the wayside again.

Now, Mr. Editor of DeKalb Times April 11th issue, I haven't much to say about your editorial on the Scottsboro cases. Being editor of a

REGISTER
HUDSON, N. Y.
APR 6 1935

WHY NOT FREE THEM?

More than four years ago nine negro youths were charged with having criminally assaulted two white women on a freight train in Alabama. While mobs raged around the courthouse eight of them were tried, convicted and sentenced to death, all within 48 hours.

Later two witnesses for the state including one of the white women involved, confessed that their evidence had been perjured. Eventually a large number of people became convinced that the accused were innocent. Now most Northerners, at least, feel that the Scottsboro defendants were victims of race prejudice in its most virulent form.

The original verdict of guilty was set aside by the United States Supreme Court on the ground that negroes are systematically excluded from Alabama juries. A similar verdict in the second trial was set aside by the presiding judge as being based on insufficient evidence. Monday the highest tribunal in the land ruled that Patterson and Norris, the only two actually tried for the third time, had again been deprived of their constitutional rights.

Perhaps the most significant aspect of the decision is not the reversal of the death sentence, which was more or less expected, but the fact that for the first time the court made an unequivocal statement as to the illegality of barring negroes from jury service.

Clearly the Supreme Court's decree presents difficulties. Not only must new indictments be found against the accused but negroes must technically be drawn to serve on grand and trial juries if those youths who have languished in prison since early in 1931 are to be tried for a fourth time. It would seem more advisable to turn the Scottsboro boys loose than to try to revolutionize Southern methods and temperament.

THE "MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER" AGAIN

We are again compelled to take official notice of another editorial appearing in the "Montgomery Advertiser" of recent date. This one bears the caption, "Governor Graves' Letter About Negro Jurors." This one is the same type as the one previously answered; the only difference, if any, may be found in its more uniform contempt for truth and fair play.

The "Montgomery Advertiser," still chafing under the sting of Chief Justice Hughes' rebuke in the Scottsboro case, now attempts to hide its cowardly conscience by charging that the colored citizens of Alabama are so void of their proper responsibility as not to desire to sit as jurors.

In an effort to state their case for them the editor makes this confession, "Everybody knows that there are hundreds of Negroes in Alabama who are qualified by native intelligence and personal character to serve on a jury drawn to hear any cause." This editorial statement serves to stamp the jury commissioner of Jackson County, when the jurors were being qualified to try the then pending Scottsboro case in the criminal court of that county, as a liar and perjurer.

The jury commissioner of that county upon his oath—and it is presumed that this oath was taken before the properly constituted authorities—swore that there was not a colored man in the county of sufficient intelligence and of sound mind and body qualified to act as a juror. Now the fact is that somebody was lying.

Journalistic courtesy prompts us to give the benefit of the doubt to the editorial writer of the "Montgomery Advertiser." If the weight of evidence and reliance for truth and veracity is to be placed on the side of the Fourth Estate, then the jury commission of Jackson County in thus swearing has committed a crime for which the law-enforcing agencies of Alabama should prosecute him.

In addition to this admission upon the part of the "Montgomery Advertiser" that the Jackson County jury commissioner was a perjurer and a liar, the "Advertiser" has this to say "The Advertiser will here say upon its own responsibility that the great majority of Ne-

Opelika, Ala. News
April 17, 1935

FROM SCOTTSBORO

The following article is from the Scottsboro Sentinel, edited by P. W. Campbell, and gives an idea of that section's reaction to the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court:

"The editor of The Sentinel finds himself in a peculiar position at present insofar as "editoralizing" on the Scottsboro case and its latest turns. I am the new chairman of the Jackson County Jury Board and have been in that position since January 1st this year. Under the circumstances comment would be inadvisable.

"It is my opinion that Governor Graves in his declaration regarding putting names of negroes on the Alabama jury rolls, pulled a master stroke, as he left the Northern critics and agitators wide-mouthed and astonished. They did not want that sort of answer from Alabama. What they wanted was for our State officials to buck and snort and cuss and refuse to agree with anything. But Graves, as well as other state leaders, took the thunder away from the agitators and left them nonplused without ammunition to shoot with. Graves also drew the praise of the press that will now for the first time wonder if we really did go out every morning and kill a negro for amusement!

"The suggestion of the Governor is not alarming, especially to a people who knew a time called "Reconstruction" and survived it fairly well."

groes in Alabama do not desire to be called for jury service."

On this point it may be observed that there are always some would-be leaders, hat-in-hand type, surrenderers of privileges and rights of the Race, who can always be called upon to serve the vicious purposes of a certain white constituency of the South, who live and exist upon the sale and barter of the interest of black people. We still have faith, however, that even in Alabama, where the civic and moral spirit of the state is still steeped in the putridity of a slave oligarchy, that there are men of black skin who will stand for and insist upon enjoying and receiving all the responsibilities imposed upon them by citizenship rights.

We do not believe that the editor of the "Montgomery Advertiser" speaks the truth when he expresses views otherwise. Even the "Advertiser" may as well realize that hope, liberty, freedom and justice at last discern a way and method of obtaining those rights which they deserve and that there will arise in Alabama black men of sufficient courage and manhood to stake everything, even life itself, upon the permanent establishment of freedom and liberty for themselves and descendants, the "Montgomery Advertiser" to the contrary notwithstanding.

Tolerance Within Limits

A FEW YEARS ago the editor of the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser received the PULITZER award for having achieved the best thing in journalism for the year, viz., waged a successful fight against intolerance and bigotry as represented in the Ku Klux Klan in Alabama.

Paradoxically the same paper has been the chief fire-brand behind the frantic efforts of the Alabama kluxers in their desire to legally, or illegally, lynch the nine Scottsboro boys.

The Advertiser hailed the Supreme Court's decision, delivered by Chief Justice HUGHES, in the following language:

"... Otherwise, we wish to say that Mr. Hughes's pontfical deliverance is a lot of baloney. It seems to The Advertiser that if the Supreme court presided over by Charles Evans Hughes had a more sensitive regard for the victims (actual and potential) of felonious assault and less regard for the politically dispossessed in the home State of the victims it would not devote an entire opinion to an academic political question, but would offer some comment on the evidence by which the gorillas aforesaid had been convicted."

Tolerance, we apprehend, is a virtue that may reside transiently in the minds of some people, and may be subject to certain limitations, one of which, as manifested by the Alabama Pulitzer Prize Ku Klux Killer, is inability to see eye to eye with the United States Supreme Court. It was up to the Alabama courts to properly evaluate the evidence and give the accused a fair trial. The U. S. Supreme Court has twice held that they did not.

Marianna, Fla., Courier – Daily
April 18, 1935

TO A BRIGHT YOUNG MAN IN KANSAS

(Dothan Eagle)

UNDER the heading, "A Lynching Thwarted," the following editorial appears in the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette, written by W. L. White, associate editor and son of the famed William Allen White:

Right back where it started from—to the state courts of Alabama, the federal supreme court has sent the famous Scottsboro case. In the mass of legal verbiage, the federal court said what everyone knows—namely that a negro accused of sexual offense against a white woman cannot get a fair trial in the South under present conditions.

The technicality which the federal court hit upon was the fact that no negroes are drawn for jury duty in Alabama. Now if Southern public opinion were not diseased with hysteria on the negro question, it would still be possible to have a fair trial.

But the mind of a Southern juror in such a case runs like this: "Well, maybe he didn't do it. But if we let him off, lots of folks will think maybe he did, and niggers will get the idea they can get away with such crimes."

So, just to be safe, they stick him, which certainly was the case in the Scottsboro trial. In Kansas, in Missouri, in Nebraska, in New York or New England, a negro accused of this offense would have had fair consideration from a jury of twelve white men. But this is impossible in the deep South.

The federal supreme court has stopped this legal lynching. Until the South will give the negro his civil rights, which include trial by a jury of his peers, the innocent victims of the Scottsboro frame-up are safe from the electric chair.

All of which is interesting enough, but hardly informative, as young Mr. White was born and raised in Kansas, later to dwell in the elevating atmosphere of Harvard long enough to complete his education. Thus a Southerner may be pardoned to question the young man's second-hand opinions of conditions in the South, whether they be social or otherwise.

It would be easy for the inelegant and unimaginative mind to invite young Mr. White to take a flying leap to hell—or else remain in Kansas, which amounts to practically the same—but in the interest of improving at least one member of the human race, it would be more clubby to invite him to toss aside his copy of Uncle Tom's Cabin and visit Alabama for a deal of first-hand information regarding negroes and whites in general, and the case of the Scottsboro babies, muling and puking in their mothers arms, in particular.

In the meanwhile, we trust the gentleman will indulge us long enough to inform him that his statements stink. They smell, in fact, well-nigh as revolting as those issued by Samuel Leibtwitz, the political belled buzzard of Harlem, in his nobler moments. Which, take it from us, is rotten plenty.

British Press Lauds Scottsboro Ruling

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CP)—The Scottsboro Decision by the United States Supreme Court received prominent display in the British press. Many of the most widely read carried long detail stories of the decision on the front page.

The Scottsboro mandate by the nation's highest tribunal was featured as "the biggest news of the day" in The Liberal News Chronicle. In addition to featuring the Scottsboro decision reversing Alabama's court decrees, The Liberal News Chronicle carried a leading editorial which asserted, "The Supreme Court struck a tremendous blow for the rights of the American Negro generally."

Since the recent reversal, British people have been following closely the reaction of Alabama and the South as relates to what steps they will take either to obey it or to disregard it and evade it. The Texas primary decision which upheld the Democratic party in excluding Negroes from voting also came in for much comment throughout Great Britian.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4986

Auburn, Ala. Plainsman
April 10, 1935

Scottsboro Again

Unusually obtuse is the latest attitude taken by the Montgomery Advertiser toward the loudly-bruited and by-now-quite-wearisome Scottsboro Case. The latest wrinkle our erring contemporary is exhibiting is a childlike perverseness in urging the prosecution to do its damndest and hound these felons to the gallows, even if it "takes a hundred years." There seems no doubt in the mind of the editorialist as to the guilt of the defendants, though one Alabama judge smashed his own political career because he had the courage to question; but then, to admit of doubt would bring up the rather annoying insinuation that an Alabama court might be wrong. Of course that would never do. After all, sixty forthright, God-fearing Alabama citizens have said the defendants were guilty, and if the United States Supreme Court says they may not be, or says that the trials were unfair, why, the highest tribunal is just wrong, that's all.

We, the young, in our simple idealism, are prone to question the ethics and mental soundness of an editorialist who lets childish state pride and race prejudice lead him to such depths of perversity.

We are not qualified to say whether or not the defendants are guilty of the felony for which they have been indicted; we like to think that the verdicts of our state courts should be upheld and declared valid, but we are not going to sulk and insist on our own rightness if such proves not to be the case. And we are inclined to think that simple justice, not discrimination against a Southern state, actuated the decision of the Supreme Court.

Finally, we believe that the next hearing of the case should be simply a trial of a case at criminal law, not a stage for class warfare, as defense counsels have sought to make it. Moreover, we feel it would be well to forget this die-hard chauvinism that insists that the State of Alabama is on trial; thence springs much of the perverse rhetoric weighting down many an Alabama editorial page.

The Supreme Court has said that the trials were not conducted fairly, and Mr. Justice Hughes has pointed out the reasons for this decision. The jurisprudence of the Court has been met by the statesmanship of Governor Graves who has acted immediately to rectify the conditions which made the trial seem unfair. Let us hope that one more revolution of the wheels of the law will settle this issue once and for all and that Alabamians take on a more sober attitude toward the issue.

Raising chickens in their rooms is the latest fad of students at Marshall College (Huntington, W. Va.)

Macon, Ga., Telegraph
April 21, 1935

Bowing to the Court Decision

Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama bowed gracefully enough to the recent Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro cases. The court ruled that the trial judge was not justified in supposing the jury commissioners had shown no discrimination against the Negro race. It intimated that books had been tampered with and evidence had been manufactured.

Governor Graves moved at once when he learned of the decision. It was announced that he wrote every trial judge in Alabama to comply with the ruling by revising jury rolls before any new juries are drawn. Also that he asked that all jury boxes be emptied and refilled in accordance with the principles enunciated by the decision of the Supreme Court.

He apologetically said: "It is unusual and arbitrary, if not unprecedented, for the Governor to undertake to suggest to the judicial department things which under our state policy are peculiarly under their jurisdiction. However, I have a duty to perform and an oath to abide by, and I and they are equally bound to enforce the supreme law of the land."

The Governor also wrote to all jury commissioners and to all circuit solicitors suggesting the manner in which they can best meet the pending indictments.

People all over the South were naturally interested in what the Governor had to say, and the judges in almost every judicial circuit in every state naturally took stock.

Georgia lawyers feel that their supreme court has a clean record. It has not hesitated to reverse any judgment that was tainted with prejudice. A case in Bryan county was reported in 168th Georgia, pages 370 to 374, in which the commissioners were on record they would keep out of the jury box a certain race of citizens.

The Georgia supreme court promptly said that was a gross abuse of legal discretion, and the court could not escape the conclusion that jurors' qualifications had been arbitrarily decided. When the question of prejudice or discrimination has been raised in Georgia, it has been customary, so far as can be learned, to invite evidence to that effect.

More than one county, including Bibb, has used Negro jurors, though in recent years the use of them has grown less and less until some counties have not had any on a panel in a number of years.

There can be no doubt that the Supreme Court's ruling will result in precautions that have not been taken in the past. But as one Macon lawyer puts it, the question of selecting a jury is not and never should be a race question. The very best material available is none too good, and the shame of the entire country has been the lack of the right kind of material for the best jury service. Questions involving race, politics, social standing, and all matters of that kind have no proper consideration in a jury system among intelligent and upright people.

And while there can be no objection to doing everything that can promote justice and fair dealing to everybody, it stands to reason that the higher the type of jurors the more the chance of insuring justice to Negroes and white people.

Nothing can be gained by criticising the court for jerking up the public and reminding it of the jury section of the fourteenth amendment, nor should such criticism be indulged, but it is perfectly proper to say that the jury section of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution was never intended to be patriotic. It was intended to humiliate the gentry of the old South. It pretended to champion the cause of the Negro. It may have been the best product of the brains of the time, but it is not a credit to such brains.

The law was ratified by carpetbag legislatures, and the Negroes who were supposed to benefit by it were finally embittered and left among the Southern white people with whom they would have been as good friends in those days as they are in these days. The only hindrance was just such foolhardy efforts to lift them into high place before they were prepared by education, experience or intelligence.

Those who have made their way up in the scale since those gory and unhappy days are to be congratulated, and they have never had any trouble in getting patient co-operation and sympathetic hearing from Southern whites in any moves for the betterment of their race.

The Supreme Court has not upset the order of things in many communities of the South. The two races get along together now better than they ever have since the carpetbaggers ruined the peace and happiness of both through just such spirit as the fourteenth amendment so strikingly manifests.

Birmingham, Ala. News
April 18, 1935

COUNTY OFFICIALS WAIT LEGISLATION

Judges Are Cautious About Placing Negroes' Names On Qualified List

BY T. M. DAVENPORT
Associated Press Staff Writer

Alabama courts and jury commissioners Wednesday moved slowly to revise jury rolls to conform to the United States Supreme Court's decision in the "Scottsboro Case," which many said meant the names of Negroes would be entered on jury rolls.

So far as a survey showed Wednesday, none had actually begun revision of the rolls in conformity with a suggestion from Gov. Bibb Graves that they take steps to make the rolls meet the requirements of the law.

The United States Supreme Court in reversing the death sentences imposed on two of the nine Negro defendants in the "Scottsboro Case" held that the absence of Negroes from the rolls in Jackson County where they were indicted violated the constitutional rights of the defendants.

Immediately on receipt of a copy of the official opinion, Gov. Graves wrote circuit judges and solicitors, suggestions on the Supreme Court decision. "This means we must put the names of Negroes on the jury rolls in every county in Alabama."

The governor suggested that immediate steps to make the jury rolls conform be taken, if they did not already do so.

Judge Paul Speake, of Madison Circuit Court, said Wednesday he had given notice to the jury board that it will be called into session immediately after the May term of

Approves Governor's Stand

Solicitor John McEachin, of Madison, said new indictments would be asked against the nine defendants.

"The Legislature must pass a law authorizing the dumping and refilling of the boxes,' Judge Hawkins said, 'as the law now plainly states be done until the authority,' us Hawkins, who prescribes the manner in which the boxes are Circuit Court filled, and then are refilled only and who once pro- after they become exhausted."

Jackson County rolls were of the prosecution, sides over the Circuit Court, said Wednesday that it will be called into session Gov. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special assistant attorney general in charge of the prosecution, said he asked against the nine defendants. "The Legislature has been taken authorizing the dumping and refilling of the boxes,' Judge Hawkins be done until the authority,' said, 'as the law now plainly states us Hawkins, who prescribes the manner in which the boxes are Circuit Court filled, and then are refilled only and who once pro- after they become exhausted."

Jackson County rolls were of the prosecution, said he asked against the nine defendants. "The Legislature has been taken authorizing the dumping and refilling of the boxes,' Judge Hawkins be done until the authority,' said, 'as the law now plainly states us Hawkins, who prescribes the manner in which the boxes are Circuit Court filled, and then are refilled only and who once pro- after they become exhausted."

Jackson County rolls were remade by the jury commission in January due to the existing books having been taken to Washington in connection with the appeals in the "Scottsboro Case."

P. W. Campbell, president of the board, said no action toward dumping the jury boxes and making up new jury rolls would be taken until Judge Hawkins ordered it.

Out of 8,000 to 9,000 adult males in Jackson County, Campbell said the board had qualified approximately 800, or about 10 per cent, for jury duty.

Small Negro Population

"Our Negro population is one of the lowest in the state," he said, "as there are only about 1,500 out of 35,000 inhabitants Negroes."

In the Fourth Judicial Circuit, Judge John Miller said no immediate action was contemplated, although he recently postponed indefinitely the Spring court term in Wilcox County because of the uncertainty that might obtain about some cases, due to the "Scottsboro Case" decision.

No further court terms are scheduled in his district, lying in the Black Belt (so named for the black soil that prevails), until May.

In Etowah County, James L. Herring, chairman of the Jury Board, said the list would be revised, as "we expect to make our jury rolls fully measure up to the requirements, probably in time for the criminal trials, early in May."

In Houston County, J. F. Beall, member of the board, said no authority to revise the rolls had been given, and no action would be taken until such authority was issued, but added the name of one Negro was on existing rolls and had been for eight years.

Judge D. C. Halstead, who presides over the circuit, has declined to comment on the decision, but Solicitor Hubert Farmer said, "Negroes good enough to be qualified as jurors will be good enough to ask that they be excused from serving on juries."

Generally the judges have moved with caution, many holding they were without authority to move, since so far as they knew the lists conformed to the requirements of the law.

Legislative action, when the Legislature reconvenes, April 30, was certain, however, with the probability that the jury laws will be completely revised.

Many legislators are known to favor such a move, with the new law probably limiting jury service to qualified male electors.

NEW YORK TIMES

APR 7 1935

Scottsboro

"No State shall * * * deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws," says the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

On the ground that Clarence Norris, one of the Negroes convicted in the Scottsboro case, had been denied the equal protection of the laws the Supreme Court last week reversed his conviction by the State of Alabama and opened the way for a new trial. The court gave a parallel decision in the case of Haywood Patterson, another of the Scottsboro defendants.

The Scottsboro case has been in the courts since March, 1931, when two white girls reported that they had been attacked by a crowd of Negro youths while riding in a freight car through Jackson County, Ala. Subsequently, eight Negroes were convicted and sentenced to death.

Numerous organizations, Negro and white, interested themselves in behalf of the defendants. A test appeal was taken to the Supreme Court in the case of Ozzie Powell on the ground that he had not been furnished proper defense counsel. The Supreme Court decided against Alabama.

Subsequently Norris and Patterson were retried. Samuel Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer, headed defense counsel, and he found himself a very unpopular man in Alabama, where he was criticized as an interfering Northerner. Ruby Bates, one of the women involved, changed her testimony, saying that the entire story of the attack had been fabricated, but the Negroes were convicted again.

The appeal to the Supreme Court from that conviction was based on the contention that Negroes had been excluded from the grand jury which returned the indictment and from the trial jury. The Supreme Court last Monday agreed that, in excluding Negroes, the State had denied the defendants equal protection under the laws.

When Norris heard of the court's ruling, he said: "That shore is good news."

Patterson said: "You must think I'm drunk if I believe that."

On Friday Governor Bibb Graves wrote to circuit judges and solicitors throughout Alabama suggesting that they revise jury lists to include Negroes. He announced that he would ask the Legislature to take action to achieve that end.

Columbia, S. C. State
April 19, 1935

"THE SOUTH'S DILEMMA," AND WOMEN HOBOES.

It is bad enough when boys run away from home. Infinitely worse is it when girls leave their homes and go upon the roads. They set out as "hitchhikers" and are likely to become hoboes.

Acute concern in this tramping by girls and young white women in the South is not confined to their families. Communities, states, society are involved. Society in the South, rightly or wrongly, assumes a responsibility to protect young women who tramp around the country, hobo in freight cars and freely expose themselves to those dangers against which decent women take every precaution. And yet sentiment here demands that society protect them from insult, regardless of their manner of life and conduct which society condemns.

Some future historian may cite two young women hoboes as primarily responsible for bringing about radical changes in jury methods and court procedure in the South. What those changes may be cannot now be known. But more than one Southern governor and legislature is disturbed about the situation.

What is now known as the Alabama "Scottsboro case"—the trial and condemnation of a group of Negroes for assault upon young women "hoboing" in freight cars—has now, through a decision handed down by the United States supreme court, forced this section where the names of no Negroes go into the jury boxes, to face what The Boston Transcript terms "The South's Dilemma." And that is a fact. The Virginia attorney general says: "If the supreme court has held it is necessary to have Negroes on juries, chances are we shall have to take cognizance of it."

The supreme court has not held it "necessary to have Negroes" on juries, but it seems to have held that they must have fair opportunity to get upon juries, and with a determined fight against evasion, it is going to become increasingly difficult to evade the spirit of the constitutional principle.

In one part of his opinion in the Scottsboro case, Chief Justice Hughes said: "Although the state statute defining the qualifications of jurors may be fair on its face, the constitutional provision affords protection against action of the state through its administrative officers in effecting the prohibited discrimination." And again the chief justice: "For this long-continued, unvarying and wholesale exclusion of Negroes from jury service we find no justification consistent with the constitutional mandate."

The North Carolina attorney general said this decision "gives us pause for thought." And one of the thoughts is that under the supreme court's ruling the way is open for appeal to that court to set aside any verdict rendered in any state where it is claimed the names of qualified Negroes are not placed in the jury boxes. Where financial means are procurable the avenue is open for endless litigation. And whenever there is a sensational case, like that of Scottsboro, financial means will be provided.

There will be plans without number proposed to meet the letter but evade the spirit of the constitution, but with the supreme court unanimous in its stand on this issue, it is going to be difficult, if not impossible, successfully to sustain the opposition. States like Virginia and North Carolina may not make serious fight against meeting the spirit of the supreme court's interpretation. As a matter of truth, a fight now would not be made for the "integrity of juries."

Had those young women not turned tramps, this issue might not have been raised for another 25 years.

HUTCHINSON, KANS.
NEWS
APR 2 1935

BACK TO BEGINNING

After four flurried years of litigation the celebrated Scottsboro, Alabama, case is back exactly where it started. Justice, it would seem, is still thwarting popular prejudices in the far south.

In the spring of 1931 nine young Negroes were arrested on the charge of raping two young white girls who were their traveling companions in a box car on a night journey across Alabama. Eight of the nine were found guilty and sentenced to hang, the ninth being excused on account of his youth. The Alabama supreme court upheld the convictions. The supreme court of the United States overruled them on the ground the defendants had not been adequately defended. The case went back to the lower court and the second trial aroused almost as much national interest as the immortal monkey-evolution proceedings at Dayton, Tennessee.

Certain of the defendants were convicted a second time at Scottsboro, despite the fact that one of the complaining witnesses repudiated her original testimony. Again the state supreme court affirmed the verdict. And yesterday for a second time, the supreme court of the United States held the conviction was unjustice and ordered yet another trial.

Alabama must be admired for its persistency. It is staying firm in its ancient idea that in an affair of this kind, whatever the evidence or lack of it, the accused must be hanged if only as an example. It is remaining unmoved by any notions other parts of the country may have about right or justice. At the end of four years of controversy, however, it appears that the federal supreme court is equally adamant. In the end Scottsboro presumably will either have to give up or fall back on the old southern custom of lynching.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4987

May Day in the Deep South Shows Growing Unity of Negro and White

Resistance of Masses Meets New Drive By Roosevelt Regime

Daily Worker

By NAT ROSS

The big drive of Roosevelt and the bosses against the living standards of the toilers and against the trade unions is being carried out with more vigor in the lower South than perhaps in any other section of the country. This drive is being met by a growing united resistance on the part of the southern masses, large sections of whom have been spurred on and galvanized by the recent partial, but great victory in the Scottsboro fight. Such, in a word, is the situation in Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi and Georgia as May Day, 1935 approaches.

May Day New in South

Only a few years back, May Day was relatively unknown to the southern workers. However, in the past few years, with the beginning of work by the Communist Party in the South, large sections of workers and farmers have become acquainted with this first international day of struggle. This was particularly seen on May Day, 1934, where thousands of workers took part in May Day actions in such important cities as New Orleans, Birmingham, Atlanta, Norfolk, etc.

The southern masses in participating in May Day help to revive the finest traditions of the American people, and of the working masses and oppressed people of the whole world. At the same time, the toilers of the South bring forth again the traditions of the remarkable and courageous struggles led by Negro slaves against chattel slavery, as well as the splendid activities of the abolitionists. On May Day, we in the South pay our fighting tribute to the hundreds of thousands of white and Negro workers and farmers who gave their lives in the Civil War to destroy chattel slavery. On this day we are reminded of those great words of Karl Marx, uttered in 1867. "Labor in the white skin cannot emancipate itself while labor in the black skin is branded," and of the tremendous impetus given to the American labor movement as a result of the smashing of chattel slavery.

Civil War Background

It was the defeat of chattel slavery that helped give rise to May Day as a day of struggle for the eight-hour day in the United States. So today we can say that a powerful united struggle for the liberation of the Negro people will be a tremendous help for developing a broad and fighting labor movement which can successfully move forward toward a Soviet America.

On this May Day the workers and farmers of the South will honor the memory of Ralph Gray and other fallen sharecroppers who gave their lives in order that the oppressed farming masses of the South and of the Black Belt in particular, might organize their ranks. We pay our tribute to the score and more of white and Negro union men who gave their lives on southern picket lines under the regime of the New Deal. Truly we can say that for the toilers in the South, May Day represents a day of furthering the common interests of the white and Negro toilers, of deepening their solidarity, of broadening and uniting their ranks, whereas the reactionary ruling class in the South encourages every move toward fascism, and tries to intensify the lynch spirit.

It is for this reason that the advanced white workers are duty-bound to break down the feeling of white chauvinism and other backward moods among the white workers, and they themselves must boldly come forward in the struggle for equal rights for Negroes. At the same time the advanced section of the Negro population must carry on a daily struggle to break down the distrust for the white workers that the Negroes accumulated as a result of decades of Jim-Crowism and persecution, and these revolutionary Negroes must struggle on all fronts to bring the Negro masses in close harmony with their class brothers, the white workers.

Scottsboro Brings Unity

There is no question that among the proletarian masses there is a growing feeling of unity, as shown above all in the numerous strike struggles in the South in the past year. This whole spirit is brought to a higher plane as a result of the recent victory in the four year Scottsboro fight, which makes it possible to bury more deeply all the nonsense about Negro inferiority, as well as the cursed rape frame-ups. In the recent weeks Scottsboro has stirred the entire South. The decision has aroused practically the entire Negro population, and the four year struggle has literally opened the eyes of thousands upon thousands of white workers.

The ruling class received the Scottsboro decision as a "body blow," in the words of Solicitor Bailey of Jackson County, Alabama. And Governor Graves declared in his recent statement that "Whether we like the decision or not" the names of Negroes must be placed in the jury boxes. However, the main reaction of the Alabama ruling class is to find ways and means of actually keeping Negroes from serving on juries, with the exception of a few Negro professionals here and there. Already Senator Bonner, of Wilcox County, plans to introduce a bill in the Alabama Legislature, allowing only qualified voters to serve on juries. In the Black Belt this means not a single Negro will be qualified to serve, and very few will be qualified in other parts of Alabama.

In Birmingham, Assistant Solicitor Macadory declares that the jury rolls are satisfactory, despite the fact that John Altman, attorney for the State Federation of Labor, has published facts to show that not only are Negroes excluded, which is known to everybody, but tens of thousands of white union men and other white workers are prevented from jury service. As a result of the Scottsboro decision the reactionary ruling class is intensifying the lynch spirit. Representative Tunstall comes out against the proposed bill to limit poll tax payment to two years, on the ground that Negroes will pay their poll tax and may qualify. Commissioner Downs refuses a May Day permit for Capital Park in Birmingham, on the grounds that the Scottsboro fight has made the Negroes too insistent on their rights.

At the All-Southern United Front Conference for Trade Union and Civil Rights, to be held in Chattanooga, May 26, one of the major questions will be the struggle for the right of Negroes and white workers to sit on juries and to vote. Such a movement is also proceeding in many cities of the South, largely as a result of the victory in the Scottsboro fight. The movement for the right to vote and sit on juries, which directly affects a majority of the white workers and poor farmers and the whole Negro population, is also helping to deepen the struggle for civil rights in the South, and against the rapid growth of lynch terror and fascism.

Drive Against the Unions

The drive against the unions was launched on an intensified scale with the fake company union elections in the Birmingham steel mills of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company (U. S. Steel), on March 5. It was clear that the attack on the weak Amalgamated Association was to be the spring-board from which the powerful U.M.W.A. and the Smelter Union would be attacked. In fact, it was the signal for the attack on all the unions in Birmingham and on the working conditions. This is seen in the laundry strike, in which approximately 1,200 workers, mainly Negro women, are asking for a small increase over their present wage of sixteen and two-thirds cents an hour. The laundry owners refuse to have any dealing with the union representatives since their intent is to smash the union altogether. Most of the plants are operating with a small force of scabs, brought in mainly by the police and the White Legion.

Although some strike leaders agreed to discontinue mass picketing, the laundry strikers, with the help of the coal miners, have recently made a determined resistance to bringing scabs into the plants, and are prepared in the next few days to close the plants down by real mass picketing. The help that the coal miners are giving the laundry strikers is one of the most remarkable acts of solidarity witnessed in the South, and results primarily from the appeal made by the Communist Party, and in spite of the open sabotage of Bill Mitch, District President of the U.M.W.A.

Just before April 1, it was clear to all that the 21,000 coal miners were ready to strike. This was prevented at the very last minute by the desperate actions of Bill Mitch. The miners are now at work under a temporary agreement, but the operators are insisting on a lower wage. At the District Convention of the U.M.W.A. just held, Bill Mitch was compelled to speak about higher wages and shorter hours, although immediately after the close of the convention he is already pussy-footing. The convention went on record as opposed to the N.R.A. wage differential for southern workers, and against the Street Sedition Bill. The leading officials at the convention declared war against the Communist Party, which created dissatisfaction among a number of delegates.

Another important event in the Alabama labor movement is the annual convention of the State Federation of Labor, to be held May 13. A number of burning questions face the rank and file at this convention. No doubt the most important question that the rank and file must raise is that of the trade unions of Alabama officially going on record for building a broad mass labor party as a further weapon in the hands of the toilers for better conditions, and against the traditional support to the Democratic party, as well as a weapon against the phenomenal growth of influence of the fascist demagogue, Huey Long.

May Day in Other Cities

In District 17, the Communist Party has called for united May Day meetings in many cities. In Birmingham, while it was decided not to go to Capital Park, a number of open meetings will be held in different sections of Birmingham, and the suburbs, such as Tarrant, Ensley, Pratt, Fairfield and Bessemer. In the Alabama Black Belt, meetings will be held in the Montgomery section, in Selma, in the Tallapoosa area and in other sections of the cotton fields. In Georgia, meetings will be held in Atlanta; in Tennessee, meetings will be held in Chattanooga, Memphis and in other cities; and in Mississippi, meetings will be held in Oxford and in other cities.

There is no doubt that May Day, 1935, will be a day of united struggle in the South, against the Roosevelt New Deal, for the unionization of the South, for the complete freedom of the Scottsboro boys, for the growing solidarity of the Negro and white toilers. It will be a further step in the whole struggle for a Soviet America.

Boston Sets Scottsboro Defense Day

Communist Party Calls for Support of Tag Day May 5

Daily Worker

BOSTON.—District One of the Communist Party has called upon I.L.D. District Office, 5 Harrison Avenue, Boston, Mass. All I.L.D. members are being mobilized for this tag day, and the Party has pledged full support, and urges all units to mobilize all their members and members of workers' organizations in every city of Rhode Island, Massachusetts (Eastern half), New Hampshire, Maine and Vermont to take part in a house to house collection on Sunday, May 5, for the Scottsboro defense.

Collection cans, badges and credentials may be obtained from the

Roanoke, Ala., Leader
April 10, 1935

Alabama Is Called Upon To Deal With A New Problem

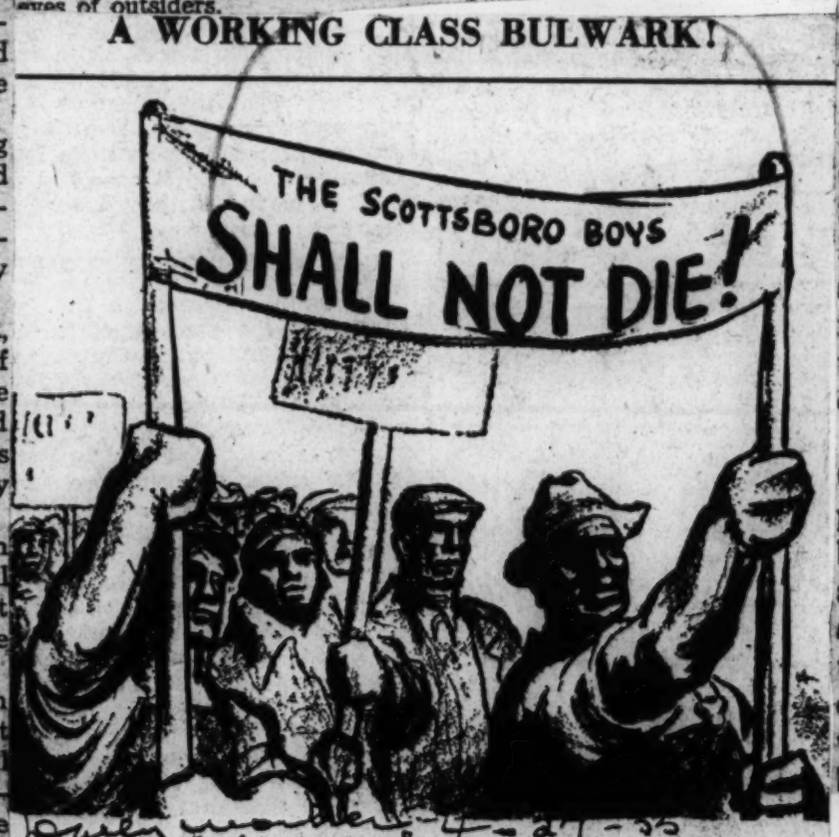
The Roanoke Leader has purposely kept its columns free of the voluminous and nauseating accounts of the trials of a band of young Negroes in North Alabama charged with a heinous capital offense. Indeed, it would have been much better for Alabama had there been far less publicity in this case, which has been before the public for fours years. Particularly unfortunate has it been that so much publicity has been given the matter in the North, where rabid and uncalled for criticism has been unleashed, tending to breed discord and trouble between the two races in the South and ill will between the sections.

Now, however, after many legal delays and two trials, resulting in the death sentence being passed upon two of the nine accused who have had a second trial and since the Supreme Court of the United States has declared the verdict of the state court void because of alleged systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries in Jackson county an entirely new issue is presented, one that cannot be ignored.

The situation is not one that calls for criticism of the high court, but for sane and considered action on the part of the people of this state, and other states, in the light of the decision which is the final word of authority. It is conceivable that hasty and ill-tempered action might lead to serious consequences. On the other hand, it is reasonable to conclude that sober and judicial thought will find a way to a proper adjustment of the matter.

All good citizens, white and colored, will wish and work for an outcome that will make for the most of amity and justice for all concerned. Already the Governor has issued an appeal to our court officials to comply promptly with the law as handed down by the Supreme Court.

Following this development, it is proper to say that the wisdom and resources of our leading thinkers in both races should be brought to bear upon this delicate problem so as to reach an accord that will be satisfactory to all reasonable minds. Considerable latitude is reserved to the courts within the limits of the decision in question. The state can and does define the qualifications of voters, and it is suggested that it can also limit jury service to those who are eligible to vote. The first act is constitutional. Why should not the second be also?



Several challenges are allowed both sides in a case to be decided before a jury. Prospective jurors also have the privilege of asking to be excused from jury duty when drawn and it is in the province of the court to pass on these requests. Many men, including this writer, do not desire jury service. Probably few if any Negroes do.

In this connection The Leader again renews its suggestion of an overhauling of the jury system by whatever process may be necessary so as to provide a trained and competent jury of three judges, subject to be alternated between the various circuits when desirable, in lieu of a hand-picked dozen, more or less untrained, thus making for more efficiency and less expense. This would prove to be a cure for more ills than one.

Talladega Ala. Journal
April 18-1935

The trouble about the Scottsboro Case is that most outside of Alabama, and some inside, are very doubtful if the proof was sufficient. Judge Horton evidently did not so consider it. And the pity is that, right or wrong, it does not increase the estimation for our State in the eyes of outsiders.

A WORKING CLASS BULWARK!

Scottsboro Drive Lagging Dangerously, I. L. D. Warns

A new low figure in the daily contributions to the $20,000 Scottsboro defense fund drive of the International Labor Defense was reached Monday, when total donations amounted only to $75. None of this amount came from the various district organizations of the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense.

The heavy drop in contributions struck a note of serious danger to the mass campaign to free the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon, and especially to the new legal steps which are being taken by the International Labor Defense in the case of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, the two youngest Scottsboro boys.

The contributions are falling far short of current daily expenses in connection with the campaign and the cases as a whole, Anna Damon, acting national secretary of the I. L. D. said.

Besides these daily expenses, a minimum of $2,000 is needed at once to prepare for the juvenile court hearings for Wright and Williams.

The fall in contributions also denotes a dangerous lag in the mass campaign, without which the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon cannot be freed, Anna Damon pointed out.

Received so far in campaign:	$2,858.60
Still to be raised:	17,141.50

Rush funds immediately for Scottsboro defense, to the International Labor Defense, Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Eufaula, Ala. Tribune
April 18, 1935

FROM SCOTTSBORO

Editor Campbell of the Scottsboro Sentinel and also chairman of the jury commission of Jackson county, discussing the recent decision of the United States supreme court in the noted "Scottsboro case," gives an idea of that section's reaction in the following article:

"The editor of The Sentinel finds himself in a peculiar position at present insofar as editorializing on the Scottsboro case and its latest turns. I am the new chairman of the Jackson county jury board and have been in that position since January 1st of this year. Under the circumstances comment would be inadvisable.

"It is my opinion that Governor Graves in his declaration regarding putting names of negroes on the Alabama jury rolls, pulled a master stroke, as he left the northern critics and agitators wide-mouthed and astonished. They did not want that sort of answer from Alabama. What they wanted was for our state officials to buck and snort and cuss and refuse to agree with anything. But Graves, as well as other state leaders, took the thunder away from the agitators and left them nonplused without ammunition to shoot with. Graves also drew the praise of the press that will now for the first time wonder if we really did go out every morning and kill a negro for amusement!

"The suggestion of the governor is not alarming, especially to a people who knew a time called 'Reconstruction' and survived it fairly well."

Lynchings-1935
&
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4988

ELMIRA, N. Y.
ADVERTISER

APR 5 1935

THE STRONG HAND

Once more the strong hand of the United States' Supreme Court has reached out to snatch the Scottsboro boys from death.

This time only two of the orignal seven defendants had their cases reviewed by the nation's highest tribunal. But the result was much the same as in the first review of the cases.

The court held Alabama justice, which insists upon judging Negro defendants with lily white juries, has erred.

The retort of the court to Alabama's claim that no colored veniremen were possessed of the necessary qualifications for jurors was almost contemptuous, if such an expression can be used in connection with a Supreme Court decision.

"Upon the proof contained in the record now before us," wrote Chief Justice Hughes, "a conclusion that their (the Negroes) continuous and total exclusion from juries was because there were none possessing the requisite qualifications cannot be sustained."

It is quite obvious to any objective observer that Negroes, charged with certain crimes such as criminal assault, cannot get a fair trial in the Deep South. The actual evidence in the second set of Scottsboro trials would not have convicted anyone anywhere else.

It will be recalled that in 1931 seven young Negro lads jumped a freight train upon which they found some white boys and two girls. A fight started between the white boys and the Negroes and the former were driven from the train, the girls remaining. Almost two days later the girls preferred charges of assault against the Negroes. At the second trial one of the girls, having previously told her story to Raymond Fosdick, New York clergyman, appeared in court and denied wholly her former testimony, swearing that neither she nor her companion had received harm at the hands of the Negroes.

Evidence of this sort counts for nothing in an Alabama court when the issue is white versus black. The boys were condemned.

On the issue that Negroes are debarred from jury duty in Alabama the case was carried to the Supreme Court. Two questions were considered. The first, in the case of Clarence Norris, that there was racial discrimination in picking the jury. The second, in the case of Haywood Patterson, that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction in the matter.

Norris' case was sent back for retrial. That of Patterson for "further proceedings."

The main issue however is that Alabama has lost again. The power of a sovereign state against the public opinion of the nation has again been proved futile.

The best thing Alabama can do is to amend her judicial procedure to accord with the Constitution of the United States—and civilized opinion.

Bronx, N.Y. Home News

APR 3 1935

The Scottsboro Decision

For the second time, the United States Supreme Court has turned thumbs down on "Alabama justice." It has reversed the convictions of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the Scottsboro assault case defendants who were under sentence of death, and it went a step further — it held that the jury system of Alabama apparently is such that a fair trial, from a legal standpoint, is virtually impossible for members of the Negro race.

The Supreme Court ruled that the systematic barring of colored citizens from the jury rolls was prejudicial to the defendants who thereby were denied the "equal protection which the Constitution guarantees."

The result is that the two cases are returned to the State of Alabama for retrial.

(There is a slight and unimportant difference in the ruling as it affects the two youths. In one case, that of Norris, the retrial actually was ordered by the Supreme Court. In the other, because of a technicality, the retrial was not ordered, but the local courts were given the opportunity to provide a new trial. If they fail to comply, it is evident, the nation's highest court will see to it that Patterson, too, gets a new trial by order, since the same constitutional flaws were found in the conduct of his case.)

One important point is that they will have to be re-indicted, if Alabama insists upon proceeding against them, and that similar action will have to be taken against five other colored youths who were convicted with them during their first "carnival" trial in 1931.

The re-indictment process will be interesting to observe. Under the Supreme Court's ruling, it will have no validity unless Negroes are acceptable for the grand jury lists. Will the Alabama authorities now launch a search for "good Negroes" — the kind who will give advance assurance of a willingness to convict the "Scottsboro boys"?

Chief Justice Hughes, reading the decision which was concurred in by seven other members of the Supreme Court (with only Justice McReynolds non-participating), referred to testimony in the lower court which showed that none of the witnesses ever had heard of a Negro serving on a jury in the counties where the trials were held. Justice Hughes pointed out that many outstanding colored citizens met every requirement as to literacy, age and health, yet were not called.

The Court also found that the evidence of names being forged on the jury rolls, to give the impression that Negroes had not been excluded, was substantiated, and he criticized the lower court for not quashing the indictments on that score.

The first time the Supreme Court acted on the "Scottsboro case" it ordered a new trial for all seven youths because they had been deprived of the aid of counsel in the preparation of their defense. Thus far, only Patterson and Norris have been given new (that is, second) trials. The five others who are under a sentence of death are still waiting to be retried.

Ever since the first trial, when the seven were convicted on the testimony of two white girls, one of whom has since admitted that she gave perjured testimony, it has been generally believed that they were the victims of a serious miscarriage of justice. Outside of Alabama — or the "South" — few impartial citizens have doubted their innocence. Within the State, where, it is alleged, the stars keep falling romantically for those who are white and well-off, the people seem either convinced of the youths' guilt or are disposed to see them "burn, guilty or not."

We wonder how many trials will be necessary before the State of Alabama realizes that, regardless of its questionable ability to prevent lynchings, it cannot itself participate in a legal lynching?

SAVANNAH, GA.
NEWS
APR 3 1935
THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Sternly condemning barring of negroes from jury service, the United States Supreme Court struck down the conviction of two defendants in the famous Scottsboro assault cases. Terms of the decision apparently will make it necessary for them

St. Petersburg, Fla. Independent
April 4, 1935

Negroes On Juries.

The supreme court's ruling reversing the conviction of two of the Scottsboro negro defendants quite naturally stirs comment in the South. The court, in a decision read by Chief Justice Hughes, held that negroes had been systematically excluded from the jury rolls and that this was sufficient reason for reversing the case. Justice Hughes recalled that no witness, including some who had dwelled most of their lives in Jackson county, Alabama had been able to recall any time when negro served on a jury there. He added that there were many negroes who could meet every requirement for jurors — literacy tests, age and sound health.

The Alabama solicitor who prosecuted the Scottsboro cases responded immediately that the decision was a "body blow" to state courts in the South. Officials in other states, however, were not so sure about that. "It may mean more appeals to the United States courts," said the attorney general of North Carolina. To the attorney general of Tennessee it will not have any influence, he suspects, except on the particular Alabama cases. And most people will agree with him. The decision will be conveniently overlooked.

The ruling did, however, reveal the adroit methods used in various states to see that negroes do not serve on juries. The attorney general of Texas said: "Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials are in conformity with the decision of the supreme court. Generally when negroes are drawn for service a suitable excuse is presented and always accepted. Texans have demonstrated perfect ability to properly control the negro question within the constitution." And in Arkansas, "it just happens," said the attorney general, "that no jury commission selects negroes for jury duty. It may be just a coincidence." In some states a negro candidate for a jury is required to interpret parts of the constitution. And the interpretations, so far as the records show, have never proved satisfactory.

The Scottsboro trial was a sorry test for the South on the question of negro jury duty. On account of admitted perjury by one of the women and the fact that they both were members of the underworld, the state had a flimsy case. It was a perfect vehicle for Communists all over the world to ride. Even in Russia this Scottsboro trial is almost as well known as the case of Sacco and Vanzetti. When the supreme court was rendering its decision last Monday a howling mob outside cried "save the Scottsboro boys!" Alabama is handling a hot poker and cannot let go; and this decision turns on more heat.

WATERBURY, CONN
REPUBLICAN

APR 2 1935

The Scottsboro Decision

ONCE again the United States supreme court has set aside death sentences imposed in the case of the Scottsboro Negroes. It has ordered a new trial for Clarence Norris on the ground that his conviction was unconstitutional in that Negroes were excluded as such from the jury which tried him. It has returned the case of Haywood Patterson to the Alabama courts to decide whether he should not be given a new trial. This case became involved in technicalities because of disputes over the time of filing a motion for retrial and a bill of exceptions. Chief Justice Hughes has made it clear that the same constitutional objection applies in Patterson's case as in Norris's, and there seems no doubt that whatever the Alabama courts decide upon the technical aspect of the motion for Patterson's retrial, he will eventually win a retrial on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the jury that convicted him.

No one who has followed the course of the Scottsboro trials had the slightest doubt that colored persons had been systematically excluded from juries in Jackson county, including the juries that convicted Norris and Patterson. The duly constituted authorities resorted to a clumsy and obvious forgery in an attempt to furnish evidence to the contrary. When it became apparent that the cases would be appealed on the constitutional ground, the names of certain Negroes were written in at the end of the jury rolls. The circumstances were such that it was plain the names had not been there originally. Furthermore, there was abundant evidence, as Chief Justice Hughes said, that no colored persons had served on juries in Jackson county for a generation.

It is possible for Alabama to retry Norris and Patterson with Negro members of the jury, and to intimidate the Negro members in such wise that conviction will again be obtained. Will Alabama do this, or will it in very shame try at last to give these defendants fair trials? For quite apart from the question of constitutionality in the procedure of their previous trials, there is no substance whatever in the case against them. One courageous Alabama judge set aside the conviction of Patterson on the ground of insufficient evidence. But racial prejudice had its way when he was retried. Will racial prejudice ultimately triumph, despite all that the supreme court has done to insure justice? If so, Alabama's shame will be complete.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

APR 3 1935

The Scottsboro Decision.

The State of Alabama is in a hot spot as a result of the Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro cases. But the country as a whole will have little sympathy with its predicament. From the beginning the atmosphere of these cases has been that of a miscarriage of justice. And the stubborn effort of the authorities to consummate the death sentence in face of many reasonable doubts has been an indication of judicial weakness rather than strength.

The Supreme Court has now ordered, without a dissenting voice, that the judgment in the case of Charles Norris "must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion." That means, in effect, that Alabama must end its consistent practice, shared in other Southern States, of excluding qualified Negro citizens from jury service. Such a mandate from the Supreme Court was never anticipated in the early stages of the Scottsboro trials. If it had been, one may safely predict, the questionable indictments in these rape cases would have been withdrawn long since.

Of course, more problems are raised than solved in the opinion handed down by Chief Justice Hughes. The racial issue has been so strongly stressed in the Scottsboro cases that a unanimous verdict by a jury of mixed color in this instance seems highly improbable. And a situation of that sort is far too likely to encourage mob resentment, if not mob action. New indictments to prosecute are promised by the Lieutenant Governor of Alabama. It would be wise to reflect very soberly before they are presented.

From their careful investigations the Supreme Court justices unanimously conclude that, both in Jackson and Morgan Counties, there are many Negroes well qualified for jury service. The same conclusion, of course, would be drawn from any impartial inquiry in almost any county of any Southern State. Soon or late the inclusion of competent colored citizens on jury panels must become a universal practice. It is only stupidity and stubborness which has caused the issue to be raised in glaring, and therefore dangerous, form in the Scottsboro cases.

The deficiencies of American justice are by no means a sectional problem. One thinks of other cases which have aroused criticisms and misgivings similar to this Alabama tangle. But the Scottsboro cases are broader in their application than most of those which have aroused strong public feeling. It has called an elemental right of citizenship, plainly guaranteed by the Constitution, into question. That right of jury service can no longer be safely denied by the State of Alabama, or by any other Commonwealth. The course of good citizenship in Alabama now is not to resist the Supreme Court decision, but to insure that its implications shall be accepted in as natural and constructive a fashion as local traditions will permit.

PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN

APR 3 1935

The Scottsboro Reversal

On various occasions the United States supreme court has ruled that it is unconstitutional deliberately to deny jury places to negroes. The most frequently-quoted decision is in the case of Neal vs. Delaware, which reached the supreme court in 1880. The Delaware courts had assumed that because no negro ever had sat on a state case, this was evidence of their unfitness. The supreme court in answer pointed out that 15 per cent of the population of Delaware was colored, and it ruled that refusal to accept negroes for jury service was defiance of the constitution.

In all cases since then decisions have been to the same effect. The colored population comes within the protection of the constitution, and the constitution guarantees equal rights.

However, the supreme court usually has not been squeamish once this theoretical equality of the races has been asserted. It has sought to evade direct rulings on whether or not, in specific cases, there has been denial of negro rights. The court has been ready enough to declare that equal rights are constitutional; it has been very loath to pass on questions of fact—that is, on the perversion of rights in certain trials.

As an example, consider the recent case of Euel Lee in Maryland. The United States supreme court overthrew the conviction on the ground that negroes had been excluded from the jury, but when the state supreme court held that there had been no exclusion of negroes, the United States supreme court declined to overthrow the second conviction.

Now, however, it appears that the United States supreme court has developed a stiffer backbone. The highest court of Alabama already has ruled that there was no deliberate exclusion of negroes in the trials of the Scottsboro boys, yet the United States court, in ordering the cases back for further action, appears to differ on this particular question of fact. The opinion read by Chief Justice Hughes orders a new trial for Clar[illegible]

So court of Alabama, which quite obviously [illegible] court handed down a political opinion when it [illegible] ruled that there had been no deliberate ex[illegible]clusion of negro jurors.

[illegible] the Scottsboro cases should have been so [illegible] grant as to compel the supreme court h[illegible] to abandon its customary method of leaving [illegible] the questions of fact to the state courts. In [illegible] To say the least, it is not complimentary [illegible] the Alabama courts that the handling of [illegible] particular, it is a reflection on the supreme [illegible] court will order such [illegible] court, the supreme court will deny a new trial to Haywood Pat[illegible]

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4989

Collinsville, Ala., New Era
April 5, 1935

United States Supreme Court Again Reverses Scottsboro, Ala., Cases

—oOo—

Holds Indictments And Sentence Illegal; Defendants To Be Re-Indicted In Jackson County

Again the United States Supreme Court has set aside the verdict and sentence in the famous Scottsboro cases, this time ruling that the negroes were indicted and tried unconstitutionally, ruling on the contention that negroes were "systematically excluded" from the Grand Jury which returned the indictment and the trial jury which returned the verdict carrying the death sentence.

Under the ruling made by the Supreme Court Monday it will be necessary that the defendants be re-indicted, and again stand trial in the lower court.

Cases To Be Prosecuted

Lieut. Governor Knight, who prosecuted the cases as Attorney General, stated that he had no comment to make, and Attorney General McCall stated that the cases would be prosecuted to the fullest extent.

Special Session of Grand Jury Possible

Circuit Judge A. E. Hawkins, in whose court the negroes were indicted and tried for the first time, in Jackson County, stated when asked if he expected to call a special session of the Grand Jury, that he would do so if requested by the Circuit Solicitor. The regular session of the Grand Jury will not convene until September.

Hendersonville, N. C., Tribune
April 12, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

A recent decision of the supreme court may easily prove to be charged with dynamite. In handing down the decision in the notorious Scottsboro case, Chief Justice Hughes said the constitutional rights of the defendants were violated because negroes were excluded from jury service at the trial. "We think the evidence that no Negro has been called for jury service in Jackson county (where the trials were held) for a generation establishes there has been discrimination." the Chief Justice said.

If the decision be correct it is just as applicable to Jackson county, North Carolina, as to Jackson county, Alabama. Every negro under sentence for felony in North Carolina and in the South, is entitled under this decision to a new trial on the ground that his rights have been denied. There is no legal way to send another negro to the penitentiary and keep him there unless negroes are called to serve as jurors. A white man, convicted in the same court, by the same process of law, may serve time or be electrocuted. Not so with Mr. Negro.

Graham county has, or did have, one negro citizen. I presume he is all the negro in the state that could be convicted of a crime as his being on trial would have no negro for jury duty in that county. Several counties have Indian citizens. If no Indians have served as jurors, you could not convict and punish an Indian.

By parity of reasoning where women are not accustomed to serve on juries, no woman could be convicted of a crime, for, as no women had been called for jury service, that would be satisfactory evidence that their rights had been denied. Along the Mexican border and especially in Southern California, are many citizens of Mexican blood, not superior to the average Southern Negro. If they are not regularly selected for jury duty, their rights are being denied, and a sentence for crime can be avoided.

A great and wonderful decision. I believe there was a somewhat similar decision rendered fifty years ago. This recent decision will not be allowed to repose in innocuous desutude, or we miss our guess.

The distinguished Chief Justice has joined in and delivered several opinions lately that have stretched the constitution 'till it is full of thin places. We may as well confess it. We got over the idea that he was a superman while he was the Republican standard bearer in 1916. Nothing has happened since that time to change that impression. Yes, we voted a blank rather than vote for him. That honor is honestly ours. We have a sore arm from patting ourselves on the back.

Scottsboro Ruling Cited In Jersey Case

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 21.—The Scottsboro victory figured in a local case on Friday when Attorney Frank Cohn asked dismissal of a manslaughter charge against Amos Carr, Philadelphia Negro worker, on the grounds that Negroes were excluded from the panel from which a jury is to be drawn.

John J. Fitzpatrick, Union County jury commissioner, admitted before Common Pleas Judge Thompson in Quarter Sessions Court here, that no Negroes have been called for jury service in the county during the past 20 years. He said he knew of only one Negro in all Union County who could meet the jury qualifications, and at the same time denied he purposely eliminated Negroes from juries.

Despite Fitzpatrick's admissions Judge Thompson ruled that there was no evidence that the jury commissioner attempted to exclude Negroes from juries. The judge denied the motion for dismissal of the indictment.

The Scottsboro decision, wrested from the U. S. Supreme Court by the world-wide mass fight and brilliant legal work of Walter Pollak and Osmond Fraenkel, attorneys for the International Labor Defense, upheld the I.L.D. contention that the constitutional rights of the Scottsboro boys and the Negro people were violated by the systematic exclusion of Negroes from Alabama juries.

DECATUR, ILL.
HERALD
APR 3 1935

Reprieve.

Mr. Dooleys observation, that even supreme court justices read the newspapers, is a timely comment upon the decision in Washington which again halts the execution of seven Negro boys in Alabama.

The technicality upon which the appeal was based—the failure to include Negroes upon Alabama jury lists—has served its purpose in this particular case. The supreme court speaks again, as it has many times before, in behalf of the full rights of citizenship for the Negro race. Alabama, of course, will continue its discrimination, but the boys of the celebrated Scottsboro case are saved.

This is the case that arose when two girl tramps of unsavory past claimed that they were assaulted by seven Negroes in the gondola car of a freight train on which they were stealing a ride. The evidence was of the flimsiest—one of the girls testifying later that the whole story was a falsehood—but in the meanwhile Alabama's "southern pride" became involved. The sentiment was created throughout the state, that either the Negroes must be put to death, or the blacks of the state, and "damn Yankee" meddlers, would be out of hand.

So violent and unreasoning is local prejudice, there is reason for doubt whether even the authority of the United States supreme court will finally rule. The new danger of the Scottsboro boys is illegal lynching, in place of the legal lynching that had been intended.

Birmingham, Ala., Age-Herald
April 3, 1935,

The Scottsboro Decision

The United States Supreme Court's reversal of the death sentences imposed on two of the defendants in the Scottsboro cases fundamentally was based on the contention that systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury service denies equal protection of the laws to all. Theoretically, legally and morally that principle seems to The Age-Herald to be sound. Chief Justice Hughes, voicing the decision, from which there was no dissent—Justice McReynolds took no part in the case—admitted no question as to the principle involved. "The question here is one of fact," Justice Hughes said, "whether the right has been denied."

The finding was that such unconstitutional exclusion had prevailed in these specific cases under its consideration. This paper does not believe that that finding can be successfully challenged. It believes that common experience in Alabama very largely supports the acceptance of that finding.

In view of previous court rulings, the court's decision ought not to be surprising, either from the standpoint of the principle involved or the facts presented to it.

Whether, conceding for the sake of discussion, the Supreme Court's construction of the facts in the cases before it, an actual miscarriage of justice would have resulted if the verdicts of the lower courts had been executed, is at least debatable. Surely there are Alabama citizens, however, who could have derived little satisfaction from a disposition of the cases that would have violated fundamental constitutional principles.

Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, who as attorney general, prosecuted the cases in question, has been retained to continue the prosecution and has announced that new indictments will be sought before a Jackson County Grand Jury. That appears to be a proper and logical procedure, the carrying out of which may result in a final disposition of the cases that will meet all the law's requirements unquestionably and bring a more generally satisfactory conclusion to them than heretofore has seemed attainable. Let us hope for and strive earnestly to that end. May we be spared any hot-headed action that would only make such a disposition more difficult.

It appears quite clear from the court's decision, considered as to its general effect as distinguished from its particular application in the cases it decided, that Alabama and all Southern states should realistically confront the supreme dictate laid down for them in regard to the service of Negroes on juries. Obviously, reversal of any sentences of Negroes appealed to the Supreme Court would now all the more be expected when arbitrary exclusion of members of the same race from the jury rolls could be shown.

While not underestimating the delicacies involved, The Age-Herald nevertheless sees no reason for great alarm as a result of that necessity. There remain legal safeguards against the inclusion of unqualified persons on juries, whether those persons be white or colored. Those safeguards, far-reaching in Alabama, should be sufficient to prevent any general miscarriage of justice because of obedience to constitutional requirements.

Our racial relations have progressed to the point where the human problems of such an obedience ought not to be insuperable or greatly frightening to either race. In the Federal Court in Birmingham those problems have been successfully handled for some years. Whatever may be the differences of viewpoint in this connection, an admittedly complicated matter will simply be made more difficult by any attempt to escape the implications of the ruling of the highest court in the land or by appeal to prejudice.

Let the Scottsboro cases now be promptly and fairly prosecuted and concluded in the light of this clear-cut Supreme Court ruling. Let us confront and assume the responsibilities which that decision generally emphasizes.

girls at Scottsboro, Alabama, in March, 1931. The other five prisoners are also still in gaol awaiting retrial.

Their case was that they had been indicted and tried before juries from which negroes had been systematically excluded. In the long series of trials and retrials in this case the United States Supreme Court has now twice quashed convictions; the first instance in 1932 was on the ground that the prisoners had been "substantially denied counsel."

It will be recalled that one of the two girls on whose evidence the negroes were originally sentenced subsequently retracted her story and testified that she was not attacked by them.

Although the decision of the Court had been expected, it was a relief to the many thousands of people throughout the country who believed, and still believe, that gross injustice had been done to the negro lads, who were sentenced to death without a single shred of what could be called serious evidence against them.

Now that, as has been said, the case has twice gone before the United States Supreme Court, the question is what the State of Alabama will do next. There is no doubt that the State would like to avoid the expense of a third set of trials, but, on the other hand, the feeling regarding the case is running high and may compel the continuance of these farcical proceedings.

Many fears have also been expressed lest the boys, or some of them, should be lynched.

CHARLOTTE, N. C
OBSERVER
APR 4 1935

EPOCHAL DECISION.

ATTORNEY GENERAL SEAWELL makes no unlikely prophecy in contending that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the celebrated case of the negroes tried in Scottsboro, Ala., opens the way for unlimited appeals to that tribunal in view of the finding that in this particular case, negroes were excluded from the jury as they are customarily in the South.

The Supreme Court three years ago reversed the findings of guilt of the defendants on the ground that at that time they had been denied their right to obtain counsel.

The latest reversal, pivoting upon the point that negro jurymen had been deliberately and systematically denied the right of service in this case, opens, of course, a wide range of involvements in respect to racial distinctions in the South. And while our negro element has desisted generally from claiming its right in such jury service in our courts in the past, this decision will unavoidably inspire them with new determinations to claim such as the court now clearly invests them with, and in the event of denial, adverse verdicts rendered in such cases as their people may be involved in the courts of the State may give the United States Supreme Court an abundance of other similar instances.

FORT WORTH, TEX.
EVENING STAR TELEGRAM
APR 5 1935

The Scottsboro Case.

THE DECISION of the Supreme Court in the latest appeal of the Scottsboro case poses a question for every Southern State where the practice of not having negroes on juries has been long established. There are, of course, some fine points of law involved, and no one can say that in any other case apparently identical the court's ruling would be the same. Jury practice in Texas, for instance, appears to be identical with that in Alabama, with respect to the service of negroes. Yet there might be such a difference that the Supreme Court would rule differently on an appeal going up from a Texas court's verdict based on the non-presence of negroes on the jury.

It should be observed that the Supreme Court did not overturn the verdict of the Alabama jury in this instance because there were no negroes on the particular jury involved. It was because the practice in that State, and especially in the county in which the trial was held, is to have no negroes on any jury. The court held that the fact that no negro juryman was on the records for a term of years was prima facie evidence of exclusion of negroes from jury service.

The situation is not without its peril from the standpoint of racial conflict. There will be, we believe, few intelligent negroes in Southern States who will regard the Supreme Court's action either as a protection for negroes accused of crime or as an advantage to the defendant.

The notion that it is a protection to negroes accused of crime assumes that one or more negroes on a jury would hold out against conviction of the accused. And it can be imagined what would be the reaction of many a community to an event of that kind.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS
APR 2 1935

JUSTICE

EIGHT U. S. Supreme Court justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in their trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or re-indict and re-try the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped re-enforce the very foundations of the Republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, thru trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
APR 2 1935

JUSTICE

EIGHT United States Supreme Court justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or re-indict and retry the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped re-enforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Thomas Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Sentence on Negroes Quashed

(From our New York Correspondent.)

The United States Supreme Court on Monday reversed the decision of the Alabama State Supreme Court in the famous Scottsboro case. As a result the negro defendants will not be put to death, at least until they have been tried again. 4-5-35

Monday's decision was taken on the appeal of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the seven young negroes sentenced to death on a charge of having assaulted two white

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4990

Winston Salem, N. C.
JOURNAL

APR 3 1935

Building an Impasse

The United States Supreme Court, by its decision in the Scottsboro case, practically forces one of two alternatives upon the state of Alabama—each of them undesirable perhaps to that commonwealth.

These alternatives are: (1) To let the Negroes charged with criminal assaults upon two white women of "shady" reputation, go free or (2) admit Negroes to the jury panel in a new trial of the case.

The decision of the Supreme Court was based entirely or almost entirely upon the fact that Alabama does not include Negroes on its jury lists. Chief Justice Hughes gave sharp and unqualified criticism to this phase of Alabama "justice." And what is very significant, eight of the "nine old men" of the Supreme Court concurred in the majority opinion.

Hence, if Alabama should stage a new trial for the Negroes and fail to call Negroes to the jury panel and the defendants were convicted, they would have the advance assurance that the highest court in the land would again rule in their favor.

There is no intention here to debate the question as to the theoretical right of Negroes to sit in the jury box. So far as theory and constitutional right are concerned, the Supreme Court, out of its knowledge and wisdom, has spoken. But the fact is opposed to the theory in the South and whether the practice be justified or not, few if any Negroes ever sit on Dixie juries.

Alabama authorities state that they will again prosecute the case but they are silent in several languages with reference to Negro jurors. At long last they may reverse this stand and drop the case. Whatever action they take, will not the less be of outstanding importance not only to Alabama, but to the entire South. A precedent may grow out of the Scottsboro case which will have a peculiar bearing upon interracial relationships and the administration of justice.

Wilmington, N. C. Morning Star
April 3, 1935,

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

It has since the inception of the case, been our private opinion based on our views of public morals that white girls who go hoboing about the country, hobnobbing, or at least riding in the same box cars with members of other races and the other sex are not overly deserving of society's most tender protection, but in the Scottsboro case there are other phases to be considered. The case has just been sent back to the Alabama courts by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The girls involved caused the arrest of seven negroes, they accused of attacking them while all were uninvited and non-paying passengers on an Alabama freight train. Two of the negroes have been convicted for a second time, and must be tried again unless the state elects to drop the charges.

The reasons behind the majority opinion read by Mr. Chief Justice HUGHES is significant. Judge HUGHES and his colleagues hold that because negroes are kept off the jury rolls in Alabama that is good and sufficient reason to return a reversal of the Alabama tribunal's finding.

It is, as the chief solicitor of the Alabama circuit remarked when informed of the findings "a body blow at the courts of the state." However, it does not follow that Alabama will rush to the fore with mixed juries. Far from it. Alabama is too deep in the south to permit of that, and even should it insert the names of negroes in the jury boxes for the purpose of complying with the supreme court, ways will be found to continue the jury service as at present and within the law.

For the moment, however, it would appear that a very important decision has been based on a case involving not a particularly prepossessing set of complainants or defendants.

TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

APR 4 1935

Negro Jurors Vs. Negro Voters

The United States Supreme Court reversed the conviction of two of the Scottsboro negroes on the ground that, in Alabama, negroes are barred from jury duty, therefore no negroes could have served on the jury that convicted the negroes. Carried to its logical conclusion this decision means that no negro can be legally convicted in Florida because negroes are not called for jury duty in this state. They are not barred by law, but they are never given the opportunity to serve. The same is true of other states in the South. The decision, we take it, also would mean that no woman can be convicted in Florida because women do not serve on Florida juries.

On the same day the same Court ruled that the Democratic party of Texas is entirely within its constitutional rights in refusing to permit negroes to vote in primary elections.

So, the position of the Supreme Court is that, while a political party in Texas can legally prevent negroes from voting, the state of Alabama cannot prevent negroes from serving on juries. The distinction is based on the fact that the state of Alabama is a government and the Democratic party of Texas is just a political organization; but the intent is the same, so far as denying the exercise of the rights of citizenship to negroes is concerned.

Columbus, Miss. Dispatch
April 3, 1935,

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

THIS week the United States Supreme Court set aside the death sentences passed by a state court on two Scottsboro, Alabama negroes accused of attacking two white women several years ago and ordered a new trial for the defendants on the grounds that negroes were excluded from jury service on account of race and color.

This has brought up the question of what effect such a ruling will have on state courts in future cases.

Dispatches from Alabama state that no official comment has been made on what procedure that state will follow in the face of such a decision.

Mississippi laws do not bar negroes from jury service because of race or color.

This particular question came up in a case about ten years ago in Mississippi and the prosecution got around it by taking testimony from the Board of Supervisors who draw the jury panels.

In this case the supervisors swore that negroes were not barred because of race or color but that they had not been selected because the law requires the board to select only the best and most substantial citizens and that negroes did not qualify under this requirement.

This procedure met the Supreme Court test.

It is well, perhaps, that this question has arisen.

It should lead to revisions in the laws of other states in order to take care of the jury selection as it relates to negroes.

Had steps been taken to safeguard such principles the State of Alabama and the entire South would not have suffered such ignominy as the Scottsboro trial has caused to be splashed across its pages of history.

Let's hope that Alabama can now conduct with dispatch the trial of these two negroes and mete out justice to them that will stand the test of any court appeal.

TOPEKA, KANS.
CAPITAL

APR 3 1935

The Scottsboro Case.

For the second time the Supreme Court of the United States has set aside a verdict of the Alabama jury in the case of the young Negroes, Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norton, convicted of assault with intent to rape and sentenced to be hanged. While the reasons for setting aside the second verdict were based on different circumstances, the reasons for reversal were the same in both cases, namely that these young Negroes were denied the right of a fair trial by a jury of their peers. In the first case it was shown that the young men were denied the benefit of counsel and that Negroes were denied the right to sit on the jury.

At the second trial one of the women who claimed that she had been attacked, denied her previous testimony and said that it was a frame-up to get the two young colored men. However, they were again convicted. An Alabama judge set that verdict aside and there was a third trial. For his decision the Alabama judge was defeated for renomination. In view of all these circumstances it is at least reasonable to assume that the two should not suffer the death penalty. However, the most important thing connected with this decision is that it is a plain pronouncement from the highest court in the world that citizens of the United States shall not be denied their constitutional rights any longer. That is a most important thing. The majority of the whites of the South, while professing allegiance to the Government of the United States and its Constitution, have never been willing to concede this fundamental principle so far as it applies to colored citizens. It is quite probable that notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court they will still refuse to concede it.

BOSTON, MASS.
CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
APR 8 1935

Alabama to Reform Juries

"ALABAMA is going to observe the supreme law of America." With the wholeheartedness which these words reflect, Gov. Bibb Graves has accepted for his State the United States Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case.

Holding that Negroes were "systematically" excluded from juries in Jackson and Morgan counties, with consequent infringement upon the constitutional rights of the accused, the Supreme Court has set aside death sentences imposed on two Negroes. Governor Graves observes:

> Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land. Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit. . . . This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county.

Alabama's attitude will receive commendation wherever the importance of the American requirement of equality in the courts for all, regardless of race, is properly appreciated. Governor Graves's emphasis on upholding the Supreme Court's decision "in spirit" as well as in letter, and his order to revise jury lists to meet the requirements of that decision indicate that Alabama is sincerely attempting to correct a condition which otherwise must have unfortunate effects on the general regard for American laws.

It should be recognized that living up to this promise will entail difficulties and perplexities which states farther removed from racial problems can but partly understand. Not only legal tangles but reservations sanctioned by sentiment and tradition will have to be dexterously and tactfully handled. Other southern states are aware of the implications in the Alabama stand. But it already has been indicated that some of those states will follow Alabama's lead—a lead, it should be noted, that calls for support of the supreme law "in spirit" as well as in letter.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL COURIER
APR 8 1935

Courageous Governor

Governor Bibb Graves' order for revision of Alabama jury lists is the proper response to the recent Supreme Court decision and the first step towards removal of the stigma attached to the state court system by procedure in the Scottsboro and other cases. Praise for his action is certainly not lessened by the fact considerable courage must have been required. The time has been and the time still may be when such a course implies political suicide. Reports of opinion within the state suggest that his order will not, temporarily at last, increase his popularity. The many traditional psychological and sociological issues connected in the popular mind, in particular the extraneous aspects fostered by those who have made the Scottsboro cases material for racial and economic propaganda, may obscure in Alabama the fact he has acted as an American citizen should act under the circumstances.

His attitude seems admirable: "Whether we like the decisions (of the United States Supreme Court) or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit." The latest Scottsboro decision "means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county. Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America." He has sent his order to circuit judges and solicitors throughout the state. And he has announced that he will ask for "such legislation as may be necessary" to cover the dumping and refilling of jury boxes. A follow through will earn him the increased respect of all sincere citizens.

ROCKFORD, ILL.
REGISTER REPUBLIC
APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

The Supreme court of the United States for the second time has ordered set aside death sentences imposed on two Scottsboro, Ala., negroes and a new trial for the defendants, who are accused of assaulting a white woman.

As far as the Supreme court's interpretation of the law is concerned, the case was crystal clear. It ruled that if, as charged, negroes were excluded from jury service, equal protection of the laws to all does not result. Justice Hughes, who delivered the opinion, said that there was no controversy as to the constitutional principle involved—that the question was one of whether or not these rights were denied in fact. It was the court's opinion, from evidence submitted, that negroes had been arbitrarily and systematically excluded, although qualified, from jury service.

As a result the case will go back to the Alabama state courts for retrial. Many white people in Alabama will not be able to understand the attitude of the Supreme court towards the Scottsboro case. To them the racial question rises above the question of constitutionality. But the Supreme court did not enter into any consideration of the guilt or innocence of the two defendants nor the crime of which they were accused.

The clear-cut issue was a violation of the constitutional rights of the two negroes and the relation of this alleged violation to Alabama court procedure.

Evidence presented to the Supreme court tended to prove that negroes have not served on Alabama juries for a generation, that a collusion of officials existed for the purpose of keeping their names off jury rolls.

But the constitution of the United States is bigger than the Alabama state courts and if the situation exists as charged and is allowed to go uncorrected, the dignity of all courts will suffer.

MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
APR 3 1935

The Scottsboro Case

Now that the supreme court of the United States has again reversed the Scottsboro case, the state of Alabama announces that it will try the negroes again.

Frankly, there is serious doubt about the wisdom of such a step.

It is quite commendable for the prosecuting authorities to persist in their efforts to punish criminals and uphold the peace and dignity of the state. But they are getting nowhere by baiting the supreme court.

The crime of which these negroes stand accused is open to some doubt; manifestly so, in view of the repudiations and denials. The extreme penalty is open to more doubt. The negroes have been in jail for four years. Their fight has been made a sort of martyrdom by New York agitators who desire nothing more than to reap the full benefit of publicity, to say nothing of fat fees raised by well-meaning persons whose sympathies have been enlisted. So notorious has the case become that the guilt or innocence of the negro boys has been lost sight of.

The supreme court, in its latest pronouncement, threw the convictions out because no negroes had been called for jury service. Of course, this is not going to change the customs and manners of the people of Alabama. But if agitated and pursued it may inflame the people to resentment which will not work to the well-being of either the white people or the negroes.

Alabama should take a note from the experience the state of Arkansas had in the Elaine riot cases. This case finally got to be an issue so bitterly drawn that the late Justice Holmes and Justice McReynolds made history in their sharp disagreements. It was sent back, and Arkansas quietly forgot it. The state surrendered none of its dignity in so doing, and the people of the state were not a whit worse off because of it.

ANNISTON, ALA.
STAR
APR 2 1935

The Scottsboro Decision

State authorities today announced plans to continue the fight to convict the negro defendants in the famous Scottsboro assault cases despite the decision of the United States Supreme Court yesterday that the indictments were invalid because negroes were excluded from the jury panel and which in effect said that a subsequent indictment would not be upheld unless negroes were admitted to the jury rolls.

Following the ruling of the nation's highest court there was doubt as to what the next step would be in the cases. A possibility was seen that the negroes might be released since it was apparent that a similar result would be inevitable if the cases went once more to the Supreme Court with indictments returned by a jury from which negroes were barred. An alternate course was to continue the fight and today news dispatches indicate that the latter choice has been made, although details of the procedure to be followed have not been made known.

The net result of the decision seems to be that Alabama or any other state will never be able to obtain a conviction of a negro that will stand a Supreme Court test as long as jury commissions decline to include negroes in the panels. And in any case in which the defendants were able to employ Eastern lawyers the outcome would be a foregone conclusion, for these lawyers would never miss an opportunity to carry the fight to the Supreme Court. Consequently in the Scottsboro cases the question is whether Alabama can afford to stand the expense of another grand jury investigation and trial while knowing that the Supreme Court will throw out the cases as soon as they are brought before it.

Lynchings- 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4991

Eufaula, Ala. Tribune
April 5, 1935

THE "SCOTTSBORO" DECISION

For the second time the United States supreme court has sent the cases against negroes, convicted of assaulting two white women near Scottsboro, back for new trials. The cases came back the first time on grounds that the negroes did not have adequate counsel, while in the second it was because negroes were "systematically" kept off jury lists in two counties.

Where this thing is going to end is the question uppermost in the minds of the reading public. Must Jackson and Morgan counties revise their jury rolls and place the names of negroes in the boxes? That seems to be the only way out, yet negroes have not served on state court juries in southern states since the carpet-bag era.

In reversing the Jackson circuit court, the supreme court, in the opinion of the Montgomery Advertiser, "seems to have ignored the evidence and confined its comments mainly if not entirely to the fact that no negroes were on the jury which convicted two negroes of a felony. The Advertiser has read only a press summary of Chief Justice Hughes's position, but it would appear that he is concerned, not with the evidence upon which the defendants were convicted, so much as with the color of the jury that convicted them."

Continuing his discussion of the noted case, Editor Hall observes:

The court charges that negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury service in the county of trial, and that the few names of negroes in the jury box were fraudulently admitted.

The Advertiser does not know whether this charge of fraud is just or not. It may be that the names of negroes were admitted after the issue involving the right of negroes to serve on Alabama juries was raised.

The Advertiser does know that generally speaking the names of negro citizens are not in the jury boxes in the counties of Alabama, although negroes may and do serve on federal juries in this state.

What qualifications must a juror possess under the law? He must be a person of good character, good standing and good intelligence—at least, this is the theory upon which names are admitted to the jury box. The jury commissioners of Alabama, inquiring for new names to put on their lists, never ask whether one is black or white, yellow, brown or bronze. The citizens to whom these verbal inquiries are addressed, instinctively report only the names of white persons. The race question is rarely if ever raised between jury commissioners and citizens whom they question.

From a strict technical standpoint negroes are not excluded from juries; in common practice they are, of course.

At last the supreme court, following up previous warnings, reverses the verdict of a state court upon the ground of race discrimination in the selection of jurors.

It now follows that Alabama jury commissions must immediately put the names of reputable negro citizens in their jury boxes. Otherwise we cannot hope again to have the supreme court of the United States affirm the findings of a state court wherever a negro's liberty or life is at stake.

The Advertiser therefore would urge that county jury commissions in Alabama act immediately to make it possible for the State of Alabama to win a case involving a negro in the supreme court of the United States.

Otherwise, we wish to say that Mr. Hughes's pontifical deliverance is a lot of baloney.

Here is the supreme court of a great republic, reviewing the trial of two men charged with an offense that stands first among felonies in this state, reversing the verdict of an oathbound jury upon the ground that it does not like the color scheme of that jury.

The supreme court of the United States tells Alabama, in effect, that it is not primarily interested in otherwise credible evidence demonstrating human depravity, but that it is primarily interested in the academic political "rights" of a politically dispossessed race.

The Advertiser may be dumb, as well as "lost and ruint," but to save itself it cannot see what the political rights and privileges of negroes in Alabama have to do with the guilt or innocence of the gorillas who are charged with criminal assault upon two women, it being agreed that rape is a felony under the law in this backward state.

Either these gorillas committed rape, or they did not.

If they committed rape the jury, (even though white) knows the truth and reported it faithfully.

If they did not commit rape, we believe that this jury would have said so.

Suppose the defendants had been Italians. There are no Italians in Jackson county. So far as we know there are not today any Italians in Montgomery county, despite its relatively large population. Certainly there are no Spaniards, no Japanese no Tahitans, no Indians, no Eskimos either in Montgomery or other counties.

In that event not many juries in Alabama could hope to have their verdicts affirmed by the supreme court of the United States if a member of either of these races should move here tomorrow and commit a capital offense.

It seems to The Advertiser that if the supreme court of the United States, presided over by Charles Evans Hughes, had a more sensitive regard for the victims (actual and potential) of felonious assault and less regard for the politically dispossessed in the home state of these victims, it would not devote an entire opinion to an academic political question, but would offer some comment on the evidence by which the gorillas aforesaid had been convicted.

After all, the rape of a wench is not morally different from the rape of the proudest gentlewoman in the republic, and it seems to us that any man of sound instincts would see this truth. Rape happens to be a capital crime in Alabama.

We are sorry that the supreme court of the United States seems to have no immediate interest in this phase of the subject.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
MORNING POST

APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

If the Supreme Court of the United States had not intervened, the negroes involved in the Scottsboro case in Alabama doubtless would have been executed several years ago. Now, the court has acted again to save for the present the lives of two of the accused. The other five awaiting trial will profit also. The ground on which protection for these men is based puts a problem up to Alabama. The rights of the negroes are declared to have been violated because persons of their race are excluded from jury service in that state. If the Alabamans be indisposed to take down the bars against negroes in jury service, how in the light of the decision can they proceed to try these men again?

The decision seems to serve as notice to other states in which it has been the practice the matter of jury cause of the prolonged efforts in behalf of the of discrimination seven accused men. Their guilt of a charge less, negroes will so grave has always been a matter of doubt. defense in cases Evidently, their color had much to do in pro- us, the principle moting the severity with which their alleged far-reaching im- offense was viewed. However, because a man attention in states is black is not a sufficient reason for denying him justice.

In the first instance in which the to draw the color line in the ma service that it is a form portance. It will demand attenti other than Alabama.

The Scottsboro case has become noted be- Supreme Court upset the verdict it was on the ground that adequate counsel had been denied the accused men. The present basis of reversal of the verdict has far greater import. It puts a question which must have an answer from Southern states.

Anderson, S. C., Record
April 3, 1935.

NEGRO JURORS.

The decision of the United States supreme court in connection with the Scottsboro, Alabama, case holding there was discrimination due to the fact that negroes were ineligible for jury service is a decision of somewhat far-reaching effect in Southern states.

The decision may have the effect of placing negroes on jury rolls in many Southern states where none have ever been called for jury service.

Speaking of the situation The Greenville News remarks, quite appropirately:

Just before jumping to conclusions as to the effect of this opinion with regard to Southern court procedure, it would perhaps be wiser to await complete study of the full text of the opinion in this case. It may be that it is based upon some instance of actual discrimination against negroes, as to jury duty, on racial grounds. Under the Constitution there cannot be discrimination in the matter of public service on racial grounds; however, that does not necessarily mean, one would think, that it is mandatory that negroes be placed on juries or on jury rolls. Certain qualifications are provided for jury duty. If a jury commission omits to place any negroes on the rolls in pursuance of its duty to draw a list of citizens qualified for the service, that can hardly be regarded as definite evidence of discrimination on the ground of race. There are, perhaps, many white citizens eligible for service who are never drawn. If there are negro citizens who can be shown to be qualified for jury service the fact that they simply have not been drawn can hardly stand as definite evidence that racial discrimination has been practiced.

If the court is holding that a negro cannot be fairly tried in the courts of the country unless there are some negroes on the jury this would, indeed, be a new principle which might have far-reaching ramifications. However, a careful study of the text of the opinion is necessary before definite conclusions can be reached.

Macon, Ga., Telegraph
April 5, 1935

Negroes Must Be Held Eligible For Jury Duty

By EUGENE ANDERSON

The United States Supreme Court did not make in new law when it handed down its Scottsboro decision last Monday, but it clarified an old law. Qualified Negroes must in future be put in jury lists.

The Georgia Constitutional convention of 1868 struggled with the same question, and from that day to this criminal lawyers in this state have been trying to do exactly what the International Labor Defense lawyer did in the case of the Negroes who figure as defendants in the Scottsboro (Ala.) case. They have been trying to force a new trial on the ground that Negroes do not serve on juries, and to make courts say Negro criminals, or alleged criminals, do not therefore get a fair trial from juries of white men.

John Randolph Cooper, who was a genius in digging up technical points in behalf of his Negro clients, tried several times to get such a point before the United States Supreme Court, but was always baffled because he could not prove that Negroes were discriminated against in the jury system. If he had succeeded in finding one judge who refused to give him a chance to prove his charge of discrimination, he would have scored his point. If a trial judge had said in answer to his motion to quash indictment, "Georgia law gives the Negro as good chance as anybody else to serve on the jury, and the court overrules you," the astute lawyer would have scored.

When John P. Ross was solicitor-general Mr. Cooper made the point, and Solicitor Ross said, "I'm ready to traverse you." The jury commissioners were brought in by Mr. Cooper as witnesses and they explained how they selected the members of the grand jury and the trial juries, and the court ruled that the method was in accordance with the state constitution, and therefore Negroes are not discriminated against, although it has been thirty or more years since a Negro served on a state court jury in this county.

Nobody doubts that there are some Negroes in the county who are intelligent enough and have character enough and are sufficiently educated, but such are for the most part exempted under the general law for exempting all men in certain professions or callings. White or Negro attorneys are ineligible either as jury commissioners or as jurors. Ministers of the gospel are exempt, regardless of color or race; physicians and apothecaries do not serve; school teachers are omitted; millers and ferrymen, all railroad employes certified to be actively engaged in their public duties; all male persons over 60 years of age; all telegraph operators, officers and members of the fire companies, dentists unless they especially ask the privilege, pilots and boat keepers, policemen and other such guardians of the law, telegraph linemen, stationery engineers, postal clerks, members of the military forces, licensed embalmers, etc., are by the state constitution exempted—because of their public duties. But this does not mean that these are compelled to accept exemption. If they request the privilege of serving they can be passed on by the jury commissioners for their fitness.

For grand jurors the commissioners must select "the most experienced, upright and intelligent men whose names are found on the tax digests of the county"

For trial jurors the requirement is the same, except "most experienced" is omitted. Such jurors must be "the most upright and intelligent" of those in the list of taxpayers.

In the case of Carter, in Texas, 1900, the Supreme Court held that he should have been allowed to prove that when the jury trying him had no Negroes on it, injustice had been done him because the jury was not made up of the proper material, and needed some Negroes. The court before which he was tried did not let him produce his proof.

The sensational part of the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case is that the august judges brushed aside the testimony that satisfied the trial court, and they decided that "presumptive evidence" showed that the Negroes had been discriminated against, because they were never allowed to appear on the jury lists. The United States Supreme Court rarely has reversed state supreme courts on question of fact. The Supreme Court in this case even hinted at fraud or manufactured evidence. On this Chief Justice Hughes, reading the opinion for the eight members of the court (Justice McReynolds being absent), said among other things:

"The clerk of the jury commission and the clerk of the circuit court had never known of a Negro serving on a grand jury in Jackson county. The court reporter, who had not missed a session of court in twenty-five years, and two jury commissioners testified to the same effect One of the commissioners said he had never known of a single instance where any Negro sat on any grand jury or petit jury in the entire history of that county. That testimony in itself made out a prima facie case of denial of the equal protection which the Constitution guarantees. . ."

The names of six Negroes appeared on the list submitted in evidence, and red lines were drawn undr them. The trial judge expressed the view "that he would not be authorized to presume that the jury board had been unfaithful to their duty, and had allowed the books to be tampered with." His conclusion was that Negroes' names were on the roll.

Justice Hughes said: "We think the evidence did not justify that conclusion." He then proceeded to show that the court regarded the Delaware decision as based on a similar case, except there was no evidence (false or otherwise) to show that Negroes had ever been considered when jury lists were being made up. In the Delaware case it was held that the trial court indulged a "violent presumption" when it decided that the uniform exclusion of Negroes from juries during a period of many years was solely because in the judgment of the commissioners the black race in Delaware were utterly disqualified by want of intelligence, experience or moral integrity to sit on juries. The Chief Justice thought such a presumption in the Scottsboro case would be equally violent.

All of this grows out of the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, which reads:

"No citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Violation must be punished in the United States courts through the initiative of the officers and marshals of the United States courts. Penalty is as for a misdemeanor or a fine of not more than five thousand dollars.

This law was passed when Thad Stevens was in the saddle in Congress. He was the greatest force in the National capital at the time, and he was the bitterest enemy of the white race. He was a fanatical partisan of the Negro race, and through him the first lady of the land was his Negro housekeeper.

The law produced more unhappiness for the Negroes and the white people and estranged their relationships more than anything that happened before or after the war. Seventy years have healed many wounds, and the Negroes are beginning as a race to see that it behooves them to obey the laws of the land and to see that those of their color are also obedient.

At this late date, after vicious intermeddling on the part of fanatics from the outside has subsided, the important task before the people is to make the Negro see that "the law" is not merely the will of the white man and the persecution of the Negro, but that it is or should be used for the good of all.

While the decision of the Supreme Court in the Scottsboro case may be construed as a wicked stab at the Southern white people, and by many it will be so regarded—perhaps it points the way to better justice for the Negro, and through that way may accomplish much to make the Negro race more friendly to the law, which in its operation affects his life, liberty and happiness.

Some will guess that the court's ruling means that Lords must be tried by Lords in our jury system, and commons must be tried by commons—that naturalized Italians or other nationalities must be tried by jurors of Italians, or others in kind, and cannot be tried by any other kind of jury. And it has been true in the development of the jury systems of the world, with all of their weird philosophies, that time was when a foreigner could not be convicted except by a jury composed of half natives and the other half citizens that have been adopted from other countries. It was not necessary that an Italian should have half of the jury composed of Italians; nor was a naturalized Chinaman to have half of the jury composed of Chinamen, but half were supposed to be foreigners that had become naturalized.

These questions about foreigners may never arise as a result of this case, because this is purely a race question. The Negro was the only person in mind when the jury section of the fourteenth amendment was adopted. The Supreme Court has said that Negroes must not be excluded from the jury lists if they appear on the tax digests. As to whether the tyranny of the decision can make jury commissioners in the different states prefer Negroes is another question. The presumption is that it cannot. But jury commissioners are chosen by the judge of the court because of their uprightness and intelligence, and in the average community in which the races live amicably it is not likely that commissioners will violate their oaths either way because of the race question. If the Negro taxpayers are supposed to be among the "most experienced, upright and intelligent citizens," and are not exempted along with white people of the same callings, the chances are that no more Negro criminals will be able to escape through this race question in the constitution.

Alabama

4992

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Asheville, N. C., Times
April 3, 1935.

Negrbes And Jury Service

SETTING aside conviction and death sentences of two Negroes in the Alabama cases, the United States Supreme Court brings back to life a constitutional principle which all the Southern states will henceforth have to observe in order to avoid the dilemma in which the State of Alabama now finds itself in the prosecution of the Scottsboro defendants.

Delivering the court's opinion, Chief Justice Hughes held that, through the manipulation of local officers—the state law itself not being at fault—Negroes have systematically been barred from jury service in Jackson County, Alabama.

Such trial procedure being absolutely inconsistent with the provisions of the basic law, there is no other course for Alabama than to free the prisoners or to reindict them through action of a grand jury drawn from a panel including Negroes, and bring them to trial before a jury similarly empanelled.

Southern jury panels sometimes include qualified Negro citizens; but it is the exception rather than the rule. Particularly in those rural sections of the South where virtually no qualified Negroes can be found for jury service, the general practice of ignoring the race in this matter has one practical and defensible justification.

On the basis of the Supreme Court's decision, however Southern court systems now may be expected gradually to adapt themselves to a new order of procedure.

Thomasville, Ga., Times-Enterprise
April 4, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The supreme court of the United States has ordered a new trial for two negroes, convicted in Alabama of rape and sentenced to die for the crime. The case has been argued time and time again, tried and retried and has caused more furor than anything in the south in some years. The decision of the supreme court was that they are entitled to a new trial for the reason that negroes are not allowed to serve on juries in Alabama.

Such a decision is one of far-reaching import and may completely change the status of the courts in all southern states. The decision that these negroes were entitled to a new trial because the negroes were excluded from jury service is a matter that will affect the validity of every trial of every kind in which a negro is engaged in the entire south.

Such a far-reaching opinion must be digested before the full import of it can be realized and the effect on the future realized. The south has been under indictment for some years for failure to conform to the intent and purpose of the two Civil War amendments. In most cases it has evaded the strictest interpretation of the constitution and managed to direct its affairs without the interference that would have been found had the negro been permitted full judicial authority, the first step toward social equality.

At the same time the supreme court evaded the same substantial question by a revision of the constitution, which technically would per to whites. The court says that Texas to evade the necessity of allowing negroes to vote in the state primaries. The primary was organized to manage the party machinery but also to evade the results of negro interference at a time when that was necessary. Many states have followed that line and have confined the vote to whitesThe court says that Texas has a right to organize a party of whites and call it the democratic party and to exclude negroes from voting in the primaries. That means the exclusion from the function of assisting in naming all officers for under the primary system officers are selected in the primary and then ratified in the general elections. This extends to counties and municipalities in many of the southern states.

The question is raised, however, and he Scottsboro case is one that has not yet been concluded. Alabama will not put negroes on the jury list. Georgia will not. What provision can be made to take care of this decision meanwhile that will not vitiate any and all cases of that type when they are carried to the highest court, as many of them will if the negro organizations get busy in the east and start a fight is the question.

Greenwood, S. C. Index-Journal
April 3, 1935,

JURORS IN THIS STATE

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the so-called Scottsboro, Alabama, case naturally arouses interest in the qualifications for jury duty in South Carolina.

Paragraph Twenty-two of Article Five of the Constitution of South Carolina, 1895, covers this qualification. After fixing the number of jurors in municipal courts and courts inferior to circuit courts at six persons, and the grand jury of each county at eighteen, twelve of whom must agree in a matter before it can be submitted to the court, the statement is made: "The petit jury of the circuit courts shall consist of twelve men all of whom must agree to a verdict in order to render the same."

Then follows the "Qualifications of Jurors:"

"Each juror must be a qualified elector under the provisions of this constitution, between the ages of twenty-one and sixty-five years and of good moral character."

That provision is specific in the first two of the required qualifications and quite general in the third and last one. "Of good moral character" may mean much or little according to the person or persons who have to interpret it.

The "qualified elector" provision is defined in Pargaraph Four of Article Two, following the statement in Paragraph Three of this same article:

"Every male citizen of this State and of the United States twenty-one years of age and upwards, not laboring under the disabilities named in this constitution and possessing the qualifications required by it, shall be an elector."

This provision subsequently, as is generally known, was extended to include females as possible qualified electors.

The first requirement for qualifying as an elector is the matter of residence. This must be: Residence in the State for two years, in the county one year, in the polling precinct in which the elector offers to vote four months and the payment six months before any election of any poll tax then due and payable: Provided that ministers of the gospel, in charge of an organized church and teachers of public schools shall be entitled to vote after six months residence in the State, if otherwise qualified.

But to be qualified as an elector is not all that is required. The elector must register with the county board of registration in each county and this board must be satisfied of the qualifications before the certificate of registration can be issued. And this certificate of registration may be demanded by the managers of an election before the person appearing before them is allowed to cast his ballot.

This, it may be necessary to remind, is for general elections. No certificate of registration is required in a primary election, so-called, for that is merely a nominating affair—though, n actual results, it turns out to be the election which settles the results of the general election. It is so because this is practically a one-party State and a primary in the Democratic party settles the whole business. However, the machinery for all general elections has to be maintained and has to have due observance.

What has all this to do with jury duty?

Well, a juror has to be a "qualified elector" and it is necessary to show all the process by which "qualified electors" become so designated.

The business of registration is fixed in this same Paragraph Four of Article Two of the State Constitution and this is the sub-section which covers it now as it refers to "registration after January, 1898:"

"Any person who shall apply for registration after January the first, 1898, if otherwise qualified, shall be registered: Provided. That he can both read and write any section of this constitution submitted to him by the registration officer or can show that he owns and has paid all taxes collectible during the previous year on property in this State assessed at three hundred dollars ($300.00) or more."

All such persons who have qualified under this sub-section of Paragraph Four of Article Two of the Constitution of the State of South Carolina (1895) are entered in a book of registration as persons qualified to vote or "qualified electors" as generally called and a certificate showing they have been so registered and generally called "registration certificate" is issued to them. This they must keep and if it is demanded by the managers of a general election it must be shown before the voter can cast a ballot. If this certificate is lost, a duplicate will be issued by the county board of registration on request. They have the names of all persons who have received such certificates before them in the books of registration kept in the office of the clerk of court in each county.

The jury list in each county is made up by a board of jury commissioners which is composed of the clerk of court, the auditor and the treasurer of the county.

These three officials must take the names of persons to be drawn as jurors from the books of qualified electors as already explained. They put these names in what is known as the jury box and when necessary to have jurors for an approaching term of court the box is unlocked, it has three different locks with three separate keys, each officer having one of the three different keys, and the required number of names drawn out, thirty-six names for petit jurors and six new grand jurors for terms of general sessions.

Now, in case the jury list in any county is challenged as in the Scottsboro case in Alabama, the jury commissioners who follow the law in the matter of selecting names from the jury list have their course definitely charted for them. The race question may be a factor and it may never be.

The provision covering the qualification of a juror, as set forth above, it must be remembered includes "of good moral character."

And there are also, the challenges which are allowed both the State and the defense in criminal cases.

In one of the notable murder trials in Abbeville county so late as 1884, a case in which a white man was being tried for killing another white man, one of the twelve jurors was a colored man.

In the case of State vs. Brown, reported in South Carolina Reports, Volume Sixty, the fact that the grand jury which found the indictment contained no member of the race to which the defendant belongs is not, of itself, a ground for quashing the indictment.

But in the Alabama case the Supreme Court of the United States ordered a new trial because it appeared conclusively to the court that negroes who were qualified under the Alabama law in the county were consistently declined for jury duty. Had their names gone on the jury list or into the jury box, as we have it, the contention would have had little ground to support it. And that is something which it might be well to realize and remember.

Dadeville, Ala., Record
April 4, 1935

Scottsboro Sentences Given Reversal Again

The United States Supreme Court Monday reversed the decision of the Jackson County Circuit Court sentencing two of the nine Scottsboro Negroes to the electric chair for assualt on two white girls on a freight train in that county in 1931.

This means that the cases will again come back to the lower court for retrial. The reversion was on the ground that the Negroes were without fair representation owing to the fact that Negroes were excluded from the jury box in Jackson County.

It is a known fact that Negroes rarely serve on juries, except federal juries, in Alabama and other Southern States. They are not excluded by law, but jury commissions do not put their names in the box. It seems to be the opinion generally, however, since this decision, that the names of qualified Negroes will have to be placed in each jury box, or else cases coming to the Supreme Court will be reversed.

Should the names of qualified Negroes be placed in the jury box and should some of these names be drawn in any particular case, their names could easily be struck from the list by attorneys to whom their service was objectionable for any cause.

The outcome of the situation that has arisen as a result of the decision of the Supreme Court will be watched with interest throughout the country until a method of solution has been reached.

SALINA, KANS.
APR 2 1935
Journal

THE SCOTTSBORO CASES

The average lay mind will be unable to follow the technical matters involved in the famous Scottsboro, Ala., cases which began more than four years ago in the arrest of many Negroes on the charge of assault on two white women. If they recall reading the stories at the time of the trials, they may hold various opinions of the evidence offered. But what impresses them most, as it has for many years in matter legal, is the length to which cases, which certainly could be decided in a reasonable length of time, can drag along with the end not in sight. Referring the cases of two of these Negroes back to Alabama courts for retrial does not bring the end near.

There is no need to ask the layman what is wrong because he complains at slowness of justice and legal procedure. It is an old ruse to answer, "you do it better then." Certainly if a man hired a bricklayer to build him a wall, and that wall was entirely out of line, the man hiring the work done would know the job was not good. The mere fact that, not being a bricklayer, he could not himself build the wall correctly, is no good answer that the complaint is groundless.

Getting the law to move at a reasonable pace, with technicalities and unwarranted delays thrown out of it, is the business of lawyers, judges and those who understand the law. The reform is up to them and complaint at slowness and dragging of cases along through long years is in order from the man outside the legal fraternity, even if he cannot put his hand exactly on what is wrong.

JAMAICA, N. Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
APR 6 1935

The Scottsboro Case
Its Human Appeal

The Scottsboro decision has been a splendid thing. It is heartening to realize that the Supreme Court has given a verdict that is so entirely compatible with one's whole idea of justice.

The case, of course, was not at all obscure. It was surrounded with an incredible amount of publicity. Lawyers and writers commented freely on it and one of the witnesses involved, I believe, even barnstormed the North as a vaudeville entertainer. This feat was tied up oddly enough with her efforts to withdraw her own perjured testimony, an exhibition that struck me as being noteworthy.

What the decision will accomplish in the South is something that I should not care to prophesy. I rather doubt that Negroes will occupy a prominent role as jurors, but I do think that their cases may be considered more dispassionately. One hopes at least that there will be such an outcome.

TODAY'S VISITING EDITOR . . . Mrs. Edith Hunter . . . Educated at New Jersey College for Women . . . Former school teacher . . . Lives in Woodhaven.

The actual importance of the decision there may seem to be rather slight. Its real value lies in another direction. With only three of its members aligned with liberal groups, the Supreme Court seemed like the most doggedly conservative body in the country.

Characterized often enough as lawyers who could not see the broader purpose of law, members seemed to offer their decisions on a pretty narrow basis. Their record with progressive, social legislation has not been one to enhance their reputation among citizens who look to them for guidance.

That is why I am delighted with the Scottsboro decision. I hope that it may mark a turn in the ways of the Supreme Court. I trust that the restricted, technical interpretation of the law has finally yielded to a wiser, more humane approach.

LINCOLN, NEB.
MORNING STATE JOURNAL
APR 4 1935

ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY.

The supreme court insists that the state of Alabama give the Negroes involved in the Scottsboro case a fair trial. Had it not been for the court, these Negroes would have been executed in 1932. They are all involved in an attack case. After the first conviction an appeal was taken and the supreme court found that the defendants had been denied representation by adequate counsel. New trials were ordered and again convictions were obtained. This time the convictions were appealed on the ground that Negroes were discriminated against in the matter of jury service in Jackson county. It was proved that no Negro had been called for jury duty in that county for a generation. The supreme court held that this constituted discrimination and again set aside the convictions.

The state of Alabama expects to go on with the prosecution of these cases but the trials may be a bit fairer this time. Surely the state has learned that it must permit representation by adequate counsel and that it cannot, in a free country, discriminate against the Negroes in the matter of jury service.

The whole affair would have been more satisfactory to everyone had fair trials been granted at the beginning.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4993

EUFAULA, ALA.
TRIBUNE
APR 5 1935

THE "SCOTTSBORO" DECISION

For the second time the United States supreme court has sent the cases against negroes, convicted of assaulting two white women near Scottsboro, back for new trials. The cases came back the first time on grounds that the negroes did not have adequate counsel, while in the second it was because negroes were "systematically" kept off jury lists in two counties.

Where this thing is going to end is the question uppermost in the minds of the reading public. Must Jackson and Morgan counties revise their jury rolls and place the names of negroes in the boxes? That seems to be the only way out, yet negroes have not served on state court juries in southern states since the carpet-bag era.

In reversing the Jackson circuit court, the supreme court, in the opinion of the Montgomery Advertiser, "seems to have ignored the evidence and confined its comments mainly if not entirely to the fact that no negroes were on the jury which convicted two negroes of a felony. The Advertiser has read only a press summary of Chief Justice Hughes's position, but it would appear that he is concerned, not with the evidence upon which the defendants were convicted, so much as with the color of the jury that convicted them."

Continuing his discussion of the noted case, Editor Hall observes:

The court charges that negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury service in the county of trial, and that the few names of negroes in the jury box were fraudulently admitted.

The Advertiser does not know whether this charge of fraud is just or not. It may be that the names of negroes were admitted after the issue involving the right of negroes to serve on Alabama juries was raised.

The Advertiser does know that generally speaking the names of negro citizens are not in the jury boxes in the counties of Alabama, although negroes may and do serve on federal juries in this state.

What qualifications must a juror possess under the law? He must be a person of good character, good standing and good intelligence—at least, this is the theory upon which names are admitted to the jury box. The jury commissioners of Alabama, inquiring for new names to put on their lists, never ask whether one is black or white, yellow, brown or bronze. The citizens to whom these verbal inquiries are addressed, instinctively report only the names of white persons. The race question is rarely if ever raised between jury commissioners and citizens whom they question.

From a strict technical standpoint negroes are not excluded from juries; in common practice they are, of course.

At last the supreme court, following up previous warnings, reverses the verdict of a state court upon the ground of race discrimination in the selection of jurors.

It now follows that Alabama jury commissions must immediately put the names of reputable negro citizens in their jury boxes. Otherwise we cannot hope again to have the supreme court of the United States affirm the findings of a state court wherever a negro's liberty or life is at stake.

The Advertiser therefore would urge that county jury commissions in Alabama act immediately to make it possible for the State of Alabama to win a case involving a negro in the supreme court of the United States.

Otherwise, we wish to say that Mr. Hughes's pontifical deliverance is a lot of baloney.

Here is the supreme court of a great republic, reviewing the trial of two men charged with an offense that stands first among felonies in this state, reversing the verdict of an oathbound jury upon the ground that it does not like the color scheme of that jury.

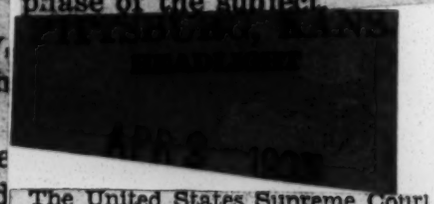
The supreme court of the United States tells Alabama, in effect, that it is not primarily interested in otherwise credible evidence demonstrating human depravity, but that it is primarily interested in the academic political "rights" of a politically dispossessed race.

The Advertiser may be dumb, as well as "lost and ruint," but to save itself it cannot see what the political rights and privileges of negroes in Alabama have to do with the guilt or innocence of the gorillas who are charged with criminal assault upon two women, it being agreed that rape is a felony under the law in this backward state.

Either these gorillas committed rape, or they did not.

If they committed rape the jury, (even though white) knows the truth and reported it faithfully.

If they did not commit rape, we believe that this jury would have said so.



Suppose the defendants had been Italians. There are no Italians in Jackson county. So far as we know there are not today any Italians in Montgomery county, despite its relatively large population. Certainly there are no Spaniards, no Japanese, no Tahitans, no Indians, no Eskimos either in Montgomery or other counties.

In that event not many juries in Alabama could hope to have their verdicts affirmed by the supreme court of the United States if a member of either of these races should move here tomorrow and commit a capital offense.

It seems to The Advertiser that if the supreme court of the United States, presided over by Charles Evans Hughes, had a more sensitive regard for the victims (actual and potential) of felonious assault and less regard for the politically dispossessed in the home state of these victims, it would not devote an entire opinion to an academic political question, but would offer some comment on the evidence by which the gorillas aforesaid had been convicted.

After all, the rape of a wench is not morally different from the rape of the proudest gentlewoman in the republic, and it seems to us that any man of sound instincts would see this truth. Rape happens to be a capital crime in Alabama.

We are sorry that the supreme court of the United States seems to have no immediate interest in this phase of the subject.

The United States Supreme Court has upheld the method of the Democrats of Texas in barring Negroes from the party. It decided yesterday against the appeal of a Negro who went to the expense of a trip to the highest tribunal in his attempt to get into the party. The Texas Democrats merely limit party membership to white citizens who can vote in Texas. That method is so different from methods used in some other southern states that the Supreme Court probably was glad to endorse it.

Brooklyn, N. Y. Citizen

APR 6 1935

VICTORY FOR THE NEGRO RACE

The action of Governor Bibb Graves, of Alabama, in declaring that a revision of the jury lists of the State must be made to include Negroes shows that a great victory has been won.

The United States Supreme Court a few days ago set aside death sentences imposed on two Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case, holding that Negroes were systematically excluded from jury rolls in Jackson and Morgan counties, which was an infringement on the Constitutional rights of the defendants.

Governor Graves bows to the decision. "Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land," said the Governor. "Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit. Alabama is going to observe the supreme laws of America."

Governor Graves should be commended for his readiness to accept the inevitable, without hesitation delay or evasion. "This decision," he says, "means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county." Defendants of the Negro race will hereafter receive their full rights in Alabama. Other Southern States which have also kept Negroes from their jury lists will have to follow the lead of Alabama. The North Carolina Supreme Court has twice held during the past year that Negroes were not entitled to new trials when the major grounds for appeal were allegations of exclusion of Negroes from juries. That State will have to revise its jury lists. In South Carolina jury commissioners have discretionary power in selecting jury panels. Any attempt of these commissioners to evade the ruling of the United States Supreme Court will be sternly repressed. As a matter of fact, no Negroes are barred by law from jury duty in any Southern State, but they have been systematically kept off the jury lists in various ways. This will no longer be possible. The whole South must fall in line.

KNOXVILLE, TENN
NEWS SENTINEL
APR 7 1935

Scottsboro Decision

By CRANSTON CLAYTON,
Pastor, Park City M. E. Church

Editor, The News-Sentinel:

Now that the Supreme Court of the United States has squarely faced the fact that Negroes are barred from jury service in the South and has categorically ruled that this makes a conviction of a Negro invalid, how is law, from this time on, to be enforced among Negroes? If a Negro can't be convicted of rape unless others of his color be allowed to serve as jurors, how can he be convicted of any other crime unless Negroes are jurors?

Three Choices

It would seem that the South has its choice of three ways of proceeding. One would be to secede from the Union and thereby escape the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Another Civil War however is obviously too expensive for the value of the issue.

A second alternative would be to enforce law among Negroes illegally; that is by terrorism and lynchings. This is all too likely to be what will really happen. Now that the white citizens of Alabama have to recognize the futility of spending further time and money trying to get a conviction against the Scottsboro boys without Negro jurymen being allowed, they are a thousand times more likely than ever to resort to the rope or the torch. And hereafter in Alabama and other places barbarism is all too apt to replace even the semblance of ordely process of law.

Barbarism Will Go

Yet barbarism can not last. It is unthinkable that it can. We are too human to go on forever brutalizing our fellows and degrading ourselves through the practice of community murder. What then must be the final outcome? There is nothing left except to admit Negroes to jury service. And why not? In practically any county in the South there are Negro citizens qualified in every way, in education, native ability, and character, to be acceptable jurors. As sure as there is a good God who in the long run always establishes justice in his world, these people will finally get their rights. The big, the magnanimous, the Christian thing for us to do is grant the Negro his constitutional right of jury service without going through any further period of hatred, struggle, and violence.

Cleveland, Tenn. Banner
April 5, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION

The decision in the Scottsboro case was the first in recent years in which the United States Supreme court upheld the right of Negroes to sit in juries.

It is not, however, the first time the court has ruled that deliberate denial of jury places to Negroes in trials of Negro defendants is a violation of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The decision in the case of Neal versus Delaware, in 1880, is often quoted. The court ruled that the fact that no Negro had ever sat on a Delaware jury, although about 15 per cent. of the population of the state was Negro, presented a prima facie case of denial of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law. It was held to have been a "violent presumption" on the part of the state court that exclusion of Negroes over many years had been solely because the whole Negro race in the state was unfit for jury service.

In the Scottsboro case the court set aside the conviction and death sentense of two Negroes, ruling that the indictments on which they were tried were invalid because Negroes had been systematically barred from jury rolls in Jackson county Alabama.

It does not seem probable that the recent decision, any more than did that of 1880, will result in any far-reaching changes in judicial procedure in the Southern states or in any other section of the country, for that matter. It might cause the retrial of a case now and then, but as a general thing even this might be prevented by the administration of fair and impartial justice for the Negro in the courts.

The fact that Judge Horton, presiding at the second trial of one of the Scottsboro defendants, with a change of venue to Decatur, Morgan county, set aside a verdict of guilty as contrary to the weight of the evidence, added to the doubt already existing that fair and impartial justice was being meted to these Negro defendants and strengthened the feeling that race prejudice was playing a major part in the case. The meddling by lawyers from the North was justly resented, yet when the courts of the South established a reputation for giving to the Negro defendant the brand of justice to which any defendant is entitled, there will be no excuse for meddling lawyers from the North, there will be no widespread demand for Negro jurors, and trials can proceed with little likelihood that the verdict will be challenged because of all-white juries.

The case emphasizes the responsibility of courts, staffed throughout with white men and operating under laws of white men toward the Negroes who are brought into them. Race prejudice has no place in a courtroom and it is within the province of any court of justice to keep it out.

Bridgeport, Ala., Herald
April 4, 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE BACK HOME

Of National Fame at the expense of our State the "Scottsboro Negro Case" pointed back to Scottsboro this week where it is predicted to begins its trail through the courts again. We are doubtful if the case will end until the Negroes have grown aged or died of a natural death. It seems that the lawyers grasped the opportunity to fill their pockets and cause the State to spend an enormous sum to give the Negroes fair chance to prove their innocence. Through the various courts the case was given hearing, each court upholding the decision of the Jackson County Court. Now it is going over the same route as they will be given trials again.

We like to see justice done, but when it involves such expense at the gain of money seeking lawyers, we cry out in agony for the merciless prey upon the tax-payers as they must pay the cost in the long run. Yes, give everyone a chance to prove his innocence and then lawfully pronounce the fate as law reads. If the law is unjust then abandon it and make one that will bring justice.

The laws are for the protection of humanity and should not be allowed to be switched into money making schemes by clever lawyers.

It seems that this case has proven thus far that "Capital Punishment" is failure and that the law is uniust. We don't quite understand how the state can go on and spend great sums when each court has upheld the same sentence. If there is doubt of the right to enforce that law in this case, then why not abandon it and make another to give justice and punishment for the crime the Negroes are convicted of. It's time to stop clever lawyer's ideas of preying upon the public. For the sake of Alabama do something before the Negroes die of old age.

If the law is unjust and the same old seven and six routine through the courts continue on, the Negroes are done as great injustice as taking their lives. If they deserve freedom, then turn them loose. Anything to stop the clever tactics of the money making and publicity seeking lawyers.

New York World Telegram

APR 2 1935

JUSTICE.

EIGHT United States Supreme Court Justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or reindict and retry the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped reinforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama.

4994

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
APR 3 1935

The Supreme Court Treads Strange Ground

In spite of victory in the Scottsboro appeal Monday witnessed a setback to the cause of justice for the Southern Negro.

In the long run, the Supreme Court's decision in the Texas primary case may prove of more general importance than the much-publicized Scottsboro ruling.

The high court held that the Texas State convention of the Democratic party had a right to exclude Negroes from registering as Democrats and from voting in Democratic primary elections.

When it is recalled that the Democratic primary is really the deciding election in Southern States, this decision effectively disfranchises the Negro in the South.

To a layman, it would appear that Texas at last has found a legal device, sought for years by many Southern States, through which Negroes can be excluded from politics. And the ruling is an especially severe blow since it comes just as Negroes generally are beginning to realize that their only hope of political consideration lies in abandoning their former slavish adherence to the Republican party.

Negroes in the border States have found that when large numbers of their race are registered as Democrats, BOTH parties have to take Negro welfare into consideration.

* * *

The Supreme Court laid down the general principle that a political party is "a voluntary organization and competent to decide its membership."

Thus it would seem that a political party has exactly the same right to choose its members as a private club.

The question arises, "If a party convention can exclude Negro voters, why can't it exclude Catholics, or Protestants, or persons under 30 years of age, or women, or persons with less than $100,000?"

Political parties are not social clubs.

Their primary elections are paid for and regulated by the State. Their official status is embedded in the electoral system.

It is mystifying to mere laymen that political parties should possess powers over the qualifications of voters — powers which are expressly denied to the States themselves by the Constitution.

It is only fair to note that the Supreme Court took the opposite view without a single dissent being recorded.

Perhaps there is some weighty reason which makes it necessary. If there is such a compelling argument, it has not appeared in published reports of the Court's opinion.

Until it does, most observers will feel that we tread on dangerous ground when we depart from the popular idea that any qualified citizen may register as a member of any party he likes.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
NEWS TRIBUNE
APR 2 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The United States Supreme Court has set aside the second verdict of guilty against the Negroes in the Scottsboro case just as it set aside the first, and ordered a new trial. The court declared yesterday that it was evident competent Negroes had been systematically excluded from the jury panel, thus depriving the men on trial of their constitutional rights. This is altogether aside from the generally accepted judgment that the Negroes were convicted on evidence which would not have convinced any jury not imbued with, or intimidated by, racial prejudice. Those who have followed the case will recall the accounts of the trials which suggested that they were more in the nature of a legalized lynching than of orderly procedure directed solely to vindicating justice.

The question is, what will happen now? Is there any likelihood that a fair trial can be had in the State of Alabama? We do not like to give up the hope that it can be, provided the venue is changed to a large city such as Birmingham. But it is notorious that the defence of the Negroes has been carried on in a most tactless way, giving conscienceless prosecutors an opportunity to exploit every type of local animosity. One can hardly believe, nevertheless, that in a great city community, the malice of this sort of prosecution would prevail as it did in a backwoods region. One of the most regrettable features of the whole affair is that an upright and honest judge who sought to give the defendants at the first trial a fair day in court was punished by being refused re-election.

The suggestion has been made that, in the face of the two Supreme Court decisions, the governor should pardon the accused, convicted mainly on the testimony of an untruthful wanton. If this is the only way out of keeping the Negroes in a state of permanent persecution, it should be taken. There should be sufficient sound public opinion in Alabama to save the governor from political reprisals. But, even if there is not, he should, in the name of common humanity, face and perform his manifest duty.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
APR 2 1935

Alabama on Trial

The decree of the Supreme Court that the Scottsboro boys must be given a new trial lays a heavy responsibility on the State of Alabama. The trial now ordered will be the fourth to which they have been subjected. The sentence of death imposed after the first was overruled by the Supreme Court on the ground that the boys had been unconstitutionally deprived of the aid of counsel in the preparation of the case. The verdict of guilty was returned after the second trial, but it was set aside by the presiding judge who, in a notable declaration, indignantly set forth the insufficiency of the evidence. A third trial was promptly held, a sentence of death was again imposed, but the Supreme Court has overruled it on the ground that, inasmuch as Negroes were excluded from the jury, the boys had been denied the full protection of the law.

Clearly the State of Alabama has thus far failed to administer justice in such a manner as to leave it beyond reproach. Clearly it must do so now. The case of the Scottsboro boys has become deeply involved in all sorts of prejudice, social and economic as well as racial. To lift it above such entanglements, to put it on a basis of simple fact, to lay it before a judge and a jury whose sole interest shall be the determination of the truth, to prosecute it fairly will be no simple task, but it is not an impossible one, and Alabama, whose courts have twice been rebuked by the highest tribunal, would seem to have no greater duty at the present time to see that it is accomplished in a way that will give no one further occasion to criticize.

The protection of its citizens, resting on the assurance that equal justice will be accorded to all, is the first and the highest duty of a State. If Alabama wishes to secure its reputation as a State in which the primary obligations of civilized life are fulfilled, it will now bend every effort to giving the boys a fair trial and seeing to it that, if acquitted, they are fully protected against violence from all sources. Not the boys but Alabama is now on trial.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
EVENING PUBLIC LEDGER
APR 3 1935

SCOTTSBORO JUSTICE

WHAT would beyond fair question have been a gross miscarriage of justice has been avoided by the Supreme Court in its decision setting aside the Scottsboro convictions and ordering a new trial.

It is still a question whether, in Jackson County, Alabama, Negroes accused of the gravest of offenses against white women can obtain a just trial. But the country as a whole will be relieved that the highest court in the land has found a way, in this particular case, to forestall the consequences of injustice which too often have characterized judicial procedure in the Deep South.

For four years this ugly Scottsboro case has dragged along under a pall of bigotry, ignorance and weak legal practice. It must now be opened again. The Supreme Court based its decision on the "evidence that for a generation or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County," and that this discrimination constituted a denial of the defendants' rights.

This unconstitutional method of procedure will presumably be changed. But more than that is necessary to obtain for Negroes their rights before Southern courts. The entire cultural and social outlook is gravely in need of improvement. The Supreme Court's scathing indictment of Alabama justice should encourage right-minded men everywhere to hope that this improvement is under way.

NORFOLK, VA.
VIRGINIAN PILOT
APR 2 1935

Again the Scottsboro Case

For the second time the Supreme Court of the United States has held constitutionally defective convictions growing out of the Scottsboro, Ala., rape case. In 1932 it held that the withholding from the defendants of adequate counsel help during their trial in April, 1931, amounted to a denial of their constitutional rights. It avoided at that time any judgment on the additional complaint that the defendants' rights were disregarded by the exclusion of Negroes from the grand and petit juries. In yesterday's decision this point was the ground for holding the latest conviction unconstitutional.

The opinion, read by Chief Justice Hughes (with no dissent from any member of the court) centered in the question of fact. That a court proceeding is invalid if Negroes are designedly barred from the jury for reasons of race or color, had already been settled by the Supreme Court as early as 1880 in Neal v. Delaware. The question now before the court was whether in the Decatur trials of 1933, Negroes were absent from the jury rolls as the result of valid reasons or as the result of systematic racial exclusion. The Supreme Court of Alabama, ruling on this question, held that the exclusion was not designedly discriminatory. In the opinion of Mr. Justice Hughes it was. "We think the evidence that no Negro has been called for jury service in Jackson County for a generation," he held, "established there had been discrimination."

We agree. Systematic discrimination in the making up of jury rolls has been practiced against Negroes not only in Alabama, but also in every other State in the South—Virginia included. If this discrimination has been seldom challenged, it is because, as a rule, it has not become a vital bone of contention. It became a vital bone of contention in the Scottsboro case in virtue not of the jury discrimination itself, but of the miscarriage of justice which impended unless the fact of jury discrimination could be successfully invoked to prevent it.

It needs no great familiarity with the known facts of the Scottsboro case to justify the opinion that the young Negroes sentenced to death for the crime of March, 1931, were convicted on evidence which, in the absence of the poisonous race factor and the local passions evoked by it, would have been held inconclusive by any court in Alabama. Believing that to be a fact, the Virginian-Pilot rejoices that the Supreme Court of the United States has once more intervened to prevent an irreparable act of State violence, and that, in doing so, it has reiterated a principle of jury procedure which needed pointed restatement in the interest of a better grade of Southern justice in cases bedevilled by the racial perplexity.

CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS
APR 2 1935

JUSTICE

EIGHT U. S. Supreme Court justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants. The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or reindict and retry the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to the prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered retrials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of some obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped reinforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is evan truer today than in 1801.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER-PUBLIC LEDGER
APR 3 1935

More Light on the Scottsboro Case

Of Nation-wide interest and significance is the decision of the United States Supreme Court ordering a new trial for the Negroes condemned to death on the charge of having assaulted a white woman in the now celebrated Scottsboro case. The Court does not pass upon the guilt or innocence of the defendants, but does take the ground that they have been denied their constitutional rights and have been made the victims of race prejudice. Justice Hughes asserts emphatically that Negroes have been systematically and arbitrarily barred from jury duty when the testimony showed that there were Negroes in Jackson and Morgan counties, Alabama, fully qualified for such duty.

The decision will be welcomed everywhere, because it is conclusive proof that the highest court in the land is determined that substantial justice shall be accorded to all citizens. Moreover, it constitutes an answer to the radicals who are ever ready to seize upon any pretext to agitate against constituted authority.

Whatever the bitterness and prejudice that have been stirred up over the highly controversial case, there can be no difference of opinion about the clear reassurance, through the Supreme Court decision, that equality before the law continues to be one of the outstanding safeguards of American justice.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
APR 2 1935

Monday's Decisions.

Very many, in the north at least, believe that the Scottsboro cases represented an unfair trial in fact, aside from the technical failure now declared by the United States supreme court, namely, that Negroes were deliberately excluded from the jury. They welcome the court's finding particularly on the former account.

The decision fits well with the constitution and the law. Trial by jury must be impartial to be valid. The Negro is a citizen, entitled to equal protection of the laws, equal immunities or rights. Practically, it raises real dilemma in Alabama. Prejudices of any kind are strong in that state. Insistence upon the presence of Negroes in juries is likely to intensify race prejudice with perhaps seriously deplorable consequences.

Texas, as is confirmed in a further decision of the court, has had legal success in excluding Negroes from registration in the democratic party. The democratic party in Texas is a private corporation capable of freely making its own provisions as to membership.

Alabama cannot adopt this precedent in its jury practice, but there are ways of making jury panels which may find inspiration in something of the nature of a "grandfather clause" such as in actual effect disfranchised thousands of Negroes in several southern states.

We hope that the next trial of the Negroes accused of assault will be such as to leave no reasonable doubt in impartial minds as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

New York World Telegram
APR 2 1935

Leibowitz Is Overwhelmed by the Scottsboro Decision

Lawyer Will Go to Washington Today for Execution Paper of Supreme Court Ruling—Believe Boys Under Sentence Will Be Freed Immediately.

Samuel S. Leibowitz picked up a leather writing pad from his desk and showed just how he persuaded the United States Supreme Court that two of the Scottsboro boys had been illegally indicted.

His eyes were filled with tears of joy because he knew that the highest court in the land believed him and because he was sure that the Scottsboro boys will not die. A press association had just phoned the news of the Supreme Court decision to him, and in his happiness he was once again living through the tense moments of his three-year fight for the boys.

He pretended that the writing pad was the Jackson County, Alabama, Grand Jury roll book upon which he contended that the names of six Negroes had been forged to block the boys' escape from the electric chair on the grounds that Negroes had been illegally excluded from the Grand Jury that indicted them.

Mr. Leibowitz offered the imaginary roll book suavely but persuasively to an imaginary Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes who he pretended was sitting on the bookcase of his office at 225 Broadway.

Too Excited to Act.

But he was so excited that he could not continue his play-acting.

"This is the greatest moment of my life," he said, pacing back and forth across his office. "It's the greatest decision of the Supreme Court since the Dred Scott case. But by far the greatest aspect of the case was the victory won by the forces of American justice over the elements whose members said that the boys would not receive justice from the United States Supreme Court."

Harold Fox, the New York City detective who had gone to Alabama as the bodyguard of Mr. Leibowitz, was among the first to come to congratulate him.

"Do you remember," asked Mr. Leibowitz, "the night we got off the train in Alabama and the first thing we saw was a book selling for fifty cents and entitled, 'Kill the Jew from New York'?"

Detective Fox remembered and chuckled.

As he talked the phone jingled constantly. His friends were calling him up to congratulate him. When Mrs. Leibowitz telephoned tears sprang to his eyes and his voice choked with emotion as he told her of his victory.

Objected to Northerner.

"They objected to a Northern lawyer handling the case, but I say that no Southern lawyer would have dared to suggest that Negroes should sit in a Grand Jury or any other kind of jury in Alabama. Why, they were so mad at the idea of having Negro names on the Grand Jury books that they could not contain themselves."

Mr. Leibowitz is going to Washington today. There he will obtain the executing paper of the Supreme Court order and will take it with his own hands to Kilby Prison, Montgomery, Ala., where he will serve it on the warden, who he believes must immediately release Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, the two Scottsboro boys under death sentence.

Mr. Leibowitz also believes that the indictments against the boys will be nolle prossed. If evidence again is heard against them in the present case it must be heard before a Grand Jury upon which Negroes serve, and, in Mr. Leibowitz's opinion, there never will be such a Grand Jury in Alabama.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama 4995

NEW YORK TIMES

APR 6 1935

JURY LISTS OPENED TO ALABAMA NEGRO

Gov. Graves Cites Scottsboro Decision in Ordering Courts to Revise Juror Rolls.

CONSTITUTION PUT FIRST

Pending Cases Will Be Continued or Nolle Prossed Till the Jury Boxes Are Refilled.

By The Associated Press.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 5.—A revision of Alabama jury lists to include Negroes was called for today by Governor Bibb Graves in view of the United States Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case.

The Governor wrote his suggestion to circuit judges and solicitors throughout the State after receiving the official decision and included copies of it.

He also announced that he would ask the Legislature when it reconvenes April 30 for such legislation as may be necessary to cover the dumping and refilling of Alabama jury boxes from which the names of jurors are drawn.

The Supreme Court a few days ago set aside death sentences imposed on two Negro defendants in the Scottsboro attack case, holding that Negroes were "systematically" excluded from jury rolls in Jackson and Morgan Counties with infringement upon the constitutional rights of the accused.

"Supreme Laws of Land."

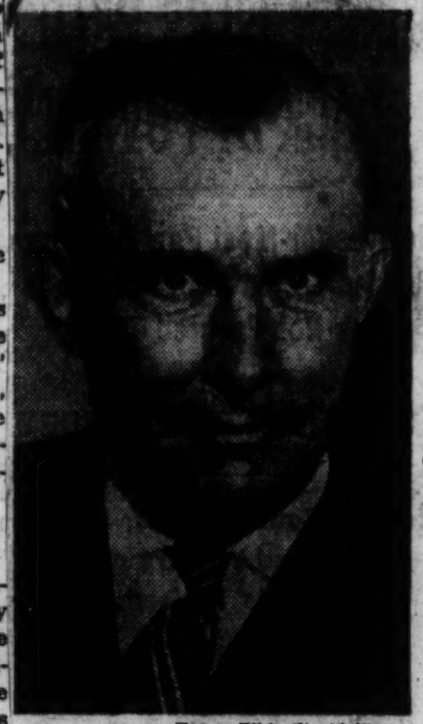
"Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land," Governor Graves stated. "Whether we like the decisions or not, it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit.

"I have received the Supreme Court's decision in the Scottsboro case, holding in effect that when there is systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries, it is discrimination against the race in violation of the United States Constitution. This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county.

"Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America."

With reference to pending cases the Governor advised that, if the question of absence of Negroes' names from jury rolls be raised, the case would be continued or nolle prossed until the boxes were refilled to meet constitutional requirements.

Precedent for Rest of South.



ATLANTA, April 5 (AP).—Alabama's action in ordering new jury lists drawn to conform with the United States Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case may be followed by other Southern States calling more Negroes for active jury duty, it was indicated today.

No Negroes are barred by law from jury duty in the South but few have actually been called to sit on cases. In most of the States jurors must be qualified voters and this in itself has kept a great many Negroes off the jury list.

The North Carolina Supreme Court has held twice in the past year or so that Negroes were not entitled to new trials when major grounds for appeal were allegations of exclusion of Negroes from the jury.

Jury commissions in South Carolina have discretionary power in selecting jury panels.

Major W. Calvin Wells, president of the Mississippi State Bar Association, said the Scottsboro decision

Times Wide World Photo.

LIFTS NEGRO JURY BAN. Governor Bibb Graves.

JURY LISTS OPENED TO ALABAMA NEGRO

Continued From Page One.

"may have great effect" on State courts.

Negroes holding poll-tax receipts, a voting qualification, are eligible for jury duty in Arkansas. Assistant Attorney General Thomas Fitzhugh said that "it just happens that no jury commission selects Negroes for jury duty; it may be just a coincidence."

Texas statutes and the conduct of criminal trials "are in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court," said State Attorney General William McGraw.

Order Is Acclaimed Here.

Governor Graves's order to include Negroes on Alabama jury lists was acclaimed here yesterday by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, according to The Associated Press. Arthur B. Spingarn, for twenty-one years chairman of its national legal committee, said:

"It is a very fine step. It should advance not only the rights of Negroes, but also the whole attitude of that section of the country toward enforcement of the law."

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
POST
APR 2 1935

Scottsboro

Action of the United States Supreme Court in again reversing the decisions in the Scottsboro case, and the court's condemnation of "the systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury duty" is one of the high~~est~~ most significant rulings affecting racial problems.

It is its second rebuke to the prosecutors of the now famous case and means in simple words that Negroes must be allowed to sit on juries, else no verdict affecting a Negro can be held legal if the Negro has money enough to take his case to the high court. It means that no state will have the legal right to try Negroes in its courts if it can be shown that the names of Negroes are excluded from its jury panels. For Alabama in particular the decision means that the Scottsboro case is now further from a solution than ever before.

In the four years since the youths were taken from a train at Paint Rock and charged with the South's one unpardonable crime, an international conflagration of bitterness has seethed about the sordid affair. Bold headlines on every newspaper have chronicled three trials. One of the women in the case—unfortunate, illiterate, billed as "a typical Southern worker"—has appeared on the campuses of Eastern universities "lecturing" to enthusiastic audiences on the ponderous subject of "Social Injustice in the South."

A play, purporting to be based on the case, has appeared on the Broadway boards, causing effete New Yorkers to burn with righteous indignation at the barbarity of their Southern brothers. A judge who presided ably at one of the trials has been shunted into political oblivion and his picture displayed on the front pages of Eastern journals as one "crucified on the altar of Southern bigotry."

Radical groups vying with each other in the "defense" of the Negroes have passed the hat throughout the civilized world after making impassioned appeals to "save ignorant children from being thrown to the lions."

What is to be done?

Let us be through with the whole affair at the earliest possible moment. Changes in our court procedure necessary to bring the case to a speedy and successful conclusion should be made at once.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.
TELEGRAM
APR 2 1935

JUSTICE

EIGHT United States Supreme Court justices united in striking down the conviction of two Scottsboro defendants.

The court held that Negroes had been illegally barred from acting as jurymen in the trials. Alabama now must either dismiss the famous cases or re-indict and re-try the defendants with Negro jurymen on the panels.

This is the high court's second rebuke to prosecutors of these Negro youths and their companions. In November, 1932, the court ordered re-trials on the ground that Alabama had denied the defendants due process on other grounds.

In these two opinions the Supreme Court has done much more than save the lives of obscure boys. It has done more than hearten the faith of 15,000,000 American Negroes in their country's courts. It has helped reinforce the very foundations of the republic.

In his first inaugural address Jefferson said that equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, through trials by juries impartially selected, forms the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies. This is even truer today than in 1801.

Chester, S. C., Reporter
April 8, 1935

The Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro case is thoroughly clear and unequivocal, and there will be nothing for the South to do but to comply. However, there are other sections of the country that have their race problems as well as the South, and happily the South's peculiar problem is beginning to be better understood and appreciated throughout the country at large. Only a few bloody shirt wavers keep the question alive in an offensive and menacing manner, and their number is decreasing.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES

APR 2 1935

The Scottsboro Case

FOR a second time the United States supreme court has set aside the verdict of an Alabama jury in the case of the young Scottsboro negroes, charged with assaulting two white girls in a box car, and ordered a new trial. It is to be hoped that the authorities, supported by Alabama public opinion, will see to it that an Alabama mob does not follow the example of the Washington parish, Louisiana, mob and answer the high court's decision by lynching the prisoners. Nothing could be worse for the South. It might force passage of the WAGNER anti-lynching bill.

It is questionable whether these negroes are guilty. The alleged victims were persons of doubtful repute. In one of the cases the fearless presiding judge evidently believed the verdict was unjustified, for he himself gave the accused a new trial, only to have the voters in his district dismiss him from office at the subsequent election. The whole trouble has been that agitators in the North have sent South-hating lawyers to Alabama to appear for the defense, who by their attitude have raised a racial issue and antagonized local feeling. If from the beginning local counsel had been given the case, the result may have been different.

* * *

HOWEVER, that is not our immediate concern with the Washington decision. Not only Louisiana but the whole South has a definite interest in the ground on which the high court has reversed the verdict and remanded the case. The new trial is ordered because negroes were not on the panel from which the 12 jurors were chosen. Said Chief Justice HUGHES:

> It has long been held that whenever—by any action of a state, whether through legislation, the courts, executive or administrative officers—persons of the African race were excluded because of race and color from jury service, the court proceedings were invalid.

That can only mean that, say in Louisiana, whenever a negro, however foul his crime may be, is convicted, and it is shown that a jury was selected from a panel, regular or special, on which the names of no negroes were included, the defendant's lawyer may take an appeal to Washington and have the verdict set aside. That is the net result of this Alabama community's apparent determination to send the Scottsboro negroes to the gallows regardless of the evidence, when a verdict less than capital probably would have ended the case with the first trial.

TROY, N. Y.
MORNING RECORD
APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO DECISION.

It was a foregone conclusion that the United States Supreme Court would insist upon a new trial for the Negroes in Alabama who were convicted last year in the Scottsboro assault case. The trial was a travesty on justice, a clear attempt to provide a group of victims to satisfy the race feeling which pervades the region. The methods used by the prosecution to secure the verdict were outrageous. The federal courts could not have let such illegality go on without an effective protest.

The average citizen sees the case in its true light. It is not the effort of Alabamans to secure justice. It is the attempt to maintain a race attitude which, to many of the people of that state, seems more fundamental than justice itself. To this class of men and women there is a vast difference between the Caucasian and the Negro. To them the distinction is as clear as is the distinction between Jew and Aryan to a Hitler. The Caucasian, if indicted for crime, is innocent until proved guilty; the Negro, if indicted for the same crime, is guilty unless proved innocent.

And so the Scottsboro cases began. The story of the assaults was fantastic. Admittedly the two women who brought the charge were slow in asking for justice. Admittedly they were mixing freely with the colored folk in railroad encampments where moral risks were sure to be enormous. Admittedly there was nothing in their own records which made their testimony more reputable than that of the defendants. But the Alabamans profess to believe that the word of any white woman is better than that of any black man; so these two women were able to swear away the freedom of the defendants and put their lives in jeopardy.

Each time the decision has been rendered the higher courts have refused to accept it; the manner of carrying on the cases has been disreputable. After the first trials one of the women admitted that she perjured herself; and she withdrew her charge. In the second trial she stated that the defendants did not assault her. Yet, on the unsupported testimony of the other woman, the verdict of "guilty" was again brought in. And this in spite of plenty of evidence making the remaining complainant's testimony at least dubious.

The reason for the latest reversal is the failure of Alabama to try the defendants before a jury of their peers. So far as the facts have been brought out no Negro has ever sat on a Jackson County jury. The evidence is clear that the defendants' race is automatically refused the right to act on juries even in cases involving its own members. This constitutes a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment and the Bill of Rights. Any Negro convicted by a jury which is wholly white by the compulsion of a studied practice in a county largely inhabited by blacks, has been deprived of his constitutional rights.

Now what will be done? Will Jackson County try Norris and Patterson with a mixed jury? Or will it attempt some sort of legerdemain to meet the issue, yet not compromise with its vicious principles? For its officials say they certainly will prosecute the two men for a third time. It is possible that they will place Negroes on the jury list but not enough of them to make their elimination from the trial by peremptory challenge difficult. The prejudices of this case have made it a national issue instead of a sordid county criminal incident. Perhaps it is well to settle the matter now—if it can be settled.

WILMINGTON, N. C.
STAR

APR 3 1935

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

It has since the inception of the case, been our private opinion based on our views of public morals that white girls who go hoboing about the country, hobnobbing, or at least riding in the same box cars with members of other races and the other sex are not overly deserving of society's most tender protection, but in the Scottsboro case there are other phases to be considered. The case has just been sent back to the Alabama courts by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The girls involved caused the arrest of seven negroes, they accused of attacking them while all were uninvited and non-paying passengers on an Alabama freight train. Two of the negroes have been convicted for a second time, and must be tried again unless the state elects to drop the charges.

The reasons behind the majority opinion, read by Mr. Chief Justice HUGHES is significant. Judge HUGHES and his colleagues hold that because negroes are kept off the jury rolls in Alabama that is good and sufficient reason to return a reversal of the Alabama tribunal's finding.

It is, as the chief solicitor of the Alabama circuit remarked when informed of the findings "a body blow at the courts of the state." However, it does not follow that Alabama will rush to the fore with mixed juries. Far from it. Alabama is too deep in the south to permit of that, and even should it insert the names of negroes in the jury boxes for the purpose of complying with the supreme court, ways will be found to continue the jury service as at present and within the law.

For the moment, however, it would appear that a very important decision has been based on a case involving not a particularly prepossessing set of complainants or defendants.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
TIMES UNION

APR 2 1935

Scottsboro Again.

Again the United States Supreme Court has, in the most pointed fashion, decided that conviction of colored persons of criminal offense, by juries from which Negroes had been excluded, are unjust and must be set aside. The case at issue was that of two young colored men, accused, with five others, of assault on two white women in a railroad car at Scottsboro, Ala. The seven were tried in the first case in court, and the convictions were set aside. The State elected to try two again, but failed to improve its jury system or permit colored men to serve in the box. Consequently the new convictions were also held invalid.

Evidence was adduced at the recent trial that not one Negro had been permitted to serve as a juryman in Jackson County, which includes Scottsboro, in more than thirty years. Chief Justice Hughes, who delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court, held this to be complete establishment of the fact that Negroes were wilfully, unjustly and systematically excluded, and as a consequence the court decided that the second conviction was as oppressive as the first.

It is about time Southern people realized that the Anglo-Saxon jury system is founded on the basis of trial by a jury of the peers, or equals of the accused person. By the exclusion of men of the same blood and color as the persons charged with the crime, as in this case, it is obvious that the rankest discrimination was exercised, and that a verdict reached under such circumstances is a nullity in law and morals.

Tupelo, Miss. News
April 2, 1935

SCOTTSBORO CASE

The Supreme Court has spoken.

Three negroes in the famous Scottsboro Case will be given a new trial.

They were convicted two years ago in Scottsboro, Ala., on charges of criminally assaulting a white woman.

This case is so old until we have practically forgotten the facts in it.

But the supreme court has seen cause to grant these three blacks a new trial, and the last court in the land has spoken.

Lynchings—1933
Legal Punishment for Rape

Alabama

4996

MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

APR 2 1935

THE SUPREME COURT AND OUR JURY SYSTEM

The Supreme Court of the United States has bluntly laid down the law to Alabama on the question involving the right of Negroes to serve on juries.

In reversing a Jackson County court in the conviction of two of the "Scottsboro" infants, the Supreme Court seems to have ignored the evidence and confined its comments mainly if not entirely to the fact that no Negroes were on the jury which convicted two Negroes of a felony. The Advertiser has read only a press summary of Chief Justice Hughes's position, but it would appear that he is concerned, not with the evidence upon which the defendants were convicted, so much as with the color of the jury that convicted them.

The Court charges that Negroes were "systematically excluded" from jury service in the county of trial, and that the few names of Negroes in the jury box were fraudulently admitted.

The Advertiser does not know whether this charge of fraud is just or not. It may be that the names of Negroes were admitted after the issue involving the right of Negroes to serve on Alabama juries was raised.

The Advertiser does know that generally speaking the names of Negro citizens are not in the jury boxes in the counties of Alabama, although Negroes may and do serve on Federal juries in this State.

What qualifications must a juror possess under the law? He must be a person of good character, good standing and good intelligence—at least, this is the theory upon which names are admitted to the jury box. The jury commissioners of Alabama, inquiring for new names to put on their lists, never ask whether one is black or white, yellow, brown or bronze. The citizens to whom these verbal inquiries are addressed, instinctively report only the names of white persons. The race question is rarely if ever raised between jury commissioners and citizens whom they question.

From a strict technical standpoint Negroes are not excluded from juries; in common practice they are, of course.

At last the Supreme Court, following up previous warnings, reverses the verdict of a State court upon the ground of race discrimination in the selection of jurors.

It now follows that Alabama jury commissions must immediately put the names of reputable Negro citizens in their jury boxes. Otherwise we cannot hope again to have the Supreme Court of the United States affirm the findings of a State court wherever a Negro's liberty or life is at stake.

The Advertiser therefore would urge that county jury commissions in Alabama act immediately to make it possible for the State of Alabama to win a case involving a Negro in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Otherwise, we wish to say that Mr. Hughes's pontifical deliverance is a lot of baloney.

Here is the Supreme Court of a great republic, reviewing the trial of two men charged with an offense that stands first among felonies in this State, reversing the verdict of an oathbound jury upon the ground that it does not like the color scheme of that jury.

The Supreme Court of the United States tells Alabama, in effect, that it is not primarily interested in otherwise credible evidence demonstrating human depravity, but that it is primarily interested in the academic political "rights" of a politically dispossessed race.

The Advertiser may be dumb, as well as "lost and ruint," but to save itself it cannot see what the political rights and privileges of Negroes in Alabama have to do with the guilt or innocence of the gorillas who are charged with criminal assault upon two women, it being agreed that rape is a felony under the law in this backward State.

Either these gorillas committed rape, or they did not.

If they committed rape the jury, (even though white) knows the truth and reported it faithfully.

If they did not commit rape, we believe that this jury would have said so.

Suppose the defendants had been Italians. There are no Italians in Jackson county. So far as we know there are not today any Italians in Montgomery county, despite its relatively large population. Certainly there are no Spaniards no Japanese, no Tahitans, no Indians no Eskimos either in Montgomery or other counties.

In that event not many juries in Alabama could hope to have their verdicts affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States if a member of either of these races should move here tomorrow and commit a capital offense.

It seems to The Advertiser that if the Supreme Court of the United States, presided over by Charles Evans Hughes, had a more sensitive regard for the victims (actual and potential) of felonious assault and less regard for the politically dispossessed in the home State of these victims, it would not devote an entire opinion to an academic political question, but would offer some comment on the evidence by which the gorillas aforesaid had been convicted.

After all, the rape of a wench is not morally different from the rape of the proudest gentlewoman in the republic and it seems to us that any man of sound instincts would see this truth. Rape happens to be a capital crime in Alabama.

We are sorry that the Supreme Court of the United States seems to have no immediate interest in this phase of the

NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN

APR 5 1935

The Scottsboro Decision.

The decision in the Scottsboro case was the first in recent years in which the United States Supreme Court upheld the right of negroes to sit in juries.

It is not, however, the first time the court has ruled that deliberate denial of jury places to negroes in trials of negro defendants is a violation of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The decision in the case of Neal versus Delaware, in 1880, is often quoted. The court ruled that the fact that no negro had ever sat on a Delaware jury, although about 15 per cent of the population of the state was negro, presented a prima facie case of denial of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law. It was held to have been a "violent presumption" on the part of the state court that exclusion of negroes over many years had been solely because the whole negro race in the state was unfit for jury service.

In the Scottsboro case the court set aside the conviction and death sentence of two negroes, ruling that the indictments on which they were tried were invalid because negroes had been systematically barred from jury rolls in Jackson County, Alabama.

It does not seem probable that the recent decision, any more than did that of 1880, will result in any far-reaching changes in judicial procedure in the Southern states, or in any other section of the country, for that matter. It might cause the retrial of a case now and then, but as a general thing even this might be prevented by the administration of fair and impartial justice for the negro in the courts.

The fact that Judge Horton, presiding at the second trial of one of the Scottsboro defendants, with a change of venue to Decatur, Morgan County, set aside a verdict of guilty as contrary to the weight of the evidence, added to the doubt, already existing that fair and impartial justice was being meted to these negro defendants and strengthened the feeling that race prejudice was playing a major part in the case. The meddling by lawyers from the North was justly resented, yet when the courts of the South establish a reputation for giving to the negro defendant the brand of justice to which any defendant is entitled, there will be no excuse for meddling lawyers from the North, there will be no widespread demand for negro jurors, and trials can proceed with little likelihood that the verdict will be challenged because of all-white juries.

The case emphasizes the responsibility of courts, staffed throughout with white men and operating under laws of white men toward the negroes who are brought into them. Race prejudice has no place in a courtroom and it is within the province of any court of justice to keep it out.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
LEADER
APR 3 1935

TWO DECISIONS

The Scottsboro defendants get another break.

The constitution guarantees, to persons accused of crime, a trial by a jury of their peers. While the word "peer" is sometimes used as meaning a superior person, the real meaning of it is an equal. The Alabama law allows Negroes to sit on juries, but the white county authorities conveniently neglect to call them. A Negro tried without having a chance to select any Negroes for jury service in the case would not be tried by a jury of his peers. Whatever the whites may be, his superiors or his inferiors, or his equals, the other Negroes are pre-eminently his peers, for they are the ones who best understand the conditions under which he has grown up and under which he lives and acts.

The Scottsboro defendants did not have a chance to get any Negroes on the jury. Therefore, the supreme court of the United States could not very well do otherwise than hold that the state court erred in not quashing the indictments. It did so, the opinion being read by Chief Justice Hughes. The defendants are now entitled to a new trial.

But they should be released instead of being tried again. The prosecution of these young colored men has obviously been a matter of race prejudice and vengeance, not an effort to do justice.

On the same day, the supreme court, in an opinion read by Justice Roberts, held that the Democratic party of Texas has a right to confine its membership to white people and not to allow a Negro to vote in its primary. Why a southern Negro, or any other Negro, should want to vote in a Democratic primary is beyond us. The decision should give them an impetus to build up the Socialist party.

New York Evening Post
APR 2 1935

JUSTICE

Equality before the law is one of America's most precious possessions, and the Supreme Court's decision on the Scottsboro case does us honor in the eyes of the world.

Surely it is cause for rejoicing, in an arbitrary and dictatorial age, that some measure of justice can be enforced even for Negroes in the deep South.

Scottsboro is fated to mark another milestone in the long struggle of the black man for justice, a struggle that the Emancipation merely began.

Chief Justice Hughes held, as previous courts have held, and as the Supreme Court of Maryland held in the Orphan Jones case, that a Negro is denied a fair trial where Negroes are barred from the jury panel.

The case goes back for retrial, and another conviction seems probable. For a really fair trial in Alabama under present conditions seems highly unlikely.

Extraneous racial considerations have crept into the case. Public opinion has been inflamed. Local pride feels itself outraged. Everything will be considered but the facts.

The facts seem to be that far more than a reasonable doubt exists of the guilt of the Scottsboro boys—especially since the confession of Ruby Bates that she had perjured herself.

Will the Supreme Court again take up the case, next time on the facts, if Alabama again demonstrates that it cannot give these seven a fair and honest trial?

New York Evening Post
APR 9 1935

Alabama Bows to the Court

Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama deserves the nation's applause for heeding the ruling of the United States Supreme Court and ordering that the names of Negroes be included on the jury rolls of every county in his State.

If the court's decision in the Scottsboro case shows a proper regard for constitutional rights Governor Graves shows an equally laudable regard for law. It is not hard to imagine a Southern Governor defying the court in so inflammatory a case.

But it may be noted that the mere fact of including Negroes on jury panels does not guarantee the right of the Scottsboro boys to have a few Negroes on the jury which hears their case. The Orphan Jones case in Maryland will illustrate.

There the Supreme Court of Maryland ruled that Jones must be retried because the exclusion of Negroes from juries constituted a violation of due process. Negroes were then included in the panel drawn for the retrial.

But attorneys for the State, exercising their right to challenge certain jurors without expressed cause, merely challenged all the Negroes picked for the new trial jury. No Negro sat on the jury that tried Orphan Jones and finally sent him to the chair.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
APR 2 1935

The Supreme Court Again Challenges Alabama

Unanimously, the United States Supreme Court has ordered another new trial of defendants in the notorious Scottsboro case.

Fortunately for the nation, the civil liberties of the Negro in the South are stanchly upheld by the nation's highest tribunal in this case.

But what are these defendants going to do? Is their whole life to be spent in jail while lawyers and courts debate their alleged guilt on charges of rape?

It was in March of 1931 that 11 Negroes were arrested in Scottsboro, Alabama, charged with assaulting two white girls in a railroad car. At first, the girls denied any assault had occurred. But after they had been badgered by the sheriff they finally consented to prefer charges. The whole case was an outrageous frame-up, between civil authorities in Scottsboro, and the girls, who were found to be notorious prostitutes.

Swiftly, the 11 Negroes were tried, convicted and sentenced TO DEATH.

The case was appealed, finally reaching the United States Supreme Court in December, 1932. A new trial was ordered on the ground that the defendants had been deprived of the elementary right of counsel.

Another swift trial was held. But it was so obviously a set-up, that Judge James E. Horton of Alabama, set aside the guilty verdict and ordered still another trial. Confronted with such a courageous Judge, the Attorney General of Alabama hunted another Judge who would be more amenable to racial prejudice. He found one and one more trial was held. Again the Negroes were convicted.

Again, too, this verdict was appealed—and has now been thrown out by the United States Supreme Court on the grounds that Negroes were excluded from juries in Alabama and the defendants were deprived of their constitutional right to trial by "a jury of their peers."

Will another new trial give these defendants the justice to which they are entitled? Is it conceivable that Alabama can overcome its racial prejudice sufficiently to be fair above all things in this case?

Scarcely any intelligent person, even in Alabama, believes these Negroes guilty. But to give them a trial in which they might possibly be acquitted would, in the eyes of the biased, mean a loss of respect for Alabama.

The forces involved in this case lie deeper even than the forces of law and order. The elements of intolerance and prejudice, much as we may deplore them and wish for their abolition, remain strongly rooted. Were it not for that, the Scottsboro defendants would have been free long ago.

This latest rebuke to Alabama by the nation's highest court, however, constitutes a challenge which should bring that State's judiciary, if not its mob masters, to a new sense of public responsibility.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
APR 8 1935

RATHER LATE

The Supreme Court decision setting aside the conviction of two Negro defendants in Alabama on the ground that Negroes were "systematically" excluded from jury rolls in two counties, has resulted in a revision of the Alabama jury lists, so that Negroes will be included. The revision was suggested by Governor Bibb Graves, who wrote to circuit judges and solicitors throughout the State.

"Whether we like the decisions of the Supreme Court or not," Governor Graves wrote, "it is the patriotic duty of every citizen and the sworn duty of every public officer to accept and uphold them in letter and in spirit. Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America." That is about as captious a statement as any State head ever made. One would think that Alabama just discovered that Negroes have rights under the Constitution. Negroes are not barred by law from serving on juries in any State, but they are seldom called to serve as jurors.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4997

Tarrant, Ala., Standard
April 9, 1935

The Scottsboro Case

The decision of the nation's highest court in the Scottsboro cases is a devastating blow to the advocates of civil service who hoped to build up a political mahcine through resort to this discredited system of perpetuating incompetents in public office.

Now that the United States Supreme Court has wrecked the jury law of the State because it believes that negroes were discriminated against, there can be no question about what the same tribunal would do to a civil service law that did not make provisions for a negro in all respects equal to a white person.

Jefferson County stands humiliated today, that it has two representatives and a senator who looked with favor on such legislation. At the same time we can thank God for a majority who refused to be led around by their nose by the senator from this county.

We are not alarmed about the negroes on juries in this state. A legal way will be found to exclude them from jury service. The thing that gives us concern is that this great county boasts of a senator and two representatives who look with favor on legislation that would soon fill our court house and city hall with negro employees by order of the Federal Court.

Bull Connor and Adams might qualify as ambassadors to Abyssinia howbeith we concede that would entail a certain amount of imposition on the translucent black, but as representatives from Imperial Jefferson the impression is, we hatched a couple of ducks.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y.
UNION-GAZETTE

APR 2 1935

SCOTTBORO NEGROES WIN

The death sentences of two Scottboro Negroes, convicted in a case of assault on a girl hobo in a freight car, were set aside Monday by the Supreme Court, in a decision based upon the evidence of systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries in Alabama.

Once prior to this, in 1932, the high court ordered a new trial for these two and five other Negroes in the Scottboro Case on the ground that they had been unlawfully deprived of counsel.

CLEVELAND, O.
NEWS

APR 3 1935

Justice Is Not Color Blind

FOR the second time, the United States supreme court saves the lives of two young Negroes, sentenced to death in the now famous Scottsboro case in Alabama.

Unbiased opinion will hold that it acted in the interests of fair play.

In spite of former convictions, the defendants have been denied the proper right of jury trial, the court holds. Negroes were not allowed to serve on juries in the county where Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson were tried. That was a glaring technical error upon which the former verdicts should have been thrown out, even if the evidence against the accused were conclusive—which it wasn't.

Alabama now has its choice of conducting new trials for these persecuted young men in accordance with the laws of the land or dropping the matter. The nation must rejoice that a section of the country which holds local custom and prejudice superior to constitutional rights has been brought to time.

It must further rejoice that the high court of the nation stands scrupulously for justice administered without regard to race or color.

Scottsboro Case Now Has Alabama White People Worried

By J. WINSTON HARRINGTON

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 12.—"In so far as the Scottsboro case itself is concerned, the guilt or innocence of the Negroes long since has ceased to be the paramount issue in the minds of most Alabamians." That statement, made last week by John Temple Graves, editor of The Birmingham Age-Herald, is a pretty accurate opinion as to what white people of Alabama are thinking about Scottsboro.

While the Supreme Court decision of April 1, has caused some speculation among legal minds as to what is to be done about the mixed jury panels, the attitude of Governor Bibb Graves of Alabama in demanding that the order be carried out to a letter seems to indicate that at least an effort will be made to comply with the decision. In the meantime, the Scottsboro boys are still in the Jefferson County jail, thankful for having been snatched from the electric chair, but still doubtful of ultimate freedom.

Will Be Retried

Mr. Grave's statement that it is of no importance to Alabamans whether the Scottsboro boys are guilty or innocent, indicates further that they are to be tried, not so much for an alleged crime, which nobody believes they committed, but because Alabama feels its sovereignty involved in some way. The boys, it is freely stated hereabouts, will be reindicted and tried again because Alabama now feels that it has gone too far to turn back.

Lieut. Gov. Thomas E. Knight, who, as attorney general, has taken such an active hand in persecuting the boys, has also stated publicly since the Supreme Courts' decision of last week that he will see to it personally that the boys "burn" and that even the United States Supreme Court will not alter that determination.

Others, prominent in affairs of Alabama, have taken a similar attitude. They declare that they have the boys in jail, and that they are going to keep them there until they can make them pay the supreme penalty—and this in spite of the fact that there is now a certainty in the minds of all that the boys are innocent.

The Montgomery Advertiser, in a lengthy editorial of last Tuesday called the boys "gorillas," and berated the Supreme Court for ever considering their rights under the Constitution. The tone of the editorial, contemptuous and blustering, ranted about the rights of white women not to be raped and the rights of Alabama to put some "gorillas" to death anytime a woman claims she has been attacked.

Of Prime Importance

The Scottsboro case now has become of paramount importance to Alabama. On the strength of it, one Judge James E. Horton of Athens, was defeated for reelection because he reversed the decision of a laughing, clowning jury that convicted Heywood Patterson; Attorney General Knight, who secured the three convictions, was elevated to Lientenant Governor of the state and other similar changes have taken place. It was a political issue at the last state election, and bids fair to hold a prominent place in the next election.

The governor, one of the strongest and fairest chief executives Alabama has ever had, appears to desire to do the right thing, but even he is hampered by the prejudices of those around him. His order to the jury commissions of the state to see that names of Race citizens are drawn for service, shows that he at least wishes to be fair in this case, but it is freely predicted here that he will not get far with his plan.

Albany-Decatur, Ala. Daily
April 5, 1935

The Scottsboro Case

The editorial storm over the Scottsboro decision announced Monday by the United States supreme court continues.

Over in Mississippi the Columbus Commercial Dispatch points out that Mississippi law does not bar negroes because of their race and wonders what an Alabama statute modelled along similar lines has not been brought into being. Our friend Birney Imes overlooks the fact that Alabama's law does NOT bar ne-

...but checks up to the jury commissions the task of selecting those persons considered qualified for service. The United States Supreme Court, however, appears to have placed more importance on the absence of negroes than on the laws covering the subject.

The Commercial Dispatch says:

"This week the United States Supreme Court set aside the death sentences passed by a state court on two Scottsboro, Alabama, negroes accused of attacking two white women several years ago and ordered a new trial for the defendants on the grounds that negroes were excluded from jury service on account of race and color.

"This has brought up the question of what effect such a ruling will have on state courts in future cases.

"Dispatches from Alabama state that no official comment has been made on what procedure that state will follow in the face of such a decision.

"Mississippi laws do not bar negroes from jury service because of race or color.

"This particular question came up in a case about ten years ago in Mississippi and the prosecution got around it by taking testimony from the board of supervisors who draw the jury panels.

"In this case the supervisors swore that negroes were not barred because of race or color but that they had not been selected because the law requires the board to select only the best and most substantial citizens and that negroes did not qualify under this requirement.

"This procedure met the Supreme Court test.

"It is well, perhaps, that this question has arisen.

"It should lead to revisions in the laws of other states in order to take care of the jury selection as it relates to negroes.

"Had steps been taken to safeguard such principles the State of Alabama and the entire South would not have suffered such ignominy as the Scottsboro trial has caused to be splashed across its pages of history.

"Let's hope that Alabama can now conduct with dispatch the trial of these two negroes and mete out justice to them that will stand the test of any court appeal."

The Montgomery Advertiser, which already had administered one editorial spanking to the supreme court, asks Chief Justice Hughes some questions regarding the decision and wonders if the absence of negroes for all time from membership in that high tribunal has denied any constitutional privileges to members of the negro race.

The Advertiser says:

"To the Honorable C[illegible]les Evans Hughes:

"For more than 140 years [illegible] have been 'systematically excluded' from seats on the Supreme Court of the United States. Has that circumstance affected the justice of the court's decisions involving the races?

"For more than 140 years negroes have been 'systematically excluded' from the bench in federal court districts.

"For more than 140 years negroes have been 'systematically excluded' from seats on the bench of the Supreme Courts of the States, except possibly in the Reconstruction years. There may have been some negroes on the Supreme Court of one of the Southern States in that period, although at the moment The Advertiser has no recollection of any exception to the rule.

"For more than 140 years negroes have been 'systematically excluded' from the bench of nisi prius courts at least in the Southern states, if not in all others. Have these circumstances prejudiced the cause of white or black citizen? If not, why not?

"Yet the Supreme Court of the United States remands for rehearing a cause in which two negroes were convicted of the capital offense of rape in Alabama, all upon the ground, not specifically that no negro sat on the jury that convicted the defendants, but upon the ground that for a 'generation'—about 30 years, we believe—negroes had been 'systematically excluded' from jury service in Jackson county, Alabama.

"The Advertiser herewith takes the liberty of asking Mr. Hughes and his colleagues of the Supreme Court of the United States this question: If negroes had served on Jackson county juries every year for 29 years before the 'Scottsboro' infants came into court in their diapers and shaking their baby rattlers, but for some reason—any reason—had not been drawn to serve on the jury that tried the infants aforesaid, would the solemn Supreme Court of the United States have solemnly averred that justice had been outraged?

"Does it follow that, in the light of the decision of the court as read by Mr. Hughes, no black man, no matter what the evidence against him may be, can have his sentence affirmed by the republic's highest court unless black men sat upon the jury that convicted him in the first instance?

"Does it follow that an oath-bound jury is entirely without virtue and respectability if only white men serve on it when negroes are on trial?

"Has the Supreme Court of the United States ever reversed the verdict of a trial court involing the liberty or life of an Indian upon the ground that no Indian sat upon the jury that convicted him? Or a Spaniard, or an Italian, or a Frenchman, or a Russian or a Japanese or a Chinese?

"There is no relevancy in the observation of the Chief Justice to the effect that negroes had been excluded from jury services for a generation before the Scottsboro infants were put to trial. The only relevant question is whether negroes served on the jury that convicted these infants.

"Suppose negroes had been on all Jackson county juries for 29 years but that for some reason they were not accepted for jury service in the year that these puling infants were tried and convicted—would that not have been a miscarriage of justice?

"We just wanted to know."

WATERTOWN, N. Y
TIMES

APR 2 1935

THE DECISION IN THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

The supreme court of the United States has again ruled in the famous Scottsboro case, this time to say that Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, two of the defendants, must have new trials for the reason that Negroes have been excluded from juries in Jackson county, Alabama.

It was quite generally recognized that if it could be shown that Negroes were deliberately excluded from juries in Jackson county, a new trial would be ordered. A decision in point is that of Neal vs. Delaware, decided in 1880, at which time the supreme court ruled that the fact no Negro ever sat on a Delaware jury presented a prima facie case of denial of the constitutional right of equal protection of the law.

The State of Alabama, however, denied that Negroes were deliberately excluded from juries in that state and the supreme court of Alabama so held. It was this case which was carried to the supreme court of the United States for decision on a writ of certiorari.

The so-called Scottsboro cases have been pending since 1931. Nine Negro boys were accused of criminal assault upon two white girls on a freight train. The defendants were divided into three groups and three separate trials were held. All were found guilty.

In December, 1932, the supreme court of the United States invalidated the decisions on the ground that the defendants had been denied adequate counsel help. At that time the court did not pass on the matter of the absence of Negroes from the juries although this issue was presented in the argument of counsel.

One of the defendants, Patterson, was given a second trial in the Spring of 1933. He was again found guilty but this verdict was set aside by the presiding justice, Judge Horton, on the ground that it was contrary to the weight of evidence. When Judge Horton ran for re-election he was defeated on this issue.

The defendant, Patterson, and also Norris were then brought to trial for the third time and again both were found guilty. This trial occurred late in 1933 and it is the verdict in this case which is now set aside and a new trial ordered.

NEW YORK SUN

APR 5 1935

Effects of the Decision in the Scottsboro Case.

To the Editor of The Sun—Sir: Chief Justice Hughes in his decision on the verdict in the Scottsboro case is quoted as saying that the exclusion of Negroes from the jury, which he considers proved, "makes the indictments invalid." The Supreme Court decision, it is believed, may free all seven of the accused Scottsboro Negroes.

If that is the case a large majority of the cases where Negroes are tried in Greater New York fall under the same category. I have in the last forty years served on juries, from the coroner's to the grand jury, in New York county, and have as yet to see a Negro on a jury or in a panel. Many of my friends have had the same experience. As there are a million Negroes in Greater New York, why this discrimination? I might add that this applies to the Federal grand juries; although summoned many times I have never seen a Negro on the panel.

Following the same reasoning, if a Chinaman was tried and there was no Chinaman on the panel, would the verdict be set aside on the same grounds?

Peregrine Falcon.

New York, April 4.

PURELY A GESTURE

The unusual action of Gov. Bibb Graves of Alabama in making public announcement that he had advised all circuit judges, solicitors and jury commissioners that they should scrupulously obey the recent Supreme Court decision in the Scottsboro cases to replace Negroes [illegible] appears [illegible]t the Klan Governor is taking the initiative in greasing the ways for another frame-up of the Scottsboro defendants and make sure that the frame-up will meet all legal tests. It is apparent to all sane persons that it is impossible for these defendants to get a fair trial in Alabama. Another legal farce is in the making. The governor's blast is purely a gesture. It argues ill for the Scottsboro boys.

Lynchings-1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama.

4998

COURT GRANTS REVIEW OF SCOTTSBORO CASE

Post 1-8-35

By United Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—New hope was given the Negro defendants in the Scottsboro, Ala., assault cases tdoay when the Supreme Court announced it would review the conviction and death sentence imposed on two of the seven defendants.

The court acted in the cases of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson. They are awaiting execution in Kilby Prison at Montgomery, Ala., following their second conviction on charges of having assaulted two white girls on a freight train.

Five other defendants are involved in the case and the court's action in the present instance is likely to control their fate as well.

The court once before set aside the conviction of all the Scottsboro defendants when it found that they had been denied adequate legal representation.

In the present case the defendants contended their conviction was unconstitutional because Negroes allegedly were excluded systematically from the grand jury panel which indicted them and the petit jury which tried them.

Scottsboro Verdicts Are Aimed at Entire U.S. Negro Population

By ROSE BARON

The fight for the freedom of Haywood Patterson, Clarence Norris and Angelo Herndon is at a critical stage. Frightful verdicts against each, by which the ruling class of America hopes to terrorize the whole Negro people and to smash the unity of the white working class and the Negro toilers, are at this moment before the highest courts.

Millions throughout the world have been mobilized to protest these murderous verdicts, and millions must now make their voices heard demanding that the Supreme Court of the United States free the two Scottsboro boys, that the Supreme Court of Georgia free Angelo Herndon.

But this cannot make up for the fact that the International Labor Defense, in its valiant fight in the courts as well as among the masses, must meet a terrific burden of expense. The simple court costs and incidental expenses of these two actions amount to a fortune.

At this moment, to carry through the present court actions, the I.L.D. must have $6,000. The toilers of the United States must find this money and find it quickly. They will do so.

But not a moment can be lost. It is a gigantic task, in which we cannot, must not fail.

I urgently appeal to every single individual of good will to do his utmost in this tremendous struggle. Rush every last penny that you can, immediately, to the International Labor Defense, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Angelo Herndon Rally on Chicago South Side Is Set for January 8th

Daily Worker

CHICAGO, Dec. 31.—A series of mass meetings will be held here this week to prepare for the giant Angelo Herndon meeting arranged for January 8 on the South Side of Chicago. 1-1-35

This week's meetings are timed to counteract the fascist propaganda of the Hearst press against the labor movement and the Chicago Workers' School and Hearst's incitement of an American Legion march planned for Jan. 4 "against the Reds." New York, N.Y.

The meetings, which will be addressed by Jane Newton and others, will be held on the following dates: Wednesday evening, Jan. 2, at the Building Trades Center, 3317 Roosevelt Road; Friday evening, Jan. 4, at the Workers Lyceum, 2733 Hirsch Street; and another meeting the same evening at the Forum Hall, 322 East 43rd Street; Sunday, Jan. 6, at 1118 W. Madison Street.

Another Scottsboro Victory

THE Supreme Court verdict in the Scottsboro case is a brilliant triumph and vindication of the policies of the International Labor Defense.

It is also an overwhelming defeat of the whole horde of so-called "friends" of the boys, the Samuel Leibowitz's and his supporters in the N.A.A.C.P. leadership and the "liberal" sheet, The Nation.

Like a pack of dogs, they harried the I.L.D. at every step. At the most crucial moment they deserted the case the better to stab the boys' defenders in the back.

But the I.L.D. policies have won.

Like cunning traitors, they said the I.L.D. had been allright for the "beginning of the case." Now, they said, the I. L. D. "ought to step out."

They said the I.L.D. is antagonizing the dignity of the court with its propaganda."

But the I.L.D. held firm. It declared that the Supreme Court, like any other capitalist court, like the Alabama lynch courts, will listen only to the powerful voice of the masses, backing up the brilliant I.L.D. lawyers in the court. To lawyers alone it will not listen, the I.L.D. declared.

The I.L.D. was a thousand times right. The high and mighty Supreme Court had to listen to the world protest organized by the I. L. D. The high and mighty Supreme Court could not afford to worry about its "dignity" in the face of this mighty protest.

If Leibowitz and the N.A.A.C.P. leaders had been in the case, the boys would now be doomed. The boys would have been deprived of the one thing that is protecting them from the electric chair—the mighty power of the world protest movement.

Today, the I.L.D. stands forth as the shrewdest, most practical, most dependable and devoted defender of the boys.

Through four bitter years of struggle it has proven itself.

No honest, sincere friend of the boys can any longer deny this truth. It is behind the I.L.D. that every friend of the boys now belongs, giving of every ounce of energy, of money, and devotion to save these innocent victims of a brutal social system.

The I.L.D. earnestly calls on every friend of the boys to join hands with us.

Carry the fight forward!

W. L. Patterson Sends Appeal On Scottsboro

By PAUL PUSHKIN

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R. (By Mail)—William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, whose health was shattered in his leadership of the fight for the Scottsboro boys, arrived in Moscow recently from the Black Sea. Still weak, still worn out with his years of effort and untiring struggle, Patterson is slowly rebuilding his strength, so that he may return to the United States and to the fight.

But never for one moment has the Scottsboro case and the case of Angelo Herndon been out of Patterson's mind. He talked with me about it, earnest and interested as ever.

"These cases—Scottsboro and Angelo Herndon—are the very center of our struggle today," he said.

"By the Scottsboro frame-up, the ruling class said to the Negro people what the rulers of pre-civil war days said in the Dred Scott case: 'You have no rights that we are bound to respect. You are rapists, beasts, sub-human things. We need give you no rights. We need give you no hearing. You have not meet with your white brothers, nor organize against your conditions.'

"Thus these cases were a challenge to the working class, and to the Negro people, a challenge which it had to meet, or be set back one long step in its struggle with the rulers. And we have met this challenge. Neither the fury of the white rulers, nor the maneuvers of their assistant hangmen, the Pickenses and Walter Whites, the Houstons, the Leibowitzes, has been able to hold back the tremendous wave of mass struggle that has been the answer of the workers and the Negro masses to the Scottsboro and Herndon frame-ups.

"My message to the American masses is this: 'Raise the Scottsboro and Herndon cases to their highest pitch. Protest! Demonstrate! Send resolutions and telegrams to the Supreme Court. And remember that the burden of carrying on the defense is a terrific one. Help the International Labor Defense to carry that burden, send funds for the defense, so that the fight may be carried on to the victorious end.'"

The address of the national office of the International Labor Defense, to which funds should be rushed by airmail and telegraph for the urgent immediate needs of the Scottsboro-Herndon defense, is Room 610, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

COURT TO REVIEW SCOTTSBORO CASE

Telegraph

Highest Tribunal Will Pass on Celebrated Alabama Affair For Second Time

1-4-35

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7 (AP)—For the second time, the supreme court decided today to go over the findings of the Alabama courts in the cases of two Negroes accused of assaulting two white women almost four years ago near Scottsboro, Ala.

Originally, nine Negroes were charged with the offense. One was acquitted, however, and one was excused because of his youth. Of the seven remaining, two have been convicted and sentenced to death. Five others await trial.

The case arose from the accusations of two young white women, clad in overalls, who were riding a freight train from Tennessee into Alabama. The women said the Negroes threw off several white men who also were on the train.

Since then a circuitous legal route has brought the cases to the supreme court several times. After Alabama courts convicted seven of the Negroes and sentenced them to death, the supreme court set aside their conviction and ordered a new trial, saying the Negroes had been denied proper counsel.

A change of venue and separate trials followed.

Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, convicted again claimed they were indicted by and tried before juries from which Negroes had been systematically excused because of race.

Norris and Patterson in their appeal to the United States supreme court raised the same constitutional questions. Their cases will be reached for oral argument in February or March and in the meantime, the death sentences will be suspended.

PARLEY WILL SPREAD FIGHT TO FREE BOYS

Appeal of Scottsboro-Herndon Committee Urges Action

Daily Worker

The tremendous partial victory of the mass fight for the Scottsboro boys, organized and lead by he International Labor Defense, in forcing the U. S. Supreme Court to agree to review the death sentences of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, was followed yesterday with a call issued by the National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee for a second city-wide Scottsboro conference to be held Feb. 3 at the Finnish Hall, 15 West 126th Street.

1-9-35

The mass fight, backed by the brilliant and resourceful work of the attorneys selected by the I.L.D., has again proved its effectiveness, the National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee points out. The committee has called on all individuals and organizations to rally in the second Scottsboro conference to further consolidate the united front fight and to push forward that fight to final victory, with the release of the Scottsboro boys and reversal of the chain gang sentence against Angelo Herndon. The call follows:

New York

TO NEGRO MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN AND ALL ORGANIZATIONS OF THE NEGRO PEOPLE: TO ALL ORGANIZATIONS AND INDIVIDUALS WHO SEE THE NEED FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION TO SAVE THE LIVES OF THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS AND TO DEFEND THE RIGHTS OF THE NEGRO PEOPLE:

On November 16th a stay of execution from December 7th, 1934, to February 8th, 1935, was extended to Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of the Scottsboro boys, by powerful mass pressure initiated by the International Labor Defense and the National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee, and supported by new sections of workers and Negro people.

Overcoming many obstacles, the I.L.D. succeeded in filing application for a writ of certiorari for the review of the cases by the U. S. Supreme Court. The case will be argued by Messrs. Osmond K. Fraenkel and Walter Pollak, I.L.D. attorneys, on fundamental constitutional points involving the age-old policy of exclusion of Negroes from jury service and the attempt to deprive Patterson of the right of appeal.

The state of Alabama, through Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., denies the charge, a charge which has been proved at all trials of the Scottsboro boys and which the prosecution, assisted by Judge Callahan, tried to remove at the last Decatur trial by forging the names of Negroes to the jury rolls. The prosecution also claims that the U. S. Supreme Court has no jurisdiction in the case.

Innocence Established

The innocence of these boys has been established beyond the shadow of a doubt but the ruling class is determined to carry through the electrocution "to teach Negroes a lesson." This means that not only the lives of the seven other boys are endangered, but the political, economic and civil rights of the entire Negro nation are in jeopardy. It means that discrimination and abuses against Negroes will continue. The outrageous lynching of Claude Neal shows mounting barbarity against Negroes.

Conditions in the economic depression have unloosed tendencies that threaten the destruction of ALL civil rights, of workers' organizations, and of all organizations that fight for the rights of the Negro people. Only those who are blind can fail to see the growth of these attacks by the Dickstein Committee and the yellow, jingoistic Hearst press.

The reports on the number of lynchings that took place during 1934 vary. The report of the International Labor Defense shows 25, each of which has been carefully itemized; the N.A.A.C.P. and Tuskegee Institute report 15 and 16, respectively. Unquestionably the report of the I. L. D. is more accurate.

Despite the great activity of the government against "crime," the crusade against kidnappers of the rich and the convening of a so-called Crime Conference at Washington, D.C., lynching increases in barbarity and Roosevelt has not raised a hand against it.

The measures taken by the Governor of Tennessee, calling out troops to shoot into a mob at Shelbyville, was taken because of the growing desire of the Negro masses, supported by sympathetic whites, to fight against lynching.

NEW BILL CITED

The struggle against lynching lies in the fight for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys. Through the principles involved in this fight a path of struggle for the rights of Negro people has been opened up. A Bill for Negro Rights has been brought forward by the League of Struggle for Negro Rights. These principles have been endorsed and approved during the three-and-a-half years' fight; and the recent victory of the stay of execution has completely justified the tactic of the I. L. D.

The masses have shown that they want unity of action along these lines—by the mass demonstrations in Harlem and throughout the country, by the response of Negro students in the South, who went in a delegation to see Roosevelt at Warm Springs, Georgia, by the building up of Scottsboro Action Committees throughout the country, by many invitations extended to Angelo Herndon and the Scottsboro Mothers to speak before the membership of various organizations, by the fight against discrimination, which has taken broad proportions in New York, Cleveland, Chicago and other places during the recent period, and finally, by the repudiation by the masses of all those who have attempted to disrupt the defense.

The National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee organized at a Conference in New York, attended by 242 delegates representing 190,000 members, for the purpose of broadening the united front in support of the I. L. D., reaffirms its stand for unity. We point out that the I.L.D. has let nothing stand in the way of unity. We call upon all sincere fighters to let nothing confuse and divide the growing movement for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys by building up a solid united front.

We, therefore, appeal to all justice loving people, workers and intellectuals, to join us at the Second Conference to map out plans to save the lives of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, and to fight for the unconditional freedom of the Scottsboro boys, and for the defense of Angelo Herndon.

SAMUEL C. PATTERSON,
Secretary National Scottsboro-Herndon Action Committee.

SCOTTSBORO CASE REVIEW GRANTED

Supreme Court Agrees To Hear Appeal Of Negroes

(By The Associated Press)

Decision of the United States Supreme Court Monday to review the appeals of two of nine Negro defendants in the "Scottsboro Case" from convictions in Morgan Circuit Court, carrying the death penalty placed the case before the nation's highest tribunal for the second time.

The two Negroes, Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, were convicted in Morgan Circuit Court in December 1933, under retrials obtained through action of the United States Supreme Court in setting aside the original convictions and death penalties.

In its first act in the case, the United States Supreme Court held that the Negroes had not had benefit of adequate counsel in the first trials in Scottsboro nearly four years ago.

In the more recent trials, attorneys for the Negroes supplied by the International Labor Defense, sought to quash the indictments and the venires drawn for the trials on the grounds that Negroes were "systematically excluded" from the grand and petit juries "solely because of their race and color." This the attorneys argued was in violation of the constitutional rights of the defendants.

Patterson, under death sentence for a third time, and Norris were tried under an indictment charging them with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, Huntsville, Ala., mill worker, aboard a Southern Railway freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931.

The nine Negro defendants in the case also are under indictment charging them with having attacked Ruby Bates, formerly of Huntsville and companion of Mrs. Price on a hobo trip to Chattanooga, but she repudiated her original testimony early in 1933, at Patterson's second trial.

Patterson and Norris are confined in the death house at Kilby Prison, Montgomery, but the other seven defendants are held in the Jefferson County Jail, Birmingham.

The Scottsboro Ruling

THE brilliant victory won by the I.L.D. in forcing the Supreme Court to grant a review of the death verdicts in the Scottsboro case is not going unchallenged by the enemies of the boys' defenders.

As would be expected, the capitalist press is already giving the formula by which the vindication of the mass policies of the I.L.D. is to be attacked in a new form.

The New York Times, for example, greets the announcement as proving that the Supreme Court "stands forth as the defender of that right . . . of the humblest citizen to the due process of law."

This, to put it bluntly, is hypocritical baloney.

The Times knows very well that the Supreme Court in its decision acted only in the interests of the capitalist system which it is defending. The Supreme Court acted as it did only because it did not dare to ignore the millions of workers all over the world and in this country, particularly, who have been aroused over the case by the campaign of the I.L.D.

The Supreme Court gives the masses concessions only when forced to do so by mass pressure.

The "due process of law" which The Times claims as the bulwark of the "humblest citizen" is only the hypocrisy of capitalist law which is devoted largely to protecting capitalist profit and capitalist oppression.

The Supreme Court is a defender of the whole system of national oppression and lynching out of which grows such a hideous frame-up as the Scottsboro case. How then can it be a defender of the boys?

Only one thing can make the Supreme Court, as well as any other capitalist court listen to the voice of the masses—organized mass protest, the policy of the I.L.D.

The trick of The Times is to belittle this mass protest just now at a time when more than ever it is the only thing that stands between the boys and the electric chair.

NEW YORK TIMES

FEB 16 1935

HITS ALABAMA JURY BOOK.

Scottsboro Defense Charges Forgery of Names List.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15 (AP).—Forgery of Negro names to a jury roll book in Jackson County, Ala., was charged today before the Supreme Court by attorneys seeking to save the Negroes in the Scottsboro case from the electric chair.

The roll book was presented and justices examined the names with a magnifying glass.

Samuel Leibowitz of New York, representing the defendants, Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, said these "forgeries" constituted an "admission" of his contention that the Negroes convicted of attacking a white girl were denied constitutional rights.

Only six Negro names were on the rolls, Mr. Leibowitz told the high court. He said a difference in ink and the fact that the names were in each instance at the end of columns of white men's names proved they were inserted after the empanelling of the grand jury which indicted the boys.

Arguments will be continued on Monday, when Lieut. Gov. Knight of Alabama will answer for the State.

Lynchings - 1935
Legal Punishment for Rape.

Alabama

4999

We Ask You to Help Again,' Is Scottsboro Mothers' Plea

Funds Urgent to Bring Appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court

By MRS. JANIE PATTERSON and MRS. IDA NORRIS

We are the mothers of the two Scottsboro boys, (Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris) that have been given a new hearing by the Supreme Court. We have joy in our hearts for this decision, but we still have sadness also. Because the boys are not yet free. There is much more work that has to be done, so much more work, before our boys can go free.

So we are turning to the readers of the Daily Worker. We know you are with our boys. We remember how the Daily Worker came to our help in those dark days when our boys were framed and it seemed like no one would lift a hand to help us; people would only lift a hand against us to burn our boys.

We remember that it was the Daily Worker that came out first showing how this was a dirty frame-up, how the boys had done nothing at all, had only been out of work boys looking for a job to do. And ever since those days the Daily Worker has stuck by us, and the Daily Worker's readers, who know the truth.

We are asking through the Daily Worker for you people to help. You have helped so often, but now we have to ask you to help again. Because the hearing is before the Supreme Court and they will decide if the boys are to have a new trial. And for that we have to have money for the briefs and all the legal steps and for the mass movement to continue that has saved our boys for almost four years. We can't let the Scottsboro fight do down now. So we ask, please help by sending money to the International Labor Defense, at 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

Scottsboro Daily Worker Fund Quota Set in Denver

DENVER, Col., Jan. 13.—The partial victory secured by the International Labor Defense and the mass fight it is leading for the Scottsboro boys, in forcing the U. S. Supreme Court to agree to review the death sentences in the cases of Clarence Norris and Haywood Patterson, was signalized here by the launching of an intensive drive to raise funds to help the I. L. D. defray the necessary expenses involved in the printing of briefs and other legal papers for the appeal.

The District Bureau of District 19 of the I. L. D. assigned quotas for all I. L. D. sections in this district to be fulfilled by Feb. 1, as follows:

Denver, $25; Colorado Springs, $5; Walsenburg, $5; Trinidad, $5; Fort Morgan, $5; Durango, $5; Gallup, New Mexico, $10; Helper, $10; Salt Lake, $10; Rock Springs, $7; Torrington, Fort Laramie, $5; Fredrick, $5.

Gains Are Won In the Arena Of Class Fight

Two-Fisted Policy of Mass Defense Proved to Be Correct

By ANNA DAMON

(Acting National Secretary, I. L. D.)

In the decision of the United States Supreme Court to review the cases of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, Scottsboro boys, the International Labor Defense, the whole working class and Negro liberation movement can record a very important partial victory.

This latest success, announced Jan. 7, 1935, is one of a series of four gains of recent months on the defense front under the leadership of the I.L.D., which have brought before the U. S. Supreme Court two major defense cases of broadest implications. These are the Scottsboro and Herndon cases.

The first of these successes was the freeing, on August 4, 1934, of Angelo Herndon, heroic young Negro leader of black and white unemployed, on $15,000 cash bail raised by mass subscription. Next came the stay of execution for Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, from Dec. 7 to Feb. 8, wrung from the State Supreme Court of Alabama. This was followed by the acceptance of the U. S. Supreme Court of the appeal in the Herndon case, date for the hearing of which has not yet been set. With the Jan. 7 decision, the ground was cleared of the legal barriers with which the "court of last illusions" surrounds itself, and the struggle has now begun to force that court to reverse the lynch decisions against Herndon, Patterson and Norris.

Won by Class Struggle

These successes have been won on a class battle-front that extended from corner to corner of the United States. The struggle around the Scottsboro case in the United States was carried on in the fight for the freedom of literally thousands of strikers, unemployed, poor farmers, and anti-fascists arrested throughout the country, in the fight against lynching, and for national liberation of the Negro people—a battle which has itself received a tremendous impetus from the Scottsboro and Herndon campaigns.

The fight for Scottsboro and Herndon cannot be divorced from the fight for the freedom of Tom Mooney, a struggle into which millions of trade unionists and others have been drawn, into which through its link with Scottsboro thousands of Negro people have been brought through an understanding of the fundamental issues involved in both cases.

The struggle cannot be separated from the fight against criminal syndicalism charges and laws, now raging country-wide, in which on the same Jan. 7 which brought the Supreme Court decision on the writ of certiorari in the Scottsboro case, was recorded the victory of the freeing of 18 unemployed leaders facing life-terms in jail on criminal syndicalism and "treason" charges in Hillsboro, Illinois. These struggles have been definitely linked through the International Labor Defense, which has bound the thousands of defense cases throughout the country into a broad common front of struggle, each case strengthening every other.

